BOMBAY BURMAH TRADING CORPORATION, LIMITED (Defendant), Appellant v. FREDERICK YORKE SMITH (Plaintiff), *Respondent.

[19th and 20th June, 1894.]

Company—Preferential dividend payable to holder of one set of shares—Contract—Construction—Construction of contract by the Company to pay it to the share-holder and to his executor holding the same—Death of the share-holder—"Holder" of shares—Legal title to shares—Meaning of the word "hold"—Administration.

The goodwill of a business which a merchant had carried on, and the capital, property, and assets with it, were transferred by him in 1864 to a joint stock limited company, who agreed with him that in consideration of the transfer by him of property referred to in the contract as "the fixed assets," one hundred paid up shares of Rs. 2,500 each, of which any assignment by him during the next five years from the registration of the company should not be recognized by them as valid, should be allotted to him. It was also agreed that, in consideration of the transfer, he and "his executors or administrators shall be entitled, so long as they hold the said hundred shares, to an extra or preferential dividend."

On this agreement the parties acted, and the shareholder held the shares till he died in England in 1888, having by will directed that his executors or administrators should hold the hundred shares in trust for his surviving brothers of whom the executor who proved the will was one. Administration with the will annexed was granted in India to the plaintiff in this suit as the attorney of the executor. A note of this was made in the register of the company, leaving the hundred shares still in the name of the testator. The company then discontinued to pay the preferential dividend, and now contended that it was no longer payable inasmuch as the testator's estate had been administered, and that the executor no longer held the shares as executor but as trustee for the beneficiaries under the will.

Held*, that the contract was still in operation, the executor still "holding" the shares within its meaning; and that the preferential dividend continued payable to the estate of the testator, the company being only concerned with the legal title to the shares, and not with any claims, if there were any, that might be made by beneficiaries under the will against the executor as trustee.

[2] APPEAL from a decree (5th December, 1892) of the appellate High Court, affirming in all essential points a decree (11th March, 1892) of the Court in its original jurisdiction.

This appeal related to the construction of the provisions of a contract, made on the 22nd July, 1864, between William Wallace, a merchant till then carrying on a trade in timber at Rangoon, and a joint stock company incorporated in 1863 under Act XIX of 1857 for the purpose of taking over from him the good will, property, capital and assets of his business. The contract, among other provisions, provided in cl. 13 that so long as William Wallace, his executors and administrators, should hold one hundred fully paid up shares, allotted to him in consideration of the transfer of property, referred to as "the fixed assets," the company would pay to him, or them, an extra or preferential dividend upon those shares. This dividend was to be equal to one-third of surplus profits calculated in the manner specified in the contract, and subject to certain deductions.

The question now was whether this preferential dividend was still payable to the estate of William Wallace, who died in England in 1888. The appellant company was incorporated in Bombay in 1863 originally under the name of the "Burmah Trading Company," having a nominal capital of Rs. 25 lakhs divided into 1,000 shares of Rs. 2,500 each, afterwards increased by additional shares of the nominal value of 12½ lakhs. The firm of Wallace & Co., of Bombay, where the head office was, were their secretaries, that firm having acted previously as the agents of William Wallace whose business had been established in Rangoon. The "fixed assets" were immoveable property, valued at about Rs. 2,76,000. There were, besides, contracts and operations undertaken, forest rights and concessions obtained, which were transferred to the company.

The respondent (plaintiff) represented in India the executor of the will of William Wallace who died in England on the 28th January, 1888. Administration with the will annexed, was granted in Bombay to Frederick Yorke Smith (plaintiff) as the attorney of the executor, limited as the Act provides, on the 27th September, 1888.

[3] The testator appointed his three brothers to be his executors, referred to the perferential dividend on the hundred shares, and directed that his executors, or administrators, should hold these shares upon trust so that the same should be at the absolute disposal of such of his three brothers as should survive him, if more than one, as joint tenants. One of the brothers died in the testator's life-time. One only proved the will as executor. Whatever is material to this report in the agreement of the 22nd July, 1864, in the memorandum and articles of association of the appellant company and in the will of 1880, has already been set forth, as well as the facts of the case, in the report (under the above name (1)) of the proceedings in the Courts below. The facts are also stated in the judgments, which are reported at length at pp. 209 and 219 of the I. L. R. 17 Bom., of Farran, J., in the original jurisdiction and of the Chief Justice, in the appellate.

The first Court held that the executor of W. Wallace, or his attorney, was still the registered holder of the shares. The term "shareholder" in the agreement, and throughout the memorandum and articles of association, which must be read with, and in explanation of, the agreement, had the fixed meaning of "registered holder." The judgment was that the contract was still in operation as to the preferential dividend, which was payable to the plaintiff as administrator so long as the executor of William Wallace should be the registered holder of the hundred shares (p. 209).

The appellate Court affirmed this judgment. As to what was meant by the executors and administrators "holding" the shares, the agreement of 1864 was to be read in connection with the provisions in the articles of association as to the transmission of shares, in ss. 29, 30 and 31. They showed that the executors and administrators, although not formally on the register, were the only persons whose title could be recognized by the company. It was not advisable to express an opinion as to the construction of the words "executors and administrators" in the agreement, and the decree was varied in this respect (p. 219).

On this appeal,

[4] Mr. M. Crackanthorpe, Q. C., Mr. H. Burton Buckley, and Mr. M. I. Joyce, for the appellant company, argued that the estate to which the Courts below had adjudged the continuance of the payment of the preferential dividend, was no longer entitled to receive it. The executor having administered, and also assented to the bequest of the shares, remained entitled to them as trustee for the beneficiaries under the will, but no longer held them as executor within the meaning of s. 13 of the agreement of 1864. He had ceased to "hold" them in that character, but held them as trustee. As to an executor becoming a trustee forthwith upon assenting to a specific bequest given to him in trust, Dix v. Burford (1) was cited. The preferential dividend could only be payable, after the death of the testator, so long as the executor held the hundred shares in his character of representative of the estate. He would cease to be in that character on commencing to hold them, either in his own right, or as trustee for others. The liabilities of the estate, on the facts, had all been provided for, and the specific bequest had been assented to. These shares, therefore, were held by the executor only as trustee. Further, it appeared that the sole reason why the shares had not been divided between the legatees "of the absolute interest in them, and all rights attaching to them," was that the latter, both of whom had been named executors, though only one had proved the will, desired to give effect to the wishes of the testator expressed to them before his death. But the executor could not, with reference to the use of the word in cl. 13 of the agreement of 1864, remain permanently in that character, when he had discharged his functions. Had it been that he could so remain, then nothing would be required but a resort to suitable provisions, to enable testator and his successors to entitle themselves in perpetuity to the preferential dividend. It was submitted that the word "hold," in the agreement of 1864, meant "hold with a beneficial title." As to shares remaining in a testator's name in the books of a company, Turquand v. Kirby (2) was cited. Williams on Executors, Vol. II, Part III, Bk. III, Ch. IV, and Buckley on the Companies Acts were referred to in regard to the position of the executor.

[5] Sir Richard Webster, Q.C., Mr. Cozens Hardy, Q.C., and Mr. T.T. Method, for the respondent, were not called upon.

PRIVY COUNCIL.

19 B. 1 (P.C.) = 21 I.A. 139 = 6 Sar. P.C.J. 598.

JUDGMENT.

Their Lordships' judgment was thereupon delivered by LORD MACNAGHTEN.—This appeal raises a question as to the meaning and effect of a provision contained in an agreement of purchase and sale which was made between the appellants and the late Mr. William Wallace in 1864. The question relates to the continuance of a special or extra dividend attached to certain shares, part of the consideration for the purchase.

Mr. Wallace was the possessor of an extensive and valuable business as a timber merchant in Burmah. In 1863, under the Limited Liability Act then in force in Bombay (Act XIX of 1857), a joint stock company, which is now called The Bombay Burmah Trading Corporation, Limited, was formed for the purpose of taking over Mr. Wallace's business. The company was registered with a nominal capital of 25 lakhs, divided into 1,000 shares of 2,500 rupees each.

The company's articles of association, printed in the Record, contain two regulations which it will be convenient to notice in passing. Article 9 gives the company a lien on all the shares of every shareholder for all the debts, liabilities, and engagements of such shareholders. Article 29 provides, in common form, that the executors and administrators of a deceased sharholder shall be the only persons recognised by the company as having any title to his shares, but it requires, as a condition precedent to recognition, the production of probate or letters of administration granted by the High Court of Bombay. It was suggested, in the course of the argument before this Board, that art. 9 was not in existence when the purchase agreement was made. That objection comes rather late. In the Courts below the case was argued on the footing that the articles printed in the Record were the relevant articles of the company. Nor indeed is the objection one of substance. It was part of the arrangement expressed in the agreement itself that the company should alter or modify their existing articles as they might be advised for the purpose of carrying out the agreement. It matters little whether the article in question was introduced for the very purpose of [6] the agreement or contained in the articles of association as originally framed.

The terms and conditions of the transfer of the business to the company are to be found in an agreement dated the 22nd July, 1864, which was ratified and adopted by the company in general meeting and carried into effect. The agreement is expressed to be made by Mr. Wallace of the first part, and five gentlemen, directors of the company, of the second part. Mr. Wallace, it seems, had concessions from the British Government, he had concessions from the King of Burmah, he had forest rights, saw mills, a large establishment and staff of workmen, ships under charter, and a number of pending contracts. The agreement was made on the faith of certain representations by Mr. Wallace as to the value of his business, and the nature and circumstances of the property which he proposed to hand over. After setting out these representations somewhat in detail the agreement proceeds as follows:—"And whereas the said parties hereto of the second part have made such enquiries as were in their power with regard to the said representations, and so far as such enquiries extended, the said representations appeared to be correct; but as to many of the matters about which the said representations were concerned the said parties hereto of the second part have been obliged to rely on such representations alone,it being of great consequence for the interests as well of the said company as of the said William Wallace that some binding arrangement should be made with the least possible delay. And whereas it was considered by the said parties hereto that having regard to the great difficulty of estimating the value of the said forest operations, rights and grants of the said William Wallace and of the said trained establishment and goodwill, the interests as well of the company as of the said William Wallace would be best consulted by entering into the arrangement hereinafter in cl. 13 contained." Then cl. 12 provided that in consideration of the transfer of certain property, referred to as "the fixed assets," Mr. Wallace should be entitled to have allotted to him 100 shares in the company, of 2,500 rupees each, but at the same time it declared that the company should not be bound to give their consent to or recognise as valid any assignment of the [7] said 100 shares, or any of them, during a period of five years from the date of the registration of the company.

Clause 13, so far as material, is in these terms :—

"In consideration of the transfer by the said William Wallace to the company of the premises hereby agreed to be transferred (other than the said fixed assets and other than the premises mentioned in the clauses six, seven and nine)"—those premises consisted of timber already cut, live stock, stores and plant—"the said William Wallace, his executors or administrators shall be entitled so long as he or they shall hold the said one hundred shares to an extra or preferential dividend equal to one-third of such surplus net profits of the company as may remain in any year after paying a dividend at the rate of twelve per cent. per annum on the paid up amount of all shares in the company (including the said one hundred shares) and after setting apart from time to time out of such surplus profits as a reserved fund or to the credit or any reserved fund already created such sum as the directors of the company for the time being may in their discretion think fit."

That is a provision, not unintelligible and not unreasonable, by which, as the agreement states on the face of it, the interest of the purchasers as well as the interests of Mr. Wallace were intended to be consulted. Mr. Wallace was to receive payment for the goodwill of his business out of future profits, and in proportion to the amount of those profits. He would be paid handsomely if his representations proved correct. If they turned out to be incorrect it would be an advantage to the company to keep Mr. Wallace's name on the register, and to keep within their reach the shares which represented the purchase-money. It must have been obvious to both parties to the agreement that it was not unlikely to lead to difficulties and complications which might last for an indefinite time. It was, therefore, of importance to the company to have Mr. Wallace as a member, and to keep their hold on Mr. Wallace's shares for as long a time as possible. They were not bound to allow a transfer of his shares for five years; after that period they trusted, it seems, to the influence and operation of the inducement held out in the shape of an extra [8] dividend, leaving the duration of the arrangement to depend on the course of events.

Mr. Wallace is now dead. He died on the 28th of January, 1888. He left a will naming executors, two of whom survived him. His will has been proved in England by one of the executors. As the attorney of that executor, Mr. Smith, the plaintiff and respondent in this case, has obtained a grant of letters of administration, with the will annexed, from the High Court at Bombay. The letters of administration have been produced to the company, and they have recognised the title of the administrator by noting the letters of administration in the share register. The shares still stand in the name of Mr. Wallace; but it is not disputed, if it was not actually admitted, that all the testator's debts have been paid or satisfied.

The only question, if there be a question, is whether in these circumstances the extra dividend still continues to be payable. The appellants contend that the extra dividend is not payable now, because there is nobody who can be said to hold Mr. Wallace's shares. Mr. Wallace, they say, does not hold them, because he is dead; his executors do not hold them, because their names are not on the register. But then who does hold them? Certainly, no one else. And why are the shares not held by Mr. Wallace or his executors or administrators? There is no magic in the word "hold." Mr. Wallace's name is on the register. The company cannot remove it. As long as it is there the company are bound to credit the proper dividends to his holding, and to recognise the title of his legal personal representatives to receive any dividends which may be carried to his credit.

It was urged on behalf of the company that Mr. Wallace's estate ought to be wound up and distributed, and that some person ought to be put on the register in his own right; and they complain that, if the respondent's contention is correct, this extra dividend may go on for ever. The contention of the company is a singular one, and the complaint they make is no less singular. They complain that the attraction which they themselves held out is attractive still—only too attractive. They think it a hardship that the arrangement should continue when once it has [9] served their purpose. But it must be remembered that the scheme had a twofold object. It was designed for the protection of the company; it was also intended as a mode of payment for the goodwill. Why is the payment for goodwill to stop because Mr. Wallace's representations have proved correct and the provision is no longer needed for the protection of the Company?

But, say the company, if the executors would only do their duty to their beneficiaries under the will, or if the beneficiaries would kindly insist on their rights, the arrangement would come to an end, because the estate would be distributed, and the shares would be appropriated to persons beneficially entitled. What have the appellants to do with that? Naturally the beneficiaries are content with things as they are. How can the company avail themselves of any equities which the beneficiaries may have as between themselves and their trustees? The company are only concerned with the legal title to the shares; the legal title is that of Mr. Wallace, deceased; and his legal personal representatives are entitled to whatever may be payable in respect of his shares.

Their Lordships think that according to the true meaning of cl. 13, and the very letter of its terms, the shares in question are held by Mr. Wallace, or his executors or administrators. They will, therefore, humbly advise Her Majesty that this appeal should be dismissed.

The appellants will pay the costs of the appeal.

Civil Procedure Code (XIV of 1882), s. 608—Privy Council—Appeal to Privy Council —Decree—Stay of execution before appeal admitted—Practice—Procedure.

Where a petition for leave to appeal to the Privy Council from a decree of the High Court has been presented, the High Court may grant a stay of execution of its decree although the appeal has not yet been admitted under s. 603 of the Civil Procedure Code (XIV of 1882).

MOTION to stay execution of the decree of the appeal Court.

The plaintiff was the widow of Sir Tharia Thopan, a Khoja Mahomedan of Bombay. She brought this suit to obtain probate of the will of her deceased husband and of certain codicils, three of which were disputed by the defendants, who were nephews of the testator. On the 9th April, 1894, the appeal Court (Sargent, C.J., and Farran, J.) varied the decree of the lower Court and ordered probate to issue of the said will and codicils. The defendants (respondents) desired to appeal to the Privy Council, and presented their petition for leave to appeal under ss. 598 and 600 of the Civil Procedure Code (XIV of 1882), and notice of this petition was duly served on the plaintiff (appellant).

On the 14th May, 1894, before the appeal had been declared admitted (s. 603), or a certificate granted (s. 600), the defendants (respondents) gave notice to the plaintiff (appellant) that they would move "for an order that execution of the decree of the Court of appeal, dated the 9th day of April last, may be stayed, and that the Registrar be directed not to grant probate of the three codicils dated respectively the 12th January, 1890, 1st November, 1890, and 6th February, 1891, until the proposed appeal to Her Majesty in Council has been heard."

The motion now came on for hearing.

[11] Anderson, for the plaintiff (appellant).—As a preliminary point I object that this motion is premature. The respondents have no right to obtain a stay of execution until their appeal to the Privy Council has been admitted. At present they have not got leave to appeal. It is possible that they may not obtain the necessary leave. Section 608 of the Civil Procedure Code plainly contemplates a stay of execution only after the appeal has been admitted.

Inverarity, for the defendants (respondents), contra.

JUDGMENT.

FARRAN, J.—The appellant has obtained a decree from the appeal Court ordering that probate shall issue to her of the will and codicils of her deceased husband. The respondents desire to appeal to the Privy Council, and with that view have presented the necessary petition under s. 598 of the Code, but that petition has not yet come before the Court, and their appeal has not yet been declared admitted. In that state of circumstances they move to stay the execution of the decree which the appellant (plaintiff) has obtained, and the question now raised by the appellant is whether the motion is not premature. On inquiry we find there have been two similar cases before the Court, and there may be others, as the search has not been exhaustive. Those brought to our notice favour the view that the Court at this stage has power to grant the application, but they are not sufficiently numerous to enable us to say that a course of practice has been established which would relieve us from considering the matter upon its merits. The question turns on the construction of s. 608 of the Civil Procedure Code. Does it preclude such an application as this until after the appeal has been admitted? We think not. The first clause of the section, referring to the admission of an appeal,—which must, we think, mean the final admission of the appeal under s. 603,—declares and enacts what the result of such admission is in the absence of directions to the contrary: the decree notwithstanding such admission shall be unconditionally enforced. The words "admitting the appeal" following the word "Court" in the same clause has, we think, no reference to the time when the Court is to give directions, but are descriptive of the Court which is to give them. They compendiously describe the Court [12] referred to in s. 598, viz., the Court whose decree is complained of. Then follow the remaining clauses of the s. (608). They enable "the Court," viz., the Court "admitting the appeal," or in other words "the Court whose decree is complained of," to take steps to impose conditions and to give directions as to the execution of the decree sought to be appealed from, but they impose no limitation as to time upon the exercise by such Court of its powers. Nor is there any reason why they should. As to the power of impounding moveable property, it is plain that to be of avail it must be exercised at a very early stage. The same principle must be applied to all. This Court then being the Court admitting the appeal, and not being limited as to time in the exercise of its powers can, if it thinks fit, exercise its powers as to staying execution at the present time. We are, therefore, of opinion that we have jurisdiction now to hear the application, and that it is not premature, though the appeal has not been admitted.

GOKULDAS MUCCANJI (Plaintiff) v. VASSANJI JAIRAM AND OTHERS (Defendants.)* [31st July, 1894.]

Deed—Creditors' trust deed— Assignment of all his property by debtor to trustees for payment of creditors—Suit by creditor who had signed as creditor and as trustee to recover his debt notwithstanding the deed.

On the 30th March, 1894, the plaintiff sued the defendant, who traded under the name of Vasanji Jairam, to recover Rs. 7,705 due on an adjusted account. On the 17th April following the suit was on the Board for hearing, but by consent of parties was adjourned for three months. Later on the same day the defendant executed a deed whereby he assigned all his property to the plaintiff and three other persons as trustees in trust for the payment of his creditors. The deed was executed by the plaintiff and the other trustees both as trustees and as creditors. It contained no release and no agreement by the creditors to take less than the full amount of their debts. It conveyed all the defendant's property to the trustee, who was to collect the estate and divide it rateably among the creditors "without prejudice to the rights of the several creditors to recover" the balance (if any) which might [13] remain due to them after receiving such rateable distribution, and it declared that the said agreement for the payment of the debts was accepted by the creditors, and that "upon payment to the said creditors, respectively, of the full or whole amount of their respective claims these presents shall operate as fully and effectually as an order of discharge from the Insolvent Court in respect of the debts now due from the said debtor, or the said firm of Vassanji Jairam, to the said creditors respectively, and may be pleaded in bar to any claim in respect of such debts; and each of them the said creditors for himself, his heirs, executors and administrators doth hereby covenant with the said debtor, his heirs, executors and administrators that he or they will not, if the said debtor shall pay the said full amount of the debts due by him or his said firm of Vassanji Jairam to the said creditors, bring any action, suit or proceeding against them or any of them for or in respect of the debts now due from the said debtor or the said firm of Vassanji Jairam to the said creditors respectively." On the execution of this deed the trustees took possession of defendant's books of accounts, and proceeded to recover the defendant's estate.

The three months for which, as above mentioned, the suit was adjourned in April, 1894, having now expired, it came on for hearing. The defendant pleaded the deed, and contended that the plaintiff having accepted the trust, and signed the deed, was not entitled to continue the suit against him.

Held, that it would be inequitable that the defendant having handed over all his property to four of his creditors as trustees with a view to the payment of his debts in full should be harassed by one of those creditors who had accepted the trust. The conduct of the plaintiff had been such as to deprive him of the right to present payment of his debt except by the assignment made to him and the other trustees. There had been a concluded agreement which precluded him from proceeding with his suit, and to allow him to proceed would be a fraud on the creditors. Under the circumstances there was an implied condition that the creditors should not sue until their remedy under the assignment was exhausted. The creditors should get what they could under the assignment, and then proceed for the rest.

THE plaintiff sued the defendant to recover the sum of Rs. 7,705 due upon an adjusted account dated 9th November, 1893. The suit was filed in March, 1894, and now came on for hearing as a short cause.

The defendant pleaded that on the 17th April, 1894, he had made over all his property to the plaintiff and three other creditors as trustees for the rateable distribution thereof among all his creditors, and that the plaintiff had accepted the said trust and, with the other trustees, had signed the deed. He contended that under these circumstances the plaintiff was not entitled to continue the suit against him or to get a decree.

In the 4th and 5th paragraphs of his written statement he further alleged that in respect of certain partnership transactions [14] he had cross claims against the plaintiff which ought to be set off against the plaintiffs' claim in this suit.

The deed in question was made between the defendant Vassanji Jairam, called "the debtor," of the first part; the plaintiff and three other persons, called "the trustees," of the second part; and "the several persons and firm's creditors of the firm of Vassanji Jairam, whose names are herewith affixed and hereinafter designated the said creditors, of the third part," and it contained (inter alia) the following recitals:—

"And whereas the said Vassanji Jairam being pressed has, as partner of the said firm of Vassanji Jairam, agreed to pay the said creditors the amount of their respective claims out of the assets of the said firm of Vassanji Jairam, so far as the said assets will extend, rateably in proportion to the respective claims of the said creditors and to secure such payment or composition by a grant and assignment of all the moveable and immoveable properties, estate and effects unto the said trustees, their executors, administrators and assigns upon the trusts hereinafter appearing for the realization of such estate and effects and the payment out of the proceeds thereof of the said rateable distribution or composition and by the covenant of the said trustees hereinafter contained to pay to the said creditors the said rateable distribution or composition; And whereas it has been agreed that the said arrangement shall be without prejudice to the rights of the said several creditors to recover from the said Vassanji Jairam and Gokuldas Meghji and their personal property the balance which may remain due to them after payment of the rateable distribution payable to them out of the said firm of Vassanji Jairam; And whereas the said creditors have agreed to the said proposal of the said debtor and to accept the said rateable distribution or composition and further payment of the balance of the said claims as is hereinbefore recited, and on payment thereof to give to the members of the said firm of Vassanji Jairam such release from the respective debts due to them the said creditors respectively as is hereinafter contained, &c."

The deed then "in pursuance of the said agreement" assigned to the trustees all the assets of the firm of Vassanji Jairam "and all other property of the said debtors" upon trust to recover and realise all the said assets and property and out of the same to pay the creditors rateably in proportion to the amount of their respective debts. It further contained (inter alia) the following clauses:—

"And the said trustees hereby for themselves and their heirs, executors and administrators covenant with each of the said creditors respectively and their respective executors, administrators and assigns that they the said trustees, their executors or administrators shall and will out of the net proceeds of the said sale, collection and conversion into money hereinbefore directed to be made, pay to each creditor the rateable distribution or composition payable to them on the amount [15] of their respective debts. And it is hereby agreed and declared that these presents are without prejudice to the rights of the said several creditors to recover the balance, if any, which may remain due to them (after receiving payment of the said rateable distribution or composition from the assets of the said firm of Vassanji Jairam) from the said debtor and the said Gokuldas Meghji personally, or from the personal estate and effects of the said Vassanji Jairam and Gokuldas Meghji. And the said debtor doth hereby for himself, his heirs, executors, and administrators, and for the said firm of Vassanji Jairam covenant with said trustees, their executors, administrators or assigns that he the said debtor now hath good right and power to assign the said premises in manner aforesaid. And this indenture also witnesseth that in consideration of the premises it is hereby agreed and declared that the said arrangement hereinbefore contained for payment of the debts due to the said creditors by the said debtor shall be and the same is hereby agreed to be accepted by the said creditors, and that upon payment to the said creditors respectively of the full or whole amount of their respective claims, these presents shall operate as fully and effectually as an order of discharge from the Insolvent Court in respect of the debts now due from the said debtor or the said firm of Vassanji Jairam to the said creditors respectively and may be pleaded in bar to any claim in respect of such debts. And each of them the said creditors for himself, his heirs, executors and administrators doth hereby covenant with the said debtor, his heirs, executors and administrators that he or they will not, if the said debtor shall pay the said full amount of the debts due by him or his said firm of Vassanji Jairam to the said creditors, bring any action, suit or proceeding against them or any of them for or in respect of the debts now due from the said debtor or the said firm of Vassanji Jairam to the said creditors respectively."

The deed was duly signed by the plaintiff and the three other trustees as trustees, and was also signed by them as creditors.

At the hearing the material issues were whether, having regard to the provisions of the above deed, the plaintiff could maintain this suit, and whether, in case the alleged partnership transactions were proved, the defendant was in this suit entitled to have the accounts taken, and to set off any amount which might be found due to him.

It appeared that this suit had been on the board for hearing on the morning of the day the above deed was signed, but that by consent of the parties it was postponed for three months, and later on that day the deed was executed.

The plaintiff gave evidence and stated that he had not agreed to abandon this suit, but merely to postpone the hearing. Evidence was also given that on execution of the deed the trustees had taken possession of the defendants' books and had [16] filed suits to recover the defendants' outstandings. Only a sum of Rs. 348 had been as yet recovered, and other suits would be necessary.

Inverarity for plaintiff:—The plaintiff is entitled to get a decree. This suit was filed before the execution of the deed, and the plaintiff never agreed to abandon it. The deed is not a composition deed. It contains no release, and no covenant to take less than the full debt. The Court cannot stay the suit though perhaps it may stay the execution of the decree. He commentod on the terms of the deed, and cited the Ipstones Iron Ore Co v. Pattinson (1); Clarke v. Williams (2); Eyre v. Archer (3); Civil Procedure Code (XIV of 1882), s. 243. No set-off could be permitted in this suit—Civil Procedure Code, s. 111.

Kirkpatrick, for defendant:—It would be inequitable to pass a decree when the defendant has given over all his property to the trustees for distribution. The trustees themselves are empowered by the deed to recover his property, and are actually doing so—Robson on Bankruptcy (6th Ed.), pp. 254, 780, 794; Norman v. Thompson (4); Kheta Mal v. Chuni Lal (5). As to set-off, he cited Niaz Gul Khan v. Durga Prasad (6); G. Chisolm v. Gopal Chunder Sarma (7.)

JUDGMENT.

CANDY, J.—This is a suit filed on the 30th March, 1894, by Gokuldas Muccanji against Vassanji Jairam and Gokuldas Meghji trading under the name and firm of Vassanji Jairam, on an account signed by the defendant on 9th November, 1893, when the amount of Rs. 7,705-10-3 was found due.

The written statement of the defendants filed on 30th July, 1894, the day before the hearing of this suit, raised two defences, viz., (a) first, that by a deed made on 17th April, 1894, the plaintiff and three other creditors of the defendants were appointed trustees of the estate and effects of the defendants, with power to realise the same and to pay the creditors of the defendants the amount of their claims, it being provided by the said deed that until such estate and effects were collected, no suit should be [17] maintained or instituted against the defendants. (b) Second, that plaintiff and defendants were partners in any business in cotton which either plaintiff or defendants should do, and that on an account being taken of their partnership transactions it would be found that a large sum was due to defendants from plaintiff; and this the defendants claimed to set off.

(1) 2 H. & C. 828 (833). (2) 3 H. & C. 508. (3) 16 C.B. (N.S.) 638.

This second plea was also used as an argument by the Advocate-General for transferring the case to the long-cause list. But I disallowed the plea, it being admitted by the Advocate-General that the alleged partnership transactions were distinct from the signed and adjusted account which forms the subject-matter of the present suit. No "ascertained sum of money" was claimed, no particulars of the debt sought to be set off tendered: so s. 111 of the Civil Procedure Code (XIV of 1882) was not applicable. Nor was this an equitable set-off independently of the provisions of that section, for the cross-demands do not arise out of one and the same transaction, nor are they so connected in their nature and circumstances as to make it inequitable that the plaintiff should recover, and the defendant be driven to a cross-suit.

For the same reason, when the case came on for hearing, I intimated that it was not open to defendants in the present suit to prove the allegations in the 4th or 5th paras. of the written statement, because the alleged partnership had no connection with the two specific accounts which were adjusted by the settlement of 9th November, 1893. This disposes of the second and third issues.

There remains the first and the most important issue, whether, having regard to the deed above mentioned, this suit is maintainable,—that is, whether the deed can be pleaded in bar to the present action.

Mr. Inverarity, for plaintiff, contended that the deed did not apply to a suit filed before the deed was executed, and that the first defendant had failed to fulfil his covenant according to the deed: further, that the deed contained no release, and that it was worthless, because the first defendant denied the deed, while the second defendant was wrongly omitted therefrom. Counsel [18] quoted Ipstones Park Iron Ore Co. v. Pattinson (1), Clarke v. Williams (2), and Eyre v. Archer (3).

Mr. Kirkpatrick, in support of the plea of the defendant, referred to Robson on Bankruptcy (6th Ed.), pp. 254, 780, 794, and quoted Norman v. Thompson (4) and Kheta Mal v. Chuni Lal (5).

In the last noted case the debtor and some of his creditors, including the plaintiff, agreed to an award made by arbitrators, by which the debtor was expressly released from certain debts. The plaintiff received certain payments under that award. It was held that if creditors who had not signed the award obtained decrees, the creditors who had signed it could only protect themselves under the terms of the award. They could not rescind the award, and fall back on their old debts in satisfaction of which the debtor had assigned all his property for the benefit of his creditors. The acceptance by one or more of the creditors of the assignment by the debtor of all his estate deprived them of all further relief against the debtor. Plaintiff being one of the creditors who accepted that mode of settlement was bound by it, and could not recover any balance that might remain over after the event of the award in the arbitration proceedings.

So here it is contended that if the plaintiff has accepted the settlement evidenced by the deed in question, and if that deed releases defendants so as to bar any present recovery of the debt due to plaintiff except by the settlement, then this suit cannot now be maintained. Thus the important question will be, what are the exact terms of that settlement?

In Norman v. Thompson (1) the question was one of pleading, viz., whether there was a variance between the plea and the facts found in the special verdict; but Mr. Kirkpatrick quoted the case as an authority for the proposition that an agreement by two or more of the creditors to enter into a composition is perfectly good and binding as to such parties, whether the others do so or not. In the present case it is not contended that the deed is invalid because all the creditors have not yet signed it. Plaintiff has signed it, and (it is said) has acted under it. It may be remarked [19] that in Norman v. Thompson (1) the composition was to accept from the debtor, in certain instalments, the sum of 10*s.* in the pound in full satisfaction and discharge of the creditors' respective debts and demands, and the defendant pleaded that he was ready and willing to pay the instalments at the time and place so appointed for the payment thereof. Such an agreement, no doubt, may be pleaded by the debtor by way of accord and satisfaction as a defence to an action by one of the compounding creditors for the original debt. So, too, where a creditor undertook to accept a composition and to sign a composition deed with a clause of release, and where everything on the debtor's part was done, it was held that there was both accord and satisfaction which could be pleaded in bar of an action for the original debt—Bradley v. Gregory (2).

The cases quoted by the learned counsel for the plaintiff have special reference to the English Bankruptcy Act of 1861. Thus in the Ipstones Park Iron Ore Co. v. Pattinson (3) it was held that a deed under the 192nd section of that Act does not operate as a statutable release of the debtor, pleadable in bar of an action by a creditor, and the debtor can only avail himself of it by application to the Court of Bankruptcy to stay the proceedings, or after certificate by application to the Court, in which judgment has been obtained, to stay execution. I did not understand Mr. Inverarity to contend that the only way in which defendants in the present suit could avail themselves of the deed was by application to the Court of Insolvency in Bombay to stay proceedings, or, after certificate obtained in that Court by application to this Court, to stay execution. On the contrary he contended that the only way in which stay of execution could be obtained was under s. 243 of the Civil Procedure Code (XIV of 1882), and that that section was not applicable in the present case.

The point to be noticed in the case just quoted is that the question was whether the deed could be pleaded as a statutable release. As the deed did not contain any provisions by which the creditors, in addition to a covenant not to sue, had agreed that, [20] if they did sue, the deed might be pleaded as a release, the only question was whether the statute, under which the deed purported to have been executed, made the deed operate as a bar to an action. The Court said—no; the relief indicated by the Legislature is by application to the Court of Bankruptcy, and so forth.

In the present case, the deed is not put forward as a statutable bar to the action. It is unnecessary, therefore, to further consider the above case, or that of Clarke v. Williams (1), in which the judgment of the Court was simply based on the cases of Eyre v. Archer and the Ipstones Park Iron Ore Co. v. Pattinson; and as was subsequently pointed out in Garrod v. Simpson (2) "in Eyre v. Archer, the deed was in the form of sch. D of the Bankruptcy Act, 1861, and was, therefore, a mere assignment and not a composition deed. In the deed in the Ipstones Park Iron Ore Co. v. Pattinson there was an agreement by the creditors to accept a particular composition, as well as an assignment by the debtor; but there was no allegation of tender. The question argued and decided was, whether the plea was good as a statutable release, and not whether, if it had averred a tender, it would have been good."

It may be remarked that the judgment in Clarke v. Williams (referred to above) was subsequently affirmed in the Exchequer Chamber (3), on the ground that the deed which operates under the Bankruptcy Act, 1861, is no bar to an action unless the statute makes it so. During the course of the argument Willes, J., remarked: "Suppose an assignment by a debtor of all his estate and effects to trustees to pay his creditors rateably, would there be an implied condition that they should not sue the debtor?" And Crompton, J., in his judgment said: "At common law this deed would not have afforded a defence to the action. Where a debtor assigns all his property to trustees for the benefit of his creditors, any creditor has a right to get what he can under the assignment and proceed for the rest. In deeds under the Bankruptcy Act, 1861, the requisite majority in number and value of creditors binds the rest: but they are only bound according to the terms [21] of the deed. This deed contains no release. Neither does it come within the principles of the decision in Clapham v. Atkinson (4) and other cases in which a composition deed has been held a bar to an action. Nor is it within that class of cases in which a composition deed is pleadable by way of accord and satisfaction."

Thus the question in the present case is, whether, apart from any statute, the defendants can plead that the effect of the deed is to bar the plaintiff's action?

The deed is to the following effect:—It recites that it is between the present defendants on the one part, four trustees of the second part (whose names are given, plaintiff being one of them), and the creditors of the defendant's firm of the third part ("whose names and seals are hereunto set and affixed"): that whereas Gokuldas (second defendant) retired from the firm and Vassanji (first defendant) is the only remaining partner; and he has agreed to pay the creditors the amount of their respective claims rateably out of the assets of the firm, without prejudice to the right of the creditors to recover the balances due to them after the rateable distribution, and the creditors have agreed on payment of such rateable distribution or composition and further payment to give a release to the members of the firm; in pursuance of the said agreement Vassanji conveys to the trustees the property described in the schedule, as also the personal or moveable estate and property of the firm and all other property of Vassanji, in trust to collect the estate and divide it rateably amongst the creditors of the firm, without prejudice to the rights of the creditors to recover the balances (if any due to them) from Vassanji and Gokuldas; and it is agreed that the said agreement for payment of the debts is accepted by the creditors, and upon payment to them of the full or whole of their respective claims, these presents shall operate as fully and effectually as an order of discharge from the Insolvent Court in respect of the debts now due, and may be pleaded in bar to any claim in respect of such debts: and the creditors covenant that if the debtor shall pay the full amount of the debts, they will not bring any action, suit or proceeding in respect of the debts.

[22] This deed was signed and sealed by Vassanji and the four trustees one of whom is the plaintiff. There is a schedule describing certain property, and there is a list with columns to show "names of creditors," "amount due to each creditor," "signature of crditors," "witnesses." In the third column the four trustees have signed as creditors. No other creditor has signed, and there is no entry in the other columns.

It is admitted that the managing trustee is in possession of defendants' accounts; that the trustees have filed one suit to recover a debt due to defendants; that they will have to file other suits, and that they have collected Rs. 348 as part of the estate of the firm.

On these facts as between the present plaintiff and defendants, I hold that it is not open to plaintiff to contend that the deed is inoperative because the defendants have contested the present suit, or because the second defendant has not signed the deed. Defendants have not denied the signed and adjusted account, and the second defendant has joined in admitting in the present suit the validity of the deed. Defendants have done all that is in their power to do, and they can plead the deed if it is really in their favour. But the question is whether the terms of the deed are such that it can be pleaded as a bar to the action.

Now it must be noticed that the present action was filed before the deed was executed. The suit was called on for hearing on the 17th April, 1894, the very day on which the deed was executed, and was adjourned by consent for three months; and there is not any record of any application being made for adjournment on the grouud that the parties were intending to execute a deed of assignment, the effect of which would be that this action could not proceed further. On the contrary, it is clear, from the solicitor's letter and plaintiff's deposition, that all that was intended was a settlement out of Court,—that is, a payment of the whole or part of the debt.

Further, it is clear that the only mention of any covenant not to sue is to be found in the concluding portion of the deed, which recites that upon payment of the whole of the respective claims of the creditors these presents may be pleaded in bar to any claim [23] in respect of such debts, and the creditors covenant that they will not, if the said debtor, his heirs, executors and administrators shall pay the said full amount of the debts due by him or the said firm to the said creditors, bring any action, suit or proceeding against them or any of them for or in respect of the debts now due from the said debtor or the said firm to the said creditors respectively.

It is fairly argued that if the deed was intended to operate as a bar to any action, clear language to that effect would have been used; that by covenanting not to sue after full payment, the right to sue before full payment was clearly not taken away; that this is not a composition deed by which the creditors agreed to accept a certain composition in full satisfaction of their claim, but simply an assignment deed by which the debtor conveyed all his property to four of his creditors as trustees to pay his debts rateably out of the assets, leaving the creditors free to sue for the balance (if any) of such debts, and only debarring them from suing when payment had been made in full.

On the other hand, it may be argued that the covenant not to sue on full payment was surplusage. If the debt is paid, that is a bar, the debt being extinguished. So, too, if it is released. But it is quite possible that here, though the debt has not been paid or released, the creditor's right to sue may be suspended. In the Ipstones Park Iron Ore Co. v. Pattinson (supra) the judgment of Pollock, C. B., was "although a debtor, who has effected an arrangement with his creditors, is entitled to protection," it was clear with reference to the language of the Bankruptcy Act under which the arrangement was made, and by analogy to proceedings under former Bankruptcy Acts, that protection can only be given in a particular way, and not by pleading the deed of arrangement in bar of an action filed by a creditor. Pigott, B., in his judgment, said: "No doubt there is a seeming anomaly in leaving a debtor to be harassed with actions after he has assigned all his property to trustees for the benefit of his creditors. But I suppose the Legislature thought that such actions would not be brought without good reason." This is illustrated by a remark of Channell, B., that such a deed under the Bankruptcy Act "has the beneficial effect of deterring creditors from harassing the [24] debtor with actions; for the object of a creditor in suing is not merely to obtain judgment, but to get the fruit of it, and he knows that if the proceedings under a deed of this kind are carried out, and the debtor obtains a certificate, the judgment is inoperative."

But here the deed is not under any statute, which provides a remedy or protection for the debtor in a particular way. The seeming anomaly still exists. The learned counsel for plaintiff did not pretend that he would be contented with a bare judgment, or that he could be prevented from getting the fruits of it.

Is it equitable that the defendants, having handed over all their property to four of their creditors as trustees with a view to a payment of their debts in full, should be harassed with an action by one of those creditors who has accepted the trust? Tatlock v. Smith (1) is a strong case in support of this argument in favour of defendants. In that case by an agreement between the defendants and their creditors, all defendants' stock in trade was placed in the hands of trustees for the benefit of the creditors, and the defendants were to execute to the trustees a conveyance of all their estate. The trustees carried on defendants' business and paid the creditors 10*s.* in the pound. Tindal, C. J., said "This agreement seems, by its terms, to contemplate a suspension of the right of action on the part of the creditors, and in our judgment that suspension still continues." Then after reciting the terms of the deed he says: "This of itself implies, that the trustees are to take the defendants' tangible property for the payment of their debts. They have taken it and they have made payments to the extent of 10*s.* in the pound. Is it reasonable that debtors who have surrendered so much, and have thereby deprived themselves of any other mode of effecting payment, should remain liable to hostile proceedings at the suit of their creditors? Their situation itself seems to preclude the possibility of any such intendment."

(1) 6 Bing. 339.

Parke, J., said: "On the face of this agreement certain things are to be done which plainly imply a suspension of the creditors' right to sue, and there is no evidence of anything having occurred to remit them to their rights."

[25] So, too, in Good v. Cheesman (1) it was held that an agreement by creditors to accept payment by the debtor agreeing to pay to a trustee one-third of his annual income, and executing a warrant of attorney as a collateral security until payment thereof, amounted to a consent to forbear enforcing their demands. During the argument, reference was made to Heathcote v. Crookshanks (2) and Littledale, J., remarked: "It was observed by Buller, J., there that no fund was appropriated for the payment of the debt; and that if the debtor had assigned over all his effects to a trustee for distribution among the creditors, that would have been a good consideration for a promise of forbearance;" and Parke, J., said: "It did not appear by the pleadings in that case that the creditors agreed to forbear. Here it may be inferred that they did."

Again in Garrard v. Woolner (3), where the plaintiff and other creditors of the defendants signed resolutions for entering into a composition deed with the defendants upon their property being assigned to trustees for the payment of the creditors, and where the defendants and their trustees refused to allow the plaintiff to come in as a creditor under the deed, it was held that he might sue defendants notwithstanding the execution of the resolutions. Tindal, J., said: "The defendants contend that a party who concurs in resolutions for the distribution of the property of his debtor brings himself within the operation of a subsequent deed by which the debtor's property is assigned for the benefit of the creditors at large, and that his separate right is thereby suspended till the creditors are satisfied, or at least placed in the situation in which they originally stood. As a general proposition this is true." So here, though there is no composition or release, and no covenant not to sue, except when full payment has been made of the debts, it would be a fraud on the other creditors if the plaintiff was permitted to go on with the present suit. A century ago Lord Kenyon enunciated the principle upon which such an action could not be maintained. In Butler v. Rhodes (4) the debtor had proposed to pay his creditors a composition, and for that purpose to execute an assignment of all his effects to trustees for their benefit. Plaintiff and one of the [26] creditors assented, but subsequently refused to sign the deed and brought an action to recover the whole of his demand. Lord Kenyon ruled that the evidence was a complete answer to the plaintiff's answer. He said:—

"The principle upon which the action could not be maintained was, that in consequence of this act of the plaintiff's, the defendant had parted with all his property, and the other creditors had been induced to execute the deed: that this was putting the defendant into a very awkward situation, as by assigning all his property he was committing an act of bankruptcy: that it, therefore, never should be allowed to the plaintiff to recede from what he had undertaken, and to evade the effect of the composition, by a refusal to execute the deed which had been prepared with his consent."

So in the present case, admitting that defendant's plea, that the deed expressly provided that until the estate was collected no suit by a creditor should be maintained, is incorrect, and admitting that it is doubtful whether the debtors at first had any clear idea on the point, and possibly thought that they were bound to meet the plaintiff's action by at once paying the debt; admitting that the present suit was filed before the deed was executed, still in my opinion the defendants are entitled to set up any equitable defence which they may have to the action. If the conduct of the creditor has been such as to deprive him of the right to the present payment of the debt except by the assignment made to him and the other trustees, then the suit must be dismissed. There has been a concluded agreement—not a mere preliminary step—which precludes the plaintiff from proceeding with this action. To allow him to proceed would amount to a fraud on the other creditors. With reference to the remarks, above noted, of Willes and Crompton, JJ., in Clarke v. Williams, I would say that under circumstances such as are found in the present case, there is an implied condition that the creditors shall not sue the debtor till their remedy under the assignment is exhausted. The creditors must get what they can under the assignment and then proceed for the rest. For these reasons I find on the first issue in favour of the defendants, and dismiss the suit with costs.

Before Mr. Justice Parsons and Mr. Justice Candy.

DAVE HARISHANKAR AND ANOTHER (Original Plaintiffs), Appellants v. THE TOWN MUNICIPALITY OF UMRETH (Original Defendant), *Respondent. [15th December, 1893.]

Municipality—Municipal Act (VI of 1873), s. 33, cl. 1—Notice of proposed building—Want of such notice—Want of permission to build—Demolition of building.

On the 18th August, 1890, plaintiffs sent a notice to the Town Municipality of Umreth, intimating their intention to erect a building on their land, and giving a rough sketch plan of the land intended to be built upon. In this notice plaintiffs did not expressly state their intention to build the wall in dispute.

On the 28th August, 1890, the Municipality wrote to the plaintiffs, requiring them to furnish a plan showing the design of the proposed building with its measurements.

On 30th September, 1890, the plaintiffs, without furnishing the plan as required, built a wall on their land. Thereupon the Municipality gave a notice to the plaintiffs requiring them to pull it down, as it had been built without their permission. The plaintiffs having failed to comply with this notice, the wall was demolished, and its materials were carried away by the municipal servants. Thereupon the plaintiffs sued the Municipality to recover damages for the wrongful demolition of the wall.

Held, that the plaintiffs had contravened the provisions of cl. 1 of s. 33 of Bombay Act VI of 1873, inasmuch as they had built the wall without giving any notice, or (if they did give notice) without affording the information required by the Municipality. The Municipality were, therefore, justified in ordering the wall to be demolished.

* Second Appeal, No. 459 of 1892.

DEC. 15.
APPELLATE CIVIL.
19 B. 27.

SECOND appeal from the decision of G. McCorkell, District Judge of Ahmedabad, in appeal No. 271 of 1891 of the District file.

This action was instituted by plaintiffs to recover damages from the Town Municipality of Umreth for the wrongful removal of a wall erected by them on their private ground.

The undisputed facts of the case were as follows :—

On the 18th August, 1890, the plaintiffs sent a notice to the municipal secretary, intimating their intention to erect a building upon their land, and giving a rough sketch plan of the land intended to be built upon.

[28] On the 28th August, 1890, the municipal secretary wrote, in reply, that the plaintiffs should within ten days produce the title-deeds of their property, and a plan showing the form of the intended building with its measurements and should abstain from constructing any work until permission was granted.

On the 7th September, 1890, the plaintiffs informed the Municipality that they had sent a copy of their title-deeds with a municipal karkun, and that the form of the proposed building together with its measurements had been sufficiently set forth in their notice of the 18th August, 1890.

On the 30th September, 1890, plaintiffs erected the wall in question upon their land.

On the 9th October, 1890, the managing committee passed a resolution to the effect that as the wall had been built without permission, a notice should be given to demolish the wall within ten days. A notice was accordingly given to the plaintiffs to pull down the wall.

On the 16th November, 1890, the wall was demolished, and its materials were carried away, by municipal workmen.

The plaintiffs thereupon filed the present suit to recover damages from the Municipality for the wrongful removal of their wall.

The municipality pleaded (inter alia) that the plaintiffs had been required under s. 33 of the Bombay District Municipal Act (VI of 1873) to furnish a plan showing the limits and the form of the proposed building; that they did not comply with this notice ; and that they were not entitled to build without permission.

The Subordinate Judge held that the wall had been built without notice, and without furnishing the information required by the Municipality under cl. 1 of s. 33 of Bombay Act VI of 1873, and that the Municipality under s. 78 had a right to demolish it. The plaintiffs' claim was, therefore, rejected with costs.

On appeal, the District Judge was of opinion that the plaintiffs had no authority to build without fulfilling the conditions laid down by the Municipality. The Municipality were, therefore [29] justified in ordering the removal of the wall under s. 48 of Bombay Act VI of 1873. The decree of the Subordinate Judge was confirmed with costs.

Against this decision the plaintiffs appealed to the High Court.

Nagindas Tulsidas (with him G. K. Parekh) for appellants (plaintiffs):—The lower Court erred in treating this case as one of encroachment in a public street. Neither party to this suit contends that the wall in dispute encroached on a public street. Section 48 of Bombay Act VI of 1873 has, therefore, no application. The action of the Municipality can only be justified under s. 33 of the Act. But we have complied with the requirements of that section.

G. M. Tripathi for respondents :—The plaintiffs have not acted in accordance with s. 33 of the Act. They have neither obtained permission to build, nor furnished the information required by the Municipality. In their first notice, there is not a word about their intention to build the wall in question. There was, therefore, no notice of the building of this wall. But assuming that the wall was a part of the proposed building, they refused to furnish the plan as required by the Municipality. We were, therefore, justified in pulling down the wall.

JUDGMENT.

PARSONS, J.—Both the lower Courts agree that under s. 33 of the District Municipal Act the defendants had the power to require the wall built by the plaintiffs to be demolished. Both, however, have quoted a wrong section as justifying the demolition. The District Judge says: "Build, however, they did without showing their title to the land, and consequently the Municipality removed the building under the provisions of s. 48. In this action they were acting within their legal rights." As, however, there was no finding, and no allegation even, that the plaintiffs built their wall in a public street, the District Judge was wrong in holding that the defendants were justified under s. 48 of the District Municipal Act in removing it.

The Subordinate Judge says that "the wall in question was built without notice, and also without affording the information [30] required by the managing committee under cl. 1 of s. 33. The defendant Municipality had, therefore, power to require the plaintiffs to demolish it. That not having been done, they were empowered by law under s. 78 to have it demolished." Section 78, however, only enacts that the occupier, in default of the owner, may execute works, and it has no bearing on the case at all. It is the second clause of s. 75 which applies to the case of non-compliance with a notice under s. 33 as expressly therein stated.

The effect, however, of both the decisions is the same. They both support a demolition, the illegality of which is alleged by the plaintiffs. The facts are these. The plaintiff sent the defendants a notice of their intended building on the 18th August, 1890. In that they gave a rough sketch plan of the land intended to be built on, but they did not show the wall in question, or state any intention of building it. On the 28th August the defendants asked the plaintiffs to furnish their title-deeds and a full plan showing the form of the intended building with its measurements, and to abstain from building until their permission was granted. On the 7th September the plaintiffs sent a copy of one deed of title, and said that sufficient information of the building had been given in their first notice. No notice of that letter was taken by the defendants, and on the 30th September the plaintiffs erected the wall in question. This having come to the knowledge of the defendants, a notice was on the 9th October given to the plaintiffs requiring them to demolish the wall within ten days, as it was built without permission. The plaintiffs ineffectually remonstrated against this order and failed to obey it. On the 16th November the defendants demolished the wall.

The point, therefore, is, whether in building the wall the plaintiffs contravened the provisions of s. 33 so as to justify the action of the defendants in demolishing it. It is clear that the defendants had no right to ask the plaintiffs for any title deeds—In re Jamnadas Dulabdas (1). They had a right, however, to ask for a plan and to refuse permission to build till the plan was furnished. Whether, had the plaintiffs built after the expiry of a month from the date of their letter of the 7th [31] September, they would have been within their rights, is not a point that need be considered in the present case, because they began to build their wall before the month had expired. By so building it is clear that they contravened the section if any notice at all was required. It is not a part of the plaintiffs' case that no notice was required. It is evident from the pleadings that the wall either was a part of the building which the plaintiffs proposed to erect, or was a building in itself as defined in the Act. The plaintiffs rely on the assertion that the notice they gave was a sufficient one, but both the Courts below have found against them on this point, and we think that they were quite right in that decision. For these reasons we confirm the decree with costs.

(1) 15 B. 516.

GUJARAT UNIVERSITY

CANDY, J.—The District Judge was mistaken in thinking that the Municipality removed the wall in question under s. 48 of the Bombay District Municipal Act. That section (as the District Judge remarked) empowers a Municipality to remove all obstructions in any public street. But neither side in the present case alleged that the wall was erected in a public street.

However, the facts, as to which there is no dispute, are sufficient to support the finding recorded by the District Judge on the only issue raised before him, viz., whether the Municipality had authority to remove the wall erected by the plaintiffs. The decision of that issue depends upon the question whether in building the wall the plaintiffs contravened the provisions of s. 33 of the Municipal Act, so as to justify the Municipality in issuing the notice, dated 9th October, requiring the plaintiffs to demolish the wall within ten days, as it was built without permission. If that notice was according to law, then, on the plaintiffs refusing to comply with its terms, the Municipality under cl. 2 of s. 75 of the Act had power to demolish the wall.

It is evident from the pleadings that the wall either was a part of the building which the plaintiffs proposed to erect, or was a building in itself as defined in the Act. If the former, then the Municipality were justified by their notice of 28th August, 1890, in calling for a plan giving the requisite information [32] with regard to the proposed building; and the fact that a demand was also made for documentary proof of plaintiffs' ownership of the land—a demand which would not be justified—In re Jamnadas Dulabdas (1)—would not invalidate the notice calling for a plan. On the other hand, if the wall was a building distinct from the building which plaintiffs by their original notice proposed to erect, then due notice of the same was never given. In either case the plaintiffs began or made a building without the requisite notice or without affording the information legally demanded from them. The action of the Municipality was, therefore, justified, and the present claim was rightly dismissed. We must confirm the decree with costs.

GANGARAM KUSHABA RANGOLE (Original Plaintiff), Applicant v. NARAYAN BABAJI RANGOLE (Original Defendant), *Opponent.

Stamp—Letters submitting to arbitration.

Letters written by parties authorizing arbitrators to arbitrate between them do not require to be stamped.

THIS was an application under the extraordinary jurisdiction of the High Court against the decision of Rao Bahadur Jayasatya Bodhrao Tirmalrao, First Class Subordinate Judge of Satara.

The plaintiff and the defendant agreed to refer their differences to certain arbitrators, and they did so by two separate letters which were addressed to the same arbitrators, and which were exactly in the same terms, except that one was signed by the plaintiff and the other was signed by the defendant. The arbitrators made their award, and the plaintiff applied to the Court to have it filed. The Subordinate Judge declined to file the award, holding that the letters of submission required to be stamped as an agreement, and that not being so stamped, the arbitrators had no authority to act.

[33] The plaintiff applied to the High Court under its extraordinary jurisdiction, contending that the letters of reference did not require any stamp, and that if they did, the Subordinate Judge was wrong in not accepting the penalty which the plaintiff had offered to pay. A rule nisi was granted, calling upon the defendant to show cause why the order of the Subordinate Judge refusing to file the award should not be set aside.

Mahadeo V. Bhat, for the applicant (plaintiff) in support of the rule.—Each letter merely says that the person to whom it is addressed should settle the dispute. It is a submission by each party, and nothing more; and as such does not require a stamp.

Gangaram B. Rele, for the opponent (defendant), showed cause.—The two letters, when read together, amount to an agreement between the parties to refer the dispute to arbitration, and as such require a stamp duty of eight annas under art. 5, cl. (c), sch. I of the Stamp Act (I of 1879).

JUDGMENT.

SARGENT, C. J.—The letters written by the parties authorizing the arbitrators to arbitrate between them did not require to be stamped. Each letter is to be read as against the party writing it, and operates as a submission to arbitration by that party. Together they might, no doubt, be used as evidence of a verbal agreement to submit to arbitration, if that were a question necessary to be determined. But the letters of authority by the parties to the arbitrators are of themselves sufficient to support the arbitration and, therefore, the award.

We must, therefore, in the exercise of our extraordinary jurisdiction, make absolute the rule nisi and discharge the order of the Court below, and direct the First Class Subordinate Judge to proceed to dispose of the case on the merits. Costs to abide the result.

Rule made absolute.

Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), s. 235, cl. (j), and s. 260—Decree—Execution—Application for execution—Form of application—Practice—Procedure.

In a suit brought under s. 539 of the Code of Civil Procedure (Act XIV of 1882) a decree was passed appointing the defendants managing trustees of a Hindu temple, and laying down certain rules for their guidance in future. The plaintiffs applied for execution of the decree and filed a darkhast praying that the defendants be ordered to act as directed by the decree, and that, if they failed to do so, steps be taken according to law.

Held, that the darkhast was not in accordance with s. 235, cl. (j), or s. 260 of the Code of Civil Procedure (Act XIV of 1882) as it did not specify the mode in which the assistance of the Court was sought.

APPEAL from the decision of G. McCorkell, Esquire, District Judge of Ahmedabad, in darkhast No. 8 of 1893.

The applicants Ghelabhai Chakaldas and Balabhai Chaganlal filed a suit under s. 539 of the Code of Civil Procedure (Act XIV of 1882) against Sha Karamchand Gokaldas and his brother Chhotalal Gokaldas as trustees of a public temple called the derasar of the Soda Somji, praying for the removal of the trustees, and for an account of the trust funds in their hands.

The suit was referred to arbitration, and an award was made by which the arbitrators settled a scheme for the future management of the temple, and appointed six trustees to manage the temple property. One of these trustees was the defendant Karamchand.

The award was filed in Court and a decree passed in terms of the award on the 29th October, 1891.

On the 9th January, 1893, the applicants filed a darkhast for the execution of the decree. It set forth certain specific directions contained in the various clauses of the decree, and prayed that the defendants (opponents) should be ordered to obey them, and it concluded as follows:—

[35] "We pray that the defendants Karamchand and Chhotalal Gokaldas be ordered to act in the manner above stated, and, if they fail to act as above directed, steps be taken according to law."

The defendants raised several objections to this darkhast, but they were all overruled, and the Court passed an order directing execution to proceed.

DEC. 19.
APPELLATE CIVIL.
19 B. 34.

Against this order the defendants appealed to the High Court.

Ganpat Sadashiv Rao, for appellants.—The darkhast is not in accordance with s. 235 of the Code of Civil Procedure (Act XIV of 1882). The applicant is bound to state the mode in which the assistance of the Court is required, whether by arrest of the person of the judgment-debtor, or by attachment of his property, or otherwise. The plaintiffs do not seek either to arrest the person, or attach the property, of the judgment-debtor. They merely ask that the defendant be ordered to act in accordance with the decree. This is not a compliance with cl. (j) of s. 235. The darkhast is, therefore, not according to law. The plaintiffs ought to have sought the assistance of the Court as provided by s. 260 of the Code—Protap Chunder Doss v. Peary Chowdhrain (1) and Vaman v. Lakshman (2).

Goverdhan M. Tripathi, for respondents.—The present objection to the form of the darkast was not taken in the Court below. If it had been taken in time, we would have got the darkhast amended. The objection is a technical one, and the Court will not reject the darkhast on a purely technical ground. The case of Protap Chunder Doss (1) cited for the appellant shows that in a case like this the Court, rather than dismiss the darkhast, will give the decree-holder an opportunity to amend it. We apply for an amendment of the darkhast.

JUDGMENT.

JARDINE, J.—The respondents in their application for execution of the decree have ignored the requirements of ss. 235 (j) and 260 of the Code of Civil Procedure. Following Vaman v. Lakshman (2), we are of opinion that the District Judge ought to have refused the application in its present form. We now reverse his order and reject the application. Costs on the respondents in both Courts.

Hindu law—Widow—Alienation by widow—Purchaser from one of several divided co-sharers—Suit for joint possession—Partition suit—Registration—Evidence—Notice of attornment admissible without registration.

The property in dispute (consisting of 12 thikans or plots of land) was originally held by A and B as tenants-in-common, and they divided the income according to their respective shares. After A's death his widow adopted Chitko on condition that she was to remain in absolute possession and enjoyment for her life, and that Chitko was to succeed to the estate after her death. The widow mortgaged 9 out of the 12 thikans, sold one, and granted a perpetual lease of another to the defendant. All these alienations to the defendant were made without any legal necessity. The defendant also purchased B's share in the thikans in dispute. The plaintiff purchased Chitko's rights, and on the widow's death sued to set aside her alienations and to obtain joint possession with the defendant of all the thikans. The defendant pleaded (inter alia) that the widow's alienations were valid and binding on the plaintiff, and that the plaintiff's remedy was a partition suit.

Held, that A's widow, not having higher powers than those of an ordinary Hindu widow who succeeds as heir to her sonless husband, could only make valid alienations for purposes warranted by the law. As no legal necessity was shown in respect of the alienations in question, which were made long after disputes had commenced between her and her adopted son, they were not binding on him or on his alience the plaintiff.

Held, also, that plaintiff was entitled to be put into joint possession with the defendant. Both were outside strangers who had purchased the several shares of the separated owners of the thikans in dispute. A partition suit was not, therefore, necessary.

Where on the redemption of a mortgage the mortgagee executed a document which purported to be a notice of attornment to the tenants in occupation of the mortgaged property, containing a recital that the property had been redeemed.

Held that the document, though unregistered, was admissible in evidence for its own proper purpose of proving the attornment, though not for the purpose of proving that the mortgage charge was satisfied.

SECOND appeal from the decision of Rao Bahadur Kashinath B. Marathe, First Class Subordinate Judge, A.P., at Ratnagiri, in appeal No. 86 of 1892.

The property in dispute consisted of 12 thikans originally held by one Chitko Raghunath and his co-sharer as tenants-in-common. [37] They used to divide the income of the thikans according to their respective shares.

On Chitko's death his share of the property in dispute devolved on his daughter in-law Jankibai, the widow of his predeceased son.

On 26th April, 1863, Jankibai adopted a son, also called Chitko, under an agreement which provided that she was to remain in exclusive possession and management of the property during her lifetime, and that the adopted son was to succeed to the estate after her death.

In 1870 Chitko came of age. Thereupon he sued Jankibai for possession of his adoptive father's property, alleging that the agreement of the 26th April, 1863, was invalid, and was not binding on him.

This case came up on appeal to the High Court, which ultimately decided that the agreement in question was valid, and that Chitko was not entitled to the possession of the property during Jankibai's lifetime(1).

After this decision Jankibai mortgaged 9 out of the 12 thikans, sold one, and granted a permanent lease of another thikan to the defendant. She also released a thikan from the charge of a mortgage-debt due to him. All these alienations were made to the defendant shortly before Jankibai's death. At the same time defendant purchased the interest of Chitko's co-sharer in the property in dispute.

Jankibai died in 1886.

In 1890 plaintiff sued as purchaser of the right of Chitko (the adopted son) to set aside the alienations of Jankibai, and to obtain joint possession with the defendant of all the thikans alienated by her.

The defendant pleaded (inter alia) that the alienations in question were valid and binding on the plaintiff, and that he was in possession of the whole property not only as Jankibai's alienee, but also as a purchaser of the rights of Chitko's cosharer, and that the plaintiff's proper remedy was a partition suit.

APPELLATE CIVIL.
19 B. 36.

[38] The Subordinate Judge held that Jankibai's alienations not being supported by any legal necessity were not binding after her death, either on her adopted son or on his alienee (the present plaintiff), and that the plaintiff was entitled to be put into joint possession with the defendant. He, therefore, awarded the plaintiff's claim.

This decision was confirmed on appeal.

The defendant thereupon preferred a second appeal to the High Court.

Ghanasham Nilkanth, for appellant (defendant).—The property in dispute was held jointly by Jankibai and her co-sharers. At Jankibai's death defendant was in possession partly as Jankibai's alienee and partly in his own right. He had purchased the interest of Janki's co-sharer. On the other hand, plaintiff claims as purchaser of Chitko's rights. He is not entitled to be put into joint possession with the defendant. His proper remedy is a partition suit—Babaji v. Vasudev (1); Kallapa v. Venkatesh (2); Vishnu v. Venkatrav (3). I next contend that Janki's alienations were valid. The lease granted to the defendant was within the scope of her authority. It was a lawful use of the powers conferred on her by the adoption deed. But assuming that the lease is invalid, defendant is entitled to be reimbursed the cost of improvements.

Vasudev Gopal Bhandarkar, for respondent.—This is a suit between two purchasers from different members of a family already divided. Each member was in separate possession of his own share. In such a case the plaintiff need not bring a partition suit. The cases cited refer to the claims of a person who has purchased the rights of a member of an undivided family. Those cases, therefore, do not apply. A partition suit is not necessary between tenants-in-common—Khan Mahomed v. Krishnarav (4); Sakharam v. Govind (5). As to the alienations of Jankibai, they were clearly in excess of her authority. The adoption deed does not confer on her any proprietary rights over the estate. It merely [39] confers on her the powers of a sonless Hindu widow succeeding to the separate or self-acquired property of her deceased husband. She had no authority to mortgage, sell, or otherwise alienate the property except for strict necessity. The onus of proving such necessity lies on the alienee. The defendant has not discharged this onus. It is found as a fact that the alienations were made by the widow without any necessity whatever. That being so, they cannot bind the plaintiff. Refers to Mussamat Bhagbutti v. Chowdry Bholanath (6); Koonjbehari Dhur v. Premchand Dutt (7); Hirabai v. Lakshmibai (8); Lalla Byjnath v. Bissen (9); Roy Mukhun Lall v. Stewart (10); Narayan v. Yamunabai (11). The lease being invalid, the defendant is not entitled to compensation for improvements—Herman v. Jeuchner (12). Exhibit 81 is not admissible in evidence for want of registration. It was put in to prove the extinction of the mortgage—Faki v. Khotu (13).

JUDGMENT.

JARDINE, J.—In this case the appellant's pleader rested his contentions chiefly on four grounds. He contended (1) that the suit was improperly framed and that plaintiff's remedy was a partition suit; (2) that Jankibai was competent to make the alienations, and her acts bound the plaintiff; (3) that even if the other alienations were set aside, the permanent lease of plot No. 3 granted by Janki to defendant should hold good, and if set aside, defendant was at least entitled to compensation for improvements made by him; (4) that the redemption of plot No. 8 by defendant from Janki bound the plaintiff, who could not ask the defendant to repay the mortgage-debt charged on it, and already satisfied, twice over. We feel satisfied that none of these contentions are at all tenable.

Plaintiff was purchaser of the rights of one Chitko, the adopted son of Janki. Under the adoption deed, Janki reserved to herself full powers of management for her life. Janki died in 1886, and before her death she mortgaged nine out of the twelve plots now in dispute with defendant, sold in part one of them [40] (No. 12) to him, gave a permanent lease of plot No. 3, and released plot No. 8 from the charge of a mortgage-debt due to her.

The lands in dispute were held in joint ownership by Janki's husband and a co-sharer, whose rights defendant purchased. After Janki's death, plaintiff, as purchaser of Chitko's rights, brought this suit to cancel Janki's alienations in defendant's favour and to obtain joint possession with defendant of the lands to the extent of Chitko's share therein. Defendant admitted (Ex. 65) that he had purchased the interest of a co-sharer of Janki's husband. He further admitted that he paid to Janki the rent due for her share of the jointly owned lands. Under these circumstances, we do not think that defendant could legally require plaintiff to bring a partition suit in respect of these lands, when plaintiff only sought to be placed in the same position as Janki occupied before. The authorities (Vishnu v. Venkatrav (1), Babaji v. Vasudev (2), Kallapa v. Venkatesh (3)) cited by the appellant's pleader all relate to claims brought by the purchasers of the rights of a member or members of an undivided family. This was not the case here. Both plaintiff and defendant were outside strangers, and had purchased the several shares of separated owners of jointly owned lands. The rulings reported in Abaji Vithal Prabhu v. Govind Apaji Waradkar (4), Khan Mahomed v. Krishnarav (5) and Sakharam v. Govind (6) appear to us to govern in the present case the rights of such purchasers.

As regards the nature and extent of Janki's powers over the property managed by her during her lifetime under the terms of the adoption deed (Ex. 146), they have formed the subject of previous litigation, and were adjudicated upon in second appeal No. 547 of 1888 and also in the case of Chitko v. Janaki (7). Jankibai's powers could not fairly be placed on a higher level than those of a Hindu widow, who succeeds as heir to her sonless husband. The adoption deed itself gives her only unrestricted enjoyment during her lifetime. It confers [41] on her no proprietary rights. As such Hindu widow, Janki could only make valid alienations for certain purposes. No such legal necessity has been shown in respect of the mortgages and sales effected by her in 1883 and 1885 a short time before her death. Chitko would not have been bound by these alienations and plaintiff stands in Chitko's place. The mortgage bonds (Exs. 72, 76) and the sale-deed (Ex. 77) were not passed to pay all her husband's debts. She had, according to the defendant's own evidence, a net income of Rs. 300 a year, and her alienations, therefore, made long after disputes commenced between her and Chitko, must be set aside as having no legal validity after her death—Koonjbehari Dhur v. Premchand Dutt (1), Hirabaï v. Lakshmibai (2), Annaji Dattatraya v. Chandrabai (3), Lalla Byjnath v. Bissen (4) and Roy Mukhun Lall v. Stewart (5).

The permanent lease (Ex. 79) of plot No. 3, passed also in 1885, cannot be placed on ony other footing than Janki's mortgages and sales. It has been held that a manager of temple property cannot grant a valid permanent lease—Narayan v. Yamunabai (6)—and Janki's lease could have no legal force after her death. The lease was not merely voidable but void as against Chitko and his assigns.

As regards the alleged expenditure on improvements, the Court of first instance characterized the Commissioner's report (Ex. 21) as an extraordinary document of no value. The appellant did not choose to take objection to this finding, and he cannot now be permitted in second appeal to urge this equitable claim for compensation.

As regards plot No. 8, it certainly stands on a different footing from the other lands. It did not belong to Chitko, and it was only mortgaged with him by the owner, whose equity of redemption was bought by defendant. Defendant subsequently took back the mortgage bond from Janki in September, 1885 (Exs. 80, 81). The endorsement of satisfaction made on the back of this bond (Ex. 80, which is for more than Rs. 100) is clearly inadmissible in evidence, as it was not registered. Exhibit [42] 81 was held to be inadmissible by the lower Court of appeal on the same ground. This document is, however, not a release or sodchitti, but is a notice of attornment to the cultivating tenants of the lands redeemed. As such under the authority of Faki v. Khotu (7), Sangappa v. Basappa (8), Shidlingapa v. Chenbasapa (9), Annapa v. Ganpati and Vishnu (10), Jagappa v. Latchappa (11), Gireedhur Doss Mohunt v. Nitto Gopal Doss (12), and Bharmava v. Ningava (13), it would be admissible in evidence for its own proper purpose of proving attornment, though not for the purpose of proving that the mortgage charge was satisfied—Basawa v. Kalkapa (14), Varada v. Krishnasami (15), Gopi v. Markande (16), Jagappa v. Latchappa (11), and Deb Narain Mundul v. Baharee Lall Ghose (17). The Court of first instance, however, held that Ex. 81 was not proved to be a genuine and bona fide document. The appellant took no objection to this finding in the lower Court of appeal, and it is doubtful if it is open to him to raise this question in second appeal. Exhibit 81 being thus not proved to be genuine, the question of its admissibility or otherwise is really one of minor importance. We accordingly overrule the objections urged by the appellant in support of his case and confirm the decree of the First Class Subordinate Judge, A. P., with costs.

[43] APPELLATE CIVIL.

BHIKAJI BAJI AND ANOTHER (Original Plaintiffs), Appellants v. PANDU (Original Defendant), *Respondent. [20th December, 1893.]

Vendor and purchaser—Right of purchaser to have lands registered in his name in revenue records—Collector's books—Suit for declaration of such right—Limitation—Limitation applicable to such suit—Such right not an interest in immoveable property—Cause of action in respect of such right—Declaratory decree—Jurisdiction—Objection taken for first time in second appeal—Practice.

Plaintiffs having purchased certain lands in 1867 brought this suit in the year 1890 to obtain a declaration of their right to have the land registered in their name in the revenue records. The lower Court dismissed the suit as barred under art. 144, sch. II of the Limitation Act (XV of 1877).

Held, reversing the decree, that a right to be placed on the register was not an interest in immoveable property, and that art. 144 of the Limitation Act did not apply. The right is one which does not give rise to cause of action until it is asserted or denied, and a suit for a declaratory decree in respect to it must be brought within a period of six years from that date. In the present case the right had not been asserted or denied until the suit was filed, and the suit was, therefore, not barred.

An objection having been raised, in second appeal, that the Court had no jurisdiction to entertain the suit, as the plaintiffs had not previously asked the Collector to place them on the register.

Held that this circumstance was not necessary to give jurisdiction, although it might be a reason for treating the suit as premature. That objection, however, being taken for the first time in second appeal, was disallowed.

[R., 20 A. 35 ; 1 C.L.J. 73.]

SECOND appeal from the decision of Rao Bahadur R. D. Paranjpe, First Class Subordinate Judge of Ahmednagar with appellate powers.

The plaintiffs sued in 1890 for a declaration of their right to have certain land transferred to their names from that of the defendant in the revenue records. They had purchased the land at a Court sale held in 1867 in execution of a decree against one Jayabai, and had been ever since in possession. They complained that in December, 1886, after Jayabai's death, the defendant wrongfully got the lands transferred to her (Jayabai's) name. The defendant pleaded that the lands belonged to him, and that he was entitled to have them now entered in his own name.

[44] The Subordinate Judge found that the defendant had no right to the lands, and he passed a decree for the plaintiffs.

On appeal by the defendant the Judge held the claim time-barred, and reversed the decree, for the following reason :—

"The right, title and interest of Jayabai sold to plaintiff at the auction sale includes also her right to have the lands registered in her name in the Collector's book.

"But plaintiff purchased that right in 1867, and sued to have it declared in 1890, after a lapse of twenty-three years. From the date of sale the continuance of the lands in Jayabai's name became adverse to plaintiff. So under art. 144 of the schedule to the Limitation Act, the suit is barred by the law of limitation."

DEC. 20.
APPELLATE CIVIL.

Ghanasham N. Nadkarni, for the appellants (plaintiffs) :—We purchased the lands at a Court sale and were put in possession. We are, therefore, entitled to a declaration as between ourselves and the defendant, who has induced the Collector to transfer the lands to his name, that we have a right to get our name registered in Government records. We are the sole owners, and the defendant is endeavouring to make evidence that will support some future claim by him by having the lands registered in his name. It would be dangerous for us to allow such evidence to exist against us—Ganpatrav v. Narayan (1).

Balkrishna N. Bhajikar, for respondent (defendant) :—As soon as the plaintiffs had purchased in 1867 and obtained the certificate of sale, the right to have their names registered in the revenue record accrued to them. It is one of the rights of ownership. They bought this right with the property, but they omitted to take it, and it was retained by the judgment-debtor Jaya adversely to the plaintiffs. They took no steps to claim the right and to get their names registered for twenty-three years after their purchase. Therefore, the present suit is barred. There is no evidence to show that before the institution of the present suit they ever asserted their right. A suit for a declaration is governed by six years' limitation, and the present suit not [46] having been brought within that period from the date of the plaintiff's certificate of sale, is time-barred. Further, we contend that a Civil Court has no jurisdiction to entertain such a suit until the refusal of the Collector to enter the plaintiffs' names in the Government record. The plaintiffs ought first to have gone to the Collector and asked him to enter their names under s. 71 of the Land Revenue Code (Bombay Act V of 1879). Under that section the Collector has a right to inquire as to the person to be next put on the record after the death of the registered holder. Under s. 196 of the same Code the Collector is invested with the functions of a Civil Court, and the plaintiffs ought to have sought their remedy before the Collector. The suit should, therefore, be rejected for want of jurisdiction to entertain it.

The point being one of jurisdiction can be taken for the first time in second appeal.

JUDGMENT.

SARGENT, C.J.—The object of the plaint in this case is to obtain a declaration of the plaintiffs' preferential right as between themselves and Pandu to have their names placed on the register. The lower appeal Court has dismissed the plaint on the ground that their right to be placed on the register was barred by art. 144 of the Limitation Act. But a right to be placed on the register is not an interest in immoveable property. It is, moreover, a right which does not give rise to a cause of action until it is asserted or denied. The question, therefore, is, when their right was disputed, from which time the plaintiffs would doubtless have only six years to file a suit for a declaratory decree. It was not alleged in the plaint that the right had ever been asserted or denied until the present plaint was instituted, and the defendant Pandu, when made a defendant, did so by his written statement. The suit is, therefore, not barred.

It has been said, however, that the Court had no jurisdiction, as the plaintiffs had not asked the Collector to place them on the register. But that is not necessary to give jurisdiction, although it might be a reason for treating the suit as premature. That [46] objection, however, has been taken for the first time in this Court and cannot now be entertained. We must, therefore, reverse the decree and send back the case to be decided on the merits. Costs to abide the result.

Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act (XVII of 1879), s. 4—Practice—Procedure—Jurisdiction—Jurisdiction of Second Class Subordinate Judge.

The plaintiff sued to establish his title to, and recover a moiety of a cash allowance payable to him from the Mamlatdar's treasury at Satara. The claim was valued at Rs. 455-4. The plaint was filed in the Court of the First Class Subordinate Judge at Satara, who transferred the case for trial to the Joint Subordinate Judge of the Second Class. The latter Judge dismissed the suit on the merits, holding that the plaintiff had no right to the moiety of the allowance which he sought to recover. This decision was reversed, on appeal, by the Assistant Judge, on the ground that the Joint Subordinate Judge of the Second Class had no jurisdiction to hear the suit under s. 4 of the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act (XVII of 1879).

Held, that the requirements of s. 4 of Act XVII of 1879 were sufficiently complied with by the suit having been filed in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of the First Class. He was competent under s. 23 of Act XIV of 1869 to transfer the suit to the Joint Subordinate Judge of the Second Class who was deputed to assist him.

THIS was an appeal from the decision of the Assistant Judge of Satara, in appeal No. 12 of 1892.

This suit was instituted by the plaintiff to obtain a declaration of his title to a moiety of the allowance payable to him from the Mamlatdar's treasury at Satara, amounting to Rs. 455-4, and that it was not liable to be attached in execution of a decree against one Bahirji, deceased. The plaintiff also prayed that the amount attached be ordered to be paid to him, and not to defendant.

[47] The plaint was originally filed in the Court of the First Class Subordinate Judge at Satara who transferred the case for trial to the Joint Subordinate Judge of the Second Class who had been deputed to assist him.

The Joint Subordinate Judge of the Second Class dismissed the suit on the ground that the plaintiff had no title to the portion of the allowance in respect of which the declaration decree was sought.

On appeal the Assistant Judge of Satara was of opinion that the Joint Subordinate Judge of the Second Class had no jurisdiction to try the suit under s. 4 of the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act (XVII of 1879). He, therefore, reversed the decree of the first Court and returned the case for re-trial in a Court of proper jurisdiction. The following extract from his judgment states his reasons:—

'The remaining point for decision is whether s. 4 of the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act excludes the jurisdiction of a Second Class Subordinate Judge. Prima facie the exclusion is clear, for the language of the section is imperative—'shall be instituted.' I find no force in the contention of respondent's (defendant's) pleader, that this suit was as a matter of fact 'instituted' in the Court of the First Class Subordinate Judge, Satara, and that the First Class Subordinate Judge had power to transfer the case for trial to the Joint Subordinate Judge, Second Class, who had been deputed to assist him. No authority is quoted in support of this contention. The language of s. 4 is clear. It provides for cases where a Subordinate Judge, First Class, and a Subordinate Judge, Second Class, have ordinary jurisdiction in the same local area. The section may, therefore, be said exactly to apply to the present circumstances. I have no option, therefore, but to find that the Second Class Joint Subordinate Judge had no jurisdiction to try the present suit in accordance with s 4 of the Act."

Against this decision the defendant appealed to the High Court.

Balaji A. Bhagvat, for appellant.—Section 4 of Act XVII of 1879 has been misconstrued by the lower Court. A suit is said to be "instituted" when the plaint is presented to the proper officer of a Court: see s. 48 of the Code of Civil Procedure (XIV of 1882). In the present case the suit was actually instituted in the Court of the First Class Subordinate Judge. The plaint was filed in his Court. But he transferred the case to the Joint Subordinate Judge, which he was competent to do under [48] s. 23 of Act XIV of 1869. When it was so transferred, the Joint Subordinate Judge was competent to try the suit.

Mahadev V. Bhat, for the respondent.—Reading s. 23 with s. 12 of Act XIV of 1869, it is clear that the First Class Subordinate Judge had no power to transfer the case to the Joint Subordinate Judge of the Second Class. Refers to Balaji v. Nana (1).

JUDGMENT.

JARDINE, J.—The requirements of s. 4 of the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act were complied with by this suit having been filed in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of the First Class. That Judge was competent under s. 23 of Act XIV of 1869 to make over the suit to the Subordinate Judge of the Second Class who had been deputed to his Court to assist him in the disposal of suits on his file. Having regard to the language of the Code of Civil Procedure (XIV of 1882), s. 48, s. 15 et seq., where the institution of suits is regulated, and to other sections of the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act (XVII of 1879), such as ss. 3, 6 and 11, where the words "heard," "heard and determined" and "tried" are used, we cannot treat the word "instituted" in s. 4 as meaning "heard and determined." We, therefore, reverse the order of the Assistant Judge and remand the appeal to the District Court for disposal on the other issues. Costs to be costs in the cause.

Decree reversed.

Limitation Act (XV of 1877), sch. II, arts. 170, 178—Pauper—Application for leave to appeal in forma pauperis—Practice—Procedure.

Plaintiffs filed a suit for partition, which was dismissed on 9th December, 1890. On 17th March, 1891, plaintiffs presented an appeal to the High Court on a Court-fee stamp of Rs. 10.

[49] On 18th January, 1892, the High Court held that the memorandum of appeal was insufficiently stamped, being chargeable with an ad valorem stamp on the value of the plaintiffs' share.

On 16th February 1892, plaintiffs applied for leave to appeal in forma pauperis. This application was granted ex parte.

At the hearing of the appeal, however, the respondent contended that the pauper appeal was time-barred.

Held, that the application for leave to appeal in forma pauperis having been presented beyond the thirty days allowed by art. 170 of the Limitation Act (XV of 1877), was barred by limitation. The pauper appeal could not, therefore, be proceeded with. Article 178 of the Limitation Act had no application to the present case.

APPEAL from the decision of Rao Bahadur Chunilal Maneklal, First Class Subordinate Judge, in suit No. 382 of 1889.

The plaintiffs sued to recover their two-thirds share by partition of certain ancestral property in the possession of the defendant.

The suit was filed in the Court of the First Class Subordinate Judge at Poona, who rejected the plaintiffs' claim on the 9th December, 1890.

Thereupon plaintiffs appealed to the High Court. The memorandum of appeal was filed on 17th March, 1891, on a Court-fee stamp of Rs. 10.

On 18th January, 1892, Sargent, C.J., held, on a reference by the taxing officer, that the memorandum of appeal was chargeable with an ad valorem stamp on the value of the plaintiff's share (1). The appeal was, therefore, returned as insufficiently stamped.

On 16th February, 1892, i.e., within thirty days allowed by s. 8, Chap. V of the High Court Rules to pay the proper stamps, the appellants applied for leave to appeal in forma pauperis. This application was granted on the 5th October, 1892.

The appeal came on for hearing before a Division Bench (Jardine and Ranade, JJ.).

Daji Abaji Khare (for the respondent).—The application on the 16th February, 1892, for leave to appeal as a pauper was not made [50] within thirty days from the date of the decree appealed against, as required by art. 170 of the Limitation Act (XV of 1877). The application was filed more than a year after the date of decree. This delay cannot be excused under art. 170.

Shivram v. Bhandarkar (for the appellant).—The appeal was filed in time on a Rs. 10 stamp. The question of stamp was not settled till 18th January, 1892. We then applied for leave to sue as a pauper.

The application was no doubt beyond thirty days from the date of the decree. But the case is governed by art. 178, and not 170, of the Limitation Act (XV of 1877). At any rate, as we acted in good faith, we should be allowed to pay the proper stamps even now.

JUDGMENT.

JARDINE, J.—After two hearings on the merits it has been pointed out by Mr. D. Khare for the respondent that the application for leave to appeal as a pauper was filed on a date beyond the thirty days allowed by art. 170 of the Limitation Act. The appeal petition first presented was returned on the ground that it was insufficiently stamped, the Chief Justice so deciding on the 18th January, 1892, on a reference from the taxing officer. Within the thirty days allowed by our rule, Ch. 5, s. 8, the appellant saying he could not pay the proper stamps asked leave to appeal in forma pauperis. Mr. Shivram contends not that the thirty days allowed by art. 170 ought, under the circumstances, to be computed from 18th January, 1892, but that he has three years' limitation under the general art. 178. The result would, in our opinion, be to extend the period allowed by art. 170 for the benefit of an appellant who first puts on insufficient stamps and then applies to appeal in forma pauperis. We cannot read such an alteration into art. 170. The Court had ordered the original appeal to be returned, but it was retained as the appeal petition, when two Judges of this Court, not having noticed the point of limitation, allowed the petition for leave to appeal in forma pauperis to be filed. After referring to Lakshmi v. Ananta (1) and Parbati v. Bhola (2) the utmost indulgence we can allow is to give fourteen days' time to the appellant to supply the proper stamps, which ought to have been affixed, viz., Rs. 623-8-0.

QUEEN-EMPRESS v. KARIGOWDA.* [18th January, 1894.]

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), ss. 211, 500—Falsely charging a person with an offence—Defamation—Defamatory statement made by a person examined in the course of an official or departmental inquiry—Privilege—Qualified privilege—Criminal Procedure Code (Act X of 1882), ss. 191, 197.

The complainant was Deputy Collector and First Class Magistrate of Bijapur. Certain petitions said to emanate from the accused were received by Government charging the complainant with bribery and corruption. Government thereupon ordered Mr. Monteath, Collector and Magistrate of the District, to inquire into the matter. Mr. Monteath enforced the attendance of the accused by writing to the police, who brought the accused before him. In answer to questions put to him, the accused denied having sent any petition to Government, but stated that he had paid a bribe to the complainant to secure the acquittal of his son, who was then on his trial on a charge of theft before him. Mr. Monteath examined other witnesses and reported the result of his inquiry to Government. Government permitted the Deputy Collector to prosecute the accused, and he accordingly lodged a complaint against the accused for defamation, under s. 500 of the Indian Penal Code (XLV of 1860), in having stated to Mr. Monteath, in the course of the inquiry, that he (the complainant) had accepted a bribe from him.

The trying Magistrate was of opinion that the offence fell under s. 211 of the Penal Code. He at first framed charges both under ss. 211 and 500. But subsequently he struck out the charge of defamation under s. 500 and convicted the accused under s. 211 of making a false charge.

On appeal, the Joint Sessions Judge was of opinion that the charge under s. 211 could not be maintained, as the accused had not made any "false charge" to a Court or officer having jurisdiction to investigate it. As regards the charge of defamation, he was of opinion that the fact of bribery was not proved. But he held that in making the statement to Mr. Monteath the accused had acted in good faith, and that his case fell under exception 8 to s. 499 of the Indian Penal Code. He, therefore, reversed the conviction under s. 211 and acquitted the accused of defamation under s. 500 of the Code. Against this order of acquittal Government appealed to the High Court.

Held that the accused was guilty of defamation.

Held, also, that s. 211 of the Penal Code had no application to the present case. The accused was brought before Mr. Monteath against his will. He did not make any complaint before that officer; and though what he stated, in answer to questions put to him, was defamatory, the imputations did not constitute a "false charge" within the meaning of s. 211, as he did not intend to set the criminal law in motion.

[52] Per RANADE, J.—The words "falsely charging" in s. 211 must be construed along with the words which speak of the "institution of proceedings." These latter words are obviously used in a technical and exclusive sense, and the same restricted sense must be given to the words which relate to a false charge as implying a false complaint.

Karim Buksh v. Queen-Empress (1) followed.

Held, also, that in the absence of sanction from Government, the inquiry held by Mr. Monteath, the District Magistrate, was not a taking cognizance of the offence.

Held, also, that as Mr. Monteath was not sitting as a "Court" when he made the inquiry and examined the accused, the accused was not entitled to claim the absolute protectionfroma chargeof defamation as a witness in a judicial proceeding. The accused was only entitled to a qualified privilege depending on the exceptions to s. 499 of the Indian Penal Code.

Per RANADE, J.—The High Court, in exercising jurisdiction in the matter of appeals, against acquittals, should confine its exercise to the particular grounds of objection which are raised by Government against the acquittal complained of.

APPEAL by the Government of Bombay under s. 417 of the Criminal Procedure Code (X of 1882) against an order of acquittal made by the Joint Sessions Judge of Bijapur.

Certain petitions having been received by Government containing charges of bribery and corruption against the District Deputy Collector of Bijapur (J. M. Kharsedji), Government ordered Mr. Monteath, the Collector and District Magistrate of Bijapur, to inquire into the matter and report. In the course of his inquiry Mr. Monteath sent for the accused (among others), who, however, refused to appear before him. His attendance was subsequently secured by the police, who took him before Mr. Monteath, by whom he was examined. In answer to Mr. Monteath's questions, he denied that he had sent any petition to Government, but alleged that the statement contained in it was true, and that he had himself paid J. M. Kharsedji a sum of Rs. 300 to prccure the acquittal of his son, who was then on his trial for theft. Mr. Monteath subsequently made his report to Government. Both the inquiry and report were departmental: the provisions of s. 132 of Act I of 1872 did not apply, and J. M. Kharsedji was permitted by Government to prosecute his detractors and (among others) the accused. He accordingly lodged a complaint against the accused, charging him with defamation.

[53] At the commencement of the proceedings, however, the Magistrate (Mr. Knight) was of opinion that, on the facts alleged against the accused, the proper charge to frame against him was a charge under s. 211 of the Penal Code (XLV of 1860) and not one under s. 500. The accused had stated to Mr. Monteath that J. M. Kharsedji had been guilty of what was a criminal offence, and the Magistrate held that, if that statement was false, s. 211 of the Penal Code was applicable and ought to be applied. The following passage from his judgment sets forth his views on the point:—

"Complaints charging the accused with defamation were accordingly lodged before me. At the commencement of the proceedings I at once raised this difficulty. The facts alleged against the accused, if substantiated, would amount to an offence under s. 211, although they included the offence of defamation. Could an accused person be properly put upon his trial for defamation when he had in fact, if the complaints were true, committed the major offence of bringing a false charge? There was no question of the offence alleged amounting merely to defamation and falling short of the more serious crime, it was either a false charge or nothing at all. I held and still hold that a Magistrate has no option but to proceed under the one section which includes all the ingredients of the offence, and that he is not justified in charging the accused with an offence which is only part of the offence he is said to have committed. For any argument that would justify me in charging the accused under s. 500 in this case would equally justify me in charging a man accused of grievous hurt with causing simple hurt, or one accused of ravishing a married woman with committing adultery. Emphasizing the fact that the alleged defamation in these cases was the imputation to Mr. Kharsedji of a distinct and specific criminal offence, and that such defamation is expressly provided for in the Penal Code by s. 211, I did not consider it open to me to proceed under s. 500. As a final, though not conclusive, argument in support of this view, I may adduce the illustrations to s. 499, in none of which a prosecution for defamation is contemplated when a specific criminal offence has been imputed to the complainant."

He considered that as the taking of any subsequent proceedings in the matter depended upon Mr. Monteath's report, he (Mr. Monteath) might be regarded as "an officer with power to investigate the case and send it up for trial" (see In re Jamoona (1)), but that as he was not a "Court," no sanction was now required under s. 195 of the Criminal Procedure Code (X of 1882).

On this charge the Magistrate convicted the accused under s. 211 of the Penal Code. The following is an extract from his judgment:—

[54] "Now before discussing the value of the evidence adduced in support of this story, I feel that I must determine some standard by which to measure the amount of proof which I must require from the accused to entitle him to an acquittal. Considering the nature of the case, it is manifestly unjust, to my mind, to expect him to offer evidence which would suffice to convict Mr. Kharsedji, were that officer in the dock. On the other hand, the corroboration which he adduces must be sufficient to create a reasonable doubt of the falsity of his story ; and if he is so unfortunate as to have told the truth, but yet to be unable to produce any proof worthy of the name in support of it, the law, I am afraid, allows me no alternative but to convict him. After the most lengthy and careful consideration, therefore, I have finally fixed on the following test by which to determine his conviction or acquittal. Suppose that he were the complainant, and Mr. Kharsedji the accused, would the case he lays before me justify me in sanctioning his prosecution for bringing a false charge ? If so, I shall consider it my duty to convict him. There are many considerations which commend this test to my mind, the first and the foremost being that were Mr. Kharsedji not a Government servant, such a sanction would have been the ordinary forerunner of Karigowda's conviction. I must also guard carefully against any impression that an acquittal of the accused is tantamount to a declaration of the truth of his allegation to a moral conviction of Mr. Kharsedji ; at the most it will but be an equivalent of the Scotch verdict of 'not proven.' It will mean, that is to say, that I am unable, on the evidence before me, to determine whether his allegations are true or false, and that, therefore, although Mr. Kharsedji is a virtual accused, the actual accused is entitled to his right of the benefit of the doubt." (After a minute examination of the evidence the Magistrate continued :—) "Under the circumstances I consider that I am justified in saying that his (the accused's) story is false : to apply the test I gave above, I would certainly have accorded sanction for his prosecution had he been the complainant."

On appeal the Joint Sessions Judge reversed the conviction and acquitted the accused. He held that s. 211 of the Penal Code did not apply, and that the conviction under it was, therefore, illegal ; that the proper charge against the accused was one of defamation under s. 500 of the Penal Code. On that charge, however, he acquitted the accused, holding that although the truth of the statement made by the accused as to bribing the complainant had not been proved, nevertheless it had been made by the accused in good faith and was protected by exception 8 to s. 499 of the Penal Code. In his judgment he said :—

" ..... I am not prepared to find that the truth of the alleged bribery is proved, and I decide issue 3 in the negative.

" Although the non-proof of the bribery in question might be sufficient to acquit the complainant if he was in the dock, it does not necessarily follow from it (i. e., the non-proof) that the charge in question is false as a matter of fact. If, therefore, the charge was made by the appellant in good faith, which means with due care and caution [55] (s. 52, Indian Penal Code), he would fall within the purview of exception 8 to s. 499, Indian Penal Code, and he would not be guilty notwithstanding the above non-proof. For the reasons given below, due care and caution appear to have been used by him (appellant) in this matter, and if so, good faith is established. No private grudge is proved between the complainant and the appellant, and the latter had no motive to make any false imputations against the former, thereby exposing himself to unnecessary risks. No evidence is on record to prove that the petition sent to Government in appellant's name was made or investigated by him, and if so, he is not guilty of resorting to that kind of trick. He did not seek any remedy by resorting to any Courts of law, and this indicates that, whatever the truth, he had no intention to resort to that mode of obtaining relief, probably from the fear that he had no materials to substantiate his charge. These circumstances indicate that he acted just as a man of ordinary prudence would act and not with any rashness and if so he cannot be said to have acted without due care and caution. He did not make the imputation in question to the Collector rashly of his own accord, and he made it only when he was sent for by that officer and was specially questioned about it. It is true that he was not bound by law to make any statement at all to the Collector; but, unless the imputation made by him was positively false to his knowledge and was made maliciously with ulterior motives, it cannot be said, under the peculiar circumstances of this case, that by making it he exceeded the limits of due care and caution. The non-proof of the truth of the imputation does not arise from any proof of the falsehood of the charge, but it arises from circumstances which do not detract from the bona fides of the appellant. On the whole, although the charge of bribery and corruption is not proved by any sufficient evidence against the complainant, it is not proved that it was false and invented,—maliciously made to harm him, and there are ample circumstances in this case which strongly indicate that in making it (charge) before the Collector the appellant did act with sufficient care and caution, and that he was within the limits of bona fides."

APPELLATE CRIMINAL.

The local Government appealed against the order of acquittal. The appeal now came on for hearing.

Jardine (with Government Pleader) for the Crown.—The acquittal is wrong. The accused should have been convicted of defamation. He stated before Mr. Monteath that he had given a bribe of Rs. 300 to the Deputy Collector to get his son acquitted. This statement is clearly defamatory of the Deputy Collector, who is the complainant here. It was made in the course of a departmental and not a judicial inquiry, and, therefore, the accused was not privileged as a witness. Nor did he make the statement on a privileged occasion. Mr. Monteath did not hold the inquiry as a Magistrate, though he might have taken cognizance of a complaint under s. 197 of the Criminal Procedure Code (X of 1882). It was optional with the accused to make [56] the statement or refuse to answer Mr. Monteath's questions. He was not on oath. He was not bound to answer any questions put to him, and if he did make any statement, he did so at his own risk. The statement in question being prima facie defamatory, the accused must bring it under some one of the exceptions to s. 499 of the Indian Penal Code, or he must prove its truth. Both the Magistrate and the Session Judge have found that the accused failed to prove that his statements were true and that he had not proved that the Deputy Collector had accepted a bribe from him. If the statement is not proved to be true it must be taken to be false. But the Joint Sessions Judge holds that the statements were made in good faith. If, however, it was not true, it could not possibly be made in good faith, as it was a statement of something alleged to have been done by himself, and, therefore, if untrue, was untrue to his knowledge. The complainant has reason to complain of this finding. I submit that the accused is guilty of defamation and should be convicted under s. 500 of the Penal Code.

Kirkpatrick (with him N. G. Chandavarkar), for the accused.—The conviction of the accused by the first Court of "making a false charge" under s. 211 was wrong. The accused had made no "charge" against the complainant to Mr. Monteath. He merely answered questions put to him in a private departmental inquiry—In re Jamoona (1). On the other hand, if the inquiry was not private, and if Mr. Monteath is to be considered a "Court," no sanction from him for this prosecution was obtained, and there was, therefore, no jurisdiction to try him. The Joint Sessions Judge was, therefore, right in reversing the conviction.

The Joint Sessions Judge was also right in acquitting the accused of defamation under s. 500. As to the principles on which this Court should act when the Government appeals against an acquittal, see Empress v. Gayadin (1). The accused was taken by the police before Mr. Monteath, and was induced or coerced to answer the questions put to him. His answers to these questions are said to be defamatory, and he is now charged with [57] defamation and required to prove their truth. If he had been warned that the burden of giving strict legal proof of the truth of what he said would be laid upon him, he would not have answered the questions. An inquiry by Government will be useless for the future if informants are to be exposed to this risk. They may know the truth, but they may know that they cannot produce the evidence that is necessary legally to prove it. It is for the public interest that they should be protected, and the law will regard the occasion as privileged—Hunt v. Great Northern Railway Company (2); Stuart v. Bell (3); Clark v. Molyneux (4); Dawkins v. Lord Paulet (5); Dawkins v. Lord Rokeby (6); Beatson v. Skene (7).

The accused ought not now on appeal to be convicted of defamation. He has never really been tried on that charge. The Magistrate at the outset of the proceedings stated that he considered the complaint to be "one of making a false charge or nothing," and he subsequently struck out the charge of defamation, which he had at first framed against the accused. He commenced his judgment by stating that "the accused stands charged under s. 211." It is clear, therefore, that the accused was not tried on a charge of defamation, but was tried on a charge framed under s. 211. On that charge the burden of proof lay on the prosecution, and in his defence to that charge the accused was not called on to prove the truth of the facts stated by him to Mr. Monteath, but only his good faith in making the statement. But on appeal the Court is now asked to alter the charge into one of defamation, and to consider the evidence with reference to it. That will shift the burden of proof over upon the accused, who must on that charge strictly prove the truth of the facts stated by him, and he must do this now in appeal by means of the evidence before the Court which was recorded on a different charge and for a different purpose. The evidence of good faith, which would be a defence to a charge under s. 211, would be no answer at all to a charge of defamation. [58] It is clear that if a person is acquitted on a charge framed under s. 211, but on appeal the charge is altered to one of defamation, he must inevitably be convicted, for the burden of proof is shifted, and the evidence which is a defence to the one charge is no defence to the other. To find the accused guilty of defamation on appeal is really to find him guilty on a charge which he has never been called on to meet. The two charges ought never to be joined. If they are joined, the accused must be greatly prejudiced in his defence. He referred to Empress v. Imad Khan (8) and Queen-Empress v. Appa (9).

Rao Saheb Vasudeo J. Kirtikar, Government Pleader, in reply.—Section 211 of the Indian Penal Code does not apply, there being no charge before a judicial officer. Mr. Monteath was not acting as a Magistrate.

[JARDINE, J.—Could he divest himself of his magisterial functions ?]

I submit it was open to him to say that he was not acting as a Magistrate qua the enquiry.

[JARDINE, J.—That would render s. 211 unavailable against anybody defaming a Magistrate for bribery, unless the defamatory statement was made to a Government official as a Judge.]

Yes, that would be so. Unless a formal complaint is made in a Court, s. 211 would not apply. As to privilege, if the accused had been examined as a witness in a judicial proceeding, he would have been protected—Queen-Empress v. Balkrishna Vithal (1). But he was not. He made a purely voluntary statement. The statement is defamatory per se, and it lies on the accused to show that it falls within one of the exceptions to s. 499 of the Penal Code. Section 105 of the Evidence Act applies.

JUDGMENT.

JARDINE, J.—The Government of Bombay gave leave to Mr. Jehangir Manekji Kharshedji, who is a Magistrate in the district of Bijapur, to prosecute the accused, Karigowda, for defamation by words spoken by him in reply to questions put by Mr. [59] Monteath at Muddebihal on the 6th December, 1892. The trying Magistrate, Mr. Knight, framed heads of charge under ss. 211 and 500 of the Indian Penal Code, but at the end of the trial struck out the head under s. 500, and convicted and sentenced the accused under s. 211.

The Joint Sessions Judge, Mr. Venkatrao Inamdar, in appeal, held that s. 211 was inapplicable, and that the case fell under s. 500. He acquitted the accused on the ground that the defamatory statements, though not proved to be true, were made in good faith. so that exception 8 to the definition of s. 499 applied in his favour. This exception applies to an accusation made in good faith to some one having lawful authority over the person accused with respect to the subject-matter of accusation.

The defamation consists of statements to the effect that Mr. Jehangir himself accepted a bribe of Rs. 300 from the hands of the accused as an inducement to acquit Sanganbassapa, accused's son, of an offence which Mr. Jehangir was trying. At the time the words were uttered, Mr. Monteath was, and is now, Collector and District Magistrate of Bijapur.

Questions having been raised, under the circumstances in which the words were uttered, as to which section—s. 211 or s. 500—the charge should specify, and as to whether the onus of proving the truth of the words lies on the prosecution or the defence, and also as to whether the speaker had any privilege, qualified or absolute, it is necessary to consider what capacity Mr. Monteath filled at the time he elicited the answers from Karigowda. Some petitions charging Mr. Jehangir, the complainant, with bribery had been received by the Government of Bombay, which forwarded them to Mr. Fleet, the Revenue and Police Commissioner. This official, on the 29th October, 1892, sent them to Mr. Monteath, who is addressed as Collector and District Magistrate, for inquiry and report, with directions to take evidence in support of the charges if the petitioners persisted in them, and to give Mr. Jehangir full opportunity of rebutting them. Mr. Monteath, after this "preliminary inquiry," as Mr. Fleet called it, was to submit a report. As it does not appear [60] that Mr. Fleet had any special authority to issue orders to the District Magistrate in the matter of the alleged taking of bribes, unless Mr. Fleet had been commissioned by the Governor in Council to convey the sanction of the Government under s. 197 of the Code of Criminal Procedure (X of 1882) to the District Magistrate taking cognizance of the offence, and as it seemed that in some sense Mr. Monteath had taken cognizance and recorded the statements of a number of persons, we suggested to the Government Pleader that he should take further instructions in the matter. He has since shown us a letter from the District Magistrate, stating that at the time he considered that he had received no such sanction, and that, therefore, he could take no magisterial cognizance. But the Collector's Chitnis has deposed that after the Mamlatdar had been unsuccessful in procuring the attendance of Karigowda, Mr. Monteath sent an order to the police to produce Karigowda before him, and thus it was that the latter came up to be questioned. Karigowda denied having sent the accusatory petition bearing his name. Then he went on to state how he had paid the bribe.

Whatever view may be taken of the legality of the orders to the police to produce the body of Karigowda before Mr. Monteath, I am of opinion that, in the absence of the Government sanction under s. 197, he cannot be considered, in law, as having taken cognizance of the offence by holding his inquiry. The great powers of initiating prosecutions which he holds under s. 191 are restricted by the latter section. But this consideration by itself does not determine Mr. Monteath's position. Mr. Jardine, who appears for the complainant, but with the Government Pleader, contends that Mr. Monteath and Karigowda were in no special relation any more than two people at a dinner table; and it has been suggested by the Government Pleader that Mr. Monteath, was, at the time he took Karigowda's statement, divested of his magisterial functions and acting as any person might act whom the Government had commissioned to make inquiries, as, for example, a solicitor sent to Muddebihal for that purpose. I am of opinion that this view of Mr. Monteath's legal position at the time cannot be entertained. A [61] Magistrate cannot divest himself of his duties at his own will. As explained in the case of the corrupt Mamlatdars—In re Ganesh Sathe (1), Magistrates have to use diligence and vigour to repress crime. Magna Charta says that justice must not be sold, and to this the sovereign is bound by the Coronation Oath. The Petition of Right requires the officers and ministers of justice to proceed against offenders.

The duty of the Government being thus clear, and the Government having through the Commissioner informed Mr. Monteath of the petitions, he must be considered as a public servant put upon inquiry. I think that he was in a position analogous to the Secretary of State in Harrison v. Bush (2), and to the officials mentioned in the other cases there discussed by Lord Campbell as regards his duty to the Crown and the public. Moreover, the laws made by Parliament or the Indian Legislature to punish corruption on the part of public servants are in perpetual force; and if on Mr. Monteath's report the Government were to give sanction for the prosecution of the complainant, his powers under s. 191, cl. (c), of the Code of Criminal Procedure would come into operation unrestricted by the other section.

On these grounds I have taken time to consider whether, if the imputation of bribery were falsely made, s. 211 of the Penal Code would apply to punish. This depends on the meaning of the words "false charges" and the word "charge" as used in s. 211. Considering that Mr. Monteath was making a formal inquiry into the bribery, and that he was District Magistrate, Karigowda was using a means of eventually setting the law in motion against the complainant. It has been contended that the Joint Sessions Judge was right in holding that s. 211 does not apply, because Mr. Monteath had no powers to investigate or send up for trial. The authority he cites, In re Jamoona (1), relates to a complaint of rape made to a military officer who had no official duty at all in the matter. I think that case inapplicable. The present case, however, seems to me to be taken [62] out of s. 211 by the fact that Karigowda did not apparently intend to set the criminal law in motion. He had been produced before Mr. Monteath against his will; and though what he said is "information" under s. 191, cl. (c), of the Procedure Code, and "defamation" under the Penal Code, I am of opinion, after considering the Full Bench case (2), that the imputations do not make up a "false charge."

Next, Mr. Kirkpatrick, as counsel for the accused, contends before this Court that as Karigowda was dragged before Mr. Monteath to make his statement, he must be considered as coerced to answer through awe of that officer's powers and position, and, therefore, entitled to that absolute protection from prosecution for defamation which has been extended to witnesses in Courts of justice by decisions of this Court—Queen-Empress v. Babaji (3) and Queen-Empress v. Balkrishna Vithal (4). The learned counsel cites the cogent reasons stated in the House of Lords for giving similar protection to a military witness summoned to give evidence before a Military Court of Inquiry—Dawkins v. Lord Rokeby (5), and see Dickenson v. Hilliard (6). But, for the reasons given above, while I regard Mr. Monteath as a Magistrate, I do not go the length of holding him to have been a "Court," and, after such consideration as I have been able to give, I do not think public policy requires that Karigowda should receive more protection than did the informant against the misbehaving Magistrate in Harrison v. Bush. The privilege is only a qualified one, and depends on the exceptions to s. 499. He was not bound to answer Mr. Monteath's questions. Coercion was not pleaded below, and there is nothing to lead even to a conjecture that the accused was offered any improper inducement to make the imputations he did. It has not been suggested that he was asked to speak falsehoods.

But even to freedom to tell falsehoods under official coercion s. 94 of the Penal Code applies—see Queen v. Sonoo (7) and the discussion of the effect of official coercion as an excuse [63] for crime in Queen-Empress v. Maganlal (8), where this Court had to rectify the error of a Magistrate who had been misled by the expression of some views of Sir R. West, arguendo in a published minute, as a member of the Government of Bombay, about the Crawford case. The accused had greater reason to feel security in stating the truth, whatever the truth may be, in that he was before a Magistrate, and one of high position and experience. I see no objection to the Government making use of such an officer in such an inquiry where the investigation requires much skill and experience, and the person accused is an official on whose character the Government does not wish by any inadvertence to cast a taint. Inferior and less judicial agents are liable to proceed with undue zeal. In Chhagan's case this Court had to censure the offer of illegal indemnities to witnesses by a Mamlatdar getting up the case. Mr. Justice Wilson and his colleagues, who held the investigation of the charges in the Crawford case, comment on the minds of witnesses being unduly influenced in this manner. Mr. Monteath was right in not administering oaths to Karigowda and the rest, and there is nothing to show that they were not free agents.

Now, turning to deal with the facts on the appeal of the Government against the acquittal, we are hampered by the way the Courts below have recorded their conclusions. The Magistrate, after a very careful discussion of the evidence, finds that Karigowda's story is false; but he explains that he means thereby only that, if Karigowda had been the complainant, and told that story, he would have sanctioned the prosecution of Karigowda for bringing a false charge. In plain English, this means that there are good prima facie grounds for holding the story to be false. But under s. 211 the Magistrate ought to have found one way or other—whether beyond reasonable doubt the falsity of the story was proved. The Joint Sessions Judge finds in distinct terms on the third issue that the truth of the story is not proved. But on the fourth issue he finds that the story was told in good faith, which is impossible, unless it be true, as Karigowda does not speak from information given by third persons, but tells, in detail, how he himself set to work to corrupt the complainant, [64] and at length himself paid over a bribe of Rs. 300 to the complainant himself. It is very difficult to understand the reasoning of the Joint Sessions Judge; but it is clear he thinks the witnesses who contradict Karigowda's story are false witnesses, and have been tampered with; and I believe the Joint Sessions Judge really means to be understood as saying that Karigowda has told the truth, but is unfortunate in not being able to prove his story, and that the bribe was really paid. But then, again, the Joint Sessions Judge writes that, on the evidence recorded, the complainant Mr. Jehangir, would have to be acquitted. If the Judge means that on the evidence there is reasonable doubt whether complainant took the bribe, he ought to have said so plainly. Perhaps in dealing with the fourth issue he means to say that, if he went on surmise or suspicion, he would hold Mr. Jehangir guilty. I do not understand the reasoning of the following passage:—"It is true that he (Karigowda) was not bound by law to make any statement at all to the Collector; but, unless the imputation made by him was positively false to his knowledge, and was made maliciously with ulterior motives, it cannot be said, under the peculiar circumstances of the case, that by making it he exceeded the limits of due care and caution."

We must now strip the case of this verbiage and decide whether Karigowda's story is proved to be true. The burden of proof lies on him (1). If it is false, there was no good faith; if true, he is protected. I will deal shortly with the facts. (His Lordship then discussed the evidence at length and stated his conclusion, that the story told by the accused was not proved. He then continued:—)

Stripped of prejudice and surmise, the case stands thus. There is no corroboration of Karigowda's story about the payment of the Rs. 300 at the tent. It is utterly denied by the complainant, by Girimalla, and by Tammana. It is inconsistent with the story told by Basapa and Irappa. It was started in a petition sent to the Government by post, which nobody will own; and it would probably have been heard no more of, if Mr. Monteath, upon Karigowda's refusal to attend his camp, and his later denial [65] of the petition being his, had ceased to make inquiry. About the parentage of the petition we have no information. It is obvious that if a man in a written petition makes a false charge against a Magistrate of taking bribes, he is put in an awkward position when such petition is inquired into, and must either disown it, or adhere to the false statements and try to prove them.

As noticed earlier in this judgment, the Joint Sessions Judge, while recording that the charge of bribery is not proved against the accused Magistrate, treats it as if it were, and reverses the conviction of the man that made it. The Judge seems to act on conjecture and surmise rather than evidence; and this may possibly have been caused by the fact that a number of depositions made by other people accusing this Magistrate of taking other bribes made before Mr. Monteath, form part of the record of the present case. They must, of course, be entirely excluded from our judicial consideration of the present charge. In another recent case, where another Magistrate was accused of improper behaviour about a purchase of land in his district, we had to reverse an acquittal, by the Sessions Judge, of the person defaming him, and to remove the stigma so placed on the Magistrate. We were of opinion that there was no evidence worthy of the name to justify the defamatory article. Mr. Jardine has argued that there is a tendency, when a Magistrate is accused of corruption, to assume that he is guilty, and to weigh all the evidence in the scales of prejudice. I think it important, therefore, and especially as the reported decisions on corruption show that even Magistrates of experience are liable to very serious mistakes in applying the law against corruption (In re Ganesh Sathe (1), Queen-Empress v. Maganlal (2), Queen-Empress v. Chagan (3),) to point out that the Courts must begin the trial of cases against Magistrates without prejudicing the particular case by admitting irrelevant matters to influence the mind of the Court. As this Court has pointed out in Queen-Empress v. Fakirapa (4), this freedom from prejudice is secured by the general rules of the Procedure Code, s. 233, that every charge shall be separately tried. As Lord Blackburn [66] points out in Castro v. the Queen (5). the mere fact of accusing a man of several things was supposed to tend to increase the probability of his being found guilty, as it amounted to giving evidence of bad character against him, so that a Judge wishing to keep the Court clear of prejudice might say, "I will not work this injustice by trying them together, let us diminish them in number and try a reasonable number, and no more." The Courts will find guidance as to the exceptions allowed to the general rule in Queen-Empress v. Fakirappa and in Queen-Empress v. Vajiram (6). They are bound to administer the law as interpreted by the decisions of this Court. The Judges are the voices of the law. We are the leges loquentes. I think it is time to point this out, because, in the other case lately before us, the error of the Sessions Judge consisted in the view he took of the evidence which he called "cumulative," but which, in our opinion, was of the very weakest sort. "Cumulative effect" has even before us, and once not without a sense of humour by the Government Pleader, been used to cover decisions based more on conjecture than evidence. But the phrase, when used in forensic pleading, does not really convey that sort of meaning. This phrase "cumulative effect of the evidence" occurs in the letter, which has been published, in which the local Government of the time adopt Sir R. West's argument against the view taken by the Commissioners in the Crawford case, who had acquitted the accused of all the thirty-two charges of corruption. Sir R. West's remarks on evidence in this argument have reference to inquests under Act XXXVII of 1850, and whether the contention is right or wrong about them, it has no reference to cases under trial by the ordinary tribunals, where the ordinary rules of procedure and evidence based on enacted law and long experience are binding. While Sir R. West criticises the English system, which narrows the issues for trial in the way pointed out by Lord Blackburn, and while apparently he would, if allowed, improve our time-honoured system of trial by jury, by expedients of jurists and legislators of foreign countries and let in collateral matters, which our law excludes, because he says our exclusions are the reverse of the mode of investigation employed in the physical sciences, and are, [67] in his opinion, defective in logical standpoints, it is quite obvious that Sir R. West distinguishes between the law as it is and the law as he opines it ought to be. The settled rules of evidence are those which the Courts must apply. On them, as Lord Abinger remarks, the property, the liberty and the life of men depend; by them the position and character of the servants of the Crown are protected. The Legislature, being aware of the danger to which officials are exposed from the malice of disappointed petitioners and suitors, interposes also the requirement of official sanction for prosecution; and In re Clive Durant (1), where we refused to allow a suitor to defile our records with a petition containing scandalous attacks on Magistrates, Judges, and some high officials of the Government of India, we laid down a principle from Butt v. Conant (2) that "the people have a serious interest in the characters and conduct of the Judges and others who are appointed to serve in high and important offices, and the individual men have a valuable property in their respective characters." It is of great importance in all countries and as the Lords of the Privy Council remark, more particularly in a country like India, that the Courts and officers should be above suspicion—In re Ganesh Sathe (3). On this principle, corrupt persons must be removed from office. But the same considerations require that any one proved guilty of making false charges of corruption should feel the weight of the criminal law.

For the above reasons I am of opinion that the story of the bribe is false, and that the accused was rightly convicted by the trying Magistrate, but that the conviction should be for defamation under s. 500 of the Indian Penal Code. We must, therefore, reverse the acquittal and convict the accused. In measuring the punishment we think it proper to give weight to the opinion of the trying Magistrate, as shown by his sentence. We fear that the sentence of fine might affect innocent people, the family or friends of the accused. We now sentence Karigowda to four months' simple imprisonment.

RANADE, J.—I deem it necessary in this case to record my reasons separately, as the case is of some importance in the interests of [68] the administration of justice. The complainant originally charged Karigowda with an offence under ss. 499-500. The Magistrate, who heard the complaint, was of opinion that the offence complained of fell under s. 211 of the Indian Penal Code. He at first framed charges both under ss. 499-500 and s. 211, but at the last stage of the inquiry, he struck out the charge of defamation, and convicted Karigowda of the offence under s. 211 of the Code. This amendment was made by the Magistrate on two grounds: (1) that the imputation complained of had the graver character of a false charge under s. 211, and that the charge under s. 211 included the defamation; and (2) that the charge under ss. 499-500 would throw the burden of proof on the accused, thereby prejudicing his interests. The Magistrate further held that no sanction was necessary, as the charge was not made before any Court. In appeal, the Joint Sessions Judge held that sanction was necessary in this case, and that, for want of sanction, the charge could not be maintained under s. 211. The Judge, moreover, held that the Magistrate was in error in striking out the charge under ss. 499-500. He inquired into that charge, and held that the accused was protected by reason of his good faith, and accordingly acquitted the accused. It is from this sentence of acquittal that Government appeals, and all the grounds set forth assert the sufficiency of the evidence to establish the charge of defamation, and disprove the exceptions. There is no reference to the decision of the Joint Session Judge on the point that the charge under s. 211 was not maintainable for want of sanction.

In the first place, I am of opinion that the High Court, exercising its jurisdiction in the matter of appeals against acquittals, should confine its exercise to the particular acquittal complained of by Government. The Allahabad High Court has, indeed, in Empress v. Gayadin (1), gone so far as to limit the exercise of this jurisdiction to cases of obstinate or egregious failure of justice. This view of the Allahabad High Court was not concurred in by the Calcutta High Court, Queen-Empress v. Bibhuti (2), and for the purposes of the present case, the view of the Calcutta Court may be accepted as more authoritative. At the same time, it seems to me, [69] that it would not be proper for this Court to consider the appeal on grounds not contained in the objections urged on behalf of the Government, and that this Court should only consider whether or not the acquittal, by the Joint Sessions Judge of the accused on the charge under ss. 499-500 could be sustained, and that it is not open to us to consider whether the charge under s. 211 was or was not maintainable, as no objection was urged on that point.

In the next place, it appears to me clear that the action of the accused in making the statement he made before Mr. Monteath cannot be regarded as bringing his case within the purview of s. 211. The words "falsely charging" used in that section must be construed along with the words which speak of the "institution of proceedings." These latter words are obviously used in a technical and exclusive sense, and by parity of reasoning, the same restricted sense must be given to the words which relate to a false charge. Mr. Monteath was, no doubt, District Magistrate, but he was also the departmental head of the service to which the complainant belonged. Mr. Monteath admittedly held the inquiry, under orders of Government, as a departmental inquiry, and not as a Magistrate. He enforced the attendance of Karigowda not by the usual processes, but by writing to the police. He administered no oath. A more formal inquiry would still have been necessary, and this preliminary investigation was only intended to satisfy Government whether or not there were grounds for ordering such an inquiry. The accused Karigowda made of his own accord no complaint. He even disowned the petition sent in his name to Government. He appears simply to have answered certain questions put to him, in the first instance, by the Chitnis, and later on by Mr. Monteath, who took down his statement for the information of Government.

(1) 4 A. 148.

(2) 17 C. 485.

Taking all these circumstances into consideration, I do not think that Karigowda can properly be regarded as having made a complaint which could, if shown to be false, bring his act within the purview of s. 211. At the most, he gave information to a public servant which, under certain circumstances, might furnish ground for a charge under s. 182. The [70] Magistrate, therefore, who tried the case was not quite correct when he stated that Karigowda's statement was either a false charge or complaint, or nothing at all. Mr. Monteath's inquiry under orders from Government, though not carried on by him as Magistrate, was entrusted to him as a public servant, and information given to him, though not a charge or complaint, might well be an act for which Karigowda could be brought to account under conceivable circumstances.

It is, however, urged that men in the position of Karigowda, making statements to a District Magistrate, need, in the public, more than their own interests, protection. In so far as the public interests are concerned, it is clearly desirable that men, who have any knowledge of the malpractices of public servants, should not be deterred from giving information to the superior authorities, and this they cannot do unless they enjoy the protection extended to witnesses examined on oath. As a matter of fact, however, this protection is extended to such persons, both under ss. 182 and 211, for offences under these sections cannot be taken cognizance of without sanction under s. 195. They, moreover, enjoy the protection under one or other of the exceptions to s. 499, and are not liable to punishment not only when they are in a position to establish the truth, but also when they can show that they gave the information in good faith and for the public good. Any further protection can only encourage undue license in the matter of the attacking the character of public servants, whose good reputation is also a matter of public concern. A public officer defamed, and ordered to clear his character, though he is nominally a prosecutor, is really the party accused, and his failure to establish the charge of defamation involves his ruin. He cannot well be expected to prove a negative, and the law, therefore, very properly requires that the accused in such cases should be required to bring his act under one or other of the many exceptions before he can protect himself. There appears to me nothing unreasonable in requiring a person, who imputes corrupt conduct to a Magistrate, to prove it, or at least to show that he made the imputation under circumstances which justified his belief. The Magistrate (Mr. Knight) appears to me not to have fully considered the peculiar nature of the offence of defamation [71] when he thought that the person defamed stood in less need of protection than the person who published the defamation.

I have accordingly come to the conclusion that the Magistrate was in error in holding that the offence fell under s. 211, and in striking out on that account the charge under ss. 499-500 at the last stage of the inquiry. It is no doubt open to a Magistrate to amend his charges, and if he is satisfied that the graver charge includes the smaller complained of, to proceed upon the graver charge. In this case, however, both the charges were not ejusdem generis. They did not fall under the same or similar class of offences, one being only an aggravation of the other. Moreover, the charge shifted the burden of proof sensibly from one side to the other. The powers given under ss. 236-237 cannot, in my opinion, justify the amendment made in this case at the last stage of the inquiry, thus virtually setting aside the particular complaint made by the prosecutor with a view to clear his character.

As regards the decision in appeal, the Joint Sessions Judge, after holding that the charge under s. 211 could not be maintained for want of sanction, examined the evidence to see how far the charge under ss. 499-500 was made out. Mr. Justice Jardine has examined the whole of the evidence at great length in his judgment, and as I agree with his finding on the question of facts, I do not deem it necessary to go over the same ground again. The Joint Sessions Judge found that the accused failed to make out any case under the first exception, and that the truth of the story told by Karigowda about the alleged bribery was not proved. That being so, it is clear that, under the circumstances, Karigowda could not claim any protection for having acted in good faith. He paid the bribe himself—that is his story. If that story was not true, there could be no justification based on good faith. He did not make the statement on the basis of information supplied to him by others. It is mere casuistry to hold that though the truth of the alleged bribery was not established, it did not follow from it that the charge in question was false as a matter of fact. It is, similarly, not correct to say that, because Karigowda did not act rashly in making the imputation, therefore he must be [72] held to have acted with due care and caution. This same sort of confusion runs throughout the judgment. There is no more prima facie ground for holding that Girmalla and Tammappa have assumed a false attitude in this matter, than for holding that Karigowda gave false information. The Magistrate, it may be noted, fixed a special standard of his own, with a view not to press hard on the accused, and notwithstanding this leniency, he was led to hold that Karigowda's statement about the alleged bribery was not only not proved, but was false. The Joint Sessions Judge should not have set aside such a finding on mere surmises and probabilities, which were more than counterbalanced by the evidence of the accounts, the evidence of the village extracts, the admitted credit of Rs. 128 shortly after the alleged loan borrowed from the 'savkar,' the discrepancies and contradictions noticed by the Magistrate, and the denial of the principal witnesses of all knowledge of the alleged payment. There is, under these circumstances, no justification on the ground of good faith any more than on the ground of truth. I would, therefore, reverse the order of acquittal, and convict Karigowda with simple imprisonment for four months.

Order of acquittal reversed and accused convicted.

CRIMINAL REVISION.

19 B 72.

Before Mr. Justice Jardine and Mr. Justice Ranade.

In re MUKUND BABU VETHE.* [29th January, 1894.]

Criminal Procedure Code (Act X of 1882), s. 54—Offence committed by a British subject in foreign territory—Powers of the Police to arrest for such offence without a warrant—Wrongful arrest—Wrongful confinement—Indian Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 342.*

Section 54 of the Criminal Procedure Code (Act X of 1882) does not empower a police officer to arrest, without a warrant, a British subject in British India on a charge of criminal breach of trust or other cognizable offence committed outside British India.

Mukund was a native Indian subject of the Queen-Empress, residing at Belgaum. A complaint was filed against him in the Sangli State, charging him with committing breach of trust within the territories of that State. Thereupon he obtained an [73] order from the District Magistrate of Belgaum, dated 15th November, 1891, which exempted him from arrest for the offence of criminal breach of trust without a warrant issued by himself or by the Political Agent of the Southern Maratha Country. This order was communicated to Mukund through the accused, who was chief constable at Belgaum. On the 27th November, 1891, a police officer from the Sangli State came to Belgaum with a warrant issued by the Sangli Court for the arrest of Mukund on a charge of criminal breach of trust. The chief constable thereupon directed Mukund's arrest. Mukund brought to the notice of the chief constable the District Magistrate's order of the 15th November, 1891, but he was detained in custody till the matter was reported to the First Class Magistrate, who ordered his discharge. In the meantime the complaint filed against Mukund in the Sangli State was dismissed without requiring his extradition.

Mukund thereupon prosecuted the chief constable on a charge of wrongful arrest and wrongful confinement.

Held*, that the chief constable had no power to arrest the complainant without a warrant, and that he was guilty of the offence of wrongful confinement under s. 342 of the Indian Penal Code (XLV of 1860).

THIS was an application under s. 435 of the Code of Criminal Procedure (Act X of 1882) under the revisional jurisdiction of the High Court.

The complainant Mukund Babu Vethe was a native Indian subject of Her Majesty, residing at Belgaum.

A criminal prosecution was instituted against him in the Sangli State for criminal breach of trust committed within the territories of that State.

Thereupon he obtained an order from the District Magistrate of Belgaum, dated 15th November, 1891, which exempted him from arrest of the offence in respect of which he was prosecuted in the Sangli State without the warrant of the District Magistrate, or of the Political Agent of the Southern Maratha Country. This order was communicated to Mukund through the chief constable at Belgaum.

On 27th November, 1891, a jamadar from Shahapur, a town in the Sangli State, came to the chief constable at Belgaum, bearing a warrant issued by an officer of the Sangli State for the arrest of Mukund on a charge of criminal breach of trust committed in the Sangli State.

The chief constable thereupon directed the arrest of Mukund. Mukund pointed out to the chief constable the order of the [74] District Magistrate of the 15th November, 1891, but he was not released from custody till the matter was reported to the First Class Magistrate, who ordered Mukund to be discharged.

In the meantime the complaint filed against Mukund in the Sangli State was dismissed without requiring his extradition.

On the 2nd December, 1891, Mukund prosecuted the chief constable of Belgaum on a charge of wrongful confinement under s. 342 of the Indian Penal Code (XLV of 1860).

The trying Magistrate discharged the accused under s. 253 of the Code of Criminal Procedure (Act X of 1882) and at the same time gave sanction for the prosecution of the complainant and his witnesses for giving false evidence.

Against this order the complainant applied to the Sessions Judge, but he declined to interfere.

The complainant thereupon made the present application to the High Court under its revisional jurisdiction.

Anderson (with him Mahadeo C. Apte and N. G. Chandavarkar), for complainant.—The District Magistrate had passed an order exempting the complainant from arrest without a warrant either issued by himself or by the Political Agent. We brought this order to the notice of the accused and yet he did not release us. The arrest was, therefore, illegal. Even independently of the District Magistrate's order, the accused had no power to arrest the complainant without a warrant. Section 188 of the Code of Criminal Procedure (X of 1882) does not authorize the police to arrest without an order from the Political Agent or from a Magistrate in British India. Nor do ss. 11 and 15 of the Extradition Act (XXI of 1879). Nor does s. 76 of the Indian Penal Code justify the arrest. The accused was not labouring under a mistake of fact. If there was any mistake of fact on the part of the accused, there is nothing to show that he acted in good faith. He was aware of the District Magistrate's order, and yet he directed the arrest of the complainant and actually detained him in custody for some time. He was, therefore, guilty of wrongful confinement under s. 342 of the Indian Penal Code. Refers to [75] Queen Empress v. Kathaperumal (1), Regina v. Naryan Babaji (2); Queen v. Beharysing (3).

Jardine (with him B. A. Bhagvat), for the accused.—The order of the District Magistrate was ultra vires. It was a mere expression of opinion that the complainant would not be arrested without a warrant. The chief constable was not bound to take notice of it. When a British subject commits an offence in foreign territory, s. 188 of the Criminal Procedure Code distinctly says that he may be "dealt with" as if the offence were committed in British India. Section 54 of the Code empowers a police officer to arrest without a warrant a person who is concerned in a cognizable offence. The offence of criminal breach of trust, in respect of which the complainant was arrested, was a cognizable offence. This power of the police to arrest without a warrant is not taken away by Act XXI of 1879. Sections 11 and 15 of the Extradition Act do not touch the question of arrest by a police officer. The Act is altogether silent on this point. It leaves intact the powers conferred on the police under s. 54 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. The arrest was, therefore, legal. The accused, moreover, acted in good faith. This is found as a fact by the lower Court. The accused released the complainant as soon as he discovered that he was the person mentioned in the District Magistrate's order. Section 76 of the Penal Code, therefore, protects the accused.

JUDGMENT.

JARDINE, J.—On the 27th November, 1891, a police officer of the Sangli territory, an independent State, and so described in Ramchandra Dada Naik v. Dada Mahadev Naik (1), came from Shahapur, in that territory, to Belgaum, with a written request from one of the chief officials to the chief constable to arrest Mukund Babu Vethe on a charge of criminal breach of trust committed in the Sangli territory. Mukund is a native subject of the Queen-Empress, residing at Belgaum. The chief constable thereupon directed the arrest, which was performed by the Sangli officer, and Mukund was brought up before the chief constable and showed him a written reply, made to Mukund in October, [76] 1891, by the District Magistrate of Belgaum, to the effect that he could not be arrested without a warrant from either the Political Agent for Sangli or from the District Magistrate. Whereupon the chief constable forthwith brought Mukund before a Magistrate, who discharged him from custody. The question before us is whether the act of arrest was lawful. If not, the confinement was wrongful, and the question, whether the chief constable knew that it was unlawful, is irrelevant in construing s. 342 of the Indian Penal Code; see Dhania v. F. L. Clifford (2), which differs from s. 220 as interpreted in Regina v. Narayan Babaji (3). The only treaty or convention between our Government and Sangli about extradition appears to be that printed at p. 230 of Aitchison's Treaties, Vol. 7, Ed. of 1892. It provides that if offenders come into British India from the Sangli Jaghir you (i. e., the Chief) will represent the affair, and they shall on inquiry "be delivered up to you." These words do not justify the arrest. It is not contended that the arrest would be lawful without authority of statute law. It was argued, however, that the words of s. 188 of the Code of Criminal Procedure—"when a native Indian subject of Her Majesty commits an offence at any place beyond the limits of British India, he may be dealt with in respect of any such offence as if it had been committed at any place within British India at which he may be found"—justified the action of the police, because they apply the provisions of s. 54, whereby a police officer may without warrant arrest for any cognizable offence (which criminal breach of trust is) when there is a reasonable complaint or credible information or reasonable suspicion. "Offence" is defined in this Code to mean "any act or omission made punishable by any law for the time being in force."

The real question then is, whether the word as used in s. 54 includes acts of British subjects outside of British India, which if done in British India would amount to cognizable offences? The British Indan law of offences extends to them when they are out of British India by s. 8 of Foreign Jurisdiction Act, XXI of 1879, and so does the law of procedure. But if such a person is within British India, what law or procedure applies? If there [77] were no enactment at all, the better opinion is that, whatever prerogative the Government of the Queen at home may have to arrest, the police here would have none: see Forsyth's Constitutional Law, 369, and the authorities referred to. Also Maxwell on Magistrates, 125. The Fugitive Offenders Act and the Extradition Act of England do not appear to empower the police to arrest without warrant. The Government of one State has no such special interest in the affairs of another as to induce it to be diligent in capturing escaped offenders before any requisition is made. If there is a Political Agent, s. 188 prohibits inquiry in British India after the arrest, unless the Political Agent certifies in favour of such an inquiry. Our Foreign Jurisdiction Act appears to contemplate only two modes of initiating inquiry, namely, by process issued either by the Political Agent or a Magistrate. If the latter officer takes the initiative, he must give immediate information to the Political Agent if there is one: if there is none, he must at once report his proceedings to the Local Government. There is no such requirement about arrests made by the police without the Magistrate's warrant. Yet it cannot be supposed that the Legislature meant this safeguard not to extend to all cases. These directions in this Act indicate that the procedure is special: so does s. 17 about bail. Sections 11 and 16 provide a careful procedure to be worked by Political Agents, Governments, and Magistrates. If the intention had been to empower the police under s. 54 of the Code, it would have been expressed in plain words. The word "offence" must be limited in a manner analogous to the construction put in Empress v. Murgappa (1) by the majority of the Full Bench, Sargent and Melvill, JJ. For these reasons the arrest and detention of Mukund were illegal; and the Magistrate ought to have held that the confinement was wrongful. The evidence given by the Sangli jamadar of police shows the dangers to the personal liberty of Her Majesty's subjects in Belgaum. He says he is always arresting people in Belgaum for cognizable offences, and that the Belgaum police assist him in so doing, and it is not usual to mention the name of the criminal. What happens after these arrests is not disclosed by the evidence. We do not suppose [78] that the Magistracy allow any subject of the Queen-Empress to be carried out of British India by the police of a Foreign State, and without any warrant from the Government, or the Political Agent, or a British Magistrate. There is no law which allows such things: and, indeed, every civilized Government is very jealous of all attempts to withdraw its subjects from its jurisdiction and hand them over to the Courts of a Foreign State, especially without any protection against prosecution in the Foreign State for offences committed before that for which the surrender is required. Through the mistakes made by the Magistrates who tried the chief constable for wrongful confinement, he has been twice discharged. We are asked by Mukund to use our revisional powers to put him on trial again. But as the Magistrate has found that the chief constable did not act with malice, but only followed an illegal procedure, which his superiors have sanctioned at Belgaum, we do not think the interests of justice require that he should be prosecuted a third time. We, therefore, do not interfere with the order of discharge. Mukund and two of his witnesses ask this Court to revoke the sanctions given by the Magistrate under s. 195 of the Code of Criminal Procedure for their trial for having given false evidence. On examining the record we find that, even as regards the only tangible matter of charge, viz., whether Mukund was sent up to the Magistrate after arrest in a dhumney or on foot, the statements are much balanced; the other matters charged relate to a conversation which may have been exaggerated. In no case do we see any public advantage likely to result from allowing these prosecutions to go on at the suit of a private person. We, therefore, use our powers, in revision, to revoke these sanctions, and stop the prosecutions.

RANADE, J.—I concur. There is, in my opinion, no room for doubt that the practice of police officers in Belgaum lending their help, without orders from British Magistrates, in the execution of warrants of arrest issued by the authorities in the Sangli State in respect of cognizable offences alleged to have been committed by British subjects in the territories of that State, is not in strict conformity with the terms of the treaty engagements with that State, or with the provisions of the Extradition Act. The treaty [79] engagements permit a larger freedom to the British police to follow up offenders who escape into that State than is permitted to the authorities of the Native State to make arrests in British territory. In this latter case, nothing can be done, except after inquiry, presumably by the Magistrates in British territory. The provisions of the Extradition Act are not very clear as regards the action of the police, but they also impose the obligation of a preliminary inquiry by a Magistrate before a British subject can be made over to a foreign tribunal. The action taken by the Chief constable in this case is thus clearly not in conformity with law. At the same time, the existence of the above practice for many years is held proved by the Magistrate, Mr. Boyd; and the fact, that the District Magistrate deemed it necessary to give the protection or assurance contained in his reply (Ex. 30) to the complainant in a particular case, shows clearly that the procedure of direct arrest by the Belgaum police on the requisition of the Sangli State was well known to the district authorities, and has been followed by them in all similar cases. Under these circumstances, the chief constable cannot be held to have perversely acted in this matter when he simply gave effect to the existing practice. The protection of the District Magistrate's order was not meant by him to be a general protection against all arrests. The warrant brought by the Shahapur jamadar specified no details, and the chief constable could not well be expected to follow any other course than the one he followed, namely, of placing the whole matter before a Magistrate, and acting according to his orders. In so doing he does not appear to have exercised his authority harshly or unreasonably. The chief constable should, therefore, in my opinion, not be put on his trial again for a third time. At the same time the counter-complaints for false evidence brought against Mukund and two others, his brother and pleader, appear to me to be of a sort for which there is not any strong justification. The fact appears to be that Mukund had good reason to be vexed, and ignorant people in such a mood of mind, are disposed to a considerable exaggeration of their feelings in the expressions they use, and in such a state of excitement they often utter inaccuracies which should never be mistaken for deliberate falsehoods. If Mukund had the [80] protecting order with him, his showing it to the chief constable may be easily mistaken for his flourishing it about. Further, there is nothing unnatural in such a man showing this order to the Shahapur jamadar, or to the chief constable, and in the jamadar not attending to it, and the chief constable urging that it could not protect Mukund. The only mis-statement of fact relates to the question of conveyance. But it is too small a matter to furnish grounds for further prolonging this unhealthy litigation. No jury would convict the persons so charged with wilfully giving false evidence under such circumstances. I concur, therefore, in refusing to interfere with the order of discharge passed by the First Class Magistrate, and in revoking the sanction given by the same Magistrate to prosecute Mukund and his brother and pleader for giving false evidence in a judicial proceeding.

NAGAR PRAGJI (Original Applicant), Appellant v. JIVABHAI BAVAJI (Original Opponent), *Respondent. [30th January, 1894.]

Act VI of 1888 (Bombay), s. 31—Gujarat Talukdars' Act—Sale in execution of a decree upon a mortgage before the Act—Necessity of sanction of the Governor in Council to the sale—Execution of decree—Sale.

Certain talukdari estate was mortgaged under a sankhat executed before the Gujarat Talukdars' Act (Bom. Act VI of 1888) came into force. On the 22nd August, 1889 (i.e., subsequent to the Act coming into force), a decree was passed for sale of the mortgaged property. The decree was transferred for execution to the Collector, who refused to put up the property to sale without the previous sanction of Government as required by s. 31 of the Talukdari Act.

Held, that s. 31 of the Act had no application to the present case. The san mortgage having been executed before the Act came into force, and left with its validity untouched by cl. 1 of s. 31, the ordinary remedy of the mortgagee to bring the property to sale was not taken away by that section. The sanction of the Governor in Council was, therefore, not necessary to the sale in execution of the decree on the mortgage.

SECOND appeal from the decision of J. J. Heaton, Acting Joint Judge of Ahmedabad, in appeal No. 210 of 1892.

[81] On the 22nd August, 1889, plaintiff obtained a decree for sale of certain talukdari estate which had been hypothecated under a sankhat executed before the Gujarat Talukdars' Act (VI of 1888) came into force.

The decree was transferred for execution to the Collector of Ahmedabad, who refused to put up the property to sell without the previous sanction of the Governor of Bomay in Council as required by s. 31, cl. 2, of Bombay Act, VI of 1888.

The decree-holder thereupon applied to the Subordinate Judge of Dhandhuka, who had passed the decree, praying for an order to the Collector to sell the property as directed by the decree.

The Subordinate Judge rejected this application, on the ground that the decree sought to be executed having been passed after the coming into force of the Talukdari Act (VI of 1888), sanction of the Government of Bombay was necessary under s. 31, cl. 2, of the Act, before the property could be sold in execution. He, therefore, declined to interfere with the Collector's order.

This decision was upheld, on appeal, by the Acting Joint Judge.

Against this decision the decree-holder preferred a second appeal to the High Court.

Manekshah Jehangirshah (with him Gokaldas Kahandas Parekh), for appellant.—The question is, whether s. 31 of Bombay Act, VI of 1888, is retrospective so as to affect a mortgage effected before the Act came into force. The language of the section shows that it is not. Clause 1 of the section does not affect any incumbrances on a taluqdari estate made before the passing of the Act. An incumbrance includes a mortgage like the present. So, too, cl. 2 of the section does not affect any sale or other alienation made before the Act came into force. In the present case the decree sought to be executed is based on a mortgage-bond which was passed long before the Act came into force. Under that bond the mortgagee had a right to bring the property to sale. That right was not taken away by s. 31 of the Act. The principle laid down in Kalian Moti v. Pathubhai (1) [82] applies to the present case. The Act does not affect vested rights. Refers to Bai Hariganga v. Tulsidas (2) and Vinayak Moreshvar v. Baba Shanbudin (3).

There was no appearan for the respondent.

JUDGMENT.

JARDINE, J.—The san-mortgage was executed before Bombay Act, VI of 1888, came into force. The decree passed upon it and directing the sale of the immoveable property hypothecated bears date subsequent to the Act coming into force, which circumstance distinguishes the present case from Kalian Moti v. Pathubhai (1).

The Courts below have held that the Collector is justified in declining to carry out the sale, on the ground that the sanction of the Government of Bombay required by the Act has not been obtained.

Mr. Manekhshah contends that the principle of the above cited decision applies, the san-mortgage being an incumbrance within the definition of s. 2 and left with its validity untouched by s. 31, cl. 1. We think that the inference is that the Legislature did not intend by that section to interfere with the ordinary remedy of the mortgagee, and we, therefore, must construe cl. 2 by the light of cl. 1 and exempt from the the operation of the latter clause alienations which the former is intended to leave valid. For these reasons we are of opinion that the sanction of the Governor in Council is not required to the sale under the decree obtained on the mortgage. We now reverse the orders of the lower Courts and direct the Subordinate Judge to dispose of the darkhast in accordance with this judgment.

Order reversed.

Receiver—Administration suit—Receiver appointed where executor is in possession—Suit against executor where will not proved—Will of Mahomedan testator—Parties—Civil Procedure Code (XIV of 1882), s. 438.

The rule of the Court of Chancery, that a receiver will not be appointed against an executor unless gross misconduct was showu, is not applicable to the case of an executor of the will of a Mahomedan.

Where a Mahomedan testator had by his will appointed three executors only one of whom had acted and got possession of the estate, a suit by the testator's widow for administration of the estate was held sufficiently well constituted for the purpose of a motion for a receiver, although only the executor who had acted was made defendant, the other two executors not being parties to the suit.

Quære whether it would not be necessary or advisable to add the said two executors before the suit came on for hearing.

MOTION by the plaintiff for a receiver. The plaintiff was the widow of one Kazi Rahimtula, who died on the 28th February, 1892, leaving him surviving herself (his widow), a son Kazi Ismail, and two daughters Fatmabai and Nonbai.

The plaintiff's husband Kazi Rahimtula was the son of one Kazi Futtay Mahomed, who died in 1886. He left a considerable amount of property including a share in a printing and book-selling business, in which his son (Kazi Rahimtula) and his brother Abdul Karim (the first defendant) were his partners. He left a widow (Khatubai) and two children, viz., the plaintiff's husband and a daughter Khatijabai, who died in 1891. At the time this suit was filed, the estate of Kazi Futtay Mahomed was the subject of litigation (suit No. 282 of 1888), and an inquiry was proceeding to ascertain of what his estate consisted, and who were entitled to share therein.

After the death of Kazi Futtay Mahomed, the partnership business above mentioned was carried on by his brother Abdul Karim (defendant No. 1) and his son (the plaintiff's husband.)

In March, 1893, the plaintiff filed this suit praying for administration, and that her husband's estate might be partitioned [84] between herself and her children. She stated that the first defendant Abdul Karim alleged that her husband had a left a will, but she did not admit that it was genuine, and in any event she denied that it was binding on her unless she elected to take under it. She alleged that the first defendant had taken possession of all her husband's property, and continued to carry on the business, and had opened another press which he was carrying on with monies belonging to her husband's estate.

She prayed (inter alia) for the appointment of a receiver to collect and hold possession of the estate of her husband Kazi Rahimtula.

She obtained a rule calling on the first defendant to show cause why a receiver should not be appointed. The rule was argued on the 18th April.

Lang (Advocate General) for the defendant showed cause.

Inverarity and Jardine in support of the rule.

The Civil Procedure Code (XIV of 1882), s. 438; Tagore Law Lectures, pp. 564, 567; and Macnaghten's Mahomedan Law, p. 54, were cited.

JUDGMENT.

STARLING, J.—This is a suit brought by the plaintiff, who is the widow of one Kazi Rahimtula, against the first defendant, as his executor, for administration of the estate in his hands, and for the delivery to her and the infant defendants (the sons of the deceased) of the property coming to them.

On the 16th March, 1893, the plaintiff obtained a rule calling upon the first defendant to show cause why a receiver should not be appointed to take charge of the estate of the deceased, which came on for argument on the 18th April.

The first objection taken on behalf of the first defendant was that this suit was not properly constituted. The deceased had appointed three persons as his executors, and only one was made a defendant hereto. In answer to this objection, s. 438 of the Civil Procedure Code (XIV of 1882) was quoted, which provides that executors who have not proved a will need not be made parties to a suit brought by or against the executors. This, however, is a Mahomedan will, and, therefore, need not be proved. But I think the principle of that section is applicable. Not joining in probate [85] is evidence that those not joining do not intend to intermeddle with the estate, and there is no reason why those who do not intermeddle should be worried with suits concerning a matter in which they have no interest. In this case, the property seems to be wholly in the hands of the first defendant, for in para. 13 of his affidavit of 12th April, 1893, he submits that no reason has been shown why the estate "should not remain in my possession," and the affidavits of his two co-executors Ahmed bin Essa Khaliffa and Pirbhai Damji do not lead me to the inference that they have taken possession of the estate; but whatever else they have done, they have left that in the possession of the first defendant. Consequently, I think, for the purposes of this motion, that the suit is sufficiently well constituted. I express no opinion, however, as to whether it may not be necessary, or at any rate advisable, to add the other two executors as defendants before the suit comes on for hearing.

It was then argued that, as the first defendant is an executor, the Court would not appoint a receiver as against him unless gross misconduct on his part was shown. It is quite true that the Court of Chancery will not appoint a receiver against an executor on slight grounds, because his appointment as executor shows that the testator, who must be assumed to have known his character, had confidence in him, and the Court will give the fullest weight to that expression of confidence, and require a much stronger case to be made out for a receiver against an executor than against other persons. In England, however, where this is the rule, a testator by his will disposes only of what is absolutely his among the objects of his bounty; he has, therefore, a right to choose who shall distribute that bounty among those who can claim only under the will. But a Mahomedan testator cannot bequeath more than one-third of his property, in any case, without the consent of his heirs, and the executor has not only to distribute that one-third among the legatees, but also the remaining two-thirds amongst the heirs who claim adversely to the will; consequently there is not the same reason why the appointment by a Mahomedan testator of an executor should receive the same consideration as the appointment of an executor by an English testator does in England.

[86] Bearing these remarks in mind I will proceed to point out the effect that the evidence on affidavit has had on my mind. At a very early stage I find correspondence about the difficulty the legal advisers of the plaintiff have had in getting access to her, and complaint is made of the obstructiveness of a sepoy who is placed at the entrance of the house. The executor says he was put there by the testator during his lifetime. Possibly, but now he must be continued by the first defendant; that clearly appears from his letter of 21st February, 1893, and it also appears from his letter of 30th September, 1892, that he has approved of the sepoy, on one occasion at least, preventing the plaintiff's legal advisers having communication with her. The impression the whole correspondence on this point leaves on my mind is that the first defendant is not anxious that the plaintiff should be encouraged or helped to assert her legal rights, and, without perhaps absolutely ordering the sepoy to stop people from going to see her, has encouraged him in being as obstructive as possible. The plaintiff has a perfect right to assert any claim she may have at law,

ORIGINAL CIVIL.

and also is entitled to see her legal advisers whenever she chooses without any obstruction on his part, and the fact that the first defendant tries to put obstacles in her way of so doing does not impress me in his favour.

The next complaint made against the first defendant is the monthly amount of money which he is paying to the plaintiff, which he defends on the ground that she is getting for the maintenance of herself and infant children what she got during her husband's lifetime. But the plaintiff's position is now changed. She is entitled not merely to maintenance, but is the absolute owner of one-eighth of her husband's property, and that she has a right to receive; whereas the whole tone of the first defendant's affidavits shows that, like most males in this country, he seems to have an idea that females ought not to have the absolute control of their property and are not to get more than maintenance, or certainly not more than the chief male in the family chooses they shall receive.

In considering this point, I take into account the fact that there is some litigation going on in another suit which may diminish the amount of the estate of the deceased; but, as far as I could [87] gather during the argument of the case, that suit can only affect two houses and a portion of the book-selling and printing business. Consequently it seems to me quite possible, and if so, proper, that the plaintiff should receive some amount of income (the calculation of how much does not seem to involve much difficulty) as her own; yet the first defendant in paragraph 14 of his first affidavit alleges that no division of the deceased's estate can be made until that suit is brought to a final close. Probably no final division can be made till then, but that is no reason why no division at all should be made at the present time. All these acts of the first defendant are facts from which, it seems to me, some inference may be drawn that in the hands of the first defendant the property of the deceased may be wasted before the time for final division arrives, though I do not think I should on such grounds alone deprive the first defendant of the control of his testator's estate.

Lastly, there is the charge about the partnership carried on by the deceased and the first defendant. Now I cannot come to a definite conclusion that the first defendant has actually been misapplying any portion of the stock, though admitting, as he does, that he has been removing a portion of it, his explanation is not satisfactory, consisting only of general statements, whereas it was in his power to have given a detailed account of what was done with each parcel of property which left the partnership shop. A more serious matter, however, is the fact that before he has wound up the business, he has opened on his own account another shop of the same description, the natural result of which will be that he will attract the former customers of the partnership to his own shop, and thus entirely destroy the value of the goodwill of the partnership business, the share of the deceased in which ought to have formed a portion of his estate. This conduct is certainly not allowable in an executor who is bound to preserve his testator's estate.

Taking all the facts of the case into consideration I think I must come, on the whole, to the conclusion that there is danger that the estate of the deceased will be wasted in the hands of the first defendant, and that this is a proper case for the appointment of a receiver.

Company — Voluntary winding up—Inquiry into conduct of liquidators — Indian Companies Act (VI of 1882), s. 214—Practice—Procedure.

Where contributories of a company in voulntary liquidation complain of the conduct of liquidators in the winding up, and desire an inquiry under s. 214 of the Indian Companies Act (VI of 1882), the proper procedure is by summons in chambers.

Where it is sought to make an officer of a company liable for misapplication of the funds of a company or for misfeasance or breach of trust in relation to its affairs, the sum sought to be recovered should be definitely stated in the summons, and the grounds upon which the application is based should be fully and adequately set out in an affidavit or affidavits.

RULE nisi to set aside an ex parte order dated 19th July, 1894, made under s. 214 of the Indian Companies Act (VI of 1882), directing an inquiry into the conduct of liquidators, &c. The Jehangir B. Karani Co., Limited, was registered as a joint stock company in 1892, and carried on the business of book-sellers and publishers, &c. On the 23rd May, 1894, the company went into voluntary liquidation, and Pestonji Edalji Dharwar and Sorabji Kaikhosru Patuk were appointed liquidators.

On the 12th July, 1894, the petitioners presented a petition to the High Court complaining of the conduct of the liquidators, alleging that they had sold a considerable portion of the company's property very much below its proper value, and bringing other charges against them in connection with the said sales. The following clauses of the petition set forth the petitioners' case :—

"14 Your petitioners are at a loss to account for the extraordinary conduct of the liquidators aforesaid in selling the company's assets at the ridiculous prices aforesaid. Before doing so they did not cause any valuation or inventory of the assets to [89] be made, or invite any tenders or advertise, nor did they call any meeting of shareholders or creditors to consult them or ascertain their wishes; and if the said sales are bona fide sales, which your petitioners do not admit, your petitioners say that the conduct of the liquidators amounts to gross negligence and misfeasance on their part and is a breach of trust reposed in them.

"15. Your petitioners say that there are 37 shareholders in the said company. The creditors of the company have claims amounting to Rs. 65,000, or thereabouts, out of which creditors to the extent of Rs. 20,000 or thereabouts being secured creditors have been paid off, and creditors to the extent of Rs. 14,000 are in England. All the creditors of the said company, your petitioners believe, support this application. All the independent shareholders also, your petitioners believe, support it."

The prayer of the petition was as follows :—

"(1) That this Honourable Court will exercise, in the case of this company, all the powers which this Court might exercise if the said company were wound up by the Court, and in particular will exercise the powers given by s. 214 of the Indian Companies Act (VI of 1882).

"(2) That this Honourable Court will examine into the conduct of the said Pestonji Edalji Dharwar and Sorabji Kaikhosro Patuk in and about the matter of the sales aforementioned, and will compel them to contribute such sums of money to the assets of the company by way of compensation in respect of the misfeasance or breaches of trust complained of by your petitioners as this Honourable Court thinks just."

On the 19th July the petitioners obtained an ex parte order directing an inquiry in chambers into the conduct of the liquidators with regard to the sales mentioned in the petition, "and as to what sum or sums of money (if any) the said liquidators should be compelled to contribute to the assets of the said company by way of compensation in respect of misfeasances or breaches of trust complained of in the said petition."

On the 30th July, 1894. the liquidators obtained a rule nisi to set aside the above ex parte order.

The rule now came on for hearing.

Lang (Advocate-General) for the liquidators in support of the rule :— The order of the 19th July was obtained ex parte, and without any notice to the liquidators of the charges made against them. The procedure is wrong. The petitioners should have taken out a summons, and the case should have been heard on affidavits filed by both parties before any order was made. There is no precedent for such an order. He referred to ss. 162, 182 [90] and 214 (1) of the Indian Companies Act (VI of 1882) and the corresponding sections of the English Act, viz., ss. 115, 138 and 165 ; Lindley on Companies (5th ed.), p. 97 ; Rules 78 and 79 under the English Companies Act.

Inverarity, for the petitioners, showed cause:—Under s. 214 of the Indian Companies Act (VI of 1882) the person proceeded against is not entitled to notice. To get an order under that section it is only necessary to satisfy the Court that there is a prima facie case against the persons

(1) Indian Companies Act (VI of 1882), ss. 182 and 214 :—

182 :—Where a company is being wound up voluntarily, the liquidators or any contributory of the company may apply to the Court to determine any question arising in the matter of such winding-up, or to exercise, as respects the enforcing of calls or in respect of any other matter, all or any of the powers which the Court might exercise if the company were being wound-up by the Court. Any such application may be made by motion. The Court, if satisfied that the determination of such question or the required exercise of the power will be just and beneficial, may accede, wholly or partially, to such application, on such terms and subject to such conditions as the Courts thinks fit, or it may make such other order or decree on such application as the Court thinks just.

214 :—Where, in the course of the winding-up of any company under this Act, it appears that any past or present director, manager, official or other liquidator, or any officer of such company, has misapplied or retained in his own hands, or become liable or accountable for, any monies of the company, or been guilty of any misfeasance or breach of trust in relation to the company, the Court may, on the application of any liquidator or of any creditor or contributory of the Company, notwithstanding that the offence is one for which the offender is criminally responsible, examine into the conduct of such director, manager, or other officer, and compel him to re-pay any monies so misapplied, or retained, or for which such officer has become liable or accountable, together with interest after such rate as the Court thinks just, or to contribute such sums of money to the assets of the company by way of compensation in respect of such misapplication, retainer, misfeasance or breach of trust, as the Court thinks just.

JUDGMENT.

FARRAN, J.—In this matter the Advocate-General obtained a rule nisi on the 30th July last to set aside an order made on the 19th idem, directing an inquiry into the conduct of the liquidators of the company under s. 214 of the Indian Companies Act (VI of 1882), on the ground that it was improperly made without notice to the liquidators and otherwise than on affidavit.

The point involved is of little importance, and, though it was argued at considerable length, of no difficulty. It involves merely a question as to the proper procedure to be adopted in order to enable creditors and contributories of a company to put the Court in motion under s. 214. Though the company is in course of voluntary liquidation, the Court, on its aid being invoked by the liquidators or contributories, is enabled by s. 182 to determine questions and to exercise powers given by the Act to the same extent as if the company were being wound up by the Court or under its supervision. This section has been interpreted by the Courts in England in the broadest and most extensive sense. In In re Union Bank of Kingston-upon-Hull (4) Sir George Jessel, M. R., said: "In a voluntary winding-up, a liquidator may apply to the Court to decide any question fairly arising in the winding up, and it is much cheaper to bring it before me by way of motion than by an action, 809-10."

It was at one time a question whether the Court would exercise the stringent powers conferred by s. 214 in the case of a company being voluntarily wound up, but that doubt was set at rest by Rance's case (5), where the Court of appeal, reversing a decision of the Master of the Rolls, made an order, in the case of a company being wound up voluntarily, that one of its past directors should repay a sum of £125 to the company. That case is also important as showing how the Court's aid is invoked in such a case. There the liquidator took out a summons to have it declared that Mr. Rance was liable to pay the sum in question, [92] and asking for an order that he should pay it. The same course was adopted in In re National Funds Assurance Co. (6), where a summons was also taken out. This was a compulsory winding up. In the case of In re British Corporation (7), leave to serve a summons in Scotland, taken out under the section in question, was granted. Mr. Palmer in his work (p. 808, 4th ed.) states that the application was usually made by summons. The form is given at p. 809. I have examined all the cases in the Law Reports cited by Mr. Palmer under the section, and find that in all of them (a very large number), where the nature of the proceedings is indicated (except in Stringer's case, where the application was upon notice of motion) they were by way of summons. It may, therefore, I think, be taken that the practice in the Supreme Court in England under the Act of 1862 was to initiate proceedings under s. 214 by summons. Throughout this judgment I refer to the sections by their numbers under the Indian Act (VI of 1882).

The wording of the section corresponding with s. 214 was altered by the Act of 1890, and under it rules have been framed (Rules 78 and 79) which provide that in Courts other than the Supreme Court, application under the revised section shall be by motion (after eight days' notice), while in the Supreme Court the old practice of taking out a summons is to be observed. There can now be no question as to the English practice. The case of In re Gold Company (1), cited by Mr. Inverarity, shows that when proceedings allowed by s. 182 of the Indian Act are initiated by contributories, notice to the liquidator ought to be given, as prima facie he is, as it were, dominus litis, and is presumably the most proper person to conduct the proceedings. When the proceedings are, however, taken against the liquidator himself, it may be presumed that he does not desire to initiate them himself, and in such a case it is not, therefore, necessary that he should have notice beyond the notice given by the service of the summons upon him. It might have been thought, having regard to the closing provision of s. 182 of the Indian Act, that the Court, before issuing a summons under s. 214, should give its leave [93] or sanction to such proceedings being taken,—beyond I mean the sanction involved in the issuing of the summons itself. This is not so. I cannot find in the English cases any trace of the Court, when its assistance is invoked under s. 182, to put in force the provisions of s. 214, making any preliminary order or even giving any preliminary sanction. In Rance's case(2), where the application of s. 214 to the case of a voluntary liquidation is so fully discussed, the Court does not suggest the necessity of such preliminary order or sanction. The reason is this. The section (182) provides that "the Court, if satisfied that the required exercise of power will be just and beneficial, may accede, wholly or partially, to such application on such terms and subject to such conditions as the Court thinks fit, or it may make such other order or decree on such application as the Court thinks just." It is thus in a certain sense a discretionary jurisdiction given to the Court. The section (182) does not give the applicant an absolute right to call on the Court to exercise its powers. It is, therefore, fit and just that the person attached, on the return of the summons taken out against him, should have an opportunity of showing not only that he has a good defence upon the merits, but also that there are peculiar circumstances in the case; that it would involve him in some peculiar hardship if the claim against him were to be tried in this summary way; which would render it unjust to put the powers of s. 214 in force against him. If an ex parte order has already been made under s. 182, that an inquiry shall take place under s. 214, the Judge hearing the summons would be deprived of his power to hear the person sought to be charged in support of such an objection. He would be robbed of his discretion. The case In re Gold Company (1) relied on by Mr. Inverarity, and the cases of In re Silkstone, &c., Coal and Iron Company (3) and In re Metropolitan Bank(4), all decided upon s. 162, are different. They are cases in which the order of the Court was to examine a witness, an officer of the company, in relation to its affairs. Such an order may be made ex parte, and the person to be examined has, as a rule, no right to object to his being examined. In such cases the Court, making [94] the examination order, considers beforehand (since it is an ex parte order) whether it is just and beneficial to make it, and often imposes limits and conditions upon the person applying for it.

(2) L. R. 6 Ch. 104.
(3) 19 Ch. D. 118.
(4) 15 Ch. D. 139.

For these reasons I consider that the order made on the 19th of July last was not warranted by the English authorities and ought not to have been made in the form in which it has been drawn up. When I made the order, I made it in terms of the petition. The order as drawn up goes beyond these terms, but I do not think that I ought to have made the order even in the terms of the petition. Although I consider that, for the reasons I have given, there was no necessity for an application such as that made on the 19th of July at all, and that a summons taken out in accordance with the practice in England, or a rule applied for on notice, would have been sufficient, I am not prepared to say that it was not open to the applicants to ask for preliminary leave to institute proceedings under s. 214. I shall not, therefore, discharge the order of the 19th July, but amend it by ordering that the petitioners be at liberty to take proceedings under s. 214 in respect of the matters referred to in their petition. Such an order determines nothing against the liquidators, and is such as can be properly made ex parte. It should not be served on the liquidators. Though the practice in England is, as I have shown, well established to take out a summons in the Supreme Court, or, in other Courts, a rule upon notice in cases like the present, each founded upon proper materials, the practice in this Court is not equally uniform, and there is no rule to guide practitioners. Petitions in some cases have been presented, and in others summonses have been taken out. I cannot, therefore, say that a petition in the present instance was erroneous. I shall, therefore, now simply accept it and set it down for hearing in chambers on some future day.

I would at the same time point out that where it is sought to make an officer of a company liable for misapplication of the funds of a company, or for misfeasance or breach of trust in relation to its affairs, the sum sought to be recovered should be definitely stated in the summons, and the grounds upon which the application is based should be fully and adequately set out in an affidavit or affidavits. The position taken up by the petitioners [95] in the 7th paragraph of their affidavit is, in my opinion, quite untenable. They say "if all the matters are allowed to be disclosed on affidavits, the principal object of the enquiry would be frustrated. The various points upon which the liquidators, and other persons whose evidence is important, have to be examined, and the facts which have to be proved, would become known to them, which, under the circumstances of this case, should not be allowed to be done."

In Stringer's case (1), Selwyn, L.J., in pointing out why the Courts should not decline the exercise of the summary jurisdiction given by the Companies Act, uses the following words. (His Lordship here quoted the words, p. 484, and the observations of Giffard, L.J., in the same case, p. 494.) These observations show the spirit in which proceedings under the sections in question (as in all other litigation in British Courts) should be conducted, openly and fairly with full notice to the persons charged of the facts and circumstances upon which the petitioners rely, and of the points and grounds upon which they propose to rest their case. I must, therefore, direct that they support their application by affidavit or affidavits. This or these will be answered by the liquidators, and the case will then come on in chambers and be heard much as though it were a suit. This is in accordance with the 96th rule under the Companies Act. That and rule 10 of the High Court Rules seem to show that a summons rather than a rule upon notice is the proper procedure in such a case as this. A petition is more properly presented when the direction of the Court is sought upon admitted facts, than when a hostile order is applied for upon disputed materials.

The order, then, will be that the order of the 19th July be varied by substituting, for the words "that an enquiry be held in chambers on Thursday, the 2nd day of August next, at 10-30 A.M., into the conduct of," the words "that the petitioners be at liberty to take steps under s. 214 of the Companies Act to determine the liability (if any) of." The petition will be accepted and referred to chambers. The hearing of it will be fixed by the [96] Judge in chambers after the filing of the affidavits. The petitioners must pay the costs of this rule.

Guardian and Ward—Minor—Power of Court to appoint guardian of person and estate of a minor—Power of guardian to sell minor's property.

The power of the Court of Chancery to appoint guardians to infants, whether such infants have property or not, is possessed by the High Court.

Quære*, whether a guardian appointed by the Court (except under some special Act) has any authority to sell the property of his ward unless the express sanction of the Court is given.

IN chambers.

The petitioner presented his petition praying that he might be appointed guardian of the person and property of his two minor sons Damodar Jagannath and Bhaskar Jagannath, and that he might be empowered to mortgage certain family property.

The petition stated that he and his two minor sons were joint in food, worship and estate, and resided together in Bombay; that they were possessed of certain ancestral immoveable property described in the schedule to the petition; that the petitioner had incurred costs, amounting to about, Rs. 800, in a suit which was still pending; that he was indebted to various persons and had no moveable property wherewith to pay the said debt; that the creditors were pressing for payment, and that unless paid they would file suits to the detriment of the family. He further stated that subject to the sanction of the Court he had [97] contracted for a loan of Rs. 1,500 on the mortgage of the said immoveable property, and he, therefore, prayed, as above stated, for the sanction of the Court.

Lang (Acting Advocate-General) presented the petition and cited Re Jairam Luxmon (1).

JUDGMENT.

STARLING, J.—The petitioner in this case, Jagganath Ramji, has two minor sons Damodar and Bhaskar, and the three together constitute a joint and undivided Hindu family possessed of ancestral immoveable property and also of some moveable property, but none which apparently is available to pay off certain debts which the petitioner has incurred. These seem to me prima facie to be debts properly incurred for the benefit of the family, and such as would justify the petitioner in selling or mortgaging the family property in order to pay them. The petitioner has arranged to raise a mortgage on the family property for the purpose of paying them, and now petitions the Court to appoint him guardian of the persons and estate of his minor children and to sanction the mortgage in order that he may be able to raise the money at a lower rate of interest than he would otherwise be able to do.

When the petition was presented to me in chambers I refused to accept it, or make any order on it, as I considered that under the circumstances the petitioner had full power to mortgage the property himself, and that, as I did not feel I ought formally to sanction the mortgage without a much fuller enquiry which would cause additional expense to be incurred, the appointing him as guardian would certainly give him no further power than he originally possessed as the father of an undivided Hindu family, but might possibly lead the mortgagee to think that he had fuller powers. The petition was, however, presented to me again by the Acting Advocate General, who called my attention to the case of Jairam Luxmon(1), in which a similar order,—with some doubts, however, as to its (propriety—was made by Farran, J.) After hearing his argument, I reserved judgment, and consulted the Chief Justice on the matter, as I felt it was desirable that some definite rule should be laid down on which to act in these cases which are becoming somewhat numerous.

[98] There is no doubt that the Court of Chancery has always had the power of appointing guardians to infants on a proper case being made out, whether such infants have property or not—see Re Spence, (2) Re Fynn (3)—though it is ordinarily not necessary for a Court to interfere in cases where there is no property—Wellesley v. Duke of Beaufort (4). This power was possessed by the Supreme Court of Bombay under its charter, and was, amongst other powers, preserved to the High Court by the 24 and 25 Vict., c. 134, s. 9 ; and the Guardians and Wards Act VIII of 1890 also reserves the same power to the High Court. Consequently, I consider I have the power of appointing the petitioner guardian of the persons and estate of his two minor children, and I do so.

As to sanctioning the proposed mortgage, I understood the Acting Advocate General to say that he did not now ask for that ; but under any circumstances I do not consider I could grant that sanction without fuller information as to the means of the petitioner and the nature and amount of the moveable property of the family than is afforded to me in the petition, for it may be (I do not say it is) the case that the petitioner is in receipt of a comparatively large income by way of salary, in addition to the income of the immoveable property, which he has been squandering and thus the necessity of borrowing money for proper purposes has arisen. The Court of Chancery has always exercised a very rigid scrutiny over the dealings of a guardian with the property of his ward. In Daniell's Chancery Practice, Ch. XXIX, s. 5, part 3, it is said : "There is some difficulty in determining with precision the extent of the authority which is possessed by a guardian of the estate of an infant, who has been appointed by the Court of Chancery," and that doubt, except so far as it has been removed by English statutes, still seems to be in existence. The whole of part 3 is devoted to discussion of the powers of guardians in the management of the property of their wards, and from a perusal of it, it seems to me very doubtful whether a guardian appointed by the Court (except under some particular Act) has any authority to sell the property of his ward, unless of course the express sanction of the Court is given. The result of my granting this application, so far as I have granted it, will [99] be, as Farran, J., says in the above case, to leave the guardian to do on his own responsibility what he thinks right and proper under the circumstances of the case.

Before Mr. Justice Jardine and Mr. Justice M. G. Ranade.

MAHADEV BALVANT AND ANOTHER (Original Plaintiffs), Appellants v. LAKSHMAN BAEVANT (Original Defendant), *Respondent.

Hindu Law—Partition—Suit by minors for partition—In what cases such a suit can lie—Malversation.

Under the Hindu law a minor co-parcencer cannot sue for partition unless his interests are likely either (1) to be advanced thereby, or (2) protected from danger. Where an adult co-parcener has taken up a hostile position to the interest of minor co-parceners and denied their rights, or sets up his own independent title, or where the minors live separately and the adult co-parcener does not support them, in all these cases, it is in the interest of the minors that their share shall be partitioned and set apart.

The plaintiffs, who were minors, sued by their next friend for a partition of their ancestral property in the possession of their step-brother, the defendant. It appeared that soon after their father's death disputes and differences arose between plaintiff's mother and their step-brother, which led to their separation in food and residence. The defendant managed the family property, but did not support the minors out of the rents and profits thereof. Hence the suit.

Held, that though no malversation was alleged or proved, the allegation, in the plaint, of disputes and separate residence and defendant's failure to support the plaintiffs were sufficient to justify the Court in permitting the plaintiffs to maintain the suit.

APPEAL from the decision of Rao Bahadur Chunilal Maneklal, First Class Subordinate Judge of Poona, in suit No. 382 of 1889.

Suit for a partition of joint family property.

One Balvant Karandikar died on 23rd April, 1886, possessed of considerable moveable as well as immoveable property. He left behind him a widow by name Jankibai, two minor sons (the plaintiffs) by Jankibai, and an adult son (the defendant) by his first wife.

Within a few months after Balvant's death, disputes arose in his family, in consequence of which Jankibai and her two minor [100] sons separated from the defendant in food and residence. The defendant took possession of the whole of the family property, both moveable and immoveable.

* Appeal No. 145 of 1892.

In 1889 the minor sons of Balvantrao brought this suit by their next friend to recover by partition their two-thirds share of the family property, alleging that their step-brother, the defendant, had after their father's death taken possession of the whole of the ancestral property, moveable as well as immoveable, and had refused to support them out of the rents and profits of the estate in his hands. The plaintiffs also asked for an account of the income of the property since the date of their father's death.

The defendant pleaded (inter alia) that plaintiffs' mother Jankibai had taken away cash and ornaments belonging to the family of the total value of Rs. 10,000, which should be brought into hotchpot; that he had no objection to a partition of the property in dispute, except a house, which he had redeemed with funds belonging to his deceased mother and forming part of her stridhan, and that the plaintiffs were bound to contribute their share of the mortgage-debt which had been thus paid off.

The Subordinate Judge dismissed the suit on a preliminary point, holding that under the Hindu law the minors were not entitled to sue for partition without showing that their interests in the joint property would be seriously prejudiced if a partition were not forthwith ordered.

The following extract from his judgment gives the reasons for dismissal of the suit:—

"This suit seems to have been filed either in ignorance or in forgetfulness of the salutary rule of Hindu law, which does not allow of partition at the instance of a minor co-parcener without good grounds to believe that the minor co-parcener's interests in the joint family property would be prejudiced seriously if a partition were not forthwith decreed. The plaint discloses not a single ground to satisfy the requirements of the Hindu law on this point. The officer who registered the plaint seems to have taken no notice of this material omission. The defendant's pleader did not raise the point in his kaifyat, and my predecessor in office did not raise that issue. At the close of the trial, however, the defendant's pleader saw the point and asked for a short time to enable him to find authorities on the subject. In addressing the Court both pleaders argued the point, and the defendant's pleader cited some authorities in support of his contention. He cited I.L.R. 8 Calc., 537; S.A. No. 148 of 1871; and 3 Mad. H.C. Rep., 94. The rule of Hindu law, upon which the defendant's pleader has [101] relied, is so well known that it does not require the help of any decided cases. A minor is unfit to attend personally to his affairs, and his (minor's) estates must be managed by somebody else. The Hindu law under the circumstances wisely presumes that a manager of a joint Hindu family is the best person to be entrusted with the management of the shares of the minor members of that family, and until and unless this presumption is rebutted by strong evidence showing that the interests of the minor members cannot be safely entrusted to the manager of the joint family, the law will not allow a partition at the instance of a minor co-parcener. Such being my view of the law applicable to this case, and the plaint being altogether silent as to the existence of any of the grounds required by Hindu law, I proceed to see whether the evidence has made out a case for the sustenance of a partition suit on behalf of the minor plaintiffs.

"There is not a shadow of ground to contend that defendant has been guilty of mismanagement or malversation or has done anything which has prejudiced or is likely to prejudice the interests of the minor plaintiffs.

"I dismiss the plaintiffs' suit with costs."

APPELLATE CIVIL.
19 B. 99.

Against this decision the plaintiffs appealed to the High Court.

Shivram Vithal Bhandarkar, for appellants.—The lower Court has rejected the plaintiffs' claim for partition on a technical point which is not to be found in the pleadings, or covered by any of the issues in the case. The lower Court holds that a minor cannot demand partition unless he alleges and proves mismanagement or malversation on the part of the adult co-parceners. We contend that this is an erroneous view and is not warranted by any texts of Hindu law. The rule is correctly laid down in placitum 544 of Colebrook's Digest, Vol. III. If a minor's interests are likely to be prejudiced by the property being left in the hands of the adult co-parcener, he is entitled to claim partition—Thangam Pillai v. Suppa Pillai (1). See also Kamakshi Ammal v. Chidambara Reddi (2). We go further, and say and contend that if a minor would benefit by partition, the Court would allow it, even though no specific act of malversation be alleged against the adult co-parcener—Govind Ramchandra v. Moro Raghunath (3). Refers to Damoodur Misser v. Senabutty (4); Svamiyar Pillai v. Chokkalingam Pillai (5); West and Bubler's Digest (3rd Ed.), pp. 674, 815; and Mayne's Hindu Law (5th Ed.), s. 435. In the present case [102] the minors have been excluded from all participation in the income of the family property ever since their father's death. The defendant is their step-brother. Their interests are not safe in his hands. A partition is, therefore, not only desirable, but necessary, to protect their interests.

Daji Abaji Khare, for respondent:—There is no allegation in the plaint that the minors' interests would be prejudiced by the property being left in our hands. The lower Court has found that we are not guilty of mismanagement or malversation, or have done anything which is likely to prejudice the minors' interests. That being so, the minors are not entitled to claim partition—Damoodur Misser v. Senabutty (4); Alimel Ammal v. Aruna Chellam Pillai (6); West and Buhler (3rd Ed.), 74, 75; Mayne's Hindu Law (5th Ed.), ss. 400 and 432; 2 Vyavastha Darpan, 338. A partition, like a contract, depends upon the agreement and consent of all parties concerned. A minor cannot give such consent. The sovereign as parens patriæ acts for him, if his interests are in danger. This is a condition precedent to a minor's suit for partition. This objection to the suit was not indeed taken by the defendant in his written statement. But as it goes to the root of the case, the Subordinate Judge was competent to raise it of his own motion.

JUDGMENT.

RANADE, J.—In this case the minor plaintiffs by their next friend, brought a suit for a partition of their paternal property against their step-brother, the defendant. Defendant filed a written statement, in accordance with which issues were laid down, and evidence received in regard to the same. The lower Court, however, disposed of the suit on a somewhat technical point of law, not raised by the defendant, and not involved in the issues, namely, that, under Hindu law, minor co-parceners cannot sue for partition without showing good ground to lead the Court to believe that the minor co-parceners' interest in the joint property would be seriously prejudiced if a partition were not forthwith decreed. The lower Court held that plaintiffs failed to show that defendant was guilty either of mismanagement or malversation, or that he had done anything which prejudiced, or was likely to prejudice, [103] the interests of the minor plaintiffs, and on this ground, plaintiffs' claim was dismissed with costs.

The chief point argued before us by the appellants' pleader related to this view of the lower Court that the manager of a joint Hindu family is the best person to be entrusted with the care of the interests of its minor members, and that partition should not be allowed unless this presumption was rebutted by strong evidence showing that the minors' interests could not be safely entrusted to the managing member. The lower Court appears to have assumed that the presumption mentioned above cannot be rebutted unless malversation is proved. In one place it is stated in the judgment that "there is nothing to show that defendant has made away with any of the moveable property, and in the absence of such proof, the partition suit will not lie."

It appears to us that the lower Court has placed a too narrow construction on the rule of the Hindu law referred to by it. It is true some of the earlier decisions required proof of malversation or mismanagement; but the more recent decisions have laid down both a positive and a negative test, namely, that no suit by a minor co-parcener for partition should be allowed, unless his interests are either likely (1) to be advanced thereby, or (2) protected from danger. The decision in Svamiyar Pillai v. Chokkalingam Pillai (1) no doubt states malversation as the ground which should be proved before a minor's suit for partition can be allowed. In Kamakshi Ammal v. Chidambara Reddi (2), however, the Madras High Court took note of Sir T. Strange's dictum and the case in the first volume, and ruled that "there was no foundation in Hindu law for the position that an infant cannot claim partition except when" malversation is proved. The true doctrine laid down in that case was that an action will not lie "unless there is something clearly indicating that the interests of the infant will be advanced by partition." The test laid down is thus whether or not the suit was for the benefit of the minor. This view of the Madras High Court was re-affirmed by it in Thangam Pillai v. Suppa Pillai (3), and also by the Calcutta High Court in Damoodur Misser v. Senabutty Misrain (4) where it was held [104] that unless either malversation, or some other circumstances which made it for the minor's interest that his share should be set aside, are proved, a minor plaintiff cannot sue for partition. In West and Buhler (3rd Ed.), Vol. 2, Partition, p. 675, mention is made of a case in which the High Court of Bombay directed the District Judge to report after inquiry whether the minor would benefit by a suit for partition against his uncle, against whom no special instance of malversation had been alleged: see also Govind Ramchandra v. Moro Raghunath (5). Some of these cases are referred to in the judgment of the lower Court, but it does not appear to have correctly apprehended the true spirit of these decisions of the three High Courts on this point.

The lower Court, therefore, was bound to consider the question, not so much as though it had only a negative aspect, and rested upon proof of malversation, but also from the positive point of view, namely, whether or not the partition suit would benefit the minor's interests. In the cases quoted above, it has been held that when the defendant has taken up a hostile position to the minors' interests, and denied their rights, or sets up his own independent title, or where the minors live separately, and defendant does not support them, in all these cases it is in the interest of the minors that their share should be partitioned and set apart. If the minor's rights are not denied, or the property is not mismanaged, it would generally not be in the minor's interest to sue for partition. In the Bengal case, the existence of disputes and differences was held to be a sufficient ground to justify the partition suit. In the present case, the evidence shows that plaintiffs and their mother have been living separately from defendant for many years, and that there have been many disputes between plaintiffs' mother and defendant. Plaintiffs also allege, and defendant does not deny, that the defendant does not support the plaintiffs out of the family property. These facts appear to us to furnish sufficient grounds for holding that, as between plaintiffs and their step-brother, the defendant, the partition suit brought by plaintiffs would promote the interests of the minor plaintiffs, and that the partition of plaintiffs' two-third share would benefit them materially. Even though no [105] malversation was alleged or proved, the allegation in the plaint of disputes and separate residence, and defendant's failure to support the plaintiffs are, therefore, sufficient to justify the Court in permitting plaintiffs to maintain this suit. Under these circumstances, the decision of the lower Court must be set aside; and as it recorded findings without giving reasons on the issues laid down by it, we must reverse the decree, and remand the case for full inquiry and fresh decision on the merits. Costs to follow the final decree.

One of the minor plaintiffs has in the meanwhile become a major, and has applied to have his name inserted, and to be allowed to sue in his own right, as also guardian of his minor brother, in place of the next friend. This application has been granted by this Court.

Decree reversed.

An abetment in British India by a British subject of an offence committed in foreign territory is not an offence punishable under the Indian Penal Code (XLV of 1860), and cannot, therefore, be tried by a Court in British India:

Bombay to bring the accused to justice as the instigator of the murder. The Government of Bombay being of opinion that s. 188 of the Code Criminal Procedure (Act X of [106] 1882) was applicable to the case, passed a Resolution in the Political Department directing the District Magistrate to take the necessary action in the matter. The District Magistrate thereupon committed the accused to the Court of Session on a charge of abetment of murder or of rioting.

Held, quashing the commitment, that the alleged abetment was not an offence punishable under the Indian Penal Code, and that, therefore, the Sessions Court had no jurisdiction to try the accused.

Held, also, that s. 188 of the Code of Criminal Procedure (Act X of 1882) had no application to the present case, the alleged offence of abetment not having been committed outside British India.

THE accused Ganpatrao Ramchandra, a Native Indian subject of Her Majesty, was charged with having instigated at Tambudi, a village in the Surat district, certain Portuguese subjects of Daman to resist one Bhana to death, if he attempted to remove the produce of their fields in Daman. A riot afterwards occurred at Daman in Portuguese territory in connection with this matter in which a man was killed and another wounded. Thereupon the Governor General of Portuguese India wrote to the Government of Bombay, stating that the accused was the instigator of the murder, and asking that he should be punished.

The Government of Bombay, being of opinion that s. 118 of the Code of Criminal Procedure (Act X of 1882) was applicable to the case, passed a Resolution in the Political Department, directing the District Magistrate of Surat to take the necessary action in the matter.

The District Magistrate committed the accused for trial to the Sessions Court for abetting the commission of murder, or of rioting under ss. 302 and 147 of the Indian Penal Code. The Sessions Judge amended the charge by substituting s. 302 with s. 115, and s. 148 with s. 109 of the Indian Penal Code.

The accused's pleader objected at the trial, among other things, that the Court had no jurisdiction.

The Sessions Judge held that this objection was valid, and ordered the accused to be set at liberty. His reasons are set forth in the following extract from his judgment:—

"The question for consideration is whether the charge against accused is one which can be tried by a British Court. I am of opinion that it is not, because abetment means abetment of an offence, and offence as defined in the Penal Code means [107] an offence committed in British India. An offence committed in Portuguese India is not an offence punishable under the Indian Penal Code. Therefore, abetment of such an offence, even if it occurs in British India, is not an offence punishable under the Indian Penal Code. It is obvious that the proper Court to try the charge of abetment of murder is the Court which tries the charge of murder. Section 188, Criminal Procedure Code, of course contemplates Courts in British India only.

"I find that this Court has no jurisdiction in this case, and, therefore order that the bail-bonds and recognizances be cancelled, and the accused set at liberty."

The High Court in the exercise of its revisional jurisdiction sent for the record and proceedings of this case, and ordered notice to issue to the District Magistrate, as well as to the accused, to show cause why the commitment for trial should not be quashed, on the ground that the facts disclosed no offence, the act which the accused was said to have abetted in British India having been committed in foreign territory.

The Government of Bombay also applied for a revision of the Sessions Judge's order.

Rao Saheb Vasudeo J. Kirtikar, Government Pleader, for the Crown:—Abetment is a substantive offence under the Indian Penal Code, and the trial on this charge is not dependent on the conviction of the principal offender. It is immaterial whether the principal offence takes place in a foreign country or within British India. The locality of the act abetted does not affect the liability of the abettor— Reg. v. Maruti Dada (1). Section 108, expl. 2, of the Penal Code shows that to constitute the offence of abetment, it is not necessary that the act abetted should be even committed. Abetment being thus a separate and distinct offence by itself would fall within the definition of the term "offence" as given by s. 40 of the Penal Code. It is the character of the act that determines whether it amounts to an "offence" within the meaning of s. 40 of the Penal Code. If the accused in the present case had gone to Daman, and instigated the murder or riot that took place there, he would have been amenable, under s. 188 of the Criminal Procedure Code, to the jurisdiction of the Courts in British India. A fortiori he ought to be amenable to our Courts when he instigated the self-same offence in British India [108]—Regina v. Chill (2); Reg. v. Wallace (3). In the latter case it was held that the Central Criminal Court in England had jurisdiction to try accessories before the fact to the felony of scuttling a ship on the high seas, though the principal felon was not amenable to justice. In England, Stat. 24 and 25 Vic., c. 100, gives jurisdiction to try accessories to homicides beyond the seas. Under the Portuguese treaty, Act IV of 1880, sch.) (b) and (c), no British subject can be delivered up to the authorities of Portuguese India for trial on a charge of murder or abetment of murder committed in Portuguese India. It follows, therefore, that in such a case our Courts alone have jurisdiction to try the offender. See also s. 3 of the Penal Code. Refers to Story on Conflict of Laws, s. 625; Clarke upon Extradition, p. 9; Wharton's International Law (3rd Ed., p. 735).

Govardhan M. Tripathi, for the accused, was not called upon.

JUDGMENT.

JARDINE, J.—Ganpatrao, a Native Indian subject of the Queen-Empress, was committed by a Magistrate of the Surat District to the Court of Session at Surat for abetting the commission of murder or of rioting, ss. 302 and 147 of the Indian Penal Code (XLV of 1860) being quoted in the charge, which the Sessions Judge amended by substituting s. 302 with s. 115, and s. 148 with s. 109. The alleged abetment consisted of words spoken in the British territory by the accused inciting certain cultivators, Portuguese subjects, to kill or resist to death one Bhana, a Portuguese subject, if he attempted to remove the produce of certain land situate in the Portuguese territory of Daman. A disturbance afterwards occurred in connection with this matter, in which one man was killed and another wounded in the Daman territory, these persons being Portuguese subjects. The Governor General of Portuguese India then moved the Government of Bombay to bring the accused to justice as the instigator of the murder.

——

As appears from the Government Resolution No. 7379, dated the 23rd December, 1892, in the Political Department, the Government supposed s. 188 of the Code of Criminal Procedure to be applicable, and directed the District Magistrate to take the [109] necessary action, there being no Political Agent in the Portuguese territory where the crime was committed. Section 188 has, however, no application to the case, as the accused is not charged with committing any offence beyond the limits of British India. After the Magistrate had committed the accused for trial, the accused took objection to the jurisdiction of the Magistrate and the Court of Session. The Sessions Judge held that he had no jurisdiction, and, therefore, cancelled the bail-bonds and set the accused at liberty. "The question for consideration," he wrote, "is whether the charge against accused is one which can be tried by a British Court. I am of opinion that it is not, because abetment means abetment of an offence; and offence as defined in the Penal Code means an offence committed in British India. An offence committed in Portuguese India is not an offence punishable under the Indian Penal Code. Therefore, abetment of such an offence, even if it occurs in British India, is not an offence punishable under the Penal Code." As, however, the Judge did not take the requisite steps to get the proceedings terminated by the commitment being quashed by this Court under s. 215 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, we called for the case and issued notices to show cause. The Government of Bombay has since made an application to have the order of the Sessions Judge reversed, on the ground that the abetment is a substantive offence, punishable under the Indian Penal Code, and within the jurisdiction of the Court of Session. We have had the advantage of the full and learned argument of the Government Pleader on these propositions.

The question is whether the definition of abetment in the Indian Penal Code must be understood as containing a territorial term. On this question we are not without authority. In delivering the judgment of a Full Bench (Westropp, C. J., Bayley and Green, JJ.) in Regina v. Elmstone (1), Sir Michael Westropp said, p. 118: "Inasmuch as the crime here abetted was committed on the high seas, and not within the territories vested in Her Majesty by the Stat. 21 and 22 Victoria, c. 106, and, therefore, not an offence made punishable by the Penal Code, the abetment [110] thereof is not punishable under s. 109 of that Code, so far as the Code itself, standing alone and unaided by any other enactment, is concerned. The learned Chief Justice then points out the special provision in ss. 121, 125 and 236 of the Penal Code for the punishment of abetment in British India of criminal acts elsewhere. A similar question about the definition of the words "stolen property" in s. 410 was fully considered in Empress v. Moorga Chetty (2) by a Full Bench, where Sargent, C. J., says, p. 347: "The presumption in construing a Penal Code which by s. 2 is confined to acts and omissions within the territories of British India would rather be, that an offence such as receiving and retaining stolen property, which is in its very nature accessory to the principal act, should be confined to those acts which are made criminal by the Code itself." This reasoning is applicable to the present facts, the fact that the homicide or rioting was later in time than the accessory act of abetment being immaterial. It is clear from the report that the majority of the Bench (Sargent, C. J., and Melvill, J.) considered the definitions of offences in the Indian Penal Code to contain a limitation to locality in British India in their application to ordinary cases, we mean those to which special extra territorial provisions, like s. 188 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, do not apply and those where no special provision for punishment is made, such as we find in s. 236 of the Penal Code. The reasoning is not touched by Regina v. Chill (1) or Regina v. Maruti (2) which the learned Government Pleader has referred to. They are not interpretations of s. 40 of the Indian Penal Code, which defines the word "offence." The Government Pleader admits with learned candour that this Full Bench decision is against his contention. It meets the argument for the Crown that abetment consists in the intention of the abettor, and not in the personal legal capacity of the individual abetted. This argument, based on s. 108, explanations 2 and 3, is the same as the dissenting member of the Bench, West J., uses at p. 354 of the report. The views expressed by Sargent, C. J., and Melvill, J., may a fortiori be applied by us in the case before us, seeing that [111] although the Legislature has extended the definition of stolen property in s. 410 by adding the words "within or without British India" by Act VIII of 1882, s. 9, it has refrained from doing the same to the definition of "offence" and of "abetment," refrained from making the particular circumstances punishable, independent of locality. This is sufficient answer to the arguments from inconvenience and from the enlightened tendency of jurisprudence in England. To give effect to these, would, as Sir C. Sargent remarks, at p. 348 of the report of Empress v. S. Moorga Chetty, be to travel out of the legitimate province of judicial construction. The proper remedy is in fresh legislation.

In England the Stat. 24 and 25 Vict., c. 100, ss. 4 and 9, would give jurisdiction to try a case like the present But it does not extend to India and the Indian Legislature has not thought it necessary to pass such a law. Nor, except as regards murder and incitement to murder, has the criminal law of England gone so far as the contention of the Crown asks us to go. The case of Regina v. Kohn (3) seems to be one where the conspiracy "contemplates" the scuttling of the ship in territorial waters.

The questions raised in Empress v. Moorga Chetty and in the present case are like those raised in Regina v. Bernard (4). Bernard was tried at the Central Criminal Court in 1858 as an accessory before the fact to the murder in Paris, of several persons killed by a shell thrown by Orsini at the carriage of Louis Napoleon. Forsyth in his Cases and Opinions on Constitutional Law, p. 236, refers to this trial and to Chief Justice Best's remarks in De Witz v. Hendrix (5), in connection with plots in England against foreign sovereigns and States, which he thinks the common law punishes as misdemeanours.

Sir J. F. Stephen, in his History of the Criminal Law of England, Vol. 2, p. 13. makes the following remarks on Bernard's trial :—

"There were three Judges, and the case was left to the jury, but with an intimation that in the case of a conviction the question [112] whether the prisoner had committed a crime against English law would be stated for the Court for Crown Cases Reserved. The jury acquitted the prisoner.

"As regards the particular case of murder, an incitement to commit murder, the matter is now set at rest by 24 and 25 Vict., c. 100, ss. 4 and 9. These sections provide, in substance, that persons who conspire in England to murder foreigners abroad, or in England incite people to commit murders abroad, or become in England accessories (either before or after the fact), to murder or manslaughter committed abroad, shall be in the same position in every respect as if the crime committed abroad had been committed in England. The question, however, still remains unsettled as regards all offences except murder. I do not think it proper to give a decided opinion upon this subject, because it is by no means unlikely to be raised judicially; but I will make one or two observations upon it. One strong argument against the criminality of such acts is that the law of England does not deal with crimes committed abroad at all. The law of England does not forbid a Frenchman in France to rob another Frenchman in France. This being so, it seems difficult to say that it forbids an English man to incite in England a Frenchman to commit a robbery in France. The argument on the other side is that in all common cases it would be highly expedient that all civilized countries should recognise offences committed in each other's territories as offences for the purpose in question. But to this it may be replied that this is an argument for Legislature and not for the Judges.

"The law as to conspiracies to commit crimes abroad stands on a footing rather different from the question as to accessories. A crime committed abroad is morally as bad as a crime committed in England, and there is authority for saying that any agreement to do an act of that nature is indictable. Whatever may be the merits of the case legally, it seems to me clear that the Legislature ought to remove all doubt about it by putting crimes committed abroad on the same footing as crimes committed in England, as regards incitement, conspiracy, and accessories in England. Exceptions might be made as to political offences, though I should be sorry if they were made wide."

[113] These observations of a great authority on the Law of Crimes are such as may fitly be considered by the Legislature, while they show the present undetermined state of the law of England on questions of abetments there of criminal acts in foreign States.

We may express a hope that our judgment following the principles of two judgments of Full Benches (about which we may add we have consulted our learned Chief Justice) will help to make clear the law of British India. The subject is, in our opinion, one of interest to the Government, which, if it took the matter into consideration, would be able, among other matters of expediency, to form an opinion as to the means possessed by our Courts of obtaining evidence of acts done in territories outside of British India, and of finding out the position, character and motives of witnesses.

For the above reasons the Court quashes the commitment to the Court of Session under s. 215 of the Code of Criminal Procedure.

Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act (XVII of 1879), ss. 73, 74—Review of first Court's order—Finding that a party to a suit is an agriculturist—District Judge—Assistant Judge.

An Assistant Judge having found that the defendants in a suit pending before him were not agriculturists, the defendants presented a petition of review of that finding, and in review the Assistant Judge came to a contrary conclusion.

Held, that as s. 74† of the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act (XVII of 1879) only makes the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882) applicable to suits before the Subordinate Judge, the conduct of proceedings before a District or Assistant Judge when sitting in revision under s. 53 of Act XVII of 1879 is within his own discretion, and the granting of a review on the ground of mistake as to the nature of a defendant's income is a reasonable exercise of such discretion.

[114] THIS was an application under the extraordinary jurisdiction (s. 623 of the Civil Procedure Code, Act XIV of 1882) against an order in review passed by J. Fitzmaurice, Acting Assistant Judge of Satara.

The plaintiff brought this suit in the Court of the Assistant Judge of Satara to recover Rs. 824-8-7. Two of the defendants were minors and were represented by their guardian the Collector of Satara; The defendants claimed the benefit of the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act (XVII of 1879), alleging that they were agriculturists.

The Assistant Judge (T. Walker) held that they were not agriculturists, on the ground that the income derived by them by agriculture was less than the income they derived by other sources.

The defendants applied for a review of the said finding, and the then Acting Assistant Judge decided that they were agriculturists within the meaning of the Act.

The plaintiff then applied to the High Court in its extraordinary jurisdiction and obtained a rule nisi, calling on the defendants to show cause why the above order of the Assistant Judge made in review should not be set aside.

Rao Saheb Vasudeo Jagannath Kritikar (Government Pleader) for the defendants showed cause:—The Collector being a party to the present suit in his capacity as guardian of the minor defendants, the suit was filed in the District Court at Satara as the Court of first instance, and under s. 73 of the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act (XVII of 1879) its decision on the question whether the defendants are agriculturists or not, is final. There is no appeal, and, therefore, the Judge was right in allowing

73. The decision of any Court of first instance that any person is or is not an agriculturist shall for the purposes of this Act be final.

74. Except in so far as it is inconsistent with this Act, the Code of Civil Procedure shall apply in all suits and proceedings before Subordinate Judges under this Act.

the application for a review of the order which was first made. Section 74 of the Act is applicable to a case tried by a Subordinate Judge's Court as the Court of first instance. Similarly, it would apply to the District Court trying a case as the Court of first instance. The expression "Subordinate Judges" in s. 74 of the Act indicates Courts of first instance. Therefore, the provisions of the Civil Procedure Code are applicable to cases tried by the District Court as the Court of first instance, and the granting of review is within its jurisdiction.

[115] Mahadev Chimnaji Apte, for the applicant (plaintiff) in support of the rule.—All the provisions of the Civil Procedure Code are not applicable to cases governed by the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act. Section 74 lays down that certain provisions of the Code are applicable to cases tried by Subordinate Judges. Therefore a suit brought in the District Court is excluded from the Code. A Court has the inherent power of reviewing its judgment, provided the rules of the Code are applicable to the case and not otherwise. Under the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act the jurisdiction of the District Judge is co-extensive with that of the Special Judge appointed under the Act, and it has been held that the proceedings before the Special Judge are not governed by the provisions of the Civil Procedure Code — Babajj bin Patloji v. Babaji bin Mahadu (1); Vishvanath v. Aba (2). Section 73 of the Act makes the decision final, and, therefore, there can be no review of such decision. The power of review is specially granted by the Civil Procedure Code. There are English cases which have laid down that a Court cannot review its own decision.

JUDGMENT.

SARGENT, C. J.—The only question in this case calling for decision in the exercise of the Court's extraordinary jurisdiction is whether the Assistant Judge could grant a review of his decision that the defendants were not agriculturists. This Court has already in the case of Vishvanath v. Aba (2) held that as s. 74 of the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act only makes the Civil Procedure Code applicable to suits before the Subordinate Judge, the conduct of the proceedings before the Special Judge must be deemed to be in his own discretion. Having regard to the language of s. 74, the same ruling must, we think, also apply to the District or Assistant Judge when sitting in revision. The granting a review in the present case on the ground of mistake, as to the nature of the defendant's income from the inam, was a most reasonable exercise of such discretion.

We must, therefore, discharge the rule with costs on the applicants.

The Special Judge appointed under the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act (XVII of 1879) (the defendants not appearing) reversed, in revision under s. 53 of that Act, the decree of a Subordinate Judge and passed a decree for the plaintiff. One of the defendants, who, it appeared, had not been served with notice of the previous application for review, subsequently applied to the Special Judge to review his decree, and that application was granted on the ground that the applicant had not had notice of the former review. On this subsequent review the Special Judge discovered that he had made a mistake with reference to the date of certain documents, and that this mistake had led him to a wrong conclusion upon the merits of the case. He consequently reversed his former order and dismissed the suit, confirming the original decree of the Subordinate Judge. The plaintiff then applied to the High Court under its extraordinary jurisdiction (s. 622 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882)).

Held, that in granting a rehearing the Special Judge had exercised a reasonable discretion with which the High Court could not interfere in its extraordinary jurisdiction.

The Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882) is not applicable to proceedings before the Special Judge, and the conduct of such proceedings rests within his discretion.

Badaricharya Ramchandra (1) approved.

PARSON, J.—The Special Judge cannot under the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act (XVII of 1879) review his decree and order a new trial on the ground of discovery of fresh evidence, but he has discretional power to review his decree in order to correct a mistake into which he has fallen.

[117] THIS was an application under extraordinary jurisdiction—s. 622 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882)—against the decision of Rao Bahadur Mahadeo Govind Ranade, Special Judge under the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act (XVII of 1879).

The suit was brought by the plaintiff against the defendants in the Court of the First Class Subordinate Judge of Ahmednagar to recover Rs. 325 alleged to have been lent for the marriage expenses of the first defendant. The plaintiff also claimed Rs. 92 as interest.

Defendants denied the loan of Rs. 325, and as to Rs. 225 lent for marriage expenses they pleaded that it had been repaid by postal money orders. They denied their liability for interest, there having been no agreement to pay interest.

The First Class Subordinate Judge found that the plaintiff had not proved the alleged loan of Rs. 325, that the defendants had proved payment of Rs. 225 as alleged by them, and that nothing was due to the plaintiff. He, therefore, dismissed the suit.

The plaintiff thereupon applied to the Special Judge under s. 53 of the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act (XVII of 1879) for revision of the decree. Notices of the application were issued to the defendants, but neither of them appeared on the day of the hearing.

The Special Judge found (inter alia) that two money orders, dated respectively 30th November, 1888, and 29th April, 1889, and aggregating Rs. 225, had been sent by defendants to plaintiff; but that the defendants had subsequently written a series of letters asking for more time for repayment of the loan, these letters being dated 5th August, 9th October, 19th October, 29th October, and 8th November, 1889, respectively. He, therefore, found that the defendants owned money to the plaintiff long after the sum of Rs. 225 had been paid off, and accordingly reversed the decree of the lower Court, and decreed Rs. 325 to plaintiff with costs.

The second defendant, who had not been served with the notice issued as above mentioned on plaintiff's application for revision of the decree of the Subordinate Judge, then applied to the [118] Special Judge for a review of the decree passed by himself. His application was granted, and on review and on reconsideration of the evidence the Special Judge found that the letters sent by defendants to plaintiff were not, as he had supposed, dated 1889, and, therefore, not subsequent to the dates of the money orders aggregating Rs. 225, but had been written in 1888, and were, therefore, prior to the despatch of the money orders. On review, he confirmed the decree of the Subordinate Judge.

The plaintiff then applied to the High Court under its extraordinary jurisdiction, contending (inter alia) that the Special Judge had no jurisdiction to review his own order, and a rule nisi was granted calling upon the defendant to show cause why the order of the Special Judge should not be set aside.

Daji Abaji Khare, (for the plaintiff) in support of the rule.

Balaji Abaji Bhagvat, (for the defendants) showed cause.

The rule came on for hearing before Sargent, C. J., and Telang, J., who ordered it to be argued before a Full Bench.

Daji Abaji Khare, for the plaintiff, in support of the rule.—The Special Judge had no jurisdiction to review his own decision—Babaji Patloji v. Babaji Mahadu (1). Section 74 of the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act (XVII of 1879) makes the provisions of the Civil Procedure Code applicable only to proceedings before the Subordinate Judge, and not to those before the Special Judge. Therefore the Special Judge cannot grant a review—Vishvanath v. Aba (2); Badaricharya v. Ramchandra (3). Admitting, however, that the Special Judge had jurisdiction to review his own decision, we submit that in the present case a review was granted on insufficient grounds, namely, that the second defendant who applied for it had no notice of the first application for revision. There is no inherent power in a Court to grant a review of its own decision. It must be given by statute—Sivu v. Chenamma (4); Reasut Hassein v. Hadjee Abdoollah (5).

[SARGENT, C. J.—In the case of an ex parte decree the Court has the power to review the former proceedings—Manku v. Sitaram (6).]

[119] The fact that the Civil Procedure Code gives a power to review, justifies the inference that the Courts have no inherent power to review. If they had such a power, the Code would not have made special provision for it. Further, ss. 53 and 54 of the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act (XVII of 1879) lay down the procedure to be adopted by the Special Judge, and they do not make any provisions for review.

The whole decree ought not to have been set aside because the review was granted at the instance of one of the defendants only. With respect to the defendant who had not so applied, the decree ought to stand—Manaku v. Sitaram (1).

Balaji Abaji Bhagvat, for the opponents (original defendants) showed cause.—The Special Judge granted the review because, as he says in his judgment, on the previous occasion he had made a mistake as to dates. Under these circumstances he was right in granting a review—Badaricharya v. Ramchandra (2). He was also right in setting aside the whole decree. On review the Court reconsiders the whole case—In re Swire (3).

JUDGMENT.

SARGENT, C. J.—It is not quite clear whether the Special Judge under the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act (XVII of 1879) reheard the case on the ground that notices had not been served on the second defendant or on the ground of mistake as to the dates of certain important documents in the case. In Badaricharya v. Ramchandra (2), it was held that the Civil Procedure Code was not applicable to proceedings before the Special Judge, and that the conduct of such proceedings was within his discretion. That is, I think, a correct view of s. 74 of the Dekkhan Relief Act.

Here whatever was the cause of this rehearing, the exercise of the discretion was, in my opinion, a reasonable one and cannot be interfered with in any view of our extraordinary jurisdiction. It is not necessary for me to express an opinion whether a rehearing could be granted on the ground of new evidence, which was the question in Babaji bin Patloji v. Babaji bin Mahadu (4). The rule must, therefore, be discharged and the decree of the Special Judge confirmed with costs.

[120] FULTON, J.—I concur.

PARSONS, J.—As one of the Judges who decided the case of Babaji bin Patloji v. Babaji bin Mahadu (4), I wish to say that I adhere to that decision and consider it to be correct, viz., that a Special Judge cannot under the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act review his decree and order a new trial on the ground of discovery of fresh evidence. But that is a very different thing from saying that he cannot review his decree at all. In the present case the Special Judge, on the application of the plaintiff and after issuing notices to the defendants, reversed the decree of the Subordinate Judge. He was led to do so by the date of certain exhibits which he considered was the year 1889. At the time he was under the impression that notices had been duly served on all the defendants. As a fact, however, the second defendant had not been served, and on his application the Special Judge granted a review of judgment. At the rehearing the Special Judge found that he had been mistaken in supposing that the above-mentioned exhibits were passed in 1889, and that they were really passed in 1888.

(1) 18 B. 142.
(2) See 19 B. 113.
(3) 30 Ch. D. 244 (247).
(4) 15 B. 650.

His original decree, therefore, being founded on a mistake, he reversed it, and thus left the original decree of the Subordinate Judge to stand. I think that the Special Judge had under these circumstances a discretional power to review his decree in order to correct the mistake into which he had fallen. To adopt the language used in Badaricharya v. Ramchandra (1), "the granting a review in the present case on the ground of mistake was a most reasonable exercise of such discretion."

Decree—Attachment—Execution—Mortgage-debt—Sale of mortgage-debt in execution of a decree against mortgagee—Sale carrying with it security without attaching mortgaged property—S. 274 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882).

The sale of a mortgage-debt described as such in execution of a decree carries with it the security without attaching the mortgaged property under s. 274 of the Civil Procedure Code (XIV of 1882).

SECOND appeal from the decision of L. G. Fernandez, First Class Subordinate Judge of Nasik with appellate powers.

The first and second defendants by two mortgage-deeds, each for Rs. 400, mortgaged certain lands to one Pandu Babshet Vani, who was one of the proprietors of a firm known by the name of Yado Bayaji Shet. The deeds were dated 8th June, 1882, and purported to be mortgaged with possession, but the property was allowed to remain with the mortgagors.

Subsequently to the mortgage one Veni Madhav obtained a decree against the proprietors of the mortgagee firm and attached the debt due by the mortgagors. The debt was sold at a Court sale held on the 15th March, 1889, and was purchased by plaintiff. The Court sale was duly confirmed.

Subsequently to the attachment of the property by Veni one Ganpatrao Damodar obtained a decree against three of the proprietors of the mortgagee firm and attached the same mortgage-debt, and although it had been already sold to the plaintiff sold it again to Hari Kashinath, defendant No. 3.

The plaintiff, therefore, brought the present suit against defendants Nos. 1, 2 and 3 (the last being joined to avoid disputes in future) to recover Rs. 987-8 for principal and interest due under the two mortgage-deeds by the sale of the mortgaged property.

[122] The Subordinate Judge of Satara held (inter alia) that the plaintiff's right could not be considered as superior to that of defendant No. 3; and that the plaintiff was not entitled to the relief sought.

NOV. 29.
APPELLATE CIVIL.
19 B. 121.

On appeal the First Class Subordinate Judge, A. P., confirmed the decree of the lower Court with costs, observing in his judgment:—

"In the attachment proceedings under which the plaintiff made his purchase, the debt sold was described as follows:—'Defendants' joint moveable property about Rs. 1, 500 due on mortgaged property' * * * * *. In this case there is no deed of assignment or certificate of sale: hence one cannot precisely say what was sold. The karkun's record of the sale or the proclamation for sale does not refer in terms to the security. On the other hand, it is distinctly stated that what was sold was a debt, and in order that there should be no doubt on the point, the meaning of the word 'debt' is further restricted by the words 'immoveable property.' A lien on immoveable property cannot be considered as moveable property. The case at Indian Law Reports, 10 Madras, 169, shows that where a lien on immoveable property is intended to be passed by a sale, the attachment should be made under s. 274 of the Civil Procedure Code, and a certificate of sale should be obtained, which, if the lien is for above Rs. 100, is compulsorily registrable. To hold otherwise would have the effect of defeating the wholesome provisions of the registration laws."

Plaintiff preferred a second appeal.

Jardine (with Mahadeo C. Apte), for the appellant (plaintiff).—The only question in the case is, who bought the debt first; and the Judge has not determined that question. If we bought it first, then it could not be sold over again, and defendant No. 3 by his purchase got nothing. The Judge seems to think that what was sold was moveable property. This is an erroneous view. A debt secured on immoveable property is immoveable property—Debendra Kumar v. Rup Lall (1).

Daji Abaji Khare for the respondents (defendants).—The whole question is, what was attached; whether the property that was attached was moveable property or immoveable property. The conduct of the plaintiff shows that what was attached was the debt as moveable property. For the purpose of attaching a mortgage-debt as immoveable property, the procedure laid down by s. 274 of the Civil Procedure Code [123] (XIV of 1882) should be followed—Appasami v. Scott (2). In such a case there ought to be a certificate of sale—Hurjivan v. Jamsetji (3).

JUDGMENT.

SARGENT, C. J.—We agree with the judgment in Debendra Kumar v. Rup Lall (1) and the remarks of Turner, C. J., in Appasami v. Scott (2) in holding that the sale of a mortgage-debt described as such in execution of a decree carries with it the security without attaching the mortgaged property under s. 274 of the Civil Procedure Code (XIV of 1882). An objection was taken that there should be a certificate of sale, and Hurjivan v. Jamsetji (3) was referred to; but there a decree was attached and sold, and it was held that what was really attached and sold was not the piece of paper on which the decree was written, but the interest in immoveable property recoverable under the decree. We must, therefore, reverse the decree and send back the case for a decision on the merits. Costs to abide the result.

MOTIBAI, WIDOW OF GOVINDJI PREMJI (Original Opponent), Appellant v. KARSANDAS NARAYANDAS AND ANOTHER (Original Applicants), *Respondents.

[20th December, 1893.]

Executor—Section 18 of Act V of 1881 - Hindu Wills Act—Indian Succession Act—Acceptance or renunciation of executorship—Probate—Letters of Administration with will annexed.

An executrix after being cited as provided by s. 16 of Act V of 1881 to accept or renounce her executorship, stated that she was administering the estate, but having applied for a certificate under Act VII of 1889 did not consider it necessary to take out probate.

Held that this was not such an acceptance as is contemplated by s. 18 of Act V of 1881, the language of which is the same as that of s. 195 of the Indian Succession Act (X of 1865), and that on the executrix declining to prove the will the District Judge was right in granting letters of administration with the will annexed to the sole residuary legatee.

[124] THIS was a first appeal from the decision of C.E.G. Crawford, District Judge of Thana.

One Govindji Premji, a resident of Thana, died on the 20th of December, 1890, leaving him surviving his widow Motibai (the appellant) his nephew Karsandas (a deceased brother's son), his brother Ratansi Premji, his mother Puribai, &c. The testator left a will, dated the 13th December, 1890, in which he appointed his widow Motibai (the appellant) his executrix, and his nephew Karsandas (who was a minor) his sole residuary legatee. The will remained in Motibai's possession, but she did not apply for probate, and accordingly Karsandas, represented by his uncle Ratansi Premji, and Ratansi Premji himself applied to the District Court at Thana for letters of administration with the will annexed.

Motibai was duly served with a citation, under s. 16 of the Probate and Administration Act (V of 1881), to produce the will, and was required to say whether she would take probate or not. In answer she stated the will was in the custody of the Court in connection with the proceedings which were then pending at her instance under the Succession Certificate Act (VII of 1889).

In answer to a subsequent citation calling upon her either to accept or renounce her executorship on or before the 30th September, 1890, and in the latter case to show cause on that day why petitioner No. 2, Ratansi Premji, should not be granted letters of administration with the will annexed, she said she did not renounce her executorship, that she was already acting as executrix and administering the estate, and that she did not consider it necessary at that stage to take out probate, having applied for a certificate under the Succession Certificate Act (VII of 1889).

The Judge was of opinion that though the above answer was not a renunciation of executorship, still it was not such an acceptance as was contemplated by the Probate and Administration Act (V of 1881), and that

* Appeal, No. 101 of 1893.

DEC. 20.
APPELLATE CIVIL.
19 B. 123.

under the Act an acceptance must be an expression of the executor's willingness to accept probate.

Motibai having declined to prove the will, the Judge allowed the petitioners to do so, and passed the following order:—

[125] "I direct that letters of administration with will annexed be granted to Ratansi Premji as guardian of the minor, the sole residuary legatee. Costs on opponent."

The opponent Motibai appealed.

P. M. Mehta (with Jamietram Nanabhai and Chimanlal Setalvad) appeared for appellant (original opponent).—We accepted the executorship, but declined to take probate which the Judge asked us to do. We have not renounced the executorship. The Judge cited us to produce the will and take probate. This was the first citation. There was also a second citation, and it asked us either to accept or renounce executorship. We answered that we did not renounce executorship, and that we were acting as executrix. Under s. 16 of the Act it is not necessary for us to say that we accept the executorship; what was necessary for us to say was that we do not renounce it.

The Judge says that, in order to satisfy the provisions of the Act, the executor must express his willingness to take probate. That is the rule of English law; but, according to the law applicable to the Hindus in the mofussil, it is not necessary for the acceptance of the office of executor that he should express his willingness to take probate. Under the provisions of the Probate Act (V of 1881) what is necessary is to express his willingness to accept the office of executor; it is not necessary to take probate—Shaik Moosa v. Shaik Essa (1). The parties to this case were Mahomedans, but the law is the same for Hindus as well as Mahomedans. Section 19 of the Act strengthens our contention. In India it is open to a person to act as executor without proving a will.

Branson (with Shivram V. Bhandarkar) appeared for the respondents (original applicants).—Shaik Moosa v. Shaik Essa (1) lays down that it is not necessary to take out probate with respect to the debtors of the deceased, and nothing more. But when there is a contest between executors appointed under a will and a residuary legatee under the will, it is necessary that the executors should take out probate—Krishna Kinkur Roy v. Rai Mohun Roy (2). Sections 16 to 19 of the Probate Act are taken from the Indian Succession Act (X of 1865)—see ss. 193, &c.—which [126] shows that the Legislature intended to make the rule of English law applicable to Hindus. Browne's Practice, pp. 147 and 350, shows what is the English law on the point. The law relating to wills in India is introduced by English law, and, therefore, the law in India must be governed by the rule of English law—Mordaunt v. Clarke (3).

JUDGMENT.

SARGENT, C. J.—The question in this case is, whether the District Judge was right in granting letters of administration with the will annexed to the applicants, the opponent having stated, after being cited as provided by s. 16 of Act V of 1881, that she was administering the estate, but did not consider it necessary to take out probate, having applied for a certificate under Act VII of 1889.

Section 18 of the Act of 1881 provides that letters of administration with the will annexed may be granted if the executor "renounces or fails to accept the executorship within the time limited for the acceptance or refusal thereof." It was contended for the appellant that she did not "renounce or fail to accept the executorship" by the mere circumstance of her declining to take out probate. The citation issued under similar circumstances by the English Probate Court calls on the executor "to accept or refuse the probate and executorship of the will."

(1) 8 B. 241 (253). (2) 14 C. 37. (3) L. R. 1 Pro. and Div. 592.

The language of s. 18 of Act V of 1881 is the same as that of s. 195 of the Indian Succession Act, which provides for granting letters of administration with the will annexed and which was made applicable to Hindu wills under the Hindu Wills Act, and where it cannot be doubted, from the general provisions of the Act, that the language was intended to mean what is more distinctly expressed in the English form of citation.

But it was contended for the opponent that that construction, if applied to s. 18 of the Act of 1881, would be inconsistent with the decision in Shaik Moosa v. Shaik Essa (1). The result of that decision is that a Hindu or Mahomedan executor named in a will can sue to recover the estate of the testator without taking probate; but here the question is an entirely different one, viz., whether administration with the will annexed [127] will be granted, although executors have been named in the will. We see, therefore, no reason for putting a different meaning on the language of s. 18 of the Act V of 1881 from what it cannot be doubted is the meaning of the same language in the Succession Act; and the District Judge was, therefore, right in granting letters of administration with the will annexed to the respondents.

Order confirmed.

Gumna obtained a decree against Maneklal in the Small Cause Court of Surat and in execution he attached a debt due to Maneklal, and a proclamation of sale was duly issued. Before the sale took place, however, one Kalyandas applied to the First Class Subordinate Judge for execution of a decree which he had obtained against Maneklal in that Judge's Court, and the same debt was then attached. The proceedings, however, under the Small Cause Court decree were continued, and the debt was sold in execution and was purchased by the applicant.

The term "grade" in s. 285 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882) has the same meaning as it had in s. 5 of the Code (Act VIII of 1859),—that is, it depends upon "the pecuniary or other limitations" of the jurisdiction of the particular Court, and, therefore, as s. 285 is applicable to Small Cause Courts, the Small Cause Court is inferior in grade to the Court of the First Class Subordinate Judge.

THIS was an application under the High Court's extraordinary jurisdiction against the order of Khan Bahadur M. N. Nanavati, [128] First Class Subordinate Judge of Surat, in a proceeding in execution of a decree.

One Gumna Purshottam obtained a decree in the Court of Small Causes at Surat against his debtor Manaklal Nandlal and in execution attached a certain debt due to Maneklal by the Jaffaralli Spinning and Weaving Company. After the levy of attachment an order under s. 301 of the Civil Procedure Code (XIV of 1882) was duly served on the company, and a proclamation of sale having been issued on the 27th January, 1893, the debt was sold by auction and was purchased by the applicant Turmuklal Harkisanrai.

Subsequently to the above attachment and proclamation of sale by the Small Cause Court, but before the actual sale by that Court, the same debt was attached on the 8th February, 1893, in execution of a decree passed by the Court of the First Class Subordinate Judge of Surat against the said Maneklal Nandlal at the instance of one Kalyandas Khushal (the opponent). The applicant thereupon presented an application to the First Class Subordinate Judge, contending that under the circumstances mentioned above it was not competent to that Court to put up the said debt again to sale.

In answer to the above application the opponent Kalyandas Khushal replied that as the sale by the Small Cause Court had taken place pending the attachment levied by the Court of the First Class Subordinate Judge, it was null and void under s. 285 of the Civil Procedure Code (XIV of 1882), and that as the applicant bought the debt with notice of the attachment, his application should be dismissed.

The applicant admitted that the sale had taken place pending the attachment by the Court of the First Class Subordinate Judge, but contended that as the attachment levied by the Small Cause Court was prior in date, the sale by that Court was valid.

The Subordinate Judge rejected the application. The applicant, therefore, presented a petition to the High Court under its extraordinary jurisdiction, and obtained a rule nisi calling on the opponent to show cause why the order of the Subordinate Judge should not be set aside.

[129] Chimanlal H. Setalvad for the applicant in support of the rule.—The sale by the Small Cause Court was valid. That Court was the first to attach the debt, and was, therefore, the Court to carry out the execution. Section 285 of the Civil Procedure Code (XIV of 1882) does not apply, as the Small Cause Court is not inferior in grade to the Court of the Subordinate Judge. This is clear from cl. 2 of s. 2 of the Civil Procedure Code, which shows that the two Courts belong to different classes—Muttukaruppan v. Mutturamlinga(1) ; Chunni Lal v. Debi Prasad(2); Aghore Nath v. Shama Sundari(3); Kashy Nath Roy v. Surbanand Shaha(4); Bykant Nath Shaha v. Rajendro Narain Rai(5) ; Patel Naranji v. Haridas(6).

Motilal Mugatlal Munshi, for the opponent, showed cause.—The word "grade" has reference to the extent of jurisdiction. Compare s. 285 of the present Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882) with s. 5 of the former Code (Act VIII of 1859). The Court of the First Class Subordinate Judge being a Court of higher jurisdiction than the Small Cause Court, the proceedings in that Court must prevail.

JUDGMENT.

SARGENT, C.J.— We think that the term "grade" in s. 285, Civil Procedure Code, has the same meaning as it has in s. 5 of Act VIII of 1859,— that is to say, that it depends upon "the pecuniary or other limitations" of the jurisdiction of the particular Court, and, therefore, as s. 285 is applicable to Small Cause Courts, the Small Cause Court must be held to be of inferior grade to the Court of the First Class Subordinate Judge. But, inasmuch as it appears that the Small Cause Court had issued the proclamation for sale on 27th January, 1893, before application for execution was made in the First Class Subordinate Judge's Court on 8th February, 1893, we must hold, on the authority of Patel Naranji v. Haridas (1), that the sale by the Small Cause Court was not rendered invalid by the subsequent proceedings in the First Class Subordinate Judge's Court.

[130] We must, therefore, make the rule absolute, but we think, under the circumstances, without costs, as the precise point now taken was not raised before the First Class Subordinate Judge, nor made a distinct ground in the application for the rule.

Rule made absolute.

IN RE MARINE INSURANCE CERTIFICATE.* [15th January, 1894.]

Stamp—Stamp Act (I of 1879), s. 3, cl. 15—Policy of insurance or memorandum of proposed insurance—Document on the face of it not contemplating necessity of any other formal document.

A document not being a mere "slip" or memorandum of a proposed insurance, and mentioning the sum for which the assurer declares the name of the ship, the voyage and the premium, and providing for the losses being paid on its production, in conformity with certain conditions in the possession of the assurers, and, lastly, expressly guaranteeing payment of losses and claims settled under it, and which on the face of it does not contemplate the necessity of any other document of a more formal character being passed to the assured, requires to be stamped as a policy under cl. 15, s. 3 of the Stamp Act (I of 1879).

THIS was a reference by J. M. Campbell, Collector and Superintendent of Stamps at Bombay, under s. 46 of the Indian Stamp Act (I of 1879).

The reference was made in the following terms:—

"By a certificate of insurance of the Underwriting and Agency Association, Limited, dated at Karachi 14th January, 1893, and signed by the agents of the Association * *, it is certified that insurances having been effected, the conditions of which are in the assurer's possession, the assurers declare under such insurances the sum of Rs. 800 on certain goods shipped at and from Karachi to Bombay, and note appears at the foot of the certificate.

"That on application at the head office in London the certificate may be exchanged for a stamped policy, and that losses and claims shall be payable in conformity with the conditions of the [131] insurances, on surrender of the certificate to the agents of the Association at Karachi.

"No policy of insurance stamped under the law in force in India appears to have existed in respect of the insurance at the date of the certificate."

The Collector and Superintendent of Stamps was of opinion that having regard to s. 3 (cl. 15) of the Stamp Act (I of 1879) the certificate should be regarded as a policy of insurance, and as such required to be stamped under art. 49 (a), sch. I of the Act.

He, therefore, submitted the following question :—

"Whether the above-mentioned certificate requires any and what stamp ?"

The certificate of insurance referred to above was as follows :—

Certificate of Insurance of the Underwriting and Agency Association, Limited, 20 Bucklersbury, London, E.C.

No. IV 8

C [R] K

Rs. 800 Agent's No. 2.
Marine Insurance Certificate of the Underwriting and Agency Association, Limited, 20 Bucklersbury, London, C.E.

Dated at Karachi, 14th January 1893.

This is to certify that insurances having been effected, the conditions of which are in our possession and open to the inspection of the assured, and that we hereby declare under such insurances the sum of Rupees eight hundred only on goods as p. margin F.S.A.p. clause in policy valued at Rupees eight hundred only, shipped per B.I.S.N.Co.(Ld).S.S."Karagola" V. 55 G. at and from Karachi to Bombay.

On application at the head office in London this certificate may be exchanged for a stamped policy. Losses or claims shall be payable in conformity with the conditions of the said insurances to the order of Messrs. Ritchie, Stewart and Co. on surrender of this certificate to the Underwriting and Agency Association, Limited, Agents to the Association at Karachi. The consideration paid hereon is not necessarily the same as that paid on the original insurance, any difference being the consideration as between the Association and the assured for the guarantee of the Association and in lieu of Agency expenses. The Underwriting and Agency Association, Limited, hereby guarantees the payment of losses or claims settled under this certificate or under policies against which this certificate is issued.

Certificate of Insurance of the Underwriting and Agency Association, Limited, 20 Bucklersbury, London, E.C.

[132] Anderson (with Lang, Advocate General) for the Collector and Superintendent of Stamps.—The document is a policy of insurance under cl. 15, s. 3 of the Stamp Act. The mere production of the document itself would entitle the holder to get himself reimbursed for loss, because the document itself guarantees such payment. It refers to some other document in England, but the reference is merely colourable. The stamped policy in England would not make the present document the less a policy.

Ghanasham N. Nadkarni (amicus curiæ), contra:—The document is nothing but a certificate or a declaration that certain conditions have been accepted subject to the execution of a formal policy. It, therefore, falls under cl. 14, sch. II of the Stamp Act. It merely states that a contract has been entered into, and that the document evidencing the contract is to be made hereafter. In order to save misunderstanding it merely mentions the terms which are to be embodied in the formal document. Such a document as the present is not valid in law and cannot be made the basis of a suit. An action can lie only on a policy and not a slip like the present.

Anderson, in reply:—The description of a slip is given by Arnould at p. 194. It is merely a piece of paper which a broker takes round for the initials of the underwriter. There are no conditions mentioned in it.

ORDER.

SARGENT, C.J.—We think the document requires to be stamped as a policy. It is not a mere "slip" or memorandum of a proposed insurance, the effect of which is discussed in Xenos v. Wickham (1). It mentions the sum for which the assurer declares the name of the ship, the voyage and the premium, and provides for the losses being paid on its production in conformity with certain conditions in the possession of the assurers, and, lastly, it expressly guarantees the payment of losses and claims settled under it. The document on the face of it does not contemplate the necessity of any other document of a more formal character being passed to the assured, and read with the conditions to which it refers, is clearly the instrument upon which the assured is intended to enforce his claim. It is, therefore, [133] a document by which the parties executing it engage to indemnify against losses arising from an unknown or contingent event, and falls under cl. 15 of s. 3 of the Stamp Act, I of 1879.

Order accordingly.

The plaintiff sued for possession of a certain house, alleging the expiry of the lease (kabulayat) on which the defendants held it as tenants. Parbhudas v. Fulba (1) distinguished.

APPLICATION under the extraordinary jurisdiction—s. 622 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882)—against the decision of the Mamlatdar of Daskroi, in the Ahmedabad District.

The plaintiff sued under the Mamlatdars' Act (Bom. Act III of 1876) to recover possession of a house from the defendants, alleging that they were his tenants under a lease which he had granted to them, and that although the term of lease had expired they refused to vacate.

[134] The defendants admitted the execution of the lease, but disputed the plaintiff's title, and claimed the house as their own.

The Mamlatdar dismissed the suit, holding that the plaintiff had no title, his predecessor having purchased the house at a Court sale without the permission of the Court, in contravention of s. 294 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), and the purchase was, therefore invalid. He also found that the plaintiff had not taken possession before granting the lease.

The plaintiff applied to the High Court under its extraordinary jurisdiction and obtained a rule nisi calling upon the defendants to show cause why the decision of the Mamlatdar should not be set aside.

Chimanlal H. Setalvad, in support of the rule, for the applicant (plaintiff).

Sitanath Gopinath Ajinkya, for the opponents (defendants) showed cause:—Though the Mamlatdar found that the lease was proved, still he did not give effect to it, because he considered it to be a merely nominal transaction. The principal issue in the case was whether we were in possession of the house through the plaintiff. The Mamlatdar found that we were in possession in our own right, and, therefore, he dismissed the suit. There being a conflict of title between the parties, the Mamlatdar could not award the claim—Parbhudas v. Fulba (1).

19 B. 133 N. = Unrep. P.J. B.H.C. (1892—94) 122.

(1) P.J. 1892, p. 406. The case of Parbhudas Lakshmidas v. Fulba above referred o, was an application, No. 141 of 1892, under the extraordinary jurisdiction of the High Court (s. 622 of the Civil Procedure Code, Act XIV of 1882) to reverse the decision of the Mamlatdar of Nadiad in the Ahmedabad District.

The plaintiff Parbhudas Lakshmidas sued the defendant Fulba, widow of Vansang Navalsang, for possession of a house, alleging that she was his tenant and that her term of tenancy had expired. In proof of her holding as his tenant he produced a rent-note signed by her.

The defendant admitted execution of the rent-note, but denied that it had been acted upon, or that she was the plaintiff's tenant.

The Mamlatdar rejected the plaintiff's claim, finding that the rent-note had never been given effect to; that the defendant was not in possession of the house as the plaintiff's tenant, and that, therefore, he (the Mamlatdar) had no jurisdiction to give a decree against the defendant.

The plaintiff thereupon applied, as above, to the High Court.

SARGENT, C. J.—We think the Mamlatdar's conclusion on the evidence, although it is not stated as clearly as might be desired, was that the rent note was not intended to be acted on, but only to be used to resist a possible claim by the husband's relations. We think it was within his jurisdiction to come to that conclusion, and to hold that no tenancy was created.

Rule discharged with costs.

[D. 19 B. 133.]

JUDGMENT.

1894
JAN. 17.
APPELLATE CIVIL.
19 B 133.

[135] SARGENT, C. J.—The Mamlatdar has found that the defendants are not "in possession under a right derived from the plaintiff," because he considers the lease to be a nominal one. He has come to that conclusion, because he is of opinion, on the evidence, that the property belonged to the defendants when it was passed by them. But the defendants, having passed the kabulayat to the plaintiff, could not be heard to deny the latter's title as a ground for refusing to give up possession, and the Mamlatdar himself, therefore, could not go into the question. The decision in Parbhudas v. Fulba (1) referred to did not turn upon a conflict of title between the parties, but upon whether the lease was intended to be acted on.

We ought, therefore, under these circumstances, to exercise our extraordinary jurisdiction and make absolute the rule, and reverse the order of the Mamlatdar, and direct possession to be given to the plaintiff. Applicant to have his costs.

Rule made absolute.

KIRPARAM JHUMEKRAM MODIA, insane, BY HIS GUARDIAN HIS WIFE BAI NATHI (Original Plaintiff No. 2), Appellant v. MODIA DAYALJI JHUMEKRAM AND OTHERS (Original Defendants), *Respondents.

Practice—Procedure—Lunatic—Limitation— Striking out lunatic plaintiff's name—Restoration of name—Suit by person not adjudged to be of unsound mind under Act XXXV of 1858.

A plaint as originally framed contained the name of Kirparam, stated to be of unsound mind, as first plaintiff and of his wife Nathi as his guardian and second plaintiff. When the plaint was actually filed, Kirparam's name was struck out by the pleader and Nathi. Subsequently his name was restored on his own application, but the period of limitation prescribed for the suit had then elapsed. The first Court held that under s. 7 of the Limitation Act the plaintiff's claim was not barred. On appeal, the Judge dismissed the suit, holding that the order of the first Court restoring Kirparam's name was bad, and that the suit was time-barred at the date of that order. On second appeal, Held, reversing the decree, that the pleader and Nathi acted beyond their authority in striking out Kirparam's name, and that, therefore, the restoration of his name must relate back to the filing of the suit, which was, therefore, not barred.

[136] Quære—Whether a person of unsound mind, but not adjudged to be so under Act XXXV of 1858, can in this country sue by his next friend.

1887. The plaint as originally framed contained the names of Kirparam Jhumekram, insane, by his guardian his wife Bai Nathi as first plaintiff, and Bai Nathi herself as plaintiff No. 2. The plaint was verified by Kirparam himself, and the vakalatnama (pleader's warrant) was signed by both Kirparam and Bai Nathi. Subsequently, when the plaint was actually filed in Court, Bai Nathi and the plaintiff's pleader struck out Kirparam's name from the title without making any other alteration in the body of the plaint. The suit was proceeded with at the instance of Bai Nathi alone. The defendants (inter alia) denied Bai Nathi's right to maintain the suit. On the 19th March, 1891, Kirparam presented an application to the Court asking to have his name restored to the plaint, and the application having been granted, the defendants contended that his claim was barred by limitation.

The Subordinate Judge found (inter alia) that the claim was proved, and that the plaintiff Kirparam being of unsound mind the suit was not time-barred under s. 7 of the Limitation Act (XV of 1877). He, therefore, allowed the claim.

On appeal by the defendants the Judge reversed the decree. The following is an extract from his judgment :—

" Assuming for the moment that Kirparm was of unsound mind at the moment of the institution of the suit, it is clear that he could neither institute it himself, nor could his wife, without a certificate under Act XXXV of 1858, do so on his behalf—Tukaram Anant Joshi, by his next friend Bhikaji Ramchandra Nimkar v. Vithal Joshi, I.L.R. 13 B. 656 et seq. Nor can the want of certificate be now cured. If Kirparam was not of unsound mind at the date of the institution of the suit, then his wife had even less reason to appear as his guardian. However, the name of Kirparam disappeared from the record in the first instance; he made no complaint in that respect in Ex. 18 on 19th March, 1891, when he asked to have his name restored to the plaint. The erasure appears to have been made with the cognizance of the pleader, as he has initialled it. The order of the Subordinate Judge restoring Kirparam's name appears to be bad. By withdrawing his name from the plaint, Kirparam, if sane, must be held as withdrawing from the suit, and on the 19th March, 1891, the [137] claim had become time-barred * * * Whether Kirparam is of sound or unsound mind, the suit in the present form is not maintainable."

Bai Nathi as the guardian of her husband preferred a second appeal.

Govardhanram M. Tripathi, for the appellant (plaintiff) :—It was not necessary to mention Bai Nathi as plaintiff in the plaint. The plaint as it was originally framed with her name as the guardian of her husband was sufficient for our purpose.

[SARGENT, C. J.—But, if Kirparam is of unsound mind, how could his wife bring a suit without a certificate under Act XXXV of 1858?]

A lunatic may sue either by himself or through a next friend—Venkatramana Rambhat v. Timappa Devappa (1).

[SARGENT, C.J.—That decision applies to a defendant.]

We submit that the same principle applies to a plaintiff. The practice in the Courts of Chancery is also to the same effect—Jones v. Lloyd (2).

JUDGMENT.

JAN. 18.
APPELLATE CIVIL.
19 B. 135.

SARGENT, C.J.—The plaint was originally framed with Kirparam himself as first plaintiff and his wife as his guardian as the second plaintiff; and the plaint was verified by Kirparam himself. When the plaint was actually filed, Kirparam's name had been struck out from the heading of the suit, as the Subordinate Judge says, by the pleader and second plaintiff. This was clearly beyond their authority, and, therefore, when the name was restored on Kirparam's application in person on 19th March, 1891, the restoration must relate back to the filing of the suit; in which case the suit would be in time and maintainable in plaintiff's name, whether of sound or unsound mind, and it is, therefore, unnecessary to determine whether, as has been contended before us, there may be cases in which a person of unsound mind, not adjudged to be so under Act XXXV of 1858, can sue by his next friend, as it would appear may be done in England under certain circumstances—Jones v. Lloyd(1).

We must, therefore, reverse the decree, and send back the case for a decision on the merits. Costs to abide the result.

An inamdar sued to eject the defendants from certain lands, alleging them to be trespassers. The Courts found that the lands were mirasi lands, and that one Ganu was mirasdar. The defendants had redeemed a mortgage effected by Ganu and claimed to hold possession as against the plaintiff.

Held, that as the land was found to belong to Ganu as mirasdar and as his mirasi tenure was still subsisting, the plaintiff as inamdar was not entitled to eject the defendants, whether or not they had any rights as against the mortgagee.

THIS was a second appeal from the decision of J.W. Walker, District Judge of Satara.

Suit to recover possession of land and arrears of rent.

This action was instituted by plaintiff, an inamdar, to recover possession of a certain field together with three years' rent. He alleged that he had leased it to defendant No. 1; that the other defendants were trespassers, and that defendants Nos. 2—4 held it in collusion with defendant No. 1.

Defendant No. 1 admitted the claim.

Defendants Nos. 2, 3 and 4 pleaded that their family held the land as mirasdar; that their uncle Ganu had mortgaged it to one Kondi, the husband of defendant No. 1; that they had redeemed the mortgage; that they were the heirs of Ganu, and they claimed to hold the land as mirasdars. They alleged that defendant No. 1 was colluding with the plaintiff.

The lower Courts held that the plaintiff was not entitled to recover as against defendants Nos. 2, 3 and 4, who had redeemed the mortgage. They found that Ganu was mirasdar of the lands, and that defendants Nos. 2, 3 and 4, were not mirasdars.

The plaintiff preferred a second appeal to the High Court.

[139] Vasudeo Ramchandra Joglekar, for the appellant (original plaintiff):—The defendants are held not to be mirasdars, but are mere trespassers as against the plaintiff, and he is entitled to eject them. The fact that they have paid off Ganu's mortgage cannot give them a right against Ganu's landlord.

Mahadeo Bhaskar Chavbal, for the respondents (original defendants):—The plaintiff sues us as trespassers. But he cannot do so unless he is entitled to immediate possession. He is not entitled to this, as the lower Courts have found that Ganu is mirasdar and his tenure still exists. As Ganu's heirs we have redeemed the mortgage and are now in possession—Womesh Chunder v. Raj Narain(1). A trespass during the continuance of the tenancy is no invasion of the landlord's title. Unless the plaintiff shows that he has the right of ejectment against Ganu, the original mirasdar, he is not entitled to evict us—Cole on Ejectment, pp. 287, 288. After we redeemed the land from Kondi we offered rent to the plaintiff, but he declined to take it. Even a mortgagor is not entitled to eject a trespasser without payment of the redemption money—Chinto v. Janki(2).

JUDGMENT.

SARGENT, C. J.—The plaintiff, as inamdar, seeks to obtain possession of the land from defendants Nos. 2, 3 and 4. But as the Courts below have found that the land belonged to Ganu as mirasdar, and that the tenure has not come to an end, the plaintiff can have no right to claim possession from defendants Nos. 2, 3, 4, whether or no they were the heirs of Ganu and entitled to redeem and obtain possession of the land from Kondi, to whom the Court has found it had been mortgaged by Ganu. The judgment of Sir B. Peacock in Womesh Chunder v. Raj Narain(1) and of Mr. Justice Telang in Chinto v. Janki(2), shew that the inamdar will not be prejudiced by his not being able to do so by their possession as trespassers against the persons entitled under the mirasi tenure. We must, therefore, confirm the decree of the Court below, with costs on appellant.

PANDU (Original Plaintiff), Appellant v. VITHU (Original Defendant No. 2), *Respondent.

Limitation Act (XV of 1877), art. 134—Limitation—Mortgage—Decree obtained by mortgagee for possession until payment of mortgage-debt—Possession taken by mortgageee under decree—Continuance after decree of relation of mortgagor and mortgagee—Sale by mortgagee—Vendor and purchaser—Subsequent suit for redemption by mortgagor against mortgagee and his vendee—Plea by vendee of purchase for value without notice—Bona fides, meaning of—Purchaser, meaning of, in art. 134.

A decree on a mortgage having directed the mortgagor to give possession to the mortgagee until the payment of the mortgage-debt and costs found due, the mortgagee entered into possession and subsequently sold the property to a third party. More than twelve years after the sale, the mortgagor brought a redemption suit both as against the mortgagee and the purchaser.

Held, that the suit (as against the purchaser) was barred under art. 134, sch. II of the Limitation Act (XV of 1877), and that notwithstanding the decree for possession, the relationship of mortgagor and mortgagee continued whether under the original mortgage or the decree.

Absence of bona fides as distinguished from actual knowledge of the vendor's title does not prevent the purchaser from claiming the benefit of art. 134, sch. II of the Limitation Act (XV of 1877).

In order to give the purchaser the benefit of art. 134, the purchase need not be bona fide in the sense of being without "constructive notice" of the restricted nature of the vendor's title, but the term "purchaser" in that article is meant a person who purchases that which is de facto a mortgage upon the representation made to him and in the belief that it is an absolute title.

SECOND APPEAL from the decision of A. S. Moriarty, Assistant Judge of Poona, confirming the decree of Rao Saheb N. V. Atre, Second Class Subordinate Judge of Baramati.

Suit for redemption. In or about the year 1862 A. D., one Pandu (the plaintiff's father) mortgaged the lands in question to the first defendant, and in 1864 the first defendant (the mortgagee) obtained a decree (No. 270 of 1864) on this mortgage against him directing him to hand over possession of the land to the first defendant (mortgagee) until payment of the mortgage-debt with costs. On the 27th July, 1864, the first defendant took possession, and on the 9th May, 1878, he sold the land to the second defendant. Pandu subsequently died, and on the 27th [141] August, 1891, his son Nana filed the present suit for redemption of the mortgage, alleging that the mortgage-debt had been satisfied out of of the rents and profits of the land.

The first defendant admitted the mortgage and alleged that he had sold the land to the second defendant with notice of the mortgage.

The second defendant pleaded that he was a purchaser for value without notice of the mortgage, and contended that the suit was barred by limitation (art. 134 of the Limitation Act), being brought after the expiration of twelve years from the date of his purchase.

The Subordinate Judge found that the second defendant was a bona fide purchaser of the property for valuable consideration, and held the suit barred as to him by art. 134, sch. II of the Limitation Act (XV of 1877). He relied on the rulings in Yesu Ramji Kalnath v. Balkrishna Lakshman(1) and Vishnu Chintaman v. Balaji bin Raghuji (2).

On appeal by the plaintiff the Judge confirmed the decree. The following is an extract from his judgment:—

"I must agree with the lower Court and with the arguments of respondent's pleader. Section 18 of the (Limitation) Act cannot apply, because there was no fraudulent concealment of the plaintiff's right to sue or of some document necessary to establish that right. Time, therefore, runs from the period fixed by the Limitation Act, notwithstanding the fact that the plaintiff had not then knowledge of the invasion or curtailment of his right of redemption from a period of sixty years to twelve years, owing to the second defendant's purchase. That purchase is by a registered document, and the property is conveyed absolutely from the first defendant, the ostensible owner, to the second defendant for a valuable consideration. Under these circumstances it seems clear that the ruling in I. L. R., 9 Bom. 475, should be followed. A reference, however, should be made to Bhagwan Sahai v Bhagwan Din, I. L. R., 9 All., 97, alluded to in one of the cases quoted by the Subordinate Judge (I. L. R., 15 Bom., 585). In that case the circumstances under which the mortgagee sold his interest were found to be such that the purchaser was not allowed to take advantage of the provisions of art. 134 in question. It was there found that the purchaser had not "reasonable ground for believing and did believe" that his vendor had the power to convey an absolute interest. No such presumption can be drawn from the facts of the present case. The sale here was a private transaction, and if defendant No. 1 had already bought the land when it was sold for arrears of revenue (see defendant No. 2's written statement), defendant No. 2 would certainly hold him to be the ostensible owner. In the case above mentioned (I. L. R., 9 All., 97), the property was purchased at a formal auction-[142] sale, and the circumstances were such that the Court drew inferences that the purchaser must have known of the existence of incumbrances."

The plaintiff preferred a second appeal.

Daji Abaji Khare, for the appellant (plaintiff).—Article 134 does not apply, for the relation of mortgagor and mortgagee ceased when the first defendant got his decree against Pandu in 1864. The mortgage was then merged in the decree. The second defendant did not, therefore, purchase from a mortgagee. And even if the relation of mortgagor and mortgagee did continue after the decree, the second defendant as purchaser from a decree-holder must be held to have had constructive notice of the mortgage on which the decree was based, and, therefore, he is not protected by art. 134 of the Limitation Act—Navlu v. Raghu(3); Tani Bagavan v. Hari(4); Ramchandra Ballal v. Baba Esgonda(5). He knew that he was only entitled to hold the land till the decretal amount was paid. Therefore his possession never became adverse to us. In fact, he has held the property merely as a trustee for us under the decree.

Manekshah J. Taleyarkhan, for the respondent (defendant No. 2).—The plaintiff cannot now contend that the relation of mortgagor and mortgagee does not exist. He sues for redemption, and his plaint alleges that we hold as mortgagee. The plaintiff in his plaint stated that we held the property as a mortgagee. He, therefore, cannot now be allowed to say that we purchased the property from a decree-holder. If, however, the mortgage merged in the decree (as is now argued), then the plaintiff must seek his remedy in execution of that decree. He cannot bring a new suit on the mortgage—Rambhat v. Ragho Krishna (1). We have purchased the property for valuable consideration without notice of the mortgage, and, therefore, we are entitled to resist the claim under art. 134, sch. II of the Limitation Act—Yesu Ramji Kalnath v. Balkrishna Lakshman (2).

JUDGMENT.

SARGENT, C. J.—The plaintiff in this suit seeks to redeem certain property which he alleges to have been mortgaged to [143] the first defendant in Shake 1784. The second defendant resists on the ground that he purchased the property from defendant No. 1 in 1878, and also that plaintiff's claim is barred. The lower appeal Court has held it to be barred under art. 134 of Act XV of 1877.

An objection was taken by Mr. Daji, for the plaintiff, that the article did not apply, as the first defendant was no longer a mortgagee, but only a decree-holder after the decree was passed in suit No. 270 of 1894, in his favour directing the mortgagor to give possession to him until payment of the mortgage-debt and costs found due. But if that be so, the objection is also fatal to the plaintiff's present suit, which is based on the existence of that relationship.

Moreover, it is to be observed that the decisions of this High Court in Ramchandra Ballal v. Baba Esgonda (3), Navlu v. Raghu (4), Tani Bagavan v. Hari (5), and of the Madras High Court in Periandi v. Angappa (6), and of the Privy Council in Hari Ravji Chiplunkar v. Shapurji Hormusji (7), to which reference has been made, whilst they leave it in doubt, it must be admitted, what are the precise rights of the mortgagor after a decree had been passed in favour of a mortgagee, all treat the relationship of mortgagor and mortgagee as continuing between the parties, whether it be under the original mortgage or the decree.

Passing, then, to the consideration of art. 134 of the Statute (Act XV) of 1877, we think that the view expressed by this High Court in Bava Khan Daudkhan v. Bhiku Sazba (8) and Yesu Ramji Kalnath v. Balkrishna Lakshman (2) is the correct one, and that the absence of "bona fides" as distinguished from actual knowledge of the vendor's title does not prevent the purchaser from claiming the benefit of the article, in that respect differing from the effect of s. 5 of Act XIV of 1859, which is discussed by Lord Cairns in Radanath Doss v. Gisborne and [144] Co. (9). There are doubtless remarks of the learned Chief Justice of the Allahabad High Court in Bhagwan Sahai v. Bhagwan Din (10) which are perhaps scarcely reconcileable with the above view of the article, but it was sufficient for the decision in that case, as pointed out by the Chief Justice himself at p. 103 of the report, to remark that the article does not apply to purchases at auction-sale in execution of the mortgagor's interest, as decided by the Privy Council in Kali Das Mulik v. Kanhya Lal Pandit (11).

But although the article does not, in our opinion, require the purchase to be "bona fide" in the sense of being made without "constructive notice" of the restricted nature of the vendor's title, we agree with what is said in Bhagwan Sahai v. Bhagwan Din (10) as to the remark of Lord Cairns in construing s. 5, Act XIV of 1859, in Radanath Doss v. Gisborne and Co. (9) being equally applicable to the article under consideration, viz., that by a purchaser must be meant a person who purchases that which is de facto a mortgage upon the representation made to him and in the belief that it is an absolute title—a requisite, which, it is to be observed, Lord Cairns treats (see 14 Moore's I. A. p. 20) as quite distinct from what he mentions to be the second requisite to enable s. 5 to be applied, viz., that the purchase should be "bona fide."

In this case the Assistant Judge has found that "no presumption can be drawn from the fact of the case that the purchaser did not believe when he purchased that his vendor had not power to convey an absolute interest," and we must, therefore, confirm the decree with costs.

ANNAPURNABAI, WIDOW OF BALAVANTRAO BHIKAJI VAKHARKAR (Original Opponent), Applicant v. LAKSHMAN BHIKAJI VAKHARKAR (Original Applicant), *Opponent. [23rd January, 1894.]

Succession Certificate Act, VII of 1889, ss. 17 and 20—Certificate of heirship—Hindu family—Political Agent—Grant of certificate by Political Agent—Irregularities in making grant—Stamp on certificate—Court-Fees' Act, VII of 1870, s. 26—Notification of Governor General.

A District Judge cannot treat a certificate of heirship granted by the Political Agent in a Native State as invalid because the applicant had not given to him the requisite information as to the other members of the family and no notices had been issued to them. These irregularities of procedure may be a reason for the Political Agent to cancel the grant, but they do not enable the District Court to treat it as a nullity.

A certificate having been granted on an ordinary stamp of requisite value, it was contended that it was not properly stamped in accordance with the Court-Fees' Act (VII of 1870) as required by s. 17 of the Succession Certificate Act (VII of 1889), because it did not bear upon it the words "Court-Fees" as directed in the notification of the Governor General, No. 361, dated 18th April, 1883.

Held, that though s. 26 of the Court Fees' Act (VII of 1870) provides that the stamp used to denote the fee chargeable under the Act shall be of such particular kind as the Governor-General in India in Council may by notification from time to time direct, and that though the Governor-General had issued such notification, still the direction in the notification, that the stamp should bear the words "Court-fees" was not a matter on which he had authority to give any direction under the terms of s. 26 of the Court-fees Act, and, therefore, could only be regarded as a departmental order, the non-observance of which could not invalidate the stamp for the purpose of the Act.

A certificate of heirship stamped with the proper stamp, and granted by the Political Agent of a Native State, must be recognized by the Civil Courts in British India "as having the same effect in British India as a certificate granted under this Act" as provided by s. 17 of Act VII of 1889, and under s. 20 precludes the granting of a certificate by a Civil Court.

THIS was an application under the extraordinary jurisdiction of the High Court (s. 622 of the Civil Procedure Code Act XIV of 1882) against the order of A. Steward, District Judge of [146] Khandesh, in the matter of an application for a certificate to collect debts under the Succession Certificate Act (VII of 1889).

One Balvant Bhikaji Vakharkar, the Head Master of the High School at Kolhapur, but whose family resided at Dhulia in the Khandesh District, died at Kolhapur on the 22nd December, 1889, leaving a widow, a mother and two brothers. The property of the deceased consisted of a deposit of about Rs. 3,200 in the Savings Bank at Kolhapur standing in his own name and a sum of Rs. 2,000 secured on the mortgage of a house at Kolhapur. After his death his widow Annapurnabai applied for a certificate of heirship, and without furnishing any information as to the relatives of the deceased obtained a certificate from the Court of the Sar Nyayadhish (Chief Judge) of Kolhapur, which is the principal Court of original jurisdiction in that territory Subsequently she applied to the Political Agent of Kolhapur and Southern Maratha Country to countersign the certificate, but he refused to countersign it on the ground that it was not on a British stamp, and could not, therefore, be countersigned by a British officer. The widow, thereupon, produced an ordinary stamp paper and not a Court-fee stamp as contemplated by the Court-fees' Act (VII of 1870), and upon it obtained the Political Agent's certificate under the Succession Certificate Act (VII of 1889).

Subsequently Lakshman Bhikaji Vakharkar (the opponent), claiming to be an undivided brother of the deceased, applied to the Joint Subordinate Judge of Dhulia for a certificate under the said Act to enable him to recover the debts due to the deceased. His application was opposed by Annapurnabai, who contended (inter alia) that until the certificate granted to her by the Political Agent was cancelled, no other certificate could be granted.

The Joint Subordinate Judge of Doulia, however, granted Lakshman a certificate with reference to the Savings Bank deposit of the deceased, but he held that he had no jurisdiction to grant one as to the debt secured in the house at Kolhapur.

On apppeal the Judge amended the order of the lower Court and directed that a certificate should be issued to Lakshman with [147] respect to both the debts, for the following (among other) reasons :—

"The certificate granted by the Political Agent is invalid, because it is stamped with a general stamp only, whereas under the provisions of s. 17 of Act VII of 1889, it should have been stamped with Court-fee stamp.

"The certificate from the Sar Nyayadhish was obtained by misrepresentation and deceit. If Annapurnabai shows any intention of acting on the certificate so obtained, the applicant Lakshman Bhikaji will have to sue for an injunction preventing her from dealing in any way with the property of the deceased in the Kolhapur Court.

"With regard to the mortgage secured by immoveable property in the city of Kolhapur, I do not see that there is any objection to my including this in the certificate granted to Lakshman Bhikaji. Section 17 gives a certificate from a Political Agent, if duly stamped, in force in British India the same force as a certificate granted under the Act. I do not see why this arrangement should not be reciprocal, and it may be so in the Kolhapur State. All that the certificate from this Court gives is the right to recover that debt. Whether he succeeds in recovering it or not, is another matter."

Annapurnabai applied to the High Court under its extraordinary jurisdiction and obtained a rule nisi calling upon the opponent Lakshman Bhikaji Vakharkar to show cause why the order should not be set aside.

Maneksha J. Taleyarkhan, appeared for the applicant Annapurnabai in support of the rule:—The certificate which was granted to us by the Political Agent was in the form prescribed under s. 17 of the Succession Certificate Act (VII of 1889). We obtained a certificate from the Political Agent of Kolhapur, because we lived with the deceased at Kolhapur. The fact that the certificate granted by the Political Agent is not engrossed on a Court-fee stamp, but on an ordinary commercial stamp, is of no consequence. The proper stamp duty of Rs. 65 has been paid. Government issues different kinds of stamps merely for the purpose of keeping separate accounts. The certificate granted to us by the Political Agent is valid, and if so, then the certificate granted to Lakshman by the Judge is invalid under s. 20 of the Succession Certificate Act (VII of 1889). Even acccrding to s. 28 of the Court-fees' Act, the certificate of the Political Agent would not be invalid, it being properly stamped.

Shamrao Vitthal, for the opponent Lakshman Bhikaji showed cause. —First we contend that the applicant has no right at all to [148] a certificate. The deceased was a member of an undivided family, and we are entitled to his property by survivorship even without a certificate under the Succession Certificate Act—Ganesh v. Bhima (1). The certificate of the applicant is invalid. It was granted without any inquiry as to whether other relatives of the deceased were entitled to his property. Annapurnabai did not inform the Court of the Sar Nyayadhish or the Political Agent of Kolhapur of the existence of the other relatives of the deceased, and fraudulently obtained the certificate. We also contend that the certificate of the Political Agent is invalid, because it is not properly stamped. Section 26 of the Court-fees' Act enacts that the Court-fee stamps shall either be impressed or adhesive according to the direction of the Governor-General in Council; and there is a Government Resolution (No. 361, dated the 18th April, 1883) which lays down that when a Court-fees stamp up to rupees ten is required, then the stamp should be adhesive, and when the fee is higher than rupees ten, then an impressed stamp should be used. Further, it provides that the stamps, whether adhesive or impressed, should have the words "Court-fees" on it. The certificate of the Political Agent is not on such a stamp, and, therefore, it is invalid.

JUDGMENT.

SARGENT, C.J.—The District Judge has confirmed the grant of a certificate by the Subordinate Judge, on the ground that the certificate granted by the Political Agent was invalid, because the applicant had not given the Political Agent the requisite information as to the other relatives of the family, and no notices had been issued to them. These irregularities of procedure, if true, might possibly be reasons for the opponent asking the Political Agent to cancel the grant, but they do not enable the District Court to treat it as a nullity.

As to the certificate not being properly stamped in accordance with the Court Fees' Act of 1870, as required by s. 17 of Act VII of 1889, because it does not bear upon it the words "Court Fees," it is true that s. 26 of Court Fees' Act VII of 1870 provides that the stamp used to denote the fee chargeable under the Act "shall be impressed or adhesive or [149] partly impressed or adhesive as the Governor-General in India in Council may by notification in the Gazette of India from time to time direct," and that by notification of the Governor-General, (No. 361, dated 18th April, 1883), it was provided that in case the fee chargeable should be under Rs. 10, an adhesive stamp should be used, and when the fee should exceed Rs. 10, an impressed stamp, and that in both cases the stamp should bear the words "Court Fees;" but as to the direction that the stamp should bear the word "Court Fees" it is to be remarked that it is not a matter on which by the terms of s. 26 of the Court Fees' Act the Governor-General in Council had authority to give any direction, and it can, therefore, only be regarded as a departmental order, the non-observance of which cannot invalidate the stamp for the purpose of the Act. As Rs. 65, the amount of the stamp impressed on the certificate granted by the Political Agent, was admittedly the correct amount, the stamp was, in our opinion, in accordance with the provisions of the Court Fees' Act.

Under these circumstances the District Court ought to have recognized the certificate of the Political Agent as "having the same effect in British India as a certificate granted under this Act" as provided by s. 17, and which, therefore, by s. 20 would preclude the granting of a certificate by the District Court. The District Court has, therefore, acted without jurisdiction in making the grant, and we must make the rule absolute and cancel the grant, with costs.

Rule made absolute.

Held, that the contract between the parties took the case out of s. 84 of the Land Revenue Code (Bombay Act V of 1879), and that as the rent would not be payable until the end of the year, the landlord might put an end to the tenancy and demand the land at the end of any year without giving any previous notice of any particular period, but he could not demand immediate possession in the middle of a year.

Lalshankar Umiashankar, Joint First Class Subordinate Judge with Appellate Powers at Thana.

Ejectment. The plaintiff sued to recover possession of certain land from the first defendant. The other defendants were subsequently made parties.

All the defendants pleaded that they had no knowledge of the plaintiff's title, and that they had received no notice to quit.

[151] The following is the translation of the material portion of the rent-note relied on by the plaintiff :—

"I pass an agreement in writing as follows :—Wadi (oart) Wadbhat and wadi (oart) Bilbhat (situate at) tarf Agar Bassein together with the trees standing thereon and land I have taken in my possession from you on an agreement to pay hasil (annual rent), and I have been cultivating them from before. I have argeed to pay the Government assessment on the said wadis (oarts) and to pay you rupees 16, in letters sixteen, of the Company's currency on account of the hasil (annual rent) for one year. Accordingly I shall pay you the amount of the hasil (annual rent) every year as long as you shall keep the said wadis (oarts) with me, and will give back the same when you may demand the same. I have no claim to the wadis (oarts). The wadis (oarts) are in my possession."

The Subordinate Judge passed a decree for the plaintiff, holding that no notice to quit was necessary, as the defendants had denied the plaintiff's title.

On appeal by the defendants the Judge reversed the decree, holding that a notice to quit was necessary, and that the service of notice to quit had not been proved.

The plaintiff preferred a second appeal, No. 655 of 1893, which was dismissed under s. 551 (1) of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882).

The plaintiff thereupon preferred an appeal under the Letters Patent.

Ganesh Krishna Deshamukh, for the appellant (plaintiff).

JUDGMENT.

SARGENT, C. J.—The question for determination in this case is, whether the agreement created a tenancy-at-will or a yearly tenancy. The agreement provides for a yearly rent being paid, and the question is, whether the words which follow show a clear intention that the landlord might give a notice to quit within the year.

In Khuda Bakhsh v. Sheo Din (1), where the agreement was held to create a tenancy-at-will, the language of the agreement showed, as Mahmood, J., points out, an intention that the landlord might turn out his tenant at any time on giving fifteen days' notice. Moreover, the land was not let for agricultural purposes, but was only a piece of land on which the tenant was to live and tether his cattle. In Jivraj v. Atmaram (2) the lease was of a house on [152] which an annual rent was reserved, but the tenant agreed "to vacate when asked to do so by the landlord."

In the present case the land is found by the District Court to be agricultural land, and very clear language should, we think, be required to show an intention that the landlord should be able to turn his tenant out at any moment during the year. The tenant says: "I shall pay you the amount of the annual rent every year as long as you shall keep the said wadi with me, and will give back the same when you may demand the same." As the rent would not be payable until the end of the year, this language would seem to imply that the landlord might put an end to the tenancy and demand the land at the end of any year and without giving previous notice of any particular period. The contract between the parties would take the case out of s. 84 of Bombay Act V of 1879. Here the suit demands immediate possession in the middle of the current year. We must, therefore, dismiss the appeal.

(1) 8 A. 405 (408).

(2) 14 B. 319.

Appeal dismissed.

Before Mr. Justice Farran.

THE ADVOCATE GENERAL OF BOMBAY (Plaintiff) v. GANGJI AKHAI (Defendant).* [26th July, 1894.]

Contempt of Court—Punishment by imprisonment—Practice.

On 1st September, 1890, in an administration suit in which Gangji Akhai as executor of a will was defendant, a receiver was appointed, and Gangji Akhai was ordered to deliver to the receiver certain Government promissory notes of the value of Rs. 45,000 belonging to the estate, which was the subject-matter of the suit. He did not obey the order and absconded from Bombay, and on 16th March, 1891, in his absence, a rule for his attachment for contempt was made absolute. It was afterwards ascertained that he had used the notes for his own purposes. A warrant was issued for his arrest, and he was apprehended, and on 23rd April, 1891, he was convicted of criminal breach of trust and sentenced to eighteen months' imprisonment. Previously to his trial (viz., on the 9th April, 1891) he had been committed to jail for contempt of the order of September, 1890, so that after his conviction he was in jail both under his sentence and under the order for contempt. On the 4th October, 1892, the Court passed a money decree in the administration suit against the defendant for Rs. 80,000 [153] and costs. The sentence passed upon the defendant for the criminal offence expired on the 22nd October, 1892. Applications for his release from imprisonment under the order for contempt were made in December, 1892, and 10th April, 1893, but were refused. Counsel now moved again for his release.

Held, that the defendant should be released from imprisonment. The right of the plaintiff to demand the promissory notes from him was merged in the money decree. The right to demand the notes was gone, and the order that he should deliver them up to the receiver had ceased to be operative. The commitment, in so far as it was intended to enforce obedience to the order of the 1st September, 1890, could no longer be continued on that ground. It was the decree now and not the order which constituted the measure of the obligation between the parties. That was a simple money decree, and it was contrary to the expressly declared will of the Legislature and to all modern principle and precedent to keep a defendant under commitment for contempt to compel him to pay a money decree. If the attachment order was regarded as a punishment for the defendant's offence in not having delivered up the notes, the punishment should be commensurate with the offence. Imprisonment under it could not be indefinite. By s. 493 of the Code of Civil Procedure (Act XIV of 1882) the Legislature indicated that such imprisonment should not extend beyond six months. The defendant had, however, been in jail for more than twenty months. For the criminal offence he had suffered the punishment to which he was sentenced, and the Court would not be justified in indirectly adding to its duration.

APPLICATION by defendant for release from imprisonment for contempt.

This was an administration suit, and on the 1st September, 1890, the Court made an order appointing a receiver and restraining the defendant Gangji Akhai, who was the testator's executor, from dealing with the testator's estate, and ordering him to deliver over to the receiver certain Government promissory notes of the value of Rs. 45,000 mentioned in his inventory as belonging to the estate.

The defendant did not obey this order, and on the 16th March, 1891, a rule for his attachment for contempt was made absolute. This order was made in his absence, as he had then absconded from Bombay.

It was subsequently ascertained that Gangji Akhai had used the Government promissory notes in question for his own purposes, and an information was accordingly laid against him by the receiver charging him with criminal breach of trust. A warrant was issued for his arrest, under which he was apprehended and brought to Bombay, and on the 23rd April, 1891, he was [154] convicted of the above offence and sentenced to eighteen months' rigorous imprisonment.

Previously to his trial (viz., on the 9th April, 1891), he had been committed to jail for contempt of the order of September, 1890, so that after his conviction at the Criminal Sessions he was in jail both under his sentence and under the order for contempt.

On the 15th December, 1892, an application was made to the Court for his release, and refused. A second application was made on the 10th April, 1893, but was also refused.

Counsel now moved in accordance with notice of motion, dated 9th July, 1894, for the release and discharge of the defendant Gangji Akhai from jail in which he was confined under the Court's order of 16th March, 1891.

In his affidavit the applicant stated (inter alia) as follows:—

"I have been in jail for contempt ever since the 8th October, 1892, on which day the sentence of eighteen months inflicted on me expired. I say that I have already severely suffered for what I have done, and repent for the same. I have no means whatever to repay to the estate what I have misappropriated, and for which I have been severely punished both criminally and civilly. I have lost in trade all that I had withdrawn from the estate, and have not in my possession any portion thereof, nor am I contumaciously keeping back any of the said property. My further detention in jail will do no good to the estate of the testator, but it will bring an end to my life. I am an old man fifty-six years of age. I have suffered heavily for my faults. I admit that I was wrong in applying the property of the estate, to my own business, but I have been punished heavily for the same. I do not ask for any release from my liability to the estate, but only the discharge of my person from jail. I am willing to make every restitution in my power to the estate. If I am discharged I shall be able to do some business, and from the income or profits to make good the loss to the estate. I am in an extremely feeble state of health. About six weeks ago I lost my son, who was eighteen years of age, and this fresh calamity has considerably added to my already severe afflictions and has crushed me and my family. Owing to my incarceration in jail my family were left in destitute circumstances, but this condition is now rendered helpless owing to the death of my son.

"Under these circumstances I pray that this Court will have pity upon my unfortunate condition and order my discharge."

Scott, for the applicant:—He relied on the affidavits and referred to ss. 492 and 499 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882); the Debtors Act, 1869, s. 4 (Stat. 32 and 33 Vic., 62); In re Davies (1).

JUDGMENT.

FARRAN, J.—My thanks are due to Mr. Scott for his temperate and concise argument in this matter. It is an application on the part of the defendant Gangji Akhai to be released from custody. The suit was an administration suit to administer an estate which was in the hands of Gangji Akhai as executor of the testator, and in it on the 1st September, 1890, an order was made appointing a receiver and restraining Gangji Akhai from further intermeddling with the estate. This order directed that Gangji Akhai should (inter alia) deliver to the receiver the Government promissory notes mentioned in his inventory, which were of the nominal value of Rs. 45,000. My recollection of the circumstances under which that order was made is that Gangji Akhai endeavoured to show that Nenbai and not he had the notes in question in her possession, and did not suggest that the notes had been then parted with. I was convinced upon the affidavits, that Gangji Akhai had the notes and not the lady. He did not deliver the notes to the receiver, and on the 16th March, 1891, I made absolute a rule that a writ of attachment should issue against him, he not obeying the order in that particular. Gangji Akhai did not appear on that occasion though he had been personally served with the rule nisi, and the rule was made absolute in his absence.

The ground for making the order was that Gangji Akhai was contumaciously refusing to obey the order to hand over the notes. This order issued in the usual form, and I am not prepared to say that it issued in a wrong form, or that the imprisonment under it should have been directed for a particular period. Where the act of contempt is done, and cannot be undone, I agree that the more modern and probably the more correct course is to direct the imprisonment to continue for a definite period only —In re Davies (1). But where the object of the confinement is to enforce compliance with an order in the future, I think that it might frequently defeat the purpose of the order to limit it to a definite period. In many cases the litigant [156] in contempt might elect to undergo the term of imprisonment in preference to obeying the order. The defendant, when the commitment is for the purpose of enforcing an order in the future, on obeying the order would be entitled to his discharge at once, or rather would obtain it as of course, subject to any order as to costs which the Judge might think fit to make.

After this order was made, the receiver discovered that Gangji Akhai had between June and December, 1889, deposited Government promissory notes for Rs. 45,000—no doubt the notes in question—with the Bank of Bombay to secure advances made to him, and that the Bank had sold them in June, 1890, to liquidate the debt. Had Gangji Akhai stated that fact when the receiver order was made in September, 1890, that order would have been couched in different terms. But his statement would have rendered him liable to a criminal prosecution. To avoid this he endeavoured to shift the possession of the notes on Nenbai, and did not even suggest that they were no longer available. The Court was, therefore, led by his false and misleading affidavits to make the order in the form which it assumed.

Before the contempt order was made absolute, Gangji Akhai had absconded. The receiver on learning what Gangji Akhai had done with the notes laid an information under which he was arrested and brought to Bombay; and on or about the 23rd of April, 1891, he was convicted of criminal breach of trust of the notes in question, and sentenced to eighteen months' rigorous imprisonment. On the 9th of the same month he had been committed to jail for contempt of the Court's order of the 16th March, 1891. He was, therefore, in jail under his sentence and the commitment order at the same time. Previous to this, on the 15th January, 1891, the suit had been referred to the Commissioner to take the accounts of the administration of the estate of the testator from the defendant Gangji Akhai, the order for the receiver so far as it related to Gangji Akhai being continued.

The Commissioner made his report, which was not excepted to, and was confirmed by the Court. It found the sum of Rs. 80,000 due to the estate from Gangji Akhai, and in pursuance of its terms the Court on the 4th October, 1892, passed [157] a decree against Gangji Akhai in favour of the plaintiff for that sum and costs. It did not decree, as in fact under the circumstances it could not, the specific return of the Rs. 45,000 Government promissory notes, but was a simple money decree for Rs. 80,000. Under it the receiver's appointment was continued. The sentence passed on Gangji Akhai expired on the 23rd October, 1892.

On the 15th December, 1892, Gangji Akhai by counsel moved before Starling, J., for his release. His affidavit expressed contrition for his conduct, and stated that with certain exceptions he had no property. This application was refused apparently on the ground that the Court was not satisfied that Gangji was not concealing property, part of the proceeds of the Government promissory notes for Rs. 45,000, or that it was satisfied that he was concealing such property. A similar application made before the same learned Judge on the 10th August, 1893, upon the same grounds shared the same fate. The ground upon which I conclude that the learned Judge proceeded, was that Gangji Akhai had not under these circumstances sufficiently purged his contempt.

On Monday last, counsel for Gangji Akhai again before me applied for his release. I took time to consider the application, as it was opposed by the Advocate General as well as by Nenbai's counsel, and because I considered it to be a case of grave importance upon which another Judge had already expressed his opinion in a sense contrary to my own.

Upon the facts which I have stated, I consider that Gangji Akhai is entitled to his release. The right of the plaintiff to demand the promissory notes from Gangji Akhai is now merged in the money decree. The right to demand the notes is gone, and the order, therefore, that Gangji Akhai do deliver the notes to the receiver has ceased to be operative. The commitment in so far as it was intended to enforce obedience to the order of 1st September, 1890, can no longer be continued on that ground. Even if the order to deliver the notes could be treated as an order to replace the proceeds or value of the notes with the [158] estate—and I do not think that it can be so treated—still it is the decree now, and not the order, which constitutes the measure of the obligation between the parties. That is a simple money decree, and it appears to me to be contrary to the expressly declared will of the Legislature and to all modern principle and precedent to keep a defendant under commitment for contempt to compel him to pay a money decree. It does not, I think, alter the case that the Court is led to infer that the defendant has concealed property in his possession. Neither by torture nor by dread of perpetual imprisonment, which is torture, ought the Court to enforce its decree. The modes in which a decree can be enforced are pointed out in the Civil Procedure Code, and this is not one of them.

If the attachment order is regarded as a punishment for the offence of the defendant Gangji Akhai in not having delivered up the Government promissory notes or (to read the order in a very extended sense) their value, the punishment should be commensurate with the offence. Imprisonment under it cannot be indefinite—In re Davies,(1). The Civil Procedure Code (XIV of 1882) s. 493, is an indication by the Legislature of the length to which such imprisonment should extend, viz., six months. Here Gangji Akhai has been in jail under the commitment order for more than twenty months. His offence, however, in this particular case really consisted in his criminal breach of trust. For that he has suffered the punishment to which he was sentenced. I should not be justified in indirectly adding to its duration.

I have not entered upon a consideration of the question which determined Mr. Justice Starling in refusing to release the applicant—the question whether or not Gangji Akhai is concealing property. Upon such a question all Courts are necessarily liable to error. If I had the power to continue the imprisonment because I consider that the applicant is concealing property, which I have held that I have not, I should hesitate to exercise it in the face of the inference to be drawn from the want of the effect of the imprisonment already undergone by the applicant in inducing him directly or indirectly to produce the concealed property—an imprisonment which the orders already [159] made in this matter must have led the applicant to fear might be perpetual.

There must be for these reasons an order for the release of the applicant.

CASE stated for the opinion of the High Court under s. 69 of the Presidency Small Cause Courts Act (XV of 1882) by C. W. Chitty, Chief Judge.—

"1. This was a suit brought by the plaintiffs to recover from the defendant company a sum of Rs. 672-14-6, being the value of a parcel of Rs. 700 in cash, consigned by the plaintiffs from Sangli to Bombay, which the defendant company failed to deliver, less a sum of Rs. 27-1-6 paid to the plaintiff in respect thereof by the Police Superintendent of the defendant company.

"2. The facts of the case together with the reasons for my decision are fully set out in my judgment delivered on the 4th July, 1894, of which a copy is hereto annexed, and to which for brevity's sake I crave leave to refer.

"3. The questions of law which I beg to submit for their Lordships' consideration are as follows :—

"(i) Whether the words 'loss, deterioration or destruction of the parcel' contained in s. 75 of the Indian Railways Act, 1890, include loss caused by the criminal misappropriation of the parcel by a servant of the railway administration in charge thereof ?

"(ii) Whether under s. 75 it is necessary that both value and contents of a parcel (if over Rs. 100 in value) should be declared before the railway administration can be held liable in respect thereof ?

"(iii) Whether the plaintiffs have satisfied the requirements of s. 75 by paying for the parcel in question the special rate required by cl. 50 of the defendant company's rules (p. 47 of Ex. I) to be paid for the carriage of treasure, &c. ?

"(iv) Whether the percentage on the value, mentioned in s. 75 which the consignor is, if required by the administration, [161] to pay or engage to pay by way of compensation for increased risk, is equivalent to insurance as prescribed by the company's bye-laws and rules ?

"4. The suit was dismissed by me subject to the opinion of their Lordships on the above questions. The plaintiff has deposited in Court the professional costs Rs. 51 awarded against him together with Rs. 50 to meet the costs of reference."

the value of such articles in the parcel or package exceeds one hundred rupees, the railway administration shall not be responsible for the loss, destruction or deterioration of the parcel or package, unless the person sending or delivering the parcel or package to the administration caused its value and contents to be declared or declared them at the time of the delivery of the parcel or package for carriage by railway, and, if so required by the administration, paid or engaged to pay a percentage on the value so declared by way of compensation for increased risk.

"(2) When any parcel or package of which the value has been declared under sub-s. (1) has been lost or destroyed or has deteriorated, the compensation recoverable in respect of such loss, destruction or deterioation shall not exceed the value so declared, and the burden of proving the value so declared to have been the true value shall, notwithstanding anything in the declaration, lie on the person claiming the compensation.

"(3) A railway administration may make it a condition of carrying a parcel declared to contain any article mentioned in the second schedule that a railway servant authorized in this behalf has been satisfied, by examination or otherwise, that the parcel actually contains the article declared to be therein."

Clause 50 referred to in the third question was as follows. It was contained in the company's book of rates, and laid down the following regulation with regard to the carriage of specie :—

"50. Specie.—(a) Treasure including specie, bullion, gold and silver coin, jewellery, trinkets, plate, &c., shall be carried at the following rates, viz. :—

	Pies per maund per mile.
Up to 27 maunds	$2\frac{1}{2}$
Above 27 and up to 81 maunds	2
81 do. 270 "	$1\frac{1}{2}$
Over 270 maunds	1

Provided that the charge for any quantity shall not be less than that for a smaller quantity according to the above scale.

"Insurance Rates.

"54. Goods or Parcels. (a) The rates for insurance of goods, parcels, &c., shall be as follows :—

"Gold and silver and other excepted articles—2 annas per 100 miles or fraction of 100 miles.

"Subject to a maximum of one per cent.

"(b) The insurance shall in no case be less than two rupees for the whole distance."

The judgment of the Chief Judge of the Small Cause Court dismissing the suit was as follows :—

JUDGMENT.—This is a suit brought by the plaintiffs to recover from the defendant company a sum of Rs. 672-14-6, the value of a parcel containing Rs. 700 consigned from Sangli to Bombay by the last plaintiff Ramchandra Dayaram, which parcel the defendant company failed to deliver, but on account of which they have paid to the plaintiffs Rs. 27-1-6.

This is a case of some importance so far as it deals with the responsibility of a railway administration under the Indian Railways Act, 1890.

The facts, except as to what took place with regard to the declaration of the parcel, are not in dispute. On the 9th June, 1891, the plaintiff Ramchandra Dayaram wished to consign a parcel of Rs. 700 from Sangli (where his firm is carried on in the name of Raghunath Ramchandra) to Bombay. He accordingly sent the box containing the rupees by his man Ganu Rendala to one Ramchandra Ganesh at Sangli Station. It [162] appears that Ramchandra Ganesh is a mukadam and does consignment business at Sangli for various merchants. Ramchandra Ganesh tendered the parcel to the assistant station master, who asked him what it contained, to which he replied rupees in cash. Ramchandra Ganesh also stated before me that he had told the station master the amount. This was not till he had been recalled and the question put to him by the Court. On consideration of the whole evidence I am inclined to think that nothing at all was said as to the value of the parcel ; that no question was put by the assistant station master as to that, but that he merely enquired the contents and made out the various documents as for a parcel of silver coin weighing 10 seers. The charge made was fifteen annas, in accordance with the rates prescribed for treasure, which charge was paid by Ramchandra Ganesh. The assistant station master, it is true, states that he asked Ramchandra what was the value of the parcel and that Ramchandra replied that he did not know. I do not feel disposed to accept this statement as accurate. It is improbable that the assistant station master would recollect exactly what was said more than three years ago. I think it more probable that it never occurred to either the assistant station master or Ramchandra to think of the value, and that the parcel was despatched in what appears to have been the usual way, namely, on payment of the higher rates required for treasure, but without insurance. The parcel was duly handed to the guard of the train by name Belcher. On the arrival of the train at Poona no such parcel was delivered by the guard, and of course it never reached its destination at Bombay. Some days later, in consequence of its non-arrival, enquiries were made, and it ultimately appeared that the parcel had been stolen by Belcher. He was subsequently put on his trial in respect of the theft, to which he pleaded guilty, and was sentenced to a term of imprisonment which he is still undergoing. The Police Superintendent of the defendant company was returned to the plaintiffs a sum of Rs. 27-1-6 the proceeds of sale of Belcher's effects. It was admitted by the plaintiff's pleader that the plaintiff considered that he had no remedy against the defendant company, but in consequence of the decision of Starling, J., reported at I. L. R., 17 B. 723, he was induced to file this suit.

The defendant company raised three defences; (i) that the goods not having been properly declared, the company are not liable under s. 75 of the Indian Railways Act, 1890; (ii) that if the goods were so declared, the company took such care of the same as was required by ss. 151 and 152 of the Indian Contract Act; (iii) that the parcel did not contain Rs. 700.

As to the third defence, the statement of Ramchandra Dayaram, that he saw the Rs. 700 put into the box and sent to the station, stands uncontradicted, and I see no reason for supposing that the parcel did not contain the number of rupees alleged.

As to the second defence, I think that there can be no doubt whatever that the defendant company have not discharged the onus which lay upon them of showing that they had fulfilled the duties of a bailee as laid down in s. 151 of the Indian Contract Act. So far from proving that they have, by the admissions of their own witness Mr. Lindsay, who gave his evidence most fairly and candidly, shown that they acted in this matter as, in my opinion, no prudent man could possibly have acted. In the first place, they engaged this guard Belcher and put him in a position of trust without making any enquiries as to his character and antecedents. [163] Inquiries were then instituted, and although they almost immediately found therefrom that he had been dismissed from the employ of the Indian Midland Railway Company for criminal breach of trust, for which he had suffered six months imprisonment; though they found that subsequently he had left his employment under the Bengal-Nagpur Railway Company under circumstances which, to say the least, imputed to him serious neglect of duty, they nevertheless kept him on and allowed him to remain in a position where the highest integrity was necessary. The only reason for so doing seems to be that they were much in need of guards, and thought that Belcher might be able to clear his character. As these facts were known to the defendant company in May, 1891, and the theft occurred in June, I am strongly of opinion that in this case the defendant company cannot shelter themselves under the provisions of the Indian Contract Act by saying that they have acted in this case as a prudent man would have acted.

Chitty's S.C.C.R. 422.

I now come to the consideration of the first issue. This turns upon the interpretation of s. 75 of the Indian Railways Act, 1890. I may, however, first deal with the argument of the plaintiffs' pleader that that section cannot absolve the defendant company where the loss, deterioration or destruction has been caused by the criminal act of one of its own servants. It is certainly noteworthy that the words "in any case" which occurred in the corresponding section of the Act of 1854, and which were the subject of judicial interpretation in I. L. R. 5 Mad. 208 (Venkatachala v. Southern India Railway Company) do not occur in this section, but then again there seems to be nothing in the Act as it at present stands to except the case of the loss, &c., occurring in consequence of negligence or misconduct of the company's servants, and to say that in such cases responsibility shall attach. I think, therefore, the section must be taken to cover all cases of losses, destruction, deterioration of parcels under whatever circumstances. Nor, I think, can much importance be attached to the argument of Mr. Manchashankar that there was no loss of the parcel in this case. It was lost to the defendant company and to the plaintiffs, and I do not think it can be said not to be so loss because an employe of the company made away with it.

Then I come to the final question whether these goods were properly declared. Having regard to the evidence, I am unable—and I regret that I am unable—to find that they were so declared. The section distinctly stated that the person delivering the package to the administration must cause the "value and contents" to be declared, or declare them. Now here no value was declared. The declaration of the value has become a far more important incident under this new Act, inasmuch as the consignor must give the administration the opportunity of claiming a percentage on the value declared by way of compensation for increased risk. Unless the value be declared, the percentage cannot be ascertained or asked for. I think, therefore, that the declaration of the value must be regarded as a condition precedent to the attaching of the responsibility of the defendant company. I do not think it would be obligatory on the defendant company to enquire what the value was. This must, it appears, be declared by the sender. In this respect the wording of the Act has been changed; and it seems to me that this case is so far distinguishable from that decided by Starling, J. I do not think that under this section it is enough to declare the contents and pay the higher rates as laid down [164] for treasure. The administration must also have the opportunity of demanding a percentage. It is not for me here to rule on the rights of the defendant company to fix the rates or make byelaws, but I may mention that byelaw 26, which purports to be an abstract of the Indian Railways Act, 1890, s. 75, gives anything but a correct view of the provisions of that section, and the degree of responsibility or exemption from responsibility attaching to the company under it.

As I said, I regret to come to this conclusion, as it seems to me to be a case where the defendant company ought, if possible, to be made responsible. As both parties wish the case to go to the High Court, I make my judgment contingent on the opinion of their Lordships. That judgment is that the suit be dismissed, and Rs. 51 certified as costs of the defendant company.

GREAT INDIAN PENINSULA RAILWAY COMPANY (Original Defendants), Appellants v. RAISETT CHANDMULL, AND ANOTHER, (Original Plaintiffs), *Respondents. [28th September, 1894 and 1st March, 1895.]

Railway Company—Indian Railway Act (IV of 1879), s. 11—Loss of goods—Liability of Company—Declaration of value and nature of goods and payment of increased charge—Limitation Act (XV of 1877), sch. II, art. 30.

In January, 1890, a box containing rupees was delivered by the plaintiffs to the defendant company in Bombay to be carried to Saugor. From the evidence it appeared that the plaintiffs did not intend to insure the box. The box was taken to the booking office at the station, and the parcel clerk asked what it contained, and was told that it contained coin, and he learnt casually that the amount was Rs. 6,000. The clerk charged Rs. 18 1-0 for the box, which was the "treasure rate" for carriage. This sum was paid and the box was duly despatched, but was lost or stolen in the course of transit. The plaintiffs sued to recover the Rs. 6,000. The defendants contended that, having regard to the provisions of s. 11 of Act IV of 1879, they were not liable, inasmuch as (1) the contents of the box had not been duly disclosed, nor (2) had an increased charge been paid. The plaintiffs obtained a decree in the lower Court. On appeal, Held (reversing the decree) that the defendant company was not liable—

(1) Because there was no sufficient declaration of the value of the contents of the box.

(2) Because the sum paid by the plaintiffs for the carriage of the box was the ordinary charge for treasure, and was not the increased charge which under s. 11 of Act IV of 1879 should have paid in order to make the company liable.

(3) Per BAYLEY., J.—That the claim of the plaintiffs was one against the defendants for compensation for losing goods, and fell within art. 30 of sch. II of the Limitation Act (XV of 1877) and that as this suit was not brought until after the expiration of two years from the date of the loss it was barred by limitation.

APPEAL by the defendants from a decree passed by Starling, J. (1).

The plaintiffs filed this suit in December 1892, to recover Rs. 6,000 from the defendants, being the value of a box delivered to them at Bombay to be carried by them to Saugor, but which had been lost.

The plaintiffs alleged that the box in question contained Rs. 6,000, and that on the 3rd January. 1890, they delivered it to the defendants, consigned to Raghunathdas Hamirmull at Saugor.

[166] The box weighed over two maunds, and was duly sealed and addressed both in English and Marathi.

Saugor is a station on the Indian Midland Railway, about 654 miles from Bombay, and is the terminus of a branch line running from Bina junction on the main line of the said railway midway between Bhopal and Jhansi.

The question raised in this appeal was whether, having regard to the provisions of s. 11 of Act IV of 1879(2), the defendants were liable for the loss of the box. The defendants contended that they were not liable, inasmuch as (1) the contents of the box had not been duly declared, nor (2) had an increased charge been paid.

A book setting forth the rates charged for different classes of goods was put in evidence. These rates were stated under different headings. The following passages from this book were referred to in argument :—

"18. Parcels.—The rates for parcels are :—" (Then followed a table setting forth the rates.)

"Fish, fruit, vegetables, bazar baskets, meat in small quantities (not more than 20 seers) are charged at half parcels rates at owner's risk, subject to a minimum of two annas, &c., &c.

"20. Carriages" (rates set forth).

"23 Dogs" (rates set forth).

"34 Eggs.—Baskets of eggs are charged at ordinary parcels rate on actual weight.

[167] "35. Butter.—In baskets booked to Byculla by passenger train from all stations are charged at 3rd class goods rate at owner's risk.

"Opium.—(a) When more than one ton is sent as one consignment, the whole consignment should be charged for at the parcels rates upon the total aggregate weight and upon each package. These charges are at the owner's risk in each case. For the insurance charges, see cl. (c) of this paragraph.

10. Every agreement purporting to limit the obligation or responsibility imposed on a carrier by railway by the Indian Contract Act, 1872, ss. 151 and 161, in the case of loss, destruction or deterioration of, or damage to, property shall, in so far as it purports to limit such obligation or responsibility, be void unless —

(a) it is in writing signed by, or on behalf of, the person sending or delivering such property, and

(b) is otherwise in a form approved by the Governor General in Council.

11. When any property mentioned in the second schedule hereto annexed is contained in any parcel or package delivered to a carrier by railway, the carrier shall not be liable for loss, destruction or deterioration of, or damage to, such property, unless at the time of delivery the value and nature thereof have been declared by the person sending or delivering the same, and an increased charge for the safe conveyance of the same or an engagement to pay such charge has been accepted by some railway servant specially authorized in this behalf.

When any property, of which the value and nature have been declared under this section, has been lost, destroyed or damaged, or has deteriorated, the compensation recoverable for such loss, destruction, damage or deterioration shall not exceed the value so declared.

"40. Insurance charges.—The following are the rates and rules for the insurance of goods, live-stock, parcels, treasure, &c.

"(2) Insurance charges are made in addition to the ordinary charges for the conveyance of treasure, parcels, goods, horses, &c., and must always be prepaid. The contents of packages which are insured must always be examined.

"(3) The Railway Company is not responsible, whether they are insured or not, for damage to horses arising from fright or restiveness, nor for damage to horses or other articles of any kind which may be caused by delays to trains.

"(4) Station Masters are authorized to insure both locally, and through with other railways, articles and animals of any kind (opium and horses only excepted) up to the value of five hundred rupees. Applications for the insurance of articles and animals (except opium and horses) valued at more than five hundred rupees, should be referred to the District Traffic Superintendents at Bombay, Sholapur, [168] Bhusawal, Jabalpur and Nagpur, and Assistant District Traffic Superintendent, Manmar, the Goods Traffic Inspector, Wari Bandar, the Goods Superintendent, the Passenger Superintendent or to the General Traffic Manager, Victoria Terminus.

* * * * *

"Subject to the condition that when the insurance charge for an article valued at more than five thousand rupees comes to less than the charge for five thousand rupees (that is 50 Rs.), the latter charge is made. For instance, for an article valued at six thousand rupees the charge for insurance will be fifty, not thirty rupees."

The evidence given at the hearing as to the despatch of the plaintiff's box of specie from the Byculla Station at Bombay was as follows:—The manager (Motilal Panalal) of the plaintiff's firm said:—

"Another man Buria came and packed them in a box in my presence. The bags were each tied up with string when I received them from the currency office, and were not opened on the road to the shop. Each of the bags was weighed before I received them. The bags were not opened before they were packed. When they were packed, the lid of the box was nailed down, and the box was covered with gunny cloth sewn up; and seals were placed along the seams, and the box addressed to the consignee at Saugor. Then it was taken in a carriage by me and Buria to Byculla Station. On the road to the station the box was not interfered with in any way. We arrived at Byculla Station about 7 P.M., and the box was taken to the booking office, and Buria told the parcel clerk that the box contained three bags containing Rs. 2,000 each. It was weighed, and showed 2 maunds and 5 seers. Then I asked the clerk to take the money for carriage and give me a bill. I paid him what he asked, and he gave me a receipt. This is it.

"I paid Rs. 18-1-0, which was the amount he asked for. That was all that took place. The box was addressed to Raghunathdas Hamirmul, Saugor. It was written on the gunny with ink."

Buria, who was also examined, said:—

"I and Motilal took the box in a carriage to the Byculla Station where I placed it on the scale in the parcel's office. The box and its contents were then in the same condition as when it left the shop. I told the clerk the box contained three bags, each containing Rs. 2,000. This is the man (Fonseca). I told him the box was to go to Saugor, and that he should charge what he pleased. The clerk then asked me to shake the box, which I did, and the rupees jingled. Afterwards Motilal paid the money and we got a receipt, and then returned home." . . . .

"When we arrived at the station, the clerk asked what was in the box. I did not say the box contained silver (chandi). The clerk did not ask if we wished to insure. We had Rs. 20 or 25 with us to pay for the carriage of the box. I do not remember whether it was more than Rs. 25, as Motilal had the money."

For the defendants the assistant parcel clerk (C. M. Fonseca) at the Byculla Station was examined. He said:—

[169] "I recollect the parcel being brought. There were three persons who brought it, Motilal and Buria being two of them. When they brought it, I asked them what it contained and they said 'chandi rokra.' They then said they wanted it despatched to Saugor. I then wrote the receipt, charging the carriage at treasure rate. They gave me some money. I gave them the change and they went away. The parcel was put into the brake by the mukadam, with the label on it. It went by the mail train. We do not get a receipt from the mukadam. This is the counterfoil. I had often specie before from these very persons; they never had insured their specie."

The defendants' traffic manager (H. Conder) gave evidence as follows:—

"There is an ordinary rate for parcels and an ordinary rate for carrying treasure apart from insurance; the insurance is extra.

"We have a working agreement with the Indian Midland Railway Company, and we had it in January, 1890. The conversation I had with these people was in English; one could speak English, and the other I think could not. My impression is that we spoke of silver all the time, not specie. A larger rate is charged for carriage of treasure at owner's risk than for ordinary parcels at company's risk. We charge it because it is more valuable, and there are many other articles of a valuable nature for which we charge higher than ordinary rates, some being carried at company's risk and some at owner's. Everything that goes by a passenger train is given into charge of the guard.

"We do not accept treasure at all at any rate lower than the rate charged in this case."

The Traffic Inspector (C. Bedford) stated as follows :—

"I have checked the charge of Rs. 18-1-0 in all on this parcel with the weight as described on the counterfoil of the weigh bill. It is $2\frac{1}{2}$ pies per maund per mile multiplied by 651 miles, the distance from Byculla to Saugor, and multiplied by $2\frac{1}{8}$ maunds, the weight of the parcel. That calculation is in accordance with Rule 39 at p. 66 of No. 10 (coaching tariff book.) The insurance which would have been payable, assuming the box to contain Rs. 6,000, would amount to Rs. 52-8-0 according to the rule on p. 68. The ordinary parcel rate for such a box if it did not contain treasure would have been Rs. 9. If the clerk had been told that the box contained Rs. 6,000 he would not have been at liberty to insure it, but would have had to apply to the station master, and he would have had to apply to the District Traffic Superintendent, as provided by Rule 4 at p. 68. Uninsured treasure is at owner's risk—Rule 5, p. 67.

"The extra rate is not charged that extra care may be taken. The Railway Company do nothing for it but carry."

Starling, J., held that the company were liable, and gave judgment for the plaintiffs (see I. L. R., 17 Bom. 723).

The defendants appealed.

[170] Lang (Advocate General) and Kirkpatrick, for the appellants (defendants) :—The company have power within certain limits to prescribe the rates at which they will carry goods on the railway. (See Government Gazette, 30th April, 1868.) They have accordingly within those limits fixed certain ordinary rates which vary for different kinds of goods, e.g., there is an ordinary charge for parcels generally, an ordinary charge for opium, and an ordinary charge for treasure, &c. But where only this ordinary charge is paid for treasure, &c., the company is expressly exempted from liability by s. 11 of Act IV of 1879. That section fixes the company with liability only where an "increased charge" is paid. The question here, therefore, is whether the payment made for the plaintiffs' box was the "ordinary charge" or the "increased charge." We contend that it was the former and not the latter, and that, therefore, the company is not liable. Section 11 empowers the company to make an "increased charge," and the company by its rules has declared that the increased charge shall be the "insurance charge." There is nothing in the Act to prevent the company from doing this so long as the charge is within the prescribed limits. The "increased charge" means not an increase upon the ordinary charge for parcels generally, but an increase upon the ordinary charge for treasure. The fact that this latter charge for treasure is higher than the charge for parcels, does not make it an "increased charge." The parcels rate is not the standard by which all other charges are measured. The ordinary "treasure charge" has no relation to the charge for "parcels," and the "increase" spoken of in the section means an increase upon the ordinary treasure charge, and not (as contended by the plaintiffs) a higher rate than the charge for parcels. The Court below has erred in assuming that the rate prescribed for "parcels" is the standard by which all the other rates are to be measured. The plaintiffs' goods were not insured. There was no application to the officer authorized to insure, and no proper declaration. The suit, moreover, is barred by limitation. The following authorities were cited :—Act IV of 1879; Act XVIII of 1854, s. 10; Indian Contract Act IX of 1872, s. 151; Stat. 11 Geo. IV and 1 Will. IV, c. 68; Secretary of State for India v. Budhu Nath (1); Behrens [171] v. Great Northern Railway Co. (2); Venkatachala v. South Indian Railway Co. (3); Robinson v. The South-Western Railway Co. (4); Great Western Railway Company v. McCarthy (5); Irrawady Flotilla Co. v. Bugwandass (6). As to limitation, the Limitation Act (XV of 1877), sch. II, arts. 30 and 115; Mohansing v. Henry Conder (7); British India Steam Navigation Co. v. Hajee Mahomed Esack and Co. (8); Danmull v. British India Steam Navigation Co. (9).

Inverarity and Scott, for the respondents (plaintiffs):—The Court below was right in holding the defendants liable as bailees. We adopt the argument in the judgment, which was this:—Act IV of 1879, s. 10, imposes upon a railway company the liability of a bailee upon all articles carried. But by s. 11 in the case of silver, &c., that liability does not attach unless an "increased charge" is paid. Upon such payment being made, that liability (i. e. of a bailee) attaches. That increased charge is plainly not an insurance charge, but merely the further charge necessary to impose the ordinary liability of a bailee upon the company for excepted articles which would rest upon it for other goods without any such increased charge. The company cannot decline all responsibility for treasure, &c., unless it is insured. But it is contended that they have done this by their rules. They contend that in order to make them liable for treasure, it must be insured, that is to say, that they have power to require two increased charges, viz., first an higher charge for carriage only, the payment of which, however, imposes no liability at all upon them, and secondly, a further higher charge which imposes upon them the liability of insurers. The Act does not sanction this. It contemplates that without insuring they must carry treasure and other excepted articles as bailees with the liability of bailees just as they carry ordinary goods, but for the excepted articles they may under s. 11 make a further or "increased" charge. We rely on Chogemul v. Commissioner, &c., of the Port of Calcutta (10). As to limitation, this suit is not barred. All the authorities will be found in Kalu Ram v. The Madras [172] Railway Company (11) and Hassaji v. The East Indian Railway Company (12). As to the declaration of these goods, we rely on Bradbury v. Sutton (13).

JUDGMENT.

BAYLEY, C.J. (ACTING):—The plaintiffs, who carry on business in Bombay as shroffs and commission agents, state in their plaint that on or about the 3rd January, 1890, they delivered to the defendants at their station at Byculla a box containing Rs. 6,000 to be carried to Saugor, a station on the Indian Midland Railway. The box was consigned to one Raghunathdas Hamirmull at Saugor and weighed 2 maunds and 5 seers, and was sealed with the plaintiffs' seal and addressed to the consignee in the English and Marwadi languages, and that on the delivery of the box the plaintiffs were handed the railway receipt dated 3rd January, 1890.

The plaint then states that at the time of the delivery of the box to defendants' servant at Byculla the nature and value thereof were duly declared and an increased charge over and above the charges for ordinary parcels was paid to the defendants for the carriage thereof, and the defendants agreed to carry the same to Saugor. The plaintiffs say that the defendants were bound to take such care of the box and its contents as a prudent man would have taken of his own goods of similar nature and value; that the box was not delivered to the consignee at Saugor, but a box weighing 33 to 36 seers only was tendered to him there, the box being in a broken and damaged condition, and the consignee refused to accept the same. And the plaintiffs say that the non-delivery of the box was a breach of their contract on the part of the defendants; that correspondence thereupon ensued, and on the 8th May, 1890, the defendants' traffic manager wrote to the plaintiffs (Ex. 9) stating that no trace could be discovered of the box containing Rs. 6,000 either on the defendants' or on the Indian Midland Railway.

With regard to the contentions raised by the defendants' manager in his letters, viz., that the defendants are not liable as the box and its contents were not insured, the plaintiffs say that an increased charge for the carriage of the box [173] and its contents on and above the charges for their carriage of ordinary parcels was paid to them; that no intimation was given to them that such increased charge was not for the insurance of the box and its contents; that they were always ready and willing and would have paid any further sum had they been informed that such further sum was required for the insurance of the box and its contents, and that the contention so raised by the defendants' manager is unsustainable.

The plaint then alleges that all conditions have been fulfilled and all things been done to entitle plaintiffs to recover the value of the box and its contents from the defendants and interest on the said sum of Rs. 6,000, and the plaintiffs pray that the defendants may be ordered to pay as compensation for the said breach of contract Rs. 6,010, being Rs. 6,000 the contents of the box delivered by the plaintiffs to defendants to be carried to Saugor and Rs. 10 the value of the box but which have been wholly lost to the plaintiffs, and which were not carried and delivered by the defendants in accordance with their contract with the plaintiffs. There is a prayer also for interest on Rs 6,000 at 6 per cent. from the 3rd January, 1890, to judgment together with the costs of the suit and interest on the judgment at 6 per cent., and for such further and other relief as the nature of the case may require.

The defendants in their written statement admit that a parcel which was stated by the consignor to contain specie was delivered to the defendants on the 3rd January, 1890, at their Byculla Station to be carried to Saugor. They deny that at the time of the delivery of the parcel the value thereof was declared, or that an increased charge was paid for the carriage thereof, and allege that only the ordinary rate for carriage of treasure at owner's risk calculated on the weight of the parcel was charged, and an increased charge for the safe conveyance of the parcel was not charged or paid, nor was any engagement to pay such increased charge entered into with the defendants, and they submit that under the provisions of s. 11 of Act IV of 1879 they are not liable to the plaintiffs in respect of the loss of the contents of the parcel.

[174] The defendants then say that if the parcel when delivered to them in fact contained specie, the parcel was lost or stolen while in course of transit to Saugor or at the Saugor Station, or its contents were stolen in such transit or at the Saugor Station, and earth and iron sledge hammer heads were placed in it instead of the specie. That a parcel afterwards found to contain earth and iron sledge hammer heads addressed to Raghunathdas Hamirmull arrived at Saugor on or about the 5th January, 1890, but the consignee refused to accept it. Diligent search was made for the said specie, but no portion thereof had been found, nor had any parcel, except that containing earth and hammer heads, been found. The defendants submit that they are in no way liable to the plaintiffs for the loss of the said specie, and they further submit that the plaintiffs' claim is barred by limitation, and that the suit should be dismissed with costs.

The following issues were framed at the hearing :—

1. Whether the parcel delivered to the defendants contained specie to the extent alleged in the plaint?

2. Whether at the time of the delivery to the defendants of the parcel referred to in para. 1 of the plaint the value thereof was declared?

3. Whether the charge paid to the defendants for the carriage of the said parcel was not the ordinary rate for the carriage of uninsured treasure?

4. Whether the said parcel was not carried by the defendants at the owner's risk?

5. Whether the said parcel was not lost or stolen in the course of transit as alleged in para. 4 of the written statement?

6. Whether this suit is barred by limitation?

7. Whether the plaintiffs are entitled to recover from the defendants the sum claimed, or any and what part thereof?

The learned Judge in the Court below held that the suit was not barred by limitation, and that the defendants were liable to the plaintiffs, and he passed a decree for the plaintiffs for Rs. 6,000 and by way of damages for the non-delivery of the parcel, [175] and awarded the plaintiffs interest at 6 per cent. on such amount from the 6th January, 1890, until judgment (7th August, 1893), together with the costs of suit and interest on the judgment at 6 per cent. The defendants appealed against such decree, and the appeal was argued before us on the 20th, 21st and 28th September last, when the Court reserved its judgment.

The principal questions argued before us were whether the requirements imposed by s. 11 of Act IV of 1879 upon consignors of treasure and other valuable articles had been complied with by the plaintiffs; whether the defendants upon the facts disclosed by the evidence were exempted from all liability in regard to the Rs. 6,000 which were proved to have been in the parcel when it was delivered to their servants at the Byculla Station; and whether the suit was barred by limitation.

I will first consider whether the value and nature of the property contained in the parcel were duly declared at the Byculla Station as required by s. 11 of "The Indian Railway Act of 1879" (Act IV 1879), which was the Act in force in January, 1890.

Section 11 of that Act enacts that "when any property mentioned in the second schedule hereto annexed is contained in any parcel or package delivered to a carrier by railway, the carrier shall not be liable for loss, destruction or deterioration of or damage to such property unless at the time of delivery the value and nature thereof have been declared by the person sending or delivering the same, and an increased charge for the safe conveyance of the same, or an engagement to pay such charge has been accepted by some railway servant specially authorized in this behalf.

"When any property, of which the value and nature have been declared under this section, has been lost, destroyed or damaged or has deteriorated, the compensation recoverable for such loss, destruction, damage or deterioration shall not exceed the value so declared." That section is based upon and in part copied from s. 10 of the Indian Railway Act XVIII of 1854.

ORIGINAL CIVIL.

19 B. 165.

The English Carrier's Act 11 Geo. IV and 1 Will. IV, c. 68, s. 1, provided that mail contractors, stage-coach proprietors [176] or other common carriers by land for hire should not be liable for the loss of certain specified goods above the value of £ 10, unless at the time of the delivery thereof the value and nature of such article or property shall have been declared by the person sending or delivering the same, and such increased charge as thereinafter (i.e., in s. 2) mentioned or an engagement to pay the same be accepted by the person receiving such parcel or package; and in s. 2 such increased charge is stated to be "required to be paid over and above the ordinary rate of carriage as a compensation for the greater risk and care to be taken for the safe conveyance of such valuable articles." Section 3 of the Act states that carriers are, if thereto required, to give receipts acknowledging that the increased rate of charge has been paid, and "sign a receipt for the package or parcel acknowledging the same to have been insured," and if such receipt be not given when required, the carrier "shall not have or be entitled to any benefit or advantage under this Act, but shall be liable and responsible as at the common law, and be liable to refund the increased rate of charge."

In Baxendale v. Hart (1), which was a decision of the Court of Exchequer Chamber upon s. 1 of the English Carrier's Act just cited, it was held that the person who sends or delivers the parcel containing any of the valuable articles mentioned in that section must take the first step by giving that information as to its contents to the carrier which he alone can give, and if he does not take that first step he could not maintain an action, as s. 1 of that Act said that the carrier shall not be liable unless the declaration is made.

The words "increased charge for the safe conveyance of the same" which occur in s. 10 of Act XVIII of 1854 and in s. 11 of Act IV of 1879 were apparently adopted from the passage I have quoted from s. 2 of the English Carrier's Act 11 Geo. IV and 1 Will. IV, c. 68, the words in that section (2 of 11 Geo. IV and 1 Will. IV, c. 68) "as a compensation for the greater risk and care to be taken" being omitted, I presume because the framers of the two Indian Railway Acts, [177] XVIII of 1854 and IV of 1879, considered that they were unnecessary, and that the words they used were sufficiently explicit without them. In my opinion, the three sections are substantially the same, and must be regarded as having the same meaning. It will be noticed that in s. 3 of 11 Geo. IV and 1 Will. IV, c. 68, the receipt to be given for the increased rate of charge for the specified articles is to acknowledge the same to have been insured—the increased rate being in fact for the insurance.

Was there, then, a sufficient declaration of the value and nature of the contents of the parcel in the present case?

Motilal, the Bombay manager of the plaintiffs' firm, said that he arrived at the Byculla Station about 7 P. M., and the box was taken to the booking office; and Buria, who was with him, told the parcel clerk that the box contained three bags containing Rs. 2,000 each, that it was then weighed and showed 2 maunds and 5 seers. Then he said he asked the clerk to take the money for carriage and give him a bill. He paid him what he asked, viz., Rs. 18-1-0, and the clerk gave a receipt.

The receipt was printed so as to show three kinds of charges, viz., "Charges for carriage," "Insurance charge," "Delivery charges."

(1) 6 Ex. 769.

The Rs. 18-1-0 were entered as paid for charges for carriage. Nothing was entered as paid for insurance charge or delivery charges.

Buria in his evidence said that he told the clerk the box contained three bags each containing Rs. 2,000, that the box was to go to Saugor, and that he should charge what he pleased. The clerk then asked him to shake the box, which he did, and the rupees jingled. Afterwards Motilal paid the money, and having got a receipt they returned home.

In cross-examination he stated that he did not say the box contained silver (chandi), and that the clerk did not ask if they wished to ensure. They had Rs. 20 or Rs. 25 with them.

That neither Motilal nor Buria intended or asked that the box should be insured, is clear. Motilal said that before 1890 the [178] plaintiffs' firm were sending specie up country two or four times a month. He did not insure the box, but simply asked the clerk (Fonseca) to charge what was right, and whatever he asked for he paid. He did not know what insurance of goods by the railway company was. That he did not then (on the 3rd January, 1890) know that insurance meant the payment of an extra charge. He had since come to know what insurance was, and when he afterwards asked a European police officer what it was, and on being told by him, he said the box was not insured.

Fonseca, who in January, 1890, was assistant booking clerk at the Byculla Station, said he recollected the parcel being brought by three persons, Motilal and Buria being two of them. When they brought it he asked them what it contained, and they said "chandi rokra," and that they wanted it despatched to Saugor. He then wrote the receipt charging the carriage at treasure rate. They gave him some money, he gave them the change, and they went away. He had had often before specie from these very persons and they had never insured it. He knew that chandi rokra meant rupees. This was a heavy parcel, and he knew it contained a large quantity of rupees. Nobody told him. He did not ask how much there was in it. He heard them talking about Rs. 6,000 in the box. They did not say anything to him, and they never told him there were Rs. 6,000 in the box. One of them asked him to take from him whatever money he required for the box.

There is thus a conflict of evidence between Motilal and Buria on the one hand and Fonseca on the other as to what was said by the former at the time the box was delivered to Fonseca, and having regard to the previous practice of the plaintiffs of not insuring when conveying specie to be carried by the defendants and to the probabilities of the case, I think that Fonseca's account of what passed is most likely to be the correct one.

Mr. Conder, Traffic Manager of the G. I. P. Railway, said that there was an ordinary rate for parcels and an ordinary rate for carrying treasure apart from insurance, the insurance being extra, a larger rate being charged for carriage of treasure at owner's risk than of ordinary parcels at the company's risk. They charge it because it is more valuable, and that the company do not [179] in consideration of the larger payment engage to look more carefully after a parcel for which it is paid than for any other, unless it is insured. The company do not accept treasure at all at any rate lower than the rate charged in this case.

In the notification published in the Bombay Government Gazette of 30th April 1888 (Ex. No. 8) certain maximum rates for goods for the Bombay railways sanctioned by Government were published for general information. Among them the maximum rate for parcels for every 50 miles beyond the first 50 is stated to be 3 pies per seer; and for insurance rates the maximum rate for most precious articles is to be 3 per cent.

ORIGINAL CIVIL.

Mr. Bedford, Traffic Inspector of the Great Indian Peninsula Railway Company, stated that he had checked the charge of Rs. 18-1-0 on the parcel in question with the weight as described in the counterfoil of the weigh bill, and it came to $2\frac{1}{2}$ pies per maund per mile, multiplied by 651 miles the distance from Byculla to Saugor, and multiplied by $2\frac{1}{8}$ maunds the weight of the parcel; that such calculation was in accordance with Rule 39 at p. 66 of Ex. No. 10, being the Great Indian Peninsula Railway Time and Fare Tables and Coaching Tariff. He said that the ordinary parcel rate for such a box if it did not contain treasure would have been Rs. 9, and that the insurance which would have been payable, assuming the box to contain Rs. 6.000, would amount to Rs. 52-8-0 according to the rule on p. 68 of Ex. No. 10. He further stated that if the clerk had been told that the box contained Rs. 6,000 he would not have been at liberty to insure it, but would have had to apply to the station master, and he would have had to apply to the District Traffic Superintendent as provided by Rule 4 at p. 68 of Ex. No. 10, and that uninsured treasure was carried at owner's risk —Rule 5, p. 67, which rule states that "treasure which is not insured, whether it is in owner's charge or not, is always carried at owner's risk, and the company are relieved by s. 11, chap. III of the Indian Railway Act, 1879, from all responsibility or risk in regard to such treasure."

Two cases relied upon by the learned Advocate General on behalf of the defendants may here be referred to. In Robinson [180] v. The South-Western Railway Company (1) decided in 1865 upon s. 7 of the Railway and Canal Traffic Act, 1854, (17 and 18 Vict., c. 31), Erle, C. J., said: "A declaration would be within the statute if so made as to create a liability on the part of the company to pay the higher value, as well as a liability on the part of the sender to pay the insurance thereon, but here the sender says he does not intend to insure, but he mentions the value of the horse, and he calls upon the company to take the animal. I cannot find in that a declaration within the statute" (p. 238).

Byles, J., said: "The declaration must come from the sender, and must be so expressed as to be understood by the carrier as such, and, as I think, understood also as the foundation of a contract." Smith, J., said: "I agree with the rest of the Court that the declaration to be within the statute must be made with the intention that it should so operate as to entitle the company to charge the higher rate."

In Venkatachala v. South Indian Railway Company (2) it was held by Turner, C. J., and Kindersley, J., that the conditions of s. 10 of the Indian Railway Act XVIII of 1854 are not fulfilled by the sender merely giving an account of the quantity and description of the goods delivered for carriage when required to do so by the booking clerk. In that case a box containing seven bars of silver valued at Rs. 4,296-10-9 had been delivered to the Railway Company at Trichinopoly Station for carriage to Bombay. And it was held that to establish the liability of the Railway Company in the case of excepted articles the declaration required by s. 10 must be made in such a manner as to intimate that the sender invites the railway company to undertake the special risk and is willing to pay the increased charge.

In the present case the plaintiffs' man Buria says that he told Fonseca that the box contained three bags each containing Rs. 2,000 (a statement which Fonseca positively denies); that the box was to go to Saugor, and that he should charge what he pleased. Motilal, too, says that he simply asked the clerk to charge what was right, and that Fonseca did not ask him whether he wished [181] to insure; that he (Motilal) did not insure the box in question, and in fact did not then know what insurance of goods by the Railway Company was. I am, therefore, of opinion, that there was no sufficient declaration of the value and nature of the contents of the parcel belonging to the plaintiffs, and that the defendants are consequently protected by the provisions of s. 11 of the Indian Railway Act No. IV of 1879.

(1) 34 L. J. (C. P.) 234.

(2) 5 M. 208.

It was contended before us that the "increased charge for the safe conveyance" mentioned in that section had been paid, and, moreover, that the Railway Company were liable either as common carriers or as bailees under the Indian Contract Act (No. IX of 1872). I think, however, that the additional rate charged and paid for the plaintiffs' box viz. Rs. 18-1-0, and not the ordinary parcel rate of Rs. 9, was not "an increased charge for the safe conveyance of the same" within the meaning of s. 11 of Act IV of 1879, but only the ordinary charge for treasure. As already pointed out, the sum charged was within the maximum rate for parcels sanctioned by Government, and Mr. Conder stated the Railway Company do not accept treasure at all at any rate lower than the rate charged in this case.

It may be useful, having regard to the conflicting decisions of the High Courts of Calcutta and Bombay, as to the responsibility of carriers by railways in India reported in I. L. R.. 3 Bom., 109 (Kaverji v. G. I. P. Railway Co.), and I. L. R., 10 Calc., 166 (Moothora Kant v. The India General Steam Navigation Co.), and to the question raised by the 6th issue in the Court below, as to whether the suit is barred by the law of limitation, to make a few remarks here upon the nature of the obligation of common carriers to carry goods with safety.

In Riley v. Horne (1), Best, C. J., in delivering the judgment of the Court elaborately examined the policy and foundation of the rule, and said: "To give due security to property, the law has added to that responsibility of a carrier which immediately arises out of his contract to carry for a reward, namely, that of taking all reasonable care of it, the responsibility of an insurer. From his liability as an insurer the carrier is only [182] relieved by two things * * viz., the act of God and the king's enemies."

Fifty years after that decision, viz., in 1878, the case of Bergheim v. The Great Eastern Railway Company (2) was decided by the Court of appeal (Bramwell, Brett and Cotton, L.JJ.) and the Court expressed itself thus:—"He "(the common carrier)" is considered as having contracted to insure the safe delivery of, that is to say, as having contracted to carry and deliver safely and securely (the act of God and of the Queen's enemies alone excepted) the goods of which he as common carrier is bailee. The reason why the law implied that this is his contract, was that the carrier had by himself or his servants during the bailment at times and in places where he could not even be supervised, the exclusive control and care of the goods intrusted to him by the owner, and consequently, to prevent fraud, the law imposed on those who contracted to carry goods as common carriers the obligation also to undertake to insure their safety." The Court then quote a passage from Lord Chief Justice Holt's judgment in Coggs v. Bernard (3) in which it is said:

"And this is a politic establishment contrived by the policy of the law for the safety of all persons, the necessity of whose affairs obliges them to trust these sorts of persons that they may be safe in their ways of dealings." Later on the Court calls it "a contract of insurance, which the law had originally implied, because the carrier had the exclusive, or, at least, absolute control and care of the goods."

The same view was taken by the High Court in Calcutta in a case which came before a Full Bench of five Judges in 1883 (Moothora Kant v. The India General Steam Navigation Co. (1)) when the Bombay decision Kuverji v. G. I. P. Railway Co. (2) was carefully considered and dissented from. Garth, C. J. whilst discussing the duties and responsibilities of common carriers by the law of England said (p. 182): "And it is important to note that this duty was imposed upon him irrespective of any contract. It was imposed upon him by the custom of the realm, for the [183] benefit of the public, by reason of the important trust which he undertook. (See the observations of Lord Holt in Coggs v. Bernard, 1 Smith's L. C., 199, 8th edition)."

Mr. Scott in the course of his argument before us on behalf of the plaintiffs cited a passage from Bullen and Leake's work on Pleading with the object of showing that actions against common carriers were founded on contract, or, as they were formerly called, actions ex contractu, and were not actions founded on tort. But Sir Richard Garth, C. J., in his judgment already cited says (p. 186):—

"It must be borne in mind that the law and liabilities of common carriers are, as I said before, founded on custom, irrespective of contract. A common carrier is and always has been liable to be sued for any breach of this common law duty in an action of tort * * * The Bombay High Court, while fully admitting that the English law on this subject prevails in the Indian Mofussil, seems to have lost sight of the fact that this law is founded upon a common law duty apart from contract. It is true that when the employment of a common carrier has commenced, the law implies a contract on his part to perform the duty imposed upon him; and consequently he is liable to be sued in an action either of tort or contract, according to the convenience or advantage of the plaintiff in each suit. (See Bullen and Leake on Pleading, pp. 101 and 243.)"

In the well-known treatise by the late Mr. Selwyn on the "Law of Nisi Prius," first published in the years 1806, 1807 and 1808, (I cite from the 13th edition, 1869), under the title "Carriers," it is stated that "Formerly the declaration in actions against common carriers stated their employment as common carriers, their liability by the custom of the realm, and delivery to and acceptance by the defendants of the goods to be carried, for a reasonable hire or reward, concluding with the loss or damage to the goods, but it afterwards became usual to declare in assumpsit, and not to state either the employment of the defendants as common carriers, or the custom of the realm as to their liability. This form of declaration has prevailed since the decision of Dale v. Hall, Michaelmas Term, 1750, in which it was settled, that it did [184] not make any difference whether the plaintiff declared on the custom, or more generally in assumpsit; for by stating that the defendant carried for hire it would appear that the defendant was a common carrier, and then the law would raise the promise from the nature of the contract"—Selwyn's Nisi Prius (13th Ed.), Vol. I, pp. 362-363.

(1) 10 C. 166.

(2) 3 B. 109.

I may here remark that in the case I have first cited on this point, Riley v. Horne (1), the action was an action on the case against the defendants as common carriers for negligence in losing goods entrusted to them to be safely carried by them, an action in delicto.

In 1891, in the case of the Irrawady Flotilla Company v. Bugwandass (2), where the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council decided in favour of the view of the High Court of Calcutta, viz., that the liability of common carriers in India was not affected by the Indian Contract Act, 1872 (I.L.R. 10 Calc. 166) and against that of the High Court of Bombay (I.L.R. 3 Bom. 109), their Lordships stated the nature of the obligation in the same way that Garth, C. J., had done, and said: "The written law is untouched by the Act of 1872" (the Indian Contract Act, 1872). "The unwritten law was hardly within the scope of an Act intended to define and amend the law relating to contracts. The obligation imposed by law on common carriers has nothing to do with contract in its origin. It is a duty cast upon common carriers by reason of their exercising a public employment for reward." "A breach of this duty," says Dallas, C. J., in Bretherton v. Wood (3), "is a breach of the law, and for this breach an action lies founded on the common law, which action wants not the aid of a contract to support it."

At the end of their judgment, their Lordships say that they are led to the conclusion that the Indian Contract Act of 1872 was not intended to deal with the law relating to common carriers, and that notwithstanding the generality of some expressions in the chapter on bailments they think that common carriers are not within the Act (p. 131).

[185] I think that the plaintiffs' contentions above referred to are unfounded, as I consider that the liability of the Railway Company as common carriers was taken away by the provisions of s. 11 of the Railway Act IV of 1879, the plaintiffs at the time of delivery of the very valuable property to the defendants' booking clerk not having declared the value and nature thereof as required by that section; and that the Railway Company cannot be held to be liable as bailees under the Indian Contract Act— the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council in the Irrawady Flotilla Company v. Bugwandass (2) having held, as had (as I have pointed out) previously been decided in several cases in England, that the obligation imposed by law on common carriers has nothing to do with contract in its origin, it being a duty cast upon them by reason of their exercising a public employment for reward, and, consequently, that the liability of Indian Railway Companies as common carriers was not affected by the Indian Contract Act, 1872. As their Lordships say (p. 129): "There are several considerations, not all of equal weight, but all pointing in the same direction, which lead irresistibly to the conclusion that the Act of 1872," (the Indian Contract Act), "was not intended to alter the law applicable to common carriers."

Lastly, as to the question of limitation. The learned Judge in the Division Court said that there are a number of cases cited at p. 132 of Starling's Limitation Act, 1877, which show that art. 30 in the 2nd schedule of that Act does not apply to a case like the present, and that this suit having been brought within three years is in time. Article 30 is in these words: "Against a carrier for compensation for losing or injuring goods; two years from the date when loss or injury occurs."

Article 115, which gives a limit of three years, applies to suits "for compensation for the breach of any contract, express or implied, not in writing registered, and not herein specially provided for."

The only Bombay decision referred to at p. 132 of the work just cited is Mohansing v. Henry Conder (1), as to which the learned author says that, if the defendant wishes to avail himself of the benefit of art. 30 on the ground that goods [186] have been lost, it is incumbent on him to prove the loss. In that case the G. I. P. Railway Company did not, so far as the evidence showed, announce their inability to deliver the missing bags of wheat on account of having lost them either in transit or by misdelivery to some one not entitled. On the other hand, they took from plaintiff's agent receipts for the full number of bags as arrived at their destination and gave gate passes for delivery at Sholapur, the place to which they were to be carried.

In the present case the defendants' traffic manager by his letter of 8th May, 1890, to plaintiffs' solicitors (Ex. G) intimates the loss of the parcel, and that although diligent inquiries have been made by the defendant's officers and by the police, no trace of the parcel can be found, and that a like result has followed the inquiries made on the Indian Midland Railway. That decision does not appear to me to be any authority for holding that art. 30 is not applicable to the present case.

The other cases cited at p. 132 in Starling on Limitation to the effect that where there is a contract between the plaintiff and the carrier, art. 30 does not apply, were decided in Calcutta and Madras, and, therefore, have no binding effect in this Court. They are doubtless entitled to respectful consideration, but no further. Each of the four High Courts in India frequently dissents from the views taken by one or more of the other High Courts, as they are perfectly justified in doing.

One of the Madras cases cited at p. 132 of the work on Limitation, Kalu Ram v. The Madras Railway Co.(2), seems rather to favour the view that art. 30 applies in a case like the present. There Mr. Justice Kindersley, who tried the case, said: "As it has not been shown that there was any contract between the plaintiff and defendants I must hold, following the decision in this Court in British India Steam Navigation Company v. Haji Mahomed Isack (3), that the suit, so far as it is founded, not on contract but upon the alleged negligence or want of proper care on the part of the defendants, is barred by the Limitation Act, art. 30 of sch. II."

[187] There being, in my opinion, no decision of the Bombay High Court applicable to the present case, and having regard to the real nature of the suit, and the evidence given in the Court below, I am of opinion that the claim of the plaintiffs is one against the defendants as carriers for compensation for losing goods, and falls within art. 30, and consequently that as the present suit was not brought until December, 1892, two years, and eleven months after the loss, it is barred by limitation.

For these reasons I am of opinion that the appeal must be allowed, and the decree reversed. The plaintiffs (respondents) to pay the defendants (appellants) their costs suit of throughout, and also pay the appellants their costs of the appeal.

FARRAN, J.—The learned Judge of the Division Court has held that the suit is not barred by limitation, applying to the plaintiffs' claim the limitation prescribed by art. 115, and not that prescribed by art. 30 of the Limitation Act. Had the question been res integra I should have felt much difficulty in concurring in that view. The authorities cited by the Chief Justice show that a common carrier, who failed to deliver a parcel committed to him for carriage, could be sued either in tort for negligence in carrying out his common law duty, or in contract for breach of his contract, express or implied, to deliver in accordance with his instructions. I refer particularly to Bretherton v. Wood (1), cited in Irrawady Flotilla Company v. Bagwandass (2). The Legislature must be credited with this knowledge when framing the Limitation Act, and must, I incline to think, have intended when in general terms limiting, the responsibility of carriers to make compensation for loss of goods to two years after the loss, to make that time the outside period within which they could be sued, whether the claim was laid in tort or as arising out of contract. Otherwise they would have used less broad and comprehensive words to express their meaning, and would hardly have employed language which indisputably is wide enough to cover a claim for compensation for loss of goods based on the breach of an express or implied contract of the carrier to carry safely.

(1) 7 B. 478. (2) 3 M. 240. (3) 3 M. 107.

[188] I incline to think that the Courts would have better fulfilled the intention of the Legislature by treating all claims against a carrier which could fairly be deemed to arise out of the loss of, or injury to, goods (and, liberally interpreted, almost all claims against a carrier, unless he were actually in possession of the goods uninjured, would be embraced within one or other of these two categories) as coming within the purview of arts. 30 and 31 than by confining the general words of the former article to a claim for compensation for loss of goods arising otherwise than out of contract. The position of the article in the schedule is to my mind a most fallacious guide. In Part IV of the schedule claims arising out of contract and claims arising out of tort are mixed together, and certainly a claim under art. 31 is much more naturally based upon contract than upon tort.

Having regard, however, to the current of decisions in the other High Courts I feel constrained to say that the learned Judge below could not have decided differently upon this branch of the case, and I think that now it is rather the part of the Legislature to make its meaning more clear if it has been misinterpreted, than for us to run counter to the authorities in the other High Courts, upon the strength of which parties may have forborne to sue within the two years' limit, even though we may not be convinced of the reasoning upon which these authorities are based. However, it is not necessary for me to express a final opinion upon this point, as I agree with the Chief Justice on the other branch of the case.

Turning to the merits I proceed to consider whether the Division Court is correct in holding that the plaintiffs have paid an "increased charge" for the same conveyance of their box of specie within the meaning of s. 11 of the Indian Railway Act of 1879. In my opinion they have not.

In the Small Cause Court reference in Balaram v. S. M. Railway Company (3) we have already held that a consignee, who pays the treasure rate charged by the railway administration for the conveyance of treasure, does not in doing so pay "a percentage on the value" within the meaning of the Indian Railways Act, 1890, s. 75, "by way of compensation for [189] increased risk." The wording of that section is different from that of s. 11 of the Act which we are now considering, and that ruling does not, therefore, decide the present case. Now the Act, beyond providing that a copy of the tariff of charges shall be exhibited at each station (s. 9), does not deal with the charges which the defendant company may levy. That subject is otherwise provided for. The agreement of the 17th August, 1849, between the defendant company and the East India Company provides that the defendants shall (inter alia) be common carriers of goods and shall charge such fares for the carriage of goods as shall be approved by the East India Company (Ex. 4). The power to give the requisite approval is now vested in the Government of Bombay (Ex. 6). Government regulate the charge by fixing a maximum rate for the carriage of parcels (inter alia) and a maximum insurance rate. So long as the company keep within these maxima they are at liberty to fix the rate for carriage and insurance. The company acting on the liberty thus afforded to them have not fixed one uniform rate for all parcels, but have adopted a classification of parcels under which they are charged for according to their contents. Thus there is a charge for bread, for ice, leaves, opium, treasure, and various other articles specially laid down, and in addition there is a comprehensive charge which includes all articles not specifically provided for. Some of these special charges are above and some below the comprehensive charge for ordinary parcels, but all are within the maximum charge allowed by Government, and are, therefore, charges which the company may legitimately levy for the mere carriage of parcels. In determining these classified charges the company no doubt take various circumstances into consideration, fixing the rate low in some instances in order to foster the traffic, and high in other instances where they are sure of the traffic and where they feel the traffic is able to bear such high rate without diminishing its volume. In this way the company has fixed a low rate for leaves and a high rate for treasure, but each rate alike is the ordinary rate for the carriage of goods of that particular class. This is certainly, as I have shown, within their powers. I fail, therefore entirely to see how in paying this ordinary rate for treasure the [190] consignee pays "an increased charge for the safe conveyance of the same." He pays the ordinary charge for the carriage, and no more and no less.

In addition to this ordinary rate the company make an extra charge for what they call "insurance" in the case of the valuable articles specified in the schedule to s. 11 of the Act. About this there can be no mistake. In their tariff of charges they say in so many words (p. 67 of the Company's book of rates) referring to s. 11 of the Act that they are not responsible for loss * * * of gold, silver, &c., "unless an increased charge for the safe conveyance of the same is paid." This can mean nothing else than an increased charge over the ordinary charge for the carriage of the particular article specified in the tariff. Article 40, cl. 2, at p. 68 of the Company's book of rates is still more clear. "Insurance charges are in all cases made in addition to the ordinary charges for the conveyance of treasure * * * * and must always be prepaid. The contents of packages which are insured must always be examined."

Now this "increased charge" is not levied on the weight of the article carried, but on its value. In this case also the Government have given the company a free hand below a certain maximum. The maximum allowed by Government is 3 per cent. The company charge a percentage varying from ½ to 1 per cent. The confusion in the present case has probably arisen from the use of the word "insurance" in the tariff of charges. The use of the word has arisen in this way. A common carrier in England is often spoken of as an "insurer," not because he "insures" in the ordinary acceptation of the word, but because he warrants or contracts that he will (with specified exceptions) carry and deliver the goods entrusted to him safely—Bergheim v. The Great Eastern Railway Company (1). In the case of articles of small bulk and great value (being above the value of 10£) the Carrier's Act (11 Geo. IV and 1 Will. IV, c. 68) enacted that a carrier should not be liable for their loss (not arising from the felonious act of his servant) unless an increased rate of charge was paid over and above the ordinary rate; and the third section of the Act referred to parcels upon which increased rate was paid as [191] "insured." Hence Judges in England have referred to the payment of such increased charge as an "insurance" (see for example the language of Channell and Wilde, B. B., in Behrens v. Great Northern Railway Co. (2), and the word thus became the usual term to denote goods upon which the increased rate was paid. In the present case the increased rate was not paid, and in my opinion the plaintiffs have not, therefore, paid "an increased charge" for the safe conveyance of their specie within the meaning of s. 11 of the Act.

The more difficult question hence arises, whether, inasmuch as the company did not call upon the plaintiffs to pay such increased charge (which I shall now refer to as "insurance"), they are liable as if the same had been paid. In order to decide that question it is in the first case necessary to determine what actually took place before and at the time when the box in question was received by the company for carriage from Byculla to Saugor. It appears from the plaintiffs' letter of the 27th May, 1890, that their practice (as well as that of other native merchants) was to send specie by railway uninsured. The plaintiff writes that the railway fare at the rate chargeable for silver was paid for the parcel, and adds: "Relying on the strict supervision and just dealings of the Railway authorities, valuable parcels without being insured are generally transmitted by railways, but hardly such a case as mine happens." A person who described himself as coming on behalf of the plaintiffs replied to Mr. Conder, in answer to the question why the plaintiffs had not insured: "It was not worth while. They are constantly sending parcels of large value all over the country and they never lost anything." C. M. Fonseca, the assistant parcel clerk, who booked the box in question, said that he had often specie from the servants of the plaintiffs who handed him the box, and that they never insured. Motilal Panalal says that Buria, who went with him with the box to the station, told the parcel clerk that it contained three bags of Rs. 2,000 each. It was weighed at ½ mans (maunds) and 5 seers, and he (Motilal) asked the clerk to take the money and give him the bill. He paid what he was asked (Rs. 18·1·0) and [192] received a receipt. The insurance would have been Rs. 50 extra. The man brought with him Rs. 20 or 30 only to pay the fare. He did not, he says, insure the box, nor did Fonseca ask him whether he wished to insure. Buria says pretty much the same, adding that he shook the box, and the rupees jingled. Fonseca says that he was told the box contained "chandi rokra" and did not ask and was not told its value, but admits that he heard the men say that there were Rs. 6,000 in the box.

From this evidence the only legitimate inference which can be drawn is, I think, that the men took the box to the station without the slightest intention of insuring it, and that, if the number of rupees which it contained was mentioned in the booking office, it was not so mentioned that the clerk might have the opportunity of charging insurance if he pleased, but only in the course of casual conversation.

Now the law in England under the Carriers' Act has been, since the decision in Behrens v. Great Northern Railway Company (1), well ascertained. It is this:—If the sender declares the nature and value of the articles, and the carrier has the proper notice affixed in his office, he may demand an extra charge according to such notice. If he neglects to demand it, the sender is not bound to tender it, and the carrier receiving the goods is liable for their safe conveyance. The provisions of the Carriers' Act are wrapped up in many words, and are very involved. The Exchequer Chamber in Behrens v. Great Northern Railway Company (1) had doubts as to their meaning, but by reading the first and the second sections together arrived at the true interpretation of the statute. (See the judgment of all the Judges in the Court of Exchequer (supra).)

The general law being thus settled, the question as to what is a sufficient declaration of the contents and value came to be considered, and it was decided that it need not be an express and formal declaration, and such statements as the following were held sufficient:—"Take care. These are pictures of the value of £100"—Behrens v. Great Northern Railway Company (supra). "There are about £100 worth of goods in the parcel" which were described as "silks"—Bradbury v. Sutten (2). In fact, any [193] declaration of the sender made at the time of delivery calculated to inform the carrier of the nature and value of the articles, so as to enable him to demand the increased charge, was held sufficient.

Now it is the second section of the Carriers' Act which enables the carrier to demand the increased rate of charge. Section 1 relates to the duty of the sender of the goods; ss. 2 and 3 relate to the duty of the carrier and his power to make an increased charge. In the Railway Act of 1879, as was the case with the Railway Act of 1854, ss. 2 and 3 of the Carriers' Act are not embodied. Section 1 of the Carriers' Act is enacted as s. 10 of the Act of 1854 and as s. 11 of the Act of 1879. These are in substance the same and differ from s. 1 of the Carriers' Act principally in this that whereas the declaration of value could be made to any person receiving the parcel under the Carrier's Act, and an engagement might be accepted by him, the Indian Acts provide that the increased charge shall be accepted by some railway servant specially authorized in this behalf. It does not seem to be necessary that the declaration should be made to the latter. Section 11 after providing for the general non-liability of the company for articles of value runs thus:—"Unless at the time of delivery the value and nature thereof have been declared by the person sending or delivering the same, and an increased charge for the safe conveyance of the same or an engagement to pay such charge has been accepted by some railway servant specially authorized in this behalf." It appears to me that reading that section alone and without the addition of a section similar to s. 2 of the Carrier's Act, which the Courts in England had to read in combination with the first section, it implies that the sender of the goods must make the declaration in such a form as to invite the company to make the insurance charge, and that otherwise the company are not entitled to demand it. This was the view taken by the High Court of Madras in Venkatachala v. South Indian Railway Company(1). That case, I think, in substance governs the case before us. It may be that (as was there suggested) the company may, if they please, waive the increased charge; but if it is waived, it [194] must be on the declaration of value and the invitation to insure being brought to the notice of some duly authorized servant of the company who alone is entitled to bind the company in such matters.

(1) 6 H. & N. 366.

(2) 19 W. R. 800; 21 ib. 128.

The Station Masters are under art. 40 of the Tariff Charges, as a general rule, authorized to insure, but in case of insurance above Rs. 5,000 applications for insurance are to be referred to various specified officers. I do not say that if an offer to insure were made to the parcels clerk, and he received the insurance money for the company without referring the matter to the Station Master, or if, in the case of large insurance, the latter neglected to refer the matter to the higher authorities and received the insurance, the company would not be bound; but I am clearly of opinion that a mere casual conversation as to the contents of the parcel taking place before the parcel clerk, through which he becomes acquainted with its value, does not bind the company to make good its contents or operate as an increased charge for the safe conveyance of the same, or an engagement to pay such charge accepted by a railway servant specially authorized in this behalf. To hold otherwise would be in effect to deprive s. 11 of the Railway Act of all force. The circumstances here are similar to those in Robinson v. The South-Western Railway Company (2), a case decided under 17 and 18 Vict., c. 31, s. 7, which is in the same lines as the Carrier's Act. The present is, therefore, an a fortiori case to that.

I have given my reasons at length in this case, as the conclusion I have arrived at differs from that of the Calcutta High Court Bench in the case of Secretary of State for India v. Budhu Nath (3), composed of Judges for whose opinion I entertain sincere respect, unless indeed it be considered that that case was decided upon the special facts stated in the case which the judgment does not refer to. I do not consider that it makes any difference in the construction of s. 11 whether we regard the decision in Kuverji v. G. I. P. Railway Company (4) as overruled by the Irrawady Flotilla Company v. Bugwandass (5) and [195] Chogemull v. The Commissioners of Calcutta (6), or as still in force in this Court.

I am, therefore, of opinion that the company are protected in this case by the provisions of s. 11 of the Railways Act, 1879, and that the appeal ought to be allowed, and the plaintiffs' suit dismissed with costs throughout.

QUEEN-EMPRESS v. PAHUJI AND ANOTHER.* [23rd January, 1894.]

Evidence Act (I of 1872), s. 30—Confession of co-prisoner—Joint trial—Plea of guilty—Evidence.

A and B were charged with murder. A pleaded guilty, but he was not convicted or sentenced till the conclusion of the trial of his fellow-prisoner B. The Sessions Judge, holding that both the accused were jointly tried for the same offence, took into consideration as against B the confessions made by A, and convicted both of murder.

Held, that after A had pleaded guilty he could not be treated as being jointly tried with B. A's confessions were, therefore, not admissible against B under s. 30 of the Indian Evidence Act (I of 1872).

THE accused Pahuji and Manik were committed for trial to the Sessions Court at Dhulia on a charge of murder under s. 302 of the Indian Penal Code (XLV of 1860). Manik (accused No. 2) pleaded not guilty, and claimed to be tried. Pahuji (accused No. 1) pleaded guilty, but he was not convicted and sentenced till the conclusion of the trial of accused No. 2.

The Sessions Judge, holding that both the accused were being jointly tried for the same offence took into consideration as against accused No. 2 the confessions made by accused No. 1, under s. 30 of the Indian Evidence Act (I of 1872).

[196] Both the accused were convicted of murder and sentenced to death.

The case was submitted to the High Court under s. 374 of the Code of Criminal Procedure (Act X of 1882) for confirmation of the sentences of death passed on the accused.

Narayan Vishnu Gokhale, for accused No. 2.—After accused No. 1 had pleaded guilty, his confessions were inadmissible against his fellow-prisoner under s. 30 of the Indian Evidence Act (I of 1872)—Venkatasami v. the Queen (1) ; Reg v. Kalu Patil (2). The proper course would have been to convict the accused No. 1, and then examine him as a witness. Unless this is done, his statement cannot be used against his fellow-prisoner—Reg. v. Gardner (3). The so-called confession of accused No. 2 was retracted before the committing Magistrate as being the result of tutoring. It does not, therefore, amount to a confession—Reg. v. Garbad (4).

Rao Saheb Vasudev J. Kirtikar, Government Pleader, for the Crown.—Section 30 of the Evidence Act empowers the Court to take into consideration the confession of one prisoner against his fellow-prisoner when they are jointly tried for the same offence. In the present case accused No. 1 had no doubt pleaded guilty, but he was not convicted and sentenced till the end of the trial. The Sessions Judge treated both prisoners as being jointly tried. He was, therefore, at liberty to use the confessions of the one against the other. Refers to Queen-Empress v. Chand valad Ibrahim (1); Reg. v. Hanmanta (2); Reg. v. Balvant (3). There is no evidence here that the confession of accused No. 2 was induced by illegal pressure. In the absence of such evidence it will not be presumed that the confession was so induced.

JUDGMENT.

JARDINE, J.—In this case there is no doubt that on the 17th November, 1893, at Bhadgaon the boy Papa was murdered. When the body was found next morning there was a mark round the neck which the witnesses say seemed to be caused by strangulation. Some ornaments which the boy was wearing [197] were missing from the body. On the 20th November the prisoner Pahuji was arrested by the police near his sisters' house at the village of Takli wearing one of these ornaments, a wristlet; and he then produced from an earthen pot others of them, namely, ear-rings. On the same day he made a full confession to a Third Class Magistrate and another on the 24th November to a Magistrate of the First Class. At the trial he pleaded guilty, and in his appeal petition he does not contest the correctness of the conviction, but only asks that the sentence may be commuted, because he has confessed from the beginning. There is some evidence confirming the confession : and we see no reason for interfering with the conviction and sentence of Pahuji, which we now confirm.

The evidence against the other prisoner Manik consists chiefly of his own confession made on the 21st November at Bhadgaon, where an hour or two before he had been arrested by the police and brought before the chief constable. This was in consequence of something which the prisoner Pahuji had told to the police. The confession was recorded by the Magistrate of the Second Class of Bhadgaon. But on the 24th November, when being examined by the Magistrate of the First Class, the prisoner while admitting that he had made the confession said that he had been tutored by the Second Class Magistrate, and had stated what he had been tutored to say. No property has been found on the prisoner Manik, nor in his possession.

The Sessions Judge, however, admitted into his consideration as against Manik the confessions made by the prisoner Pahuji, considering that after the plea of guilty had been recorded, and although no issue affecting Pahuji was raised at the trial, he was nevertheless being "tried jointly" with Manik within the meaning of s. 30 of the Indian Evidence Act, because it was possible that the evidence elicited at the trial of Manik, Pahuji being still at the bar unconvicted and not sentenced, might enable the Sessions Judge to determine whether to pass the sentence of death or that of transportation for life. No precedent has been shown us in which a High Court has in such circumstances held the co-prisoner's statement admissible. In [198] Confirmation Case No. 22 of 1893, the reason, as we have ascertained on consulting our brother Candy, for admitting the statement was that the Court of Session had not dealt with the plea of guilty as if it were such, but had allowed the prisoner so pleading to remain on trial so that he could cross-examine. The opinion of the assessors was also taken about his guilt. These circumstances do not exist in the present case. After considering Winsor's case (1) and other English cases there referred to, as also Reg v. Gardner (2), Venkatasami v. The Queen (3), we are of opinion that the Court below ought not to have treated Pahuji as being jointly tried with Manik. The confessions made by Pahuji we must, therefore, hold are not admissible against Manik.

We have to say what value should be placed on the confessions of Manik; and to discharge this duty in the light of whatever evidence is obtainable, we direct that the evidence of the Second Class Magistrate be taken about the alleged tutoring, and also that of the prisoner Pahuji as to the circumstances in which the murder was committed. No objection is taken to this course by the pleader who appears for Manik. Pahuji as a witness may be cross-examined by Manik or his pleader.

We direct the Sessions Judge to take this evidence, and certify it to this Court within one month.

BAI AMBA AND MANGLI (Original Plaintiffs), Appellants v. PRANJIVANDAS DULLABHRAM AND OTHERS (Original Defendants), *Respondents. [7th February, 1894.]

Stamp—Suits' Valuation Act (VII of 1887), s. 8—Suit to take accounts—Court-fee stamp—Jurisdiction—Amount of claim as fixed by plaintiff—Relief incidental to the principal relief—Appeal.

According to s. 8 of the Suits' Valuation Act (VII of 1887), in suits for taking an account the Court-fee stamp and jurisdiction are both determined by the amount of claim as fixed by the plaintiff.

[199] In a suit for taking account the plaint having contained several items which were all incidental to the chief item of relief, the plaint was held to be substantially one to have the minor plaintiffs' estate administered, that is, to have accounts taken and the accounting party ordered to pay what (if any) should be found due from him on the balance of such account. The plaintiffs having put the valuation of the suit at Rs. 130 in the plaint,

Held that the High Court had no jurisdiction to hear the appeal against an order rejecting the plaint. The appeal lay to the District Court. The appeal was, therefore, returned for presentation in the proper Court.

APPEAL from the decision of Khan Bahadur M. N. Nanavati, First Class Subordinate Judge of Surat.

The plaintiffs, who were minors, sued by their next friend Lalbhai Shambhulal to compel the first defendant to produce and prove in Court the authority under which he obtained possession of and was managing the property of the plaintiff's deceased father Narbheram Tapidas; to be declared wards of Court; to have the property managed by the Court if the defendant did not produce and prove any will of their deceased father, and to have accounts taken since his death. In the plaint the claim was valued at Rs. 130, but the property left by the deceased was stated to be worth Rs. 30,000.

* Appeal No. 143 of 1891.

(1) L. R., 1 Q. B. 289 (390). (2) 9 Cox's C. C. 332. (3) 7 M. 102.

The plaintiffs alleged that their father Narbheram died in May, 1886; that they being his daughters were his heiresses; that the first defendant being related to them took the property left by their father into his possession for their benefit; that he alleged that the deceased had made a will appointing him and three others as executors, but that he had not allowed the plaintiffs to see it.

The first defendant and the other defendants who were subsequently added objected (inter alia) that the plaint was not properly stamped, and that the Court had no jurisdiction to entertain the suit in the form in which it was brought.

The Subordinate Judge found that the plaint was not adequately stamped, his opinion being that the prayer for an account was quite independent and not incidental to the other reliefs claimed, and, therefore, it ought to have been valued and paid for. He also held that the property in suit being valued at Rs. 30 000, for the purpose of giving jurisdiction to the Court of [200] the First Class Subordinate Judge, the plaint ought to bear a Court-fee stamp on that amount and not on Rs. 130 only, the valuation for the purposes of jurisdiction being the same as the valuation for the purposes of Court-fees under s. 8 of the Suits' Valuation Act VII of 1887. He, therefore, granted one month's time to the plaintiffs to pay the requisite stamp, and the plaintiffs having failed to do so, rejected the plaint.

The plaintiffs appealed.

Jardine (with Kalabhai Lallubhai), for the appellants (plaintiffs).—The Judge thought that the reliefs we claimed were not alternative, but separate. He was of opinion that we ought to have fixed a certain value to the claim for an account. We contend that we have valued the whole claim at Rs. 130 and have paid a Court-fee stamp of ten rupees, which covers that amount. It was not necessary for us to pay a Court-fee stamp on Rs. 30,000, the value of the property, because we do not seek to recover the property. We merely wished to have an account taken for the benefit of the minors and nothing more. An account is merely ancillary for the purposes of an administration suit.

[CANDY, J., referred to Bhagvantrai Munshi v. Mehta Bajurao (1).]

We rely on Manohar Ganesh v. Bawa Ramcharandas (2), Govandas v. Dayabhai (3), Sidha Sardarsingji v. Ganpatsing (4). Originally we paid a Court-fee stamp of rupees ten for the whole claim, and subsequently, when the Subordinate Judge asked for additional stamp, we paid in rupees ten more.

Anderson (with Motilal M. Munshi), for the respondents (defendants).—The Subordinate Judge granted to the plaintiffs one month's time to frame the plaint in any way they chose. They failed to do so, and the only course which the Judge could take was to reject the plaint. The plaintiffs themselves valued the suit at Rs. 30,000, and, therefore, the Judge required them to pay the Court-fees on that amount having regard to [201] s. 8 of the Suits' Valuation Act (VII of 1887)—Gulabsingji v. Lakshmansingji (5). The plaint contains the following words:—"We state for the jurisdiction of the Court that the value of the property is Rs. 30,000." The argument of the plaintiffs in the lower Court was that the present suit being for the administration of the property, the claim for account was merely ancillary, and, therefore, it did not require any Court-fee. That is not so. The plaint having been valued at Rs. 130, an appeal would not lie direct to the High Court. The plaintiffs ought to have appealed to the District Court. If the plaintiffs had paid the Court-fees on Rs. 30,000, then they could have appealed to this Court—Boidya Nath Adya v. Makhan Lal Adya (1).

JUDGMENT.

SARGENT, C. J.—The plaint, although made up of several items, so to speak, is substantially one to have the estate of the minors administered by the Court, i.e., to have the accounts taken, and the accounting party ordered to pay what (if any) should be found due from him on the balance of such account. The other items of relief sought are all incidental to the above application.

The decisions in Manohar Ganesh v. Bawa Ramcharandas (2), Govandas v. Dayabhai (3) and Sidha Sardarsingji v. Ganpatsing (4) show that in suits for taking account the Court-fee stamp and jurisdiction are both determined by the amount of claim as fixed by the plaintiff. This conclusion has now express effect given to it by s. 8, Act VII of 1887, as pointed out by Telang, J., in Sidha Sardarsingji v. Ganpatsing.

In the 14th paragraph of the plaint the plaintiff has put that valuation at Rs. 130. But that being so, this Court will have no jurisdiction to hear the appeal, which ought to be to the District Court. We must, therefore, return the appeal for presentation in the proper Court. Parties to pay their own costs.

Order accordingly.

A plaintiff applied to a conciliator appointed under the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act (Bombay Act XVII of 1879) for an amicable settlement of a dispute between himself and the defendant, and came to an agreement disposing of the matter which was duly forwarded to the Subordinate Judge to be filed in Court. On receipt of the agreement, the Subordinate Judge issued notices to the parties to show cause why the agreement should not be filed, and was, on the day of hearing, informed that the agreement could not be filed owing to plaintiff's death.

The agreement was then returned to the conciliator, who entered therein the name of the deceased plaintiff's heir and forwarded it to the Subordinate Judge. A question having thereupon arisen as to whether the conciliator could enter on the record the name of the heir of the deceased plaintiff, Held, that although there is no provision in the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act (Bombay Act XVII of 1879) empowering a conciliator to enter the name of the heir of a party, and Government have not apparently under s. 49 (a) of the Act made any rules regulating the procedure before conciliators in this respect, yet when a Subordinate Judge is seized of a conciliation agreement, there is a "proceeding" before him under the Act. He should, therefore, under s. 74 of the Act follow the provisions of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882) in regard to placing on the record the heirs of the deceased parties.

REFERENCE from Rao Saheb K. S. Riswadkar, Subordinate Judge of Shrigonda in the Ahmednagar District, under s. 617 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882).

Under s. 39 of the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act, Narayan Sakharam applied to Kaji Mir Bucchasaheb, conciliator of Shrigonda, praying for an amicable settlement of a dispute [203] between himself and the defendant, and came to an agreement finally disposing of the matter in dispute as contemplated by s. 43 of the Act. The agreement being reduced to writing, and signed by the conciliator and the parties, was forwarded to the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Shrigonda Court under s. 44 of the Act for being filed.

The Subordinate Judge returned it to the conciliator for correction, but before it could be corrected the conciliator died, and under orders from the Special Subordinate Judge the agreement was transferred to another conciliator for correction, was duly corrected, and returned to the Court of the Subordinate Judge. Notices were thereupon issued by him to the parties to show cause within one month from the date of service why the agreement should not be filed; but on the day of hearing he was informed that the agreement had not been filed owing to the plaintiff's death. The agreement was then returned to the conciliator with a request that he might take such steps with respect to it as he might deem proper. The conciliator then entered the name of Bakhatram in the agreement in place of his brother the plaintiff, deceased, and returned it to the Court.

The Subordinate Judge being of opinion that the provisions of the Civil Procedure Code do not apply to any proceeding before the conciliator, and that the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act does not make any provision in respect of entering on the record the name of plaintiff's heir in any application pending or agreement made before him in the event of the plaintiff's death, considered that the conciliator's action was ultra vires, and that it would not be legal to file the agreement in question, which should be cancelled. He accordingly referred the following questions :—

(1) Whether in an agreement made before a conciliator under s. 43 of the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act the conciliator can enter on the record the names of the heirs of the plaintiff in his place in the event of his death before the agreement is duly filed in the proper Court?

(2) Whether on the receipt of such an agreement for being filed in the Court of the Subordinate Judge, the Subordinate Judge can, relying on s. 74 of the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief [204] Act, permit the heirs of the plaintiff to come on the record before the agreement is duly filed should the plaintiff die in the meantime?

APPEL-
LATE
CIVIL.

19 B. 202.

(3) Whether the agreement, which is the subject of the reference, can be filed under the circumstances already mentioned, or whether it must be cancelled?

The opinion of the Subordinate Judge on each of the above questions was in the negative.

There was no appearance for the parties.

ORDER.

SARGENT, C. J.—We agree with the Subordinate Judge in his view with regard to the first and second questions referred by him. There is no provision in the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act empowering a conciliator to enter the name of the heir of a party, and Government have not apparently under s. 49 (a) of the Act made any rules regulating the procedure before conciliators in this respect.

When, however, the Subordinate Judge was seized of the agreement there was a proceeding before him under the Act. He, therefore, under s. 74 of the Act should have followed the provisions of the Civil Procedure Code in regard to placing on the record heirs of deceased parties, and there was no reason for him to return the agreement to the conciliator, assuming that he had the power to do so. It remains for him to take the legal steps to bring the heirs of the deceased plaintiff on the record; and it is thus unnecessary to answer the third question, which does not arise.

Order accordingly.

The change effected in the language of s. 258 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882) by s. 27 of the Amending Act (VII of 1888), by which [205] uncertified adjustments can now be recognized by other Courts than the Court executing the decree, applies to adjustments previous to the Amending Act.

Changes of law relating to procedure have retrospective effect.

SECOND APPEAL from the decision of T. Hart-Davies, Acting District Judge of Ahmednagar, confirming the decree of Rao Saheb M.V. Kathavate, Subordinate Judge of Shevgaon.

The plaintiff sued for possession of certain land which he alleged he had purchased from defendants Nos. 1 and 2 and subsequently leased to them by a rent-note which they had passed to him.

Defendants Nos. 1 and 2 admitted the execution of the sale-deed and the rent-note passed by them to the plaintiff, but they contended that both these documents were void, having been passed under compulsion in adjustment of a decree on a mortgage for Rs. 282 which the plaintiff had obtained against them. They also relied on the point that the plaintiff had failed to certify the adjustment to the Court.

The Subordinate Judge dismissed the suit on the ground that the sale deed and the rent-note were void for want of consideration, as the plaintiff had failed to certify them in accordance with s. 258 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882).

On appeal by the plaintiff the Judge confirmed the decree.

The following is an extract from his judgment :—

"In this case a conciliator's decision was passed, and it was filed in the Civil Court, so it becomes a 'decree' to all intents and purposes. In satisfaction of this decree the defendants passed a sale-deed to plaintiff and a rent-note on the sale-deed, but this satisfaction was not certified through the Court as required by s. 258 of the Civil Procedure Code. So they are void, and the lower Court held that they could not be sued on. But under the Amending Act (VII of 1888), s. 27, it is clear that such payments or adjustments may be recognised by Courts except when executing the decree, so that under the present state of the law s. 258 does not bar such agreements from forming the basis of a suit. But no doubt before Act VII of 1888 was passed such actions would be barred, and in this case the adjustments were made in 1883, and if they were void then, it is doubtful whether s. 258 as amended by Act VII of 1888 has retrospective effect, and renders such adjustments capable of forming the basis of a suit in 1888. It is true that in I. L. R., 15 Bom., p. 420, the bond in that case, where the matter is discussed, was dated 1886, but the decision was on the general question raised, and not on the particular case submitted by the Subordinate Judge, and this point was not taken or apparently brought to the notice of their Lordships. I am inclined to think that the amendment cannot have retrospective effect, and [206] that as the adjustments were made at a time when they were void for the purpose of forming the basis of a suit, subsequent legislation does not alter their character, and that they are still incapable of being used for this purpose."

The plaintiff preferred a second appeal.

Mahadeo Vaman Bhat, for the appellant (plaintiff) :—Rules of procedure have a retrospective effect, and, therefore, the Amending Act VII of 1888 is applicable to the present case. It was not necessary to certify the adjustment to the Court—Swamirao v. Kashinath(1) ; Bank of Bengal v. Vyabhoy Gangji(2).

Balaji Abaji Bhagavat, for the respondents (defendants) :—The consideration for the sale-deed being a decretal debt, and the parties having adjusted the debt out of Court, we submit that the sanction of the Court was necessary to the adjustment. The adjustment not being certified to the Court, it became void, and an adjustment which was void when it was made cannot become valid by a subsequent change in the Code of Civil Procedure.

JUDGMENT.

SARGENT, C. J.—The necessity for an adjustment of a decree being certified to the Court and the consequence of its not being so certified were declared by s. 258 of the Code of Civil Procedure (Act XIV of 1882). The effect of that section was only to make an adjustment not cognizable by the Court unless certified. The section, therefore, only affected the practice of the Court, and there seems to be no reason for not applying the ordinary rule that changes in matters of procedure are retrospective. The change effected in the language of s. 258 by s. 27, Act VII of 1888, by which uncertified adjustments can now be recognized by other Courts than the Court executing the decree, must, therefore, be held to apply to adjustments previous to the Act. Immoveable property—Sale of growing tree—Limitation.

A tree standing on land is immoveable property.

[R., 7 C. L. J. 152.]

SECOND APPEAL from the decision of H. F. Aston, District Judge of Ratnagiri.

The plaintiff sued in 1890 for possession of a certain jack tree, alleging that the first defendant had sold it to him on the 21st October, 1885.

The following was the document of sale passed by the first defendant :—

"I sell you a jack tree for Rs. 5 which I have received in cash. The tree stands in the Kumbhar Vada of the village of Jhadgar . . . It belongs to me and has been in my enjoyment. It is my ancestral property. It is an old decaying tree about forty years old. If any one should hereafter claim it, I will recompense you for the loss you will sustain on that account. You should now make use of it in any way you please. I have no right left to me to the tree."

The lower appellate Court held the suit barred by limitation. In his judgment (after reading the document of sale) the Judge said :—

"There is not a word indicating any intention to give or obtain any right of access to the tree over the ground on which the tree is situated, nor any provision to enable the purchaser to obtain or enjoy the fruit of the tree. The tree is referred to as an old decaying one, and the plaintiff in his plaint complains that he was not allowed to cut it down. It would be unreasonable to interpret such a transaction as that set forth in such a document so worded as any thing more than a sale of growing timber which the plaintiff was expected to remove. The plaintiff could claim to cut down the tree and remove it if permitted access, or to have it cut down and delivered to him. To sue for possession of a tree sold under such a document is to sue for specific moveable property or for compensation for wrongfully taking or injuring or wrongfully detaining the same, for the suit is not for the tree with the soil on which it is growing. Such a suit comes under art. 50 of sch. II of Act XV of 1877; as though growing timber would be technically immoveable property at the time the plaint is filed, it would cease to be so, and would become moveable property at the time of awarding relief if the decree orders the tree to be made over as dead timber, the only form in which possession of a tree alone without soil or right of access over soil can be awarded, and the suit [208] having been brought more than three years after the date of alleged purchase is barred by law of limitation."

The plaintiff preferred a second appeal.

Narayan Ganesh Chandavarkar, for the appellant (plaintiff) :—The Judge has treated the tree as moveable property. The tree is standing and is attached to the soil. The sale-deed itself describes the tree as standing in the Kumbhar Vada of the village. It is, therefore, immoveable property, and the suit is consequently governed by twelve years' limitation and is not time barred.

Daji Abaji Khare, for the respondents (defendants).

JUDGMENT.

SARGENT, C. J.—We cannot agree with the District Judge that "suing for possession of a tree sold under Ex. 45 is to sue for moveable property." The intention of the parties is to be gathered from the document, which is in the clearest terms a sale of the jack tree standing in the Kumbhar Vada. The tree so standing is immoveable property, whatever the plaintiff's intention might be as to cutting it down and so converting it into moveable property.

The suit is, therefore, not barred, and we must reverse the decree and send back the case for a decision on the merits. Costs to abide the result.

Decree reversed and case sent back.

Company—Indian Companies' Act (VI of 1882), s. 169—"Rehearing," meaning of—Application to set aside an ex parte order.

Section 169 of the Indian Companies' Act (VI of 1882) does not apply to an application to set aside an ex parte order.

The term "rehearing" in s.169 of the Act means a rehearing in the nature of an appeal.

The appellant Parvatishankar Durgashankar was a share-holder of the Baila Spinning, Weaving, and Manufacturing Company, Limited.

The company was wound-up under the orders of the Court. In the course of the winding-up proceedings the District Court of Surat passed an ex parte order on 29th September, 1893, directing Parvatishankar to be placed on the list of contributories of the company.

On the 5th October, 1893, Parvatishankar applied to the Court to set aside the ex parte order passed against him.

Notice of this application was served on the official liquidators of the company on 4th November, 1893.

The District Court rejected this application on the ground that the liquidators were not served with notice of the application within three weeks of the order complained of, as required by s. 169 of the Indian Companies' Act (VI of 1882).

Against this order Parvatishankar appealed to the High Court.

JUDGMENT.

SARGENT, C. J.—The language of ss. 141 and 169 of the Indian Companies' Acts of 1866 and 1882 is apparently taken from s. 124 of the English Act of 1862. In Ex parte Besley (1) it was held that by "rehearings" in s. 33 of the Companies' Act 12 and 13 Vic., c. 108, were meant rehearings in the nature of appeals, and such is said by Mr. Buckley on the Companies' Acts to be its meaning in the Act of 1862. In this country it may be said that the use of the term "rehearing" in the sense of an appeal is not known to the procedure of the Civil Courts, which recognises only a "rehearing" after an order for review has been made. However, bearing in mind the hardship which the section might work in this country where notices are served by the Court, as pointed out by Sir Richard Garth, C. J., in In the matter of the Sarawak and Hindustan [210] Banking and Trading Company Limited—Lallah Barroomul v. The Official Liquidator (2), we are not disposed to apply the section beyond what the language clearly requires; and, therefore, without deciding whether it would apply to an application for review, we do not think it was intended to apply to an application to set aside an ex parte order, which is not, strictly speaking, an application for a rehearing, although it may result in it. Moreover, the defendant is ordinarily in ignorance of the order having been made against him, and may remain so until it was attempted to be enforced against him.

In this view of s. 169 of the Act we must reverse the order of the Court below and send back the case for a decision on the merits. Costs to abide the result.

REFERENCE by Khan Bahadur Barzorji Edalji Modi, Judge of the Court of Small Causes at Surat, under s. 617 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882).

One Dwarkadas Parshotamdas obtained a decree in the Court of Small Causes at Surat against his debtor Abbul Tyab Daudkhan, and applied for execution by the arrest and imprisonment of the judgment-debtor. A warrant was issued, and the judgment-debtor was arrested and brought before the Court on the 25th August, 1893. He, thereupon, expressed his intention to apply, under Chap. XX of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV [211] of 1882), to be declared an insolvent and to furnish security under s. 336 of the Code. He was accordingly released from custody, and one Isabhai Daudkhan stood surety for him. On the 30th September, 1893, he presented his application under s. 344 of the Code to be declared an insolvent. After some postponements the application was finally adjourned for hearing on the 24th November, 1893, on which day he failed to appear, and his application was consequently rejected.

The proceedings under the application for execution being still pending, the warrant for the arrest of the judgment-debtor was re-issued on the 1st December, 1893, at the instance of the decree-holder. In the meantime,—that is, on the 29th November, 1893,—the decree-holder applied to the Court that the surety Isabhai Daudkhan should be called upon to pay the amount of the security under his surety bond, namely, Rs. 147-14-5, or in default that the amount might be recovered from him and his property. On the 8th December, 1893, the surety appeared in person, and gave a written undertaking to produce the judgment-debtor whenever ordered. He was accordingly ordered to produce the judgment-debtor on the 11th idem. On that day the surety appeared with his pleader, and contended that he had been released from liability when the judgment-debtor made an application under s. 344 of the Civil Procedure Code, and in support of his contention relied on Koylash Chandra v. C. Christophoridi (1) and Ramzan v. Gerard (2).

The Judge, therefore, submitted the following question :—

SECOND appeal from the decision of G. McCorkell, District Judge of Ahmedabad, confirming the decree of Rao Saheb Maneklal Narotamdas, Joint Second Class Subordinate Judge of Ahmedabad.

The plaintiff sued the Municipality of Ahmedabad for an injunction restraining the defendants from removing a bench standing upon the ground in front of the plaintiff's ota (verandah), alleging that the bench in dispute has been in existence for more than twenty years.

The defendants pleaded (inter alia) that the ground on which the bench stood did not belong to the plaintiff ; that it was part of a public street, and that the bench was only erected in 1889.

The Subordinate Judge found (1) that the bench had been standing upon the ground in front of the plaintiff's ota (verandah) for upwards of twenty years, (2) that the ground on which the [214] bench stood formed part of a street, but not of a public street, and (3) that the Municipality had no power to order the removal of the bench. He, therefore, allowed the claim.

The defendants appealed, urging (inter alia) that as there had been no issue raised as to whether the ground on which the bench stood formed part of a public street they had called no evidence to prove that it did, and they contended that they should be given an opportunity of calling such evidence. The Judge confirmed the decree.

The defendants preferred a second appeal.

L. M. Wadia (with Gangaram B. Rele), for the appellants (defendants) :—In the first Court no distinct issue was raised as to whether the street in which the plaintiff's house stands was a public or a private street. We, therefore, adduced no evidence to prove that it was a public street vested in the Municipality. The Court decided it to be a private street without any evidence. The plaintiff has admitted that the street belongs to Government, and that being so we contend that it vests in the Municipality.

Govardhanram M. Tripathi, for the respondent (plaintiff) :—It was for the defendants to raise issues. If they failed to raise the proper issues they cannot ask for them in second appeal. Even if the street be found to be a public street, still we contend that the right of the Municipality to remove the bench is time-barred.

75. All written notices which may be issued by the Municipality under ss. 33 to 39, 41 to 43, 46, 58, 62 and 69 shall prescribe a time, which shall at the discretion of the Municipality be not less than three days or more than one month, within which the action prescribed in the notice should be taken by the person upon whom the notice is served. In the event of non-compliance with the terms of the notice it shall be lawful for the Municipality to take such action, or such steps as may be necessary for the completion thereof, and all the expenses incurred by them shall be paid by the person or persons upon whom the notice was served, and shall be recoverable in the manner hereinafter provided.

APPELLATE CIVIL.

[SARGENT, C. J.—The erection of the bench is a recurring nuisance, and, therefore, the plea of limitation cannot arise.]

We submit that s. 28 of the Limitation Act (XV of 1877), is applicable to the case. Further, the defendants gave us notice to remove the bench in dispute. That notice was given under s. 48 of the District Municipal Act (Bom. Act VI of 1873), which applies to obstructions that have come into existence after the passing of the Act. The bench has been standing, as we alleged in our written statement, since the time of our ancestors, and both the Courts have found that the obstruction existed before the Act came into operation; therefore, that section is not applicable to the present case. The bench cannot be said to be [215] a nuisance, because it is at one side of the road, and it does not cause any obstruction to the passers by.

Wadia, in reply:—The objection as to the illegality of the notice is taken for the first time at the hearing of the second appeal. It was enough for our purpose that we informed the plaintiff to remove the bench. See s. 42, cl. 1 of the District Municipal Act.

JUDGMENT.

SARGENT, C. J.—A Municipality has power under the Act (Bombay Act VI of 1873) to have all obstructions in a public street removed, whether the obstructions were placed there lawfully or not. The only distinction which the Act draws is between obstructions erected or placed before the Act came into operation and those which have been erected or placed since it came into operation. As to the former, it is provided by s. 42, cl. 1, that notice should be given, and if legally placed on the street, that compensation should be awarded for their removal. In the event of such notice not being complied with, then under s. 75 the Municipality can remove them. As to the latter, the Municipality can remove them under s. 48 even without giving notice.

The Courts have found that the obstruction in question existed before the Act came into operation. The plaintiff received notice to remove the obstruction under s. 48, which was, strictly speaking, the wrong section, as the obstruction had existed before the Act, but no objection was taken to this informality in the notice. It was said, however, that the obstruction in question was not an obstruction to "the safe and convenient passage" along the alleged street. The obstruction in this case is a seat permanently fixed into the street, and although it may be close to the verandah of the plaintiff's house, it was none the less in the street, over the whole of which, as pointed out by Sir G. Jessell in Bagshaw v. Buxton Local Board of Health (1), the public would have the right of passing if it is a public street. The remarks of this Court in E. C. K. Ollivant v. Rahimtula Nur Mahomed (2) show that the circumstance of the obstruction being near to the plaintiff's house cannot affect the question, the public having the [216] right to go as near as they like to it. Moreover, in the dark, it is plain, that such an obstruction would be distinctly unsafe. We may also add that it is not the practice of the Court to interfere with corporate bodies "unless they are manifestly abusing their powers"—Duke of Bedford v. Dawson (3).

The only question, therefore, remaining for decision was, whether the land in question formed part of a public street. As to this the lower Courts have found that it did not. It was, however, objected in the lower Court of appeal by the defendants, and that objection has been renewed before us, that they did not know that it was disputed that it was a public street as alleged in their written statement, and that they were taken by surprise. The second issue raised by the first Court certainly does not in the vernacular distinctly raise this question, and we think, therefore, that we ought not to accept the finding of the lower Courts without giving the defendants an opportunity of giving evidence. We must, therefore, send back the case to the lower appellate Court for a finding on the following issue:—

Whether the land in question forms part of a public street vested in the Municipality ?

The finding to be sent to this Court in three months. Both parties to be allowed to give fresh evidence.

Issue sent back.

Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), ss. 312 and 320—Transfer of execution of a decree to Collector—Court sale—Collector's order setting aside the sale—Suit by auction purchaser to set aside the Collector's order and to have his purchase confirmed.

Certain property was sold in execution of a decree by the Collector, to whom the execution had been transferred under s. 320 of the Code of Civil Procedure [217] (Act XIV of 1882). The Collector set aside the sale before the date of confirmation, on the sole ground that the judgment-debtor had, subsequent to the sale, made full payment of the sum decreed. Thereupon the auction-purchaser filed a suit for a declaration that the sale had been improperly set aside, and for a confirmation of the sale.

Held, that the suit would lie. Reading s. 312 with s. 311 of the Code of Civil Procedure, the suit was not barred under the last clause of s. 312, nor under s. 588, cl. 16.

Held, also, that the rules framed by Government under s. 320 of the Code only restricted the powers of the Court to interfere with the procedure of the execution of decrees transferred to the Collector. They did not come in the way of a party to bring a civil suit to establish his purchase.

Held, also, that the Collector had no power under s. 311 of the Code to set aside the sale and receive payment from the judgment-debtor.

SECOND appeal from the decision of S. Hammick, District Judge of Ahmednagar, in appeal No. 190 of 1891 confirming the decision of Rao Bahadur Ganpatrao A. Mankar, Subordinate Judge of the First Class, in suit No. 294 of 1891.

On the 29th October, 1890, the property in dispute was sold in execution of a decree by the Collector to whom the execution had been transferred under s. 320 of the Code of Civil Procedure (Act XIV of 1882).

* Second Appeal, No. 678 of 1892.

FEB. 19.
APPELLATE CIVIL.
19 B. 216.

On the 7th November, 1890, the judgment-debtor applied to the Collector not to confirm the sale, on the ground that he was ready to satisfy the decree.

The judgment-debtor paid up the amount of the decree, and on that ground the Collector set aside the decree and ordered the purchase-money to be restored to the auction-purchaser on the 14th December, 1890.

Thereupon the auction-purchaser filed the present suit to have the auction sale of the 29th October, 1890, confirmed, alleging that there was no irregularity in publishing or conducting the sale, and that the Collector had no authority to set aside the sale.

Defendant No. 1, the judgment-debtor, did not appear to contest the claim.

Defendant No. 2, the judgment-creditor at whose instance the property was put up to sale, pleaded that he was unnecessarily made a party to the suit, and that the sale was not set aside at his instance.

[218] The Court of first instance held that the judgment-debtor's paying the decretal amount after the auction sale was not a sufficient reason for setting aside the sale; that there was no irregularity in publishing or conducting the sale, and that, therefore, it could not be set aside under s. 311 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The Court further held, on the authority of Azim-ud-din v. Baldeo (1) and Bandi Bibi v. Kalka(2), that the suit was maintainable.

The Court, therefore, passed a decree confirming the auction-sale at which the plaintiff had purchased the property in dispute.

This decree was affirmed, on appeal, by the District Judge.

From this decision the defendant No. 1 preferred a second appeal to the High Court.

Daji Abaji Khare, for appellant:—The suit is not maintainable. It is barred under the last clause of s. 312 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The decree in execution of which the property was sold, was sent to the Collector for execution under s. 320 of the Code. The rules framed by the Local Government under that section confer upon the Collector the powers of the Court under s. 312. It is competent, therefore, for the Collector either to confirm or refuse to confirm an auction sale. The Court has no jurisdiction to interfere with his orders passed under s. 312. If his order was wrong or illegal, it was open to the aggrieved party to appeal against that order under s. 588, cl. (16). It is not open to him to file a regular suit to set aside the order. Referring to ss. 311, 312 and 313, they contemplate an application to be made to the Court, and not a suit, as the proper procedure to adopt in a case like this. Refers to Mohendro Narain v. Gopal (3), Viraraghava v. Venkatacharyar(4), Modun Mohun v. Boroda Soondari (5).

Ganasham Nilkanth, for respondent:—Section 312 should be read with s. 311 of the Code of Civil Procedure. When so read, they refer to applications either by a decree-holder [219] or by a judgment-debtor to set aside a Court sale, and not to an application by an auction-purchaser. The last clause of s. 312 does not, therefore, apply. And there is nothing in the Code which bars a suit like the present. That such a suit can lie, see Azim-ud-din v. Baldeo(1); Bandi Bibi v. Kalka(2). Nor is the suit barred by any of the rules framed by Government under s. 320 of the Code of Civil Procedure. Those rules only restrict the jurisdiction of the Court to interfere with the procedure adopted by the Collector in executing the decree. They do not prevent the Court from entertaining a suit like the present.

JUDGMENT.

RANADE, J.—In this case plaintiff brought his suit to have it declared that the auction-sale at which he had bought certain property was improperly set aside by the Collector, to whom the execution had been transferred by the Civil Court under ss. 320—326 of the Code, and to have his auction-purchase confirmed. The suit was brought against the original judgment-debtor, who did not appear to defend the suit, and the judgment-creditor who appeared, urged that he had received the money due to him from the Collector. The Collector set aside the sale, before the date of confirmation, solely on the ground that the judgment-debtor had made full payment of the sum decreed.

It was contended on plaintiff's behalf that the Collector had no power under s. 311 to set aside the sale, and to receive payment from the judgment-debtor. This contention was upheld by both the lower Courts. In second appeal, the appellant's pleader urged before us the objection that plaintiff's suit was not maintainable, and that plaintiff's remedy was by an application to the lower Court.

On a careful consideration of ss. 311—316, and of the authorities cited on both sides, we feel satisfied that the suit was maintainable in the circumstances of the present case. Section 311 contemplates applications by the decree-holder or by a person whose property has been sold on the ground of irregularity, while s. 313 only permits the purchaser so to apply when the judgment-debtor is found to have no saleable interest [220] in the property sold. With s. 311, s. 312 must be read, and when so read the last clause of s. 312 creates no bar to the suit, neither does s. 588, cl. 16. See Azim-ud-din v. Baldeo (1).

It was further contended by Mr. Khare for the appellant that, as the execution in this case was transferred to the Collector, that officer had, under the rules framed by Government and s. 320 of the Code, full powers, and Civil Court had no jurisdiction to interfere in the matter. This restriction obviously has reference to the powers of the Court to interfere with the procedure of the execution of decrees transferred to the Collector. It could not come in the way of the right of the party to bring a civil suit to establish his purchase. The Allahabad High Court has expressly held that such a right exists even in the case of irregularities in the conduct of sales ordered by civil Courts. See Azim-ud-din v. Baldeo(1) and Bandi Bibi v. Kalka(2). This Court has also held in Bai Amthi v. Madhav Manor(3) that the Collector's procedure in re-selling property already sold by him should be treated as a nullity. Section 325 permits a resale when the Collector buys in the property, but not where there has been a formal sale. If the right exists, it is open under s. 311, Civil Procedure Code, to the plaintiff to assert it in a Civil suit, unless it can be shown that it has been expressly taken away.

We accordingly confirm the decree of the Courts below and dismiss the appeal with costs.

Decree confirmed.

Will—Construction—Gift of life interest or corpus—Discretion of executors to hand over corpus—Costs.

Anna Maria Bocarro, a Portuguese inhabitant of Bombay, died in April, 1884, leaving three sons, Michael, Silveiro, and Joaquim (defendant No. 3), and two daughters, Rose and Caroline. By her will she directed that her daughter Rose should enjoy the rents and profits of certain immoveable property for her life, and that after her death the said property should be sold, and the sale-proceeds (after payment of two legacies thereout) be divided equally between her two sons Silveiro and Joaquim (defendant No. 3). She further, however, directed that Joaquim's share of such proceeds should be held in trust by her executors and invested in Government securities, the interest of which should be applied to Joaquim's maintenance, and that in case Joaquim should die leaving a widow or issue, his share should go to them as he should devise or bequeath. The will then continued:—"Should my said son Joaquim Amador Bocarro reform himself, and shake off all his evil tendencies, and lead a steady, quiet and orderly life, or should he on account of illness or other reasonable cause be in urgent need of pecuniary assistance, I leave it to the discretion of my executors either to make over to my said son Joaquim Amador Bocarro for his absolute use the whole of the amount which he may be entitled to under (c) of paragraph sixth above, or such part or parts thereof as to my executors may appear proper."

Silveiro died in 1885, unmarried and intestate, leaving his two brothers, Michael and Joaquim, and his two sisters, Rose and Caroline, him surviving. Michael died in 1889, leaving a widow and children.

In 1891 Joaquim (defendant No. 3) mortgaged all his interest under the said will to the plaintiffs to secure a loan of Rs. 6,100. In 1893 Rose died, and in 1894 Caroline died.

Subsequently the executors were proceeding to sell the property mentioned in the will when the plaintiffs filed this suit praying for a declaration that they had a valid charge upon Joaquim's interest therein, and that his interest should be ascertained and declared, and he himself ordered to pay the amount of their claim; that the property should be sold and their claim paid out of the funds; that the executors should be restrained from selling, save subject to their (plaintiffs') rights, &c.

The plaintiffs and Joaquim contended that he (Joaquim) in the events that had happened was entitled to the whole of the proceeds of the property absolutely and that the gift in the sixth clause of the will could not be cut down by the provisions of the seventh clause.

[222] Held:—(1) That the defendant Joaquim had no interest in the house mentioned in the will. He was only entitled to a share of the proceeds after it had been sold.

(2) That his interest in his share of such proceeds was merely a life interest, with power to appoint to his widow or issue, and that he was not entitled to be paid, the corpus of such share; but that the executors might under certain circumstances and at their discretion hand over to him the said corpus.

(3) That neither the plaintiffs nor Joaquim could interfere in the sale of the said property.

(4) That the plaintiffs had a valid charge upon Joaquim's interest in the sale-proceeds of the said property to the extent of their mortgage.

(5) That Joaquim's interest was (after deducting the legacies given by the sixth clause) an absolute interest in one-fourth share of Silveiro's moiety and a life interest in his (Joaquim's) moiety subject to the contingency of the executors in their discretion handing over the corpus of the share or part thereof, for his absolute use, in which event the plaintiffs had the right to the same so far as their debt was unsatisfied.

(6) As to costs, the plaintiffs and third defendant Joaquim should pay their own costs; that the executors and defendants Nos. 4 to 12 should have their costs paid out of Joaquim's share in Silveiro's moiety of the sale-proceeds, and, if that fund were not sufficient to pay such costs, the plaintiffs and the third defendant Joaquim to pay the deficiency.

[Confirmed on appeal, 19 B. 770.]

ONE Anna Maria Bocarro, a Portuguese inhabitant of Bombay, died on the 19th April, 1884, leaving three sons (Michael, Silveiro Joseph, and the third defendant Joaquim), and two daughters, Rose Maria and Caroline.

Anna Maria Bocarro, at the time of her death, possessed both moveable and immoveable property. She left a will dated 12th March, 1884, and a codicil of the same date, and the first and second defendants were the executors. With reference to certain immoveable property belonging to the testatrix the will contained the following directions:—

4. "If my daughter Rose Maria Bocarro should survive me, I direct that so long as she lives, my large house No. 57 and such of my smaller buildings Nos. 55, 56 and 71 as may not be sold should be rented, and the rents which may be received therefrom should, after deducting such sums as may be necessary for the payment of all kinds of tax on property and for whitewashing and repairing the said houses, be applied for the maintenance of my aforesaid daughter Rose Maria Bocarro."

5. "But should my said daughter Rose Maria Bocarro predecease me, or should she die after me, then I direct that my executors herein named should sell within a reasonable time, either privately or by public auction, my large house No. 57 and such of my smaller houses Nos. 55, 56 and 71 which may not be sold, preference being given to any of my sons and heirs hereafter named who may desire to purchase any or all of the said houses."

[223] 6. "After the houses, referred to in the preceding paragraph 5, are sold, I direct that out of the proceeds of the sale (a) a sum of Rs. 500 (five hundred) should be made over by my executors to my daughter-in-law Anna Joaquina Bocarro, wife of my eldest son Michael Bocarro, to be assigned by her in such proportion and in such manner as she may deem proper for the benefit of her four daughters, namely, Anna L. Bocarro, Cecilia Bocarro, Rosalind Bocarro and Catherine Bocarro; (b) that a sum of Rs. 1,000 (one thousand) should be given to my daughter Caroline Britto, wife of Julius Lucas Britto, for her own and absolute use; and (c) that the remainder should be divided among my two sons Joaquim Amador Bocarro and Silveiro Joseph Bocarro in equal proportions."

7. "I further direct that the amount which may fall to the share of my son Joaquim Amador Bocarro under (c) of paragraph six above should be held in trust by my executors hereinafter named and converted by them into Government securities, the interest accruing wherefrom should be paid for the maintenance of my said son Joaquim Amador Bocarro. Should my said son Joaquim Amador Bocarro die leaving a widow or issue, his share shall be given to such widow or issue according as he may devise and bequeath. Should my said son Joaquim Amador Bocarro reform himself, and shake off all his evil tendencies, and lead a steady, quiet and orderly life, or should he on account of illness or other reasonable cause be in urgent need of pecuniary assistance, I leave it to the discretion of my executors either to make over to my said son Joaquim Amador Bocarro for his absolute use the whole of the amount which he may be entitled to under (c) of paragraph sixth above, or such part or parts thereof as to my executors may appear proper."

The testatrix died, as above mentioned, on the 19th April, 1884.

Silveiro died in 1885, unmarried and intestate.

Michael died in June, 1889, leaving a widow and seven children (defendants Nos. 5 to 12).

Rose Maria died in June, 1893.

Caroline died on the 19th February, 1894, leaving a will of that date, of which defendant No. 4 was executor.

On the 12th February, 1891, (while Rose Maria was still living and in receipt of the rents and profits of the property mentioned in the above clauses of the will) the third defendant Joaquim, the son of the testatrix, executed a mortgage to the plaintiffs for Rs. 6,100. The property assigned by him as security for the said sum was as follows:—

"All that the right, title, interest, benefit, reversion, claim and demand of him the said defendant into and upon all and singular the estate, effects and property left by the said Anna Maria Bocarro, or any part thereof, to which the said defendant was then or might thereafter be entitled under and by virtue of the directions, provisions and bequests contained in the said will of the said Anna Maria Bocarro dated the 12th [224] March, 1884, and the said codicil thereto or to which the said defendant was then or might thereafter be entitled to as one of the heirs of the said Anna Maria Bocarro, deceased, under the said will or codicil thereto or otherwise howsoever. And the stocks, funds and securities for the time being representing the same and the dividends, interest and annual produce thereof, and all the right, title, interest, claim and demand whatsoever of the said defendant into and upon the same. And all that piece or parcel of land, &c." (Here followed the assignment of the house.)

The executors (defendants Nos. 1 and 2) subsequently proposed to sell the said houses and informed the third defendant (Joaquim) of their intention. The plaintiffs (the mortgagees), however, hearing of the proposed sale wrote to the executors informing them of their charge on the third defendant's interest in the property, and stating that they would have no objection to join in a sale, provided that the amount due to them was paid out of the proceeds. The third defendant also wrote to the executors asking them to pay off the plaintiffs out of the proceeds. The executors replied that they knew nothing of the mortgage. Whereupon the plaintiffs filed this suit.

The plaint stated that the executors had advertised the properties for sale, and unless restrained would sell them, and distribute the proceeds without regard to the plaintiffs' claim. The plaintiffs, therefore, prayed (1) for a declaration that they had a valid charge upon the interest of the third defendant in the said properties; (2) that the third defendant's interest therein should be ascertained and declared; (3) that the third defendant should be ordered to pay the amount of their claim and costs, and in default of payment by a fixed date, the interest of the third defendant might be sold and the proceeds applied in satisfaction of their claim; (4) that the defendants should be restrained from selling the properties, save subject to the plaintiffs' right, or from parting with the proceeds of the property, if sold, until the plaintiffs' claim was satisfied; (5) that such of the defendants as contested the plaintiffs' claim should pay the costs of suit.

The executors (defendants Nos. 1 and 2) filed a written statement, submitting the construction of the will and the question as to the interest taken by the third defendant to the determination of the Court. They alleged that the suit was unnecessary, and that the plaintiffs had no right to restrain the sale.

[225] The third defendant (Joaquim) contended that under the will, and in the events that had happened, he was absolutely entitled to the whole of the proceeds of the property after satisfying the plaintiffs' claim, and he asked for a declaration to that effect.

The fourth defendant, who was the executor of Caroline, (daughter of the testatrix) who died in February, 1894, contended that on the death of Silveiro in March, 1885, his surviving brothers and sisters became entitled to his estate, and that he, as Caroline's executor, was entitled to her share. He also claimed an interest in the share intended for Silverio under cl. 6. He submitted that the third defendant should pay the costs of suit and not the estate.

Defendants Nos. 5 to 12 also filed a written statement setting forth their claim.

Lang (Advocate-General) and Inverarity, for the plaintiffs.

Kirkpatrick and Lowndes, for defendants No. 1 and 2.

Scott and Raikes, for defendant No. 3.

Melsheimer and Robertson, for other defendants.

JUDGMENT.

22*nd September*, 1894. CANDY, J.—The decision in this case depends upon the construction of the will of Anna Maria Bocarro, who died on 19th April, 1884, leaving (1) a son Michael, who died in 1889 and who is represented in this suit by his widow and children defendants Nos. 5 to 12; (2) a son Silveiro, who died unmarried and intestate in 1885; (3) a son Joaquim, who is third defendant in this suit; (4) a daughter Rose Maria, who died unmarried in 1893 and is represented in this suit by the Administrator General; (5) a daughter Caroline, who died in February, 1894, and is represented in this suit by her husband (defendant No. 4), who has obtained probate of her will. Defendants Nos. 1 and 2 are executors of Anna Maria Bocarro's will.

[226] Plaintiffs are mortgagees of certain interest of Joaquim (the third defendant) under the said will. They ask for a declaration that they have a valid charge upon the interest of the third defendant in certain properties and the sale-proceeds thereof to the extent of Rs. 6,100 plus interest and costs, and that, in default of payment of such by third defendant, the properties may be sold and applied in satisfaction of such debt.

The plea of the defendants (except the third defendant, who supports the claim of his incumbrancers) is generally that the interest of the third defendant in the properties in question is of a very limited nature.

ORIGINAL CIVIL.

The clauses of the will, which for the purpose of this suit it is necessary to consider, are paragraphs 4 to 7. They run as follows: (His Lordship read the clauses above set forth (supra p. 222) and continued:—)

Now it is admitted that the executors are taking steps to sell houses Nos. 57, 55 and 71; and the first question is, whether under the will Joaquim has any interest in those houses. The answer must be in the negative. The executors are directed by the will to sell the said houses on the death of Rose Maria. After the houses are sold, two legacies (Rs. 500 and Rs. 1,000) are to be paid out of the proceeds, and the 'remainder' is to be "divided among Joaquim and Silveiro in equal proportions." Joaquim's interest, therefore, is limited to a moiety of the sale-proceeds after payment of the two legacies.

It is asserted for the plaintiffs that Joaquim is entitled to the corpus of that money which belongs absolutely to him, and counsel contend that in the sixth paragraph of the will there is an absolute gift of the said moiety to Joaquim, with an attempt by the testatrix in the seventh paragraph to fetter the enjoyment of the said moiety, an attempt which on the authorities of certain cases the Court will not permit. I have perused the cases quoted by the learned counsel and also nearly all of the long list given in Theobald (3rd Ed.), p. 353; but it seems unnecessary to burden this judgment with my notes of the various and interesting points which arose in those cases, because [227] in the present case there are no express words of absolute gift; and to hold that the testatrix must have intended to make in any case an absolute gift to Joaquim of the corpus of the moiety of the sale-proceeds of the houses in question would be inconsistent with certain clear expressions in the will. She does not in the sixth paragraph direct the money to be paid over to Joaquim; she directs that the remainder should be divided among Joaquim and Silveiro in equal proportions. That direction simply prescribes the shares in which the two brothers are to enjoy the sale-proceeds. Having prescribed the method of division, testatrix goes on in the seventh paragraph to prescribe the interest which Joaquim was to enjoy in his "share." It was to be a life interest, with power to appoint to his widow or issue. And then follows a direction empowering the executors in the exercise of their discretion under certain circumstances to give the whole or part of the corpus of the moiety of the sale-proceeds to Joaquim for his absolute use. There are only two ways in which those directions can be read. Either testatrix meant to say:—"I direct my executors to invest Joaquim's share of the sale-proceeds and pay him the interest, with power, under certain circumstances, to give him for his absolute use the whole or part of the corpus, and on his death to pay the corpus (or such part as shall not have been given over to Joaquim for his absolute use) to Joaquim's widow or issue according as he shall have so appointed." That seems good sense. Or testatrix meant to say:—"I give to Joaquim absolutely the moiety of the sale-proceeds. And I further direct that under certain circumstances the executors may give to him for his absolute use the whole or part of the said moiety which I have already given him absolutely." That hardly seems sense.

There are two and apparently only two arguments which can be raised in favour of the latter construction:—(1) Delete the seventh paragraph of the will, and there can be no doubt that both Silveiro and Joaquim took an absolute interest in the corpus of their moieties of the remainder of the sale-proceeds. Silveiro is not mentioned in the will except in the sixth paragraph. There is no doubt that under s. 106 of the Succession Act of 1865 there was vested in Silveiro on the death [228] of testatrix a right to receive at once the moiety of the remainder of the sale-proceeds which would arise on the death of Rose. That vested right passed on Silveiro's death to his representatives, and Joaquim as one of these representatives will be entitled to receive his share of Silveiro's moiety. But, it is contended, Joaquim's "share" is given in the same words as Silveiro's; therefore there is as much an absolute gift of the corpus in the one case as in the other. The answer to that argument is that no doubt, if the seventh paragraph is deleted, the fund will be rightly taken as absolutely bequeathed to both sons. But, as was said by Lord Cottenham in Lassence v. Tierney (1), "the intention that the gift should be absolute as between the legatee and the estate is, as in all cases of construction, to be collected from the will and not from there being words which standing alone would constitute an absolute gift." Here, as shown above, the only way in which to construe with sense the sixth and seventh paragraphs together is to suppose that testatrix gave a life interest in the fund to Joaquim, with power to the executors under certain circumstances to hand over the corpus to Joaquim for his absolute use.

(2) The other argument is that, if testatrix did not intend to give the corpus of the fund absolutely to Joaquim, then there is no gift over, and an intestacy as to this part of the estate may ensue. a contingency which the testatrix could not have comtemplated. If, for instance, Joaquim died to-morrow without having appointed to his widow or issue, it is said that his share in this fund would revert to Anna Maria Bocarro's estate; and under these circumstances the Court must incline to the view that the testatrix intended to bequeath Joaquim's share absolutely to him. The answer to that argument is that the fact that Joaquim's share may fall back into the estate of the testatrix, and that the testatrix may not have contemplated such an event, is not enough to outweigh the clear words of the will. And, indeed, the argument assumes what is not shown to be a fact. Testatrix may well have hoped, and contemplated, that the executors would be able under the certain circumstances specified to hand over to Joaquim his share for his absolute use. It is, moreover, [229] premature to say that there was no gift over. I understand that Joaquim has now a wife and children, though he had not in 1884. They are not parties to the suit, but it is possible that, if Joaquim died without exercising his power of appointment, the widow and children may contend that the fund passes to them under the will, such being the intention of the testatrix. I do not say that they would succeed in such a contention. Possibly the power given to Joaquim to appoint is not imperative, and there is no expression sufficiently clear and strong to amount to a trust in favour of Joaquim's widow and children—Brook v. Brook (2). And in truth, if the case be regarded still further in this light, it will be seen that the contentions of the plaintiffs and third defendant are altogether premature. For the case falls under s. 126, and not under s. 125 of the Succession Act (X of 1865). Testatrix did not simply bequeath Joaquim's share to him for his maintenance and there stop, but she bequeathed him his share and directed that the mode of enjoyment by the legatee should be restricted to a life interest, with power to the executors under certain circumstances to give him the corpus for his absolute use and with power to Joaquim to appoint to his widow or issue. If Joaquim's wife and issue predecease him, and the executors have not exercised their power, then it is quite possible that Joaquim's representatives will on his death be entitled to the fund. But all this is premature. Admitting that Joaquim's share is a fund absolutely bequeathed so as to sever it from the estate of testatrix, the mode of enjoyment directed by the will has not failed. Joaquim is still alive. The interest can be paid to him; the executors can in the exercise of their discretion pay him the corpus. Nothing has yet happened which makes the fund belong to Joaquim as if the will had contained no such directions as are found in the seventh paragraph of the will.

For these reasons I find—

On the first issue that third defendant is not now absolutely entitled to the corpus of a half share in the sale-proceeds, but is at present entitled to a life interest in the said share, after [230] deduction of the legacies referred to in the 5th paragraph of the will.

On the second issue that on the death of Silveiro his share became vested in his representatives, and third defendant as such is entitled to the one-fourth of such share.

On the third issue that plaintiffs have no right to restrain the defendants Nos. 1 and 2 from selling the properties. They have simply a charge on Joaquim's share in the sale-proceeds. I notice that the plaintiffs' mortgage-deed purports to cover certain premises, but it is impossible from the description to say whether these are the properties which are now being sold, and which are referred to in sch. (C) attached to the plaint. The prayer of the plaint is concerned with these only; and regarding them there is no dispute.

On the fourth issue that the plaintiffs are so entitled. That point has never been disputed.

I decline to find on the issues raised by the learned counsel at the last hearing, and numbered by me 6, 7 and 8. They do not arise from the pleadings.

The relief, therefore, which the plaintiffs are entitled to is—

Declare that plaintiffs have a valid charge upon the interest of the third defendant in the sale-proceeds of the properties in question to the extent of Rs. 6,100 plus interest at 12 per cent. per annum from 12th February, 1891.

Declare that interest to be, after deducting the legacies of Rs. 500 and Rs. 1,000, one-fourth share of Silveiro's moiety; to this Joaquim is absolutely entitled; also that interest includes a life interest in Joaquim's moiety of the said sale-proceeds, subject to the contingency of the executors in the exercise of their discretion under certain circumstances handing over to Joaquim the corpus, or part thereof, of the said share for his absolute use; in such event the plaintiffs will have the right to receive the same to such extent as their debt is unsatisfied.

Decree payment of the debt as shown above. I decline to order sale of Joaquim's interest in the houses. He has none, nor have his incumbrances, except so far that they and he can insist [231] on the executors selling within a reasonable time according to the directions in the will. But the executors have shown that they are complying with the directions of the will and selling within reasonable time.

Let the moneys, if realized, be handed over to defendants Nos. 1 and 2, and enjoin them to hold and pay such subject to the above directions.

I have carefully considered the question of costs.

I note that the third defendant in his letter of 15th January last to the executors claimed the whole of the proceeds of sale, both under the will of Mrs. Bocarro and also independent of such will. Similarly the plaintiffs in their letter of 16th January alleged that the third defendant is the residuary legatee and heir of the testatrix and entitled to the properties in question both under the will and otherwise. They also claimed to join in any sale, a claim which is not well founded. The executors in their reply of 19th January speak of the third defendant having at the utmost a life interest in a part of the estate, but that evidently was with reference to Joaquim's share of the residue of the sale-proceeds, and was not intended to deny that Joaquim had an interest in Silveiro's share. This is made clear by the written statement of the executors. It is true that in a subsequent letter of 27th January the executors speak of being desirous of having the opinion of the Court as to whether Joaquim was entitled to the bulk of his share of the proceeds of sale, or only to the interest thereof, for his life, a question which, in my opinion, hardly admits of doubt. But in any case it was the plaintiffs and the third defendant who caused the litigation, and I see no reason why the executors should not have their costs taxed as between attorney and client out of the estate, that is, out of Joaquim's share in Silveiro's moiety of the residue of the sale-proceeds. And defendants Nos. 4 to 12 are entitled to their costs out of the same funds, for it would not be right that their shares in that moiety should be diminished owing to this litigation into which they were unwillingly brought. Let the plaintiffs and the third defendant bear their own costs. Let defendants Nos. 1 and 2 pay their own costs as directed above and the costs of [232] defendants Nos. 4 to 12 out of the fund, as just shown. Of course, if the fund just described is not sufficient to pay the costs of defendants Nos. 1 and 2 and of defendants Nos. 4 to 12, then plaintiffs and defendant No. 3 must pay the deficiency. Let the decree so direct.

Insolvency—Insolvent Act, Stat. 11 and 12 Vict., C. 21 ss. 7 and 27—After-acquired property of insolvent—Salary—Pension—Personal earnings of insolvent.

After-acquired property of an insolvent, whether it consists of salary, personal earnings or property of a different kind, is property which vests in the Official Assignee, but subject to the provision of s. 27 of the Indian Insolvent Act (1) as to salary and pension and subject to the unwritten law as to personal earnings

(1) Statute 11 and 12 Vict., c. 21, ss. 7 and 27 (Indian Insolvent Act) :—

"And be it enacted, that upon the filing of such petition as is aforesaid, it shall be lawful for the said Court and the said Court is hereby authorized and required to order that all the real and personal estate and effects of such petitioner, whether within the territories within the limits of the charter of the East India Company, or without, except the wearing apparel, bedding and other such necessaries, of such petitioner and his family, not exceeding in the whole the value of Company's Rupees three hundred for each petitioner with his family, and all debts due to him, and all the future estate, right, title, interest and trust of the said petitioner in or to any real or personal estate or effects within or without the said territories, which such petitioner may purchase, or sufficient for the maintenance, according to his position in life, of the insolvent and his family. Accordingly the Official Assignee is not entitled to claim such salary or income except by means of an order obtained under s. 27 of the Act, nor such personal earnings at all unless and until in either case the insolvent has accumulated a margin beyond what has been required for his adequate support.

An attachment upon the salary of a railway servant ceases to be operative after he has filed his petition in insolvency, and should be withdrawn on notice being given of the making of the vesting order.

THE insolvent, who was an engine-driver in the employment of the G. I. P. Railway Company, filed his petition in the Insolvent [233] Court in Bombay on the 28th September, 1893. Prior to that date a decree had been obtained against him in the Court of the Subordinate Judge at Bhusaval, and in execution of that decree half his salary had been attached under s. 266 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882) and the money so attached was paid into the Court of Bhusaval.

The fact that insolvent had filed his petition in Bombay, and that the usual vesting order had been made, was duly reported to [234] the Court at Bhusaval, but the attachment was nevertheless continued, and half the insolvent's salary continued to be paid into that Court, which remitted the moneys so paid in to the Official Assignee at Bombay.

On the 13th June, 1894, the insolvents' petition came on for hearing before Farran, J.; and as the opposing creditors did not appear, the insolvent obtained his discharge. He thereupon applied to the Court that the moneys which had been remitted from Bhusaval to the Official Assignee, as above mentioned, should be paid over to him.

[233] which may revert, descend, be devised or bequeathed, or come to him, and all debts growing due to him before the Court shall have made its order in the nature of a certificate as hereinafter mentioned, do vest in the Official Assignee for the time being of the said Court, and that all books, papers, deeds, and writings in any way relating to such petitioner's estate and effects in his possession, or under his custody or control, shall be deposited with such assignee, and such order shall be entered of record in the said Court, and such notice thereof shall be published as the said Court shall direct: and such order, when so made, shall by virtue of this Act relate back to and take effect from the filing of the said petition, and shall instantly, and without any conveyance or assignment, vest all the real or personal estate, effects and debts as aforesaid in the said Official Assignee, who shall have full powers for the recovery thereof, and shall hold and stand possessed of the same for the purposes and in manner hereinafter mentioned: Provided always that in case, after the making of any such vesting order, the petition of any such petitioner shall be dismissed by the said Court, such vesting order made in pursuance of such petition shall from and after such dismissal be null and void to all intents and purposes. Provided also, that in case any such vesting order as aforesaid shall become null and void by the dismissal of such petition, all acts theretofore done by any assignee or other person acting under his authority, according to the provisions of this Act shall be good and valid, and no action or suit shall be commenced against any such assignee, nor against any person duly acting under his authority, except to recover any property of such petitioner detained after an order made by the said Court for the delivery thereof, and demand made thereupon; and until the appointment of an Official Assignee as hereinafter is directed, the common assignee of the Court shall stand and be in the place of the Official Assignee, and this present clause shall apply and have effect accordingly.

"27 And be it enacted, that if any such insolvent as aforesaid shall, at any time, before he shall obtain his discharge in the nature of a certificate as hereinafter mentioned, hold any public office, appointment or benefice, civil military or ecclesiastical, not saleable, or shall be in any situation or employment whatsoever in respect of which he shall receive any salary or emolument, or shall be in receipt of any pension, then it shall be lawful for the said Court to order the said insolvent to pay such proportion of his receipts therefrom to his assignee as the said Court shall think right; and all saleable offices, appointments or benefices shall vest by virtue of the vesting order as aforesaid in the Official Assignee, in trust for the creditors of such insolvent as aforesaid."

The Court thereupon directed that notice should be given to the attaching creditor and to the opposing creditors calling upon them to show cause "why the moneys now in the hands of the Official Assignee to the credit of this estate, being deduction from the insolvent's salary earned by him after the date of his petition, should not be paid over to the said insolvent."

On the 5th September, 1894, the matter came again before the Court, but the parties did not appear. The Official Assignee, however, asked the Court to give its decision upon the application.

On the 3rd October, the Court delivered the following judgment :—

JUDGMENT.

FARRAN J.—The insolvent in this case upon receiving his discharge applied that certain moneys which were in the hands of the Official Assignee, the proceeds of his salary which had been attached, should be paid over to him. I directed notice of this application to be given to the attaching creditor, which was done. When the matter came before me on the 5th September, the parties did not appear, but the Official Assignee asked for my decision upon the application.

Previous to the insolvency the attaching creditor obtained a decree in the Court of the Subordinate Judge at Bhusaval, and in pursuance of it attached, under s. 266 of the Civil Procedure Code, half the salary of the insolvent, an engine-driver in the employment of the G. I. P. Railway Company. The insolvent filed his petition in this Court on the 28th of September, 1893, [235] when the usual vesting order, under s. 7 of the Indian Insolvent Act, was made. Notwithstanding this petition and vesting order (which were duly notified to the Subordinate Judge), the half-salary of the insolvent still continued to be recovered by attachment, and the Bhusaval Court caused the moneys so recovered to be remitted to the Official Assignee, and they are the subject of the present application.

The first question which arises for consideration is, whether the salary of a railway employe earned after his petition vests in the Official Assignee. It is a question of much difficulty, and I should have wished that it could have been fully argued before me. The words of s. 7 are very general, and it is difficult to see why they should not include the salary of the insolvent earned by and coming to him after his insolvency. In Ex parte Huggins (1), the salary and income of a bankrupt were treated as property vesting in his trustees under ss. 4, 15, and 17 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1869. The Court, in fact, decided that the income in that case, which was a pension, did so vest, and I cannot see that the definition of property in that English Act is more wide than are the comprehensive provisions of s. 7 of the Indian Act. In Ex parte Benwell(2), Brett, M.R., on the other hand, treated the salary of an insolvent as not vesting in his trustees under ss. 15 and 17, but only as property liable to be dealt with by the Court under s. 90, which correspond to s. 27 of our Act. It was not there necessary to decide the point, and the other Judges in appeal did not refer to it. In Wadling v. Oliphant (3), Archibald, J., says: "The general principle is that the property of the debtor passes to his assignees, and in order to divest it the case must be brought within some recognized exception. The exception relied upon here is that the money is due for the personal labour of the bankrupt. Now, the cases do show that there is a rule, the extent and limit of which is not exactly defined, by which the bankrupt, after the date of his bankruptcy, may in certain cases keep the [236] produce of his personal labour." These remarks were not directed to the case of salary earned by the bankrupt. In Re Rogers(1), Vaughan Williams, J., referring to the same subject, says: "It is said—and rightly said—that the personal earnings of a bankrupt do not pass to his trustee, at all events in cases where there is no margin shown after sufficient has been applied for the maintenance of the bankrupt."

There is not much difference in the practical result at which the Courts in England have arrived as to salary and personal earnings, but the mode in which it is arrived at is in most of the cases not defined. To my mind the most legal and logical way of treating the subject is that adopted in Ex parte Huggins (supra), viz., to treat after-acquired property of an insolvent, whether it consists of salary, of personal earnings, or property of a different kind, as property all alike vesting in the Official Assignee, but subject to the provisions of s. 27 as to salary and pensions, and subject to the unwritten law as to personal earnings sufficient for the maintenance, according to his position in life, of the insolvent and his family, the result being that the Official Assignee is not entitled to claim such salary or income from the insolvent except by means of an order obtained under s. 27, nor such personal earnings at all unless and until in either case the insolvent has accumulated a margin beyond what has been required for his adequate support.

If this be the true way of regarding this rather obscure subject, it follows that after petition filed, and vesting order made, an attachment laid or continued upon the salary of a railway servant ceases to be operative and should be withdrawn, on the attaching creditor or the Court which issued the attachment, having official notice of the making of the vesting order and the title of the Official Assignee; and under this view of the law, I should be justified in directing the Official Assignee to restore the salary of the insolvent earned since the date of the vesting order to him. If this be not the correct mode of regarding the subject, and if the wide words of s. 7 are cut down, or qualified by the provisions of s. 27, and I feel diffident in acting upon [237] my view of the law as it has been come to without hearing arguments, then I have to consider whether the Court at Bhusaval was justified in continuing the attachment after schedule filed by the insolvent admitting the claim of the attaching creditor, or whether it ought not to have stayed all further proceedings under s. 49 of the Indian Insolvent Act.

Now no doubt the staying of proceedings under s. 49 is discretionary, and the Court, on proof to its satisfaction that the execution process which it is issuing is in respect of a debt or demand admitted in the schedule, is not bound to stay its hand; yet the provision that the party is to pay the costs incurred in the matter by the insolvent, if (after the party has notice that his debt or demand has been admitted in the insolvent's schedule) he continues his execution, indicates clearly that the insolvent is entitled ex debito justitiæ to such a stay unless the party satisfies the Court that execution should not for some particular reason be suspended. The same remarks apply to the continuing of a suit for money after notice. It is only in exceptional cases that the suit or execution should be allowed to proceed. Such would be suits for libel or slander, or other suits which are brought for the purposes of vindicating the character of the party, or are of punitive nature.

It is of course impossible, and it would be improper for me to attempt to define the various classes of suits which may properly be continued after the insolvency of the debtor or the particular circumstances under which even suits for money may be prosecuted (the claim being admitted in the schedule) ; but it may safely, I think, be laid down that, under ordinary circumstances, an insolvent is entitled when sued for a sum of money which he has admitted in his schedule, to have the suit or execution proceedings upon it stayed upon proof of its being so admitted. This is now the general practice in the High Court, and is, in my opinion, the more correct practice, but some Judges think it advisable to pass a formal judgment before actually staying the proceedings.

In addition to the reasons I have stated, there is this further reason for not continuing an attachment upon salary [238] after vesting order, viz., that the Insolvent Court is vested under s. 27 of its Act with the discretionary power of dealing with the salary of the insolvent, a power which it can no longer exercise if the half of such salary continues under attachment by the Civil Courts after petition. Such a clashing of jurisdictions cannot have been intended by the Legislature, and the discretion to deal with the insolvent's salary is manifestly intended to be entrusted to the Insolvent Court. Though I am now sitting as Commissioner in Insolvency, and have as such no power to interfere with the discretion of the Subordinate Judge, yet I think that, as the matter has been brought before me, I ought to express my opinion upon the subject, though I must decide that I have no jurisdiction on this latter ground to treat the attachment in question as otherwise than properly made. I understand, however, that since the matter was brought before me, the attachment in question has on appeal been set aside by the District Court, no doubt on grounds similar to those I have assigned. It will be better, therefore, that I make no order, except to allow the Official Assignee to remit the money to the Court of the Subordinate Judge, to be by him returned to the insolvent. As to the salary (if any) of the insolvent attached before the petition was filed, the question is different. The right to it lies between the attaching creditor and the Official Assignee. The case of Gamble v. Bholagir (1) seems conclusive as to the superior title of the attaching creditor to such salary if the attachment has been levied before vesting order, and is in execution of a decree, and not a mere attachment before judgment ; if not attached after decree, the Official Assignee is entitled for the benefit of the creditors in general.

Hindu law—Adoption—Relinquishment by the adopted son in favour of his adoptive mother of his rights as adopted son—Release—Second adoption—Registration—Registration under the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act (XVII of 1879), ss. 56† and 60‡—General Registration Act (III of 1877).

The plaintiff was adopted in 1880 by Koina, the widow of one Ganu. In June 1885, he executed a document which recited that he and Koina had not been on amicable terms, and that his adoption had consequently been cancelled, and that she had adopted another son (defendant No. 1) to whom she had given all rights of heirship, and declared that in consideration of Rs. 200 paid by Koina he delivered back to her the rights which he had obtained by virtue of his adoption and heirship. This document was not registered under the General Registration Act (III of 1877), but was registered under s 56 of the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act (XVII of 1879), which section applied to the district in which the transaction took place. Koina died in October, 1885, and the plaintiff brought this suit, as adopted son, to recover the property of Ganu. The first defendant, who had been adopted by Koina subsequently to the plaintiff's adoption, contended that he had been validly adopted and that he was entitled to the property. He relied (inter alia) upon the document executed by plaintiff in June, 1885.

[240] Held, that the plaintiff could not renounce his status as adopted son, although he might give up his right of inheritance, and that whatever estate became vested in Koina by the release came to the plaintiff on her death, either as adopted son of Ganu or as heir of Koina.

Held, also, that the defendant's subsequent adoption was invalid, and that nothing would pass to him by force of such adoption.

It was contended that the release in question was not admissible in evidence, not having been registered under the General Registration Act (III of 1877).

Held, that the document was admissible. It was a conveyance within s. 56 of the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act (XVII of 1879), and the law in force as to its registration was contained in ss. 56 and 60 of that Act.

THIS was a second appeal from the decision of J. W. Walker, District Judge of Satara.

* Second Appeal, No. 277 of 1892.

† Section 56 of the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act (XVII of 1879):—

56. No instrument which purports to create, modify, transfer, evidence or extinguish an obligation for the payment of money or a charge upon any property, or to be a conveyance or lease, and which is executed after this Act comes into force by an agriculturist residing in any local area for which a village registrar has been appointed, shall be admitted in evidence for any purpose by any person having by law or consent of parties authority to receive evidence, or shall be acted upon by any such person, or by any public officer, unless such instrument is written by, or under the superintendence of, and is attested by, a village registrar:

Provided that nothing herein contained shall prevent the admission of any instrument in evidence in any criminal proceeding, or apply to any instrument which is executed by an agriculturist merely as a security, or to any instrument required by s. 17 of the Registration Act (1877) to be registered under that Act.

‡ 60. Every instrument executed and registered in accordance with the foregoing provisions shall be deemed to have been duly registered under the provisions of the Indian Registration Act, 1877; and no instrument which ought to have been executed before a village registrar, but has been otherwise executed, shall be registered by any officer acting under the said Act, or in any public office, or shall be authenticated by any public officer.

The plaintiff alleged that he was the adopted son of Ganu bin Sadu, and he brought this suit to recover certain property that had belonged to his adoptive brother. He alleged that he had been adopted by Ganu's widow Koina on the 16th September, 1880; that she had executed to him a deed of adoption dated the 20th September, 1880; that owing to disagreements he had lived apart from her and allowed her to remain in possession of the property; that she died on the 2nd October, 1885, and that while he was absent from the village, Sonu, the natural father of the first defendant, took possession of the property, falsely alleging that his son Mahadu (defendant No. 1) had been adopted by Koina.

The first defendant Mahadu, a minor represented by his natural father Sonu as guardian, denied plaintiff's adoption and set up his own. He further alleged (inter alia) that Koina acted as his guardian and administratrix under a certificate from the District Court, and that after her death the certificate was renewed in the name of his father and present guardian Sonu; that plaintiff had never had possession of the property in dispute, and had on the 16th June, 1885, in consideration of Rs. 200 paid to him by Koina, executed a release and conveyance to her of all his rights as adopted son. The other defendants supported the first defendant's case. The following is a translation of the release referred to; it had been registered by a village registrar under s. 57 of the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act (XVII of 1879), but had [241] not been registered under the General Registration Act (XV of 1877):—

"Agreement dated Shake 1807, cyclical year named Parthiv, Jeshta Shuddha 11th, passed to Koina kom Ganuji bin Sadu Patil Salukhe, occupation agriculturist, residing at Koregaon, taluka Satara, agreement passed by Bayaji bin Siduji Salukhe, occupation agriculturist, residing at Boregaum in taluka aforesaid, to the effect as follows:—On 16th September, 1880, you took me in adoption and we have not been on amicable terms; consequently you do not give me the immoveable and moveable property in your possession, and thinking that I have not acted according to your wishes you have cancelled my adoption, and have adopted another boy, son of Sonu Santaji. You have performed his adoption, have given him all rights of heirship, and have obtained a certificate of heirship in his name. In reference to this I do not consider it proper that there should be further disputes between us and that we both of us should be put to the difficulties of expense; therefore, I have received to-day rupees two hundred in cash from you and have delivered back to you the right which I had obtained by virtue of my adoption and heirship. I have nothing further to say. I have returned to you the deed of adoption you had executed to me. I have received the said sum of rupees two hundred in cash. To this effect I have given you in writing, dated 16th June, 1885.

The Subordinate Judge found that the plaintiff's adoption was proved, and that the plaintiff's adoption being prior in date, the subsequent adoption of the first defendant was invalid; that the release passed by plaintiff to Koina, relinquishing all his rights as adopted son for Rs. 200, being unregistered was inadmissible in evidence under s. 17 of the Registration Act (III of 1877), and that its registration by a village registrar under s. 57 of the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act (Act XVII of 1879) was improper and insufficient, inasmuch as it did not purport to create, transfer or extinguish an obligation for the payment of money or a charge on any property, nor was it a conveyance or lease falling under any of the kinds enumerated in s. 56 of the Act.

He, therefore, allowed the plaintiff's claim, except as to certain portions of the property in question. Plaintiff and the first defendant preferred cross appeals. The First Class Subordinate Judge with appellate powers (Rao Bahadur N. G. Phadke) held that Sonu bin Santaji Salukhe, the natural father of the first defendant, ought to have been joined as a party defendant to the suit, and not merely in his representative capacity as the [242] guardian of his minor son. He therefore, reversed the decree and remanded the case under s. 562 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), directing that Sonu should be joined as a defendant and the case investigated and determined on the merits.

Against the order of remand the plaintiff appealed to the High Court, which passed the following order (see Printed Judgment for 1890, p. 100) :—

"The lower appellate Court's order of remand was not justified by s. 562 of the Code of Civil Procedure, as the Court of first instance did not dispose of the suit upon a preliminary point. It disposed of the suit on its merits, and its decision on none of the issues was reversed in appeal. The lower appellate Court remanded the case only because it considered that one Sonu should be joined as a defendant. But that was not a sufficient ground for an order of remand by a Court hearing a first appeal. The proper course in such case is referred to in Ganesh Bhikaji v. Bhikaji Krishna (I. L. R. 10 Bom., 398). The order of the lower appellate Court is reversed. The appeal should be heard according to law. Costs to be costs in the cause."

The case accordingly went back to the lower appellate Court which passed a decree for the plaintiff. The first defendant filed a second appeal.

Jardine (with Mahadev Chimnaji Apte), for the appellant (defendant No. 1):—The release of the 16th June, 1885, was admissible in evidence although not registered under the General Registration Act (III of 1877). It was sufficiently registered under ss. 56 and 57 of the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act (XVII of 1879). The district in which the transaction took place is a district to which Act XVII of 1879 applies, and the so-called release was a conveyance to Koina, by the plaintiff, of his rights as adopted son. The proviso now added to s. 56 was added by Act XXIII of 1886 and was not in force at the date of this document. That proviso has no retrospective operation—Javanmal v. Muktabai (1).

The lower Court held that even if the release was admissible it was inoperative, as the plaintiff could not relinquish his status as adopted son, and it relied upon Balkrishna Trimbak v. Savitribai (2). In the present case, however, the plaintiff, after conveying or releasing to Koina his rights in the property, by his conduct confirmed the subsequent adoption made by Koina [243] and the consequent devolution of property to the first defendant as her adopted son, and is now estopped from disputing the effect of the document.

Branson (with V. K. Bhatavdekar), for the respondent (plaintiff) :—The document in question is not a conveyance within the meaning of s. 56 of the Dekhan Agriculturists' Relief Act, and its registration under that section does not make it admissible: see Wharton's Law Lexicon. The document is a release, and could not be registered under s. 56, but ought to have been registered under the General Registration Act (III of 1877).

(1) 14 B. 516.

(2) 3 B. 54.

But even if admissible it is ineffectual. An adopted son cannot relinquish his status as adopted son—Balkrishna Trimbak v. Savitribai (1). It is by virtue of his status as adopted son that the plaintiff now claims the property as heir. Even assuming the document in question to be a conveyance, it was a conveyance to Koina and not to the first defendant. On Koina's death the plaintiff as her adopted son succeeds as her heir. The first defendant, his adoption being illegal, cannot succeed.

Mahadev Chimnaji Apte, in reply :—Assuming that the conveyance was a conveyance to Koina only, the property then became her property and she could dispose of it as she chose. Her adoption of the first defendant was, in effect, a declaration that it was to go to him after her death. She died in the belief that the first defendant would succeed her as her son. The plaintiff stood by and allowed her to get a certificate of guardianship of the first defendant as her adopted son. In all respects he confirmed the new arrangement made by her after his release. He is now estopped from disputing it. The transaction may be regarded as a family arrangement and should on that ground be upheld—Aishabibi v. Khurshedbibi (2), Bhavanishankar v. Ganda (3), Stapilton v. Stapilton (4). Even though the parties were under the erroneous impression as to the operation of the release, or as to the validity of the first defendant's adoption, the family arrangement would be good. A mistake on a point of law common to both parties [244] does not upset such an arrangement—Pullen v. Ready (5) ; Stapilton v. Stapilton (4) ; Snell's Equity (8th Ed.), p. 525 ; Indian Contract Act IX of 1872, s. 21.

Branson (with V. K. Bhatavdekar) :—The contention that the transaction was a family arrangement has been raised for the first time in reply. It was not urged at any previous stage of the suit. It should, therefore, not be allowed. The conveyance purports to have been made for a valuable consideration of Rs. 200. But the consideration came from the property which legally belonged to us. Therefore, there was no consideration for the conveyance.

JUDGMENT.

SARGENT, C.J.—Both the lower Courts have found that the plaintiff was adopted as the son of Ganu and that his adoption was prior to the first defendant's alleged adoption. It was contended, however, that plaintiff relinquished his rights as the adopted son. The District Judge held that the only evidence of such relinquishment was the release (Ex. 70) passed by plaintiff to Koina in 1885, but which, he held was not admissible for want of registration under the General Registration Act, having been only registered before a village registrar. But the law in force as to registration, when the document in question was executed, was provided by ss. 56 and 60 of the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act (XVII of 1879), and was applicable to all documents purporting to be a "conveyance," which this document undoubtedly is, if it passes all the plaintiff's rights as adopted son in the immoveable property of Ganu, and, as such, required to be registered.

This document was, therefore, validly registered, and the important question arises as to the construction and effect of it. After reciting that disputes had arisen between the plaintiff and Koina, and that she had superseded him and adopted the defendant, it states that he had agreed to accept Rs. 200 and to give into her possession whatever right he had acquired by adoption and heirship. An adopted son cannot renounce his status as an adopted son—see West and Buhler, pp. 938 and 1153, where it is stated, as the result of the authorities, that "the status created [245] by adoption cannot be given up by the adopted son," although "he may give up his right of inheritance." This document, therefore, can only operate as a release to Koina of all the plaintiff's rights as adopted son in Ganu's property, and would, we think, only reinstate her in the same position as she occupied before plaintiff was adopted by her; and as defendant's adoption was invalid, nothing would pass to him by force of such adoption.

It was contended, however, by Mr. Apte that Koina, after the plaintiff had passed the release, became a trustee of the property for the benefit of the defendant; but if Koina could possibly be regarded as a trustee for the defendant, it could not be otherwise than in his intended character of the adopted son of Ganu, which character he could not legally fill as before stated. The defendant No. 1, therefore, never acquired any title to the property.

On the other hand, whatever estate may have been vested in Koina by the release, plaintiff would be entitled to it on her death either as the adopted son of Ganu or as heir of Koina. We must, therefore, confirm the decree with costs.

Decree confirmed.

Where a surety for the guardian of a minor's estate appointed under the Minors' Act (XX of 1864) applied to be released from his obligation as surety on account of the guardian's mal-administration of the estate,

Held, that the very object of requiring security was to guarantee the minor's estate against such misconduct or mismanagement on the part of the guardian; that the surety, therefore, could not be discharged, and that s. 130 of the Contract Act (IX of 1872) was not applicable to the case.

[246] APPLICATION under the extraordinary jurisdiction of the High Court (s. 622 of the Civil Procedure Code, Act XIV of 1882) against the order of G. McCorkell, District Judge of Ahmedabad.

One Bai Somi, widow of Patel Harjivan Kevaldas, applied to the District Judge under the Minors' Act (XX of 1864) for a certificate of management of the property of her two minor sons. A certificate was granted to her on her furnishing two sureties for Rs. 28,600. Subsequently one of them (Chokshi Ishvardas Mangaldas) applied to be released from his liability as surety, on the ground (inter alia) that Bai Somi declined to show the accounts and was mismanaging the property. A notice was served upon Bai Somi calling upon her to furnish a fresh surety. She did not do so, and in answer to the surety's application she contended that he could not withdraw or be released from his obligation as surety. The Judge held that under s. 130 of the Contract Act (IX of 1872) the surety could claim to be released, and that he (the Judge) could not refuse to discharge him.

* Application No. 169 of 1893 under the extraordinary jurisdiction.

Bai Somi then applied to the High Court under its extraordinary jurisdiction and obtained a rule nisi calling upon the surety to show cause why the Judge's order should not be set aside.

Govardhanram M. Tripathi, for the applicant Bai Somi, in support of the rule:—The appointment of the manager and sureties was made under the Minors' Act (XX of 1864). The Judge was, therefore, wrong in applying the Contract Act (IX of 1872) to the case. The present Guardian and Wards' Act (VIII of 1890), which repealed Act XX of 1864, lays down that all the proceedings commenced or held under the repealed Act shall be considered to be proceedings under the new Act: see s. 2, cl. 2; and s. 48 enacts that orders passed under the Act are final. The Judge was, therefore, wrong in interfering with the order under which the sureties were appointed.

Markand M. Mehta, for the opponent Chokshi Ishvardas, showed cause:—We rely on Bhat Harikrasan v. Ramchandra (1). We were [247] unwilling to continue surety because the manager withheld accounts from us and was otherwise mismanaging the property.

[SARGENT, C.J.:—That was not a sufficient reason for discharging the surety. If the manager mismanages the property, the surety will be held liable.]

If a manager mismanages the property he is liable to be removed, and on his removal the sureties will be absolved from their liability, and that being so, we submit that the surety can be relieved on his own application.

JUDGMENT.

SARGENT, C.J.—Section 130 of the Contract Act, on which the District Court relies for its decision, is not applicable to a security by way of suretyship required by the Court and undertaken under s. 12 of Act XX of 1864 by the surety.

The original applicant asks to be released from his obligation as surety on account of the guardian's mal-administration of the minor's estate; but the very object of requiring such security was to guarantee the minor against such misconduct or mismanagement on the part of the guardian. The case is not like that in Bhat Harikrasan v. Ramchandra (1), where the Court held that the District Judge could cancel the suretyship in the interest of the minor. In holding this view of the surety's obligation, we do not say that the surety may not apply to the Court to take steps for his protection against the guardian.

We must, therefore, make the rule absolute and discharge the order with costs.

Rule made absolute.

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), ss. 320 and 326—Grievous hurt—Remaining in hospital for twenty days—Presumption.

The accused were charged with causing grievous hurt. The Joint Sessions Judge, relying apparently on evidence that the injured person remained in a hospital for the space of twenty days, drew from that circumstance alone the inference [248] that he was during that period unable to follow his ordinary pursuits and convicted the accused under s. 326 of the Indian Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860).

Held, reversing the convictions, that in the absence of any evidence that the injured person was unable to follow his ordinary pursuits during the space of twenty days, such an inference could not legally be drawn.

Before a conviction can be passed for the offence of grievous hurt, one of the injuries defined in s. 320 of the Indian Penal Code must be strictly proved, and that the eighth clause is no exception to the general rule that a penal statute must be construed strictly.

Proof of being in a hospital for the space of twenty days cannot be taken as equivalent to proof of grievous hurt.

APPEAL from the convictions and sentences recorded by Dayaram Gidumal, Joint Sessions Judge of Ahmedabad, in the case of Queen-Empress v. Vasta Chela and two others.

The three accused were convicted by the Joint Sessions Judge of voluntarily causing grievous hurt with a sword (1) to one Shivbhai Chala, and (2) to his son Mathur under s. 326 of the Indian Penal Code.

The Joint Sessions Judge gave the following reasons for the conviction :—

"The medical evidence shows that Shivbhai's right thumb had been cut with a sharp weapon. It was hanging merely by the skin, and the hospital assistant separated it. He was under treatment in the hospital from 18th July, 1893, to 22nd August, 1893, and even after August 22nd he was treated as an out-door patient for a week. For over a month Shivbhai was not able to follow his ordinary pursuits.

"Mathur, a lad of fifteen or thereabouts, had (a) an incised wound on the head about 4 inches long and $\frac{1}{4}$ inch deep and $\frac{1}{4}$ inch broad ; (b) another incised wound, somewhat superficial, on the upper portions of his forehead, about $\frac{1}{2}$ an inch long and $\frac{1}{4}$ inch broad, which appeared to have been caused by the end of a sword ; and (c) a contused wound on his left elbow, about $\frac{3}{4}$ an inch long, $\frac{3}{4}$ of an inch broad and $\frac{1}{4}$ inch deep. He was under treatment in the hospital from the 18*th of July*, 1893, to the 28*th of August*, 1893.

"There can be thus no doubt that grievous hurt was caused to Shivbhai and Mathur."

Accused Nos. 1 and 3 were sentenced each to five years' rigorous imprisonment for causing grievous hurt to Mathur, and to transportation for life for causing grievous hurt to Shivbhai, the second sentence to commence after the expiry of the first.

Accused No. 2 was sentenced to two years' rigorous imprisonment for each offence, and ordered to execute after the expiry of [249] his sentences a security bond for Rs. 250, with two sureties for keeping the peace for three years under s. 106 of the Code of Criminal Procedure.

Against these convictions and sentences the accused appealed to the High Court.

Jardine (with him Govardhanram M. Tripathi), for appellants.

Rao Saheb Vasudev Jagannath Kirtikar, Government Pleader, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.

JARDINE, J.—We confirm all the three convictions for the grievous hurt done to Shivbhai, but alter the two sentences of transportation for life passed on the prisoners Vasta and Vaja (Nos. 1 and 3) for the same to sentences of five years' rigorous imprisonment. We reduce the sentence of two years' rigorous imprisonment passed on the youthful prisoner Chuntha to one year for that offence.

We alter the three convictions for the injury done to Mathur. The Joint Sessions Judge has found this to be grievous hurt, relying apparently on the evidence that Mathur remained in a hospital for the space of twenty days. The inference which he apparently draws is that Mathur was during that period unable to follow his ordinary pursuits. In the absence of any evidence to that effect, we are of opinion that such an inference cannot legally be drawn. An injured man may be quite capable of following his ordinary pursuits long before twenty days are over, and yet for the sake of permanent recovery or greater ease or comfort be willing to remain as a convalescent in a hospital, especially if he is fed at the public expense. As we have observed that in several Courts under our superintendence, proof of mere residence in a hospital has been taken as equivalent to proof of grievous hurt, we think it important to point out that before a conviction can be passed for that very serious offence, one of the injuries defined in s. 320 must be strictly proved; and that the eighth clause is no exception to the general rule of the law that a penal statute must be construed strictly.

In the present case we see no reason to suppose that the wounds given to Mathur were so severe as to come within the definition of grievous hurt. We, therefore, alter the three convictions [250] from s. 326 to convictions for hurt under s. 324; and instead of the sentences of five years' rigorous imprisonment passed on Vasta and Vaja, we sentence them to two years' rigorous imprisonment; and instead of that of two years' rigorous inprisonment passed on Chuntha, we sentence him to one year. These sentences to commence at the expiry of the other sentences.

We uphold the order about security to be given by Chuntha, but reduce the amount to Rs. 100, with two securities each for that sum.

Convictions and sentences altered.

DHARAMDAS SAMBHUDAS (Original Plaintiff), Appellant v. HAFASJI AND ANOTHER (Original Defendants), *Respondents. [28th February, 1894.]

Hereditary Offices Act (Bombay Act III of 1874), s. 13—Hereditary service vatan—Kazi—Kazi's office—Rozina allowance—Its liability to attachment and sale in execution of a decree—Pensions Act (XXIII of 1871), s. 4.

The office of kazi is not a hereditary service vatan under Bombay Act III of 1874.

Plaintiff obtained a money decree against Hafasji and in execution sought to attach and sell a decree obtained by Hafasji against Mohiyodin which entitled Hafasji to receive annually a certain portion of the rozina allowance paid by Government to Mohiyodin as kazi. Hafasji contended that the rozina allowance was paid to Mohiyodin and his family for service as kazi, and that, therefore, it was not liable to the process of a Civil Court under s. 13 of Bombay Act III of 1874. This contention was upheld by both the lower Courts.

Held, that as the kazi's office was not a hereditary service vatan, plaintiff's right to attach the decree obtained by Hafasji against Mohiyodin was not barred by s. 13 of Bombay Act III of 1874.

Held, also, that as Hafasji was not liable to serve as kazi, it was not open to him to urge that the allowance in question was appropriated as service remuneration, and was not, therefore, transferable.

Held, also, that as the decree sought to be attached was passed before the Pensions Act (XXIII of 1871) came into force, plaintiff's darkhast was not barred for want of a certificate under s. 4 of the Act.

[251] SECOND appeal from the decision of A. B. Steward, District Judge of Khandesh, in appeal No. 247 of 1892.

In original suit No. 1352 of 1872 the plaintiffs obtained a decree for Rs. 2,402-1-3 against the defendant Hafasji valad Gulami.

In execution of this decree the plaintiff sought to attach and sell a decree obtained by Hafasji in suit No. 1490 of 1864, under which he was to receive annually a 1 anna and $11\frac{1}{3}$ pies' share in the rupee out of a cash allowance known as rozina allowance payable by Government to one Mohiyodin as kazi.

The sanad, under which that allowance was originally granted in 1825, stated that it was to be paid to the grantee and his descendants from generation to generation as service emolument appurtenant to the office of kazi. And the sanad issued in 1880 under the Summary Settlement Act showed that the allowance would be continued as long as the village community required the services of a kazi.

The defendant Hafasji pleaded (inter alia) that the rozina allowance was granted for performing the services attached to the office of a kazi, and being a service vatan was not liable to attachment and sale in execution of a decree.

The Court of first instance was of opinion that the allowance in question was not liable to the process of any civil Court, under s. 13 of Bombay Act III of 1874. The application for execution was, therefore, dismissed.

This order of dismissal was confirmed, on appeal, by the District Judge. His reasons were as follows:—

"There is no doubt, in my mind, that the rozina allowance is a hereditary service vatan, and that Mohiyodin and Hafasji, the defendants in this case, are members of the family which is to supply the kazi. Defendant has by the decree (above mentioned) a share of 1 anna and 11⅓ pies in the rupee in the allowance, and to the extent of that share he can be called upon by Mohiyodin to assist in carrying out the duties of kazi. As the defendant could be called upon for this purpose by Mohiyodin, it stands to reason that his share cannot be transferable, as the sanad distinctly states that the rozina allowance is not transferable, and the allowance cannot be purchased by anybody, as it was granted for the performance of the duties of kazi. Section 13 of Bombay Act III of 1874 shows that the allowance in question is not liable to the process of any civil Court. Defendant's share, awarded to him by the decree, is not, therefore, liable."

* Second Appeal, No. 626 of 1893.

[252] Against this decision the decree-holders appealed to the High Court.

Daji Abaji Khare, for appellant (decree-holder) :—The office of kazi is not a hereditary one. By Regulation XXVI of 1827 kazis are no doubt recognized as vatandars. But this regulation is repealed by Act XI of 1864. Under Act XII of 1880, which modifies Act XI of 1864, Government have the power of appointing a kazi, but the appointment is not hereditary. That being the case, the rozina allowance, which in the present case we seek to attach, is not a hereditary vatan under the Bombay Vatandars' Act (III of 1874)—Baba Kakaji v. Nassaruddin (1). Section 13 of the Act has, therefore, no application to the present case. Even if it did apply, only so much of the rozina allowance as was assigned by the Collector for the remuneration of the officiator would be exempt from liability to the process of a civil Court—Nilkanth v. Baslinga (2). There is no evidence that the defendant ever acted as kazi, or that his share of the allowance in question was ever assigned for the remuneration of the officiating kazi. We are, therefore, entitled to attach his interest under the decree in the allowance in question.

Ganesh Krishna Deshmukh, for respondents:—The kazi's office and the emoluments attached to the office are a hereditary vatan within the meaning of the Vatandars' Act. The kazi has to perform certain services to the Mahomedan community. His presence is necessary at the celebration of marriages and the performance of other rites and ceremonies. The office of kazi is hereditary in the defendant's family. And the allowance, which is granted for the support of the office, is also hereditary. It is, therefore, a hereditary vatan, and as such not liable to any process of the Civil Court. Even if it be not a hereditary vatan, the allowance is expressly declared by the sanad to be inalienable. It is a right of personal service within the meaning of s. 266 (f) of the Code of Civil Procedure, and as such it is protected from attachment—Ganesh Ramchandra Date v. Shankar Ramchandra(3); Diwali v. Apaji Ganesh(4). Lastly I contend that the allowance in [253] question is a grant of money within the meaning of s. 3 of Act XXIII of 1871. The present proceeding is, therefore, barred under s. 4 of the Act for want of the Collector's certificate—Janardhan Bhaskar v. The Secretary of State for India (5).

Daji Abaji Khare in reply :—The Pensions Act is not retrospective. The decree which entitles the defendant to receive his share of the cash allowance, and which we now seek to attach, was passed before the Pensions Act. Under that decree the defendant is to get his share of the allowance from Mohiyodin and not from Government. Moreover, s. 4 of the Pensions Act applies to suits and not to execution proceedings—Vajiram Bhagvan v. Ranchordji Gopalji (1).

JUDGMENT.

JARDINE, J.—In this case plaintiff obtained a decree against the defendant in 1879, and in execution of the same, plaintiff sought to attach by a prohibitory order, and thereafter to sell, a decree which defendant had obtained in suit No. 1490 of 1864 against one Mohiyodin on account of defendant's share in a rozina allowance payable to Mohiyodin as kazi. It was contended on defendant's behalf that the arrears of the allowance, to which he had a claim under his decree against Mohiyodin, had been recovered by him before plaintiff's darkhast was given, and, further, that the rozina allowance was paid to Mohiyodin for service as kazi, and that it was not liable to attachment and sale under s. 13 of Bombay Act III of 1874. This latter contention was upheld by both the lower Courts.

It was urged before us by the appellant's pleader, (1) that the kazi's office was not an hereditary vatan under the Vatandars' Act ;(2) that, even if it was held to be a vatan, the allowance in question was not appropriated for the vatan service, and (3) that the decree sought to be attached was passed before the Act, and could not be affected by its provisions. The respondent's pleader urged, on the other hand, that the kazi's office was hereditary vatan ; that the original sanad rendered the allowance non-transferable ; that the kazi's vatan is like the joshi vritti, which latter had been held to be not liable to attachment. He also [254] contended that plaintiff could not proceed with his darkhast, as he had obtained no certificate under the Pensions Act.

We are of opinion that both the lower Courts were in error in holding that s. 13 of Bombay Act III of 1874 barred plaintiff's right to attach the decree obtained by defendant against Mohiyodin. Plaintiff sought to attach and sell only the defendant's interest under his decree which entitled him to receive annually a portion of the rozina allowance. The kazi's office has been held to be not an hereditary vatan—see Baba Kakaji Shet v. Nassaruddin (2). The office itself, or rather the power of appointing kazis, was taken away by an express Act of the Legislature so far back as 1864, and though this Act has been since then modified by Act XII of 1880, that amendment has in no way invested the office with the character of a hereditary service vatan under Bombay Act III of 1874. Admittedly, defendant has no obligation of service imposed on him—see Nilkanth v. Baslinga (3). Mohiyodin acts as kazi, and it may be open to him, but not to the defendant, to urge that the allowance is appropriated as service remuneration, and is non-transferable. As regards the objection under the Pensions Act, it was not taken in the lower Courts, and we do not think that it is valid as against the plaintiff, inasmuch as he only seeks to attach the decree defendant had obtained against Mohiyodin. That decree was passed before the Pensions Act came into operation, and plaintiff's darkhast is not, therefore, barred by reason of his having obtained no certificate under s. 4 : see Vajiram v. Ranchordji (1).

We accordingly reverse the decrees of the lower Courts and direct that plaintiff's darkhast should be duly executed according to the provisions of law in that behalf. Costs on respondent throughout.

Decree reversed.

Where an owner of inam villages, the revenue from which, together with his income from other sources not agricultural, was greatly in excess of the income he derived from agriculture, mortgaged the inam villages, and thereby reduced the income actually received by him from non-agricultural sources to less than the income he derived from agriculture.

Held, that although his income from the inam villages and from other sources not agricultural might together be sufficient for his maintenance, nevertheless the construction of the definition of agriculturist given in the Act which is quite independent of any such question, could not be affected thereby, and that he must be deemed to "earn the means of livelihood" principally from agriculture and to be an agriculturist within the meaning of Act XVII of 1879.

* Application No. 162 of 1893 under the extraordinary jurisdiction.

2. In construing this Act, unless there is something repugnant in the subject or context, the following rules shall be observed, namely.

1*st*.—"Agriculturist" shall be taken to mean a person who by himself, his servants or tenants earns his livelihood wholly or principally by agriculture carried on within the limits of the said districts "(namely Poona, Satara, Sholapur and Ahmadnagar)," or who ordinarily engages personally in agricultural labour within those limits.

Explanations:—(a) An agriculturist who, without any intention of changing his status as such, temporarily ceases to earn his livelihood or to engage personally in agricultural labour as aforesaid does not thereby cease to be an agriculturist within this definition.

(b) An assignee of Government assessment or a mortgagee is not such an agriculturist within this definition.

2*nd*.—In Chapters II, III, IV and VI and in section sixty-nine the term "agriculturist" when used with reference to any suit or proceeding shall be deemed to include a person who, when any liability incurred by him and forming the subject or part of the subject of that suit or proceeding was so incurred, was an agriculturist as defined in the first rule.

‡ The following is the material portion of the Government of India's Notification No. 3502, dated the 14th October, 1885:—

"* * * From 1st December, 1885, in the District of Satara the fees shall be reduced to one-half in the case of documents specified in the first and second schedules to the said Court Fees Act annexed in the case of suits for the redemption of mortgaged property when the plaintiff, or, when there are several plaintiffs, any one of the plaintiffs, is an agriculturist."

the plaint the Court-fees stamp which was equal in value to one-half of that which would have been ordinarily payable under the provisions of the Court Fees Act (VII of 1870).

The defendants contended that the plaintiffs were not agriculturists as defined in Act XVII of 1879.

The first plaintiff received from the Kolhapur State a monthly pension of Rs. 33 and his mother Rs. 19, the yearly income from that source being Rs. 624. The plaintiff's mother also received from another source a sum of Rs. 6 per mensem, being a yearly income of Rs. 72. The plaintiffs were also owners of certain villages the revenue of which was considerable, but owing to mortgages on them they only yielded to the plaintiffs a sum of Rs. 333 per annum.

The Subordinate Judge, who was of opinion that what goes to a man's creditors for the satisfaction of his debts is as much his income as that which is actually received by him, found that the plaintiffs were not agriculturists as defined in the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act, and that they did not earn their livelihood principally from agriculture, their income from sources [257] other than agriculture being in excess of the income derived from that source. He, therefore, directed the plaintiffs to make up the deficiency in the Court-fees stamp on the plaint, and adjourned the hearing to enable them to pay in the requisite stamp.

The plaintiffs applied to the High Court under its extraordinary jurisdiction and obtained a rule nisi calling on the defendants to show cause why the order should not be set aside.

Anderson (with D.A. Khare), for the applicants (original plaintiffs) in support of the rule.

Lang (Advocate-General, with M.C. Apte), for the opponents (original defendants), appeared to show cause.

JUDGMENT.

SARGENT, C. J.—The expression "earns his livelihood" can only mean "obtains the means of maintaining himself." At the present moment the inam villages, owing to the mortgage on them, only contribute Rs. 333 per annum towards the plaintiffs' maintenance, that being the only sum which comes into their hands from that source. Therefore, even if the whole of the pension from the Kolhapur State were added to it, still the means of providing for the plaintiffs' livelihood would be less than that derived from agriculture; and, therefore, under those circumstances we think they must be deemed at the time of bringing the suit to obtain or, in other words, "earn the means of livelihood" principally from agriculture. The fact that the 333, 624 and 72 Rs. might together be sufficient for the plaintiffs' maintenance, cannot, in our opinion, affect the construction of the definition of "agriculturist," which is quite independent of any such question.

We must, therefore, in the exercise of our extraordinary jurisdiction, make the rule absolute and direct that the suit be tried under the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act. The plaintiffs to have their costs of this application.

Rule made absolute.

NANCHAND (Original Plaintiff), Appellant v. VITHU (Original Defendant), *Respondent. [12th March, 1894.]

Decree—Execution—Application for execution of decree—Dismissal of the first application—Appeal from decree—Decree confirmed on appeal—Application for execution of appellate decree—Appellate decree is the decree to be executed—Former dismissal of application for execution of original decree does not bar execution of appellate decree—Res judicata—Limitation—Second application for execution.

Where the High Court confirms, on appeal, the decree of a Subordinate Court, such confirmation has the same effect as an order of reversal would have had, in so far as it leaves the decree of the High Court as the only decree which exists for the purpose of execution, and the decree of the lower Court becomes incorporated with it

On 23rd July, 1888, plaintiff obtained a decree for the redemption of certain lands, on payment within three months of the amount due to the mortgagee, which was to be ascertained in execution proceedings. Against this decree the defendant appealed to the High Court.

Pending the appeal, the plaintiff presented a darkhast for execution on the 4th October, 1888. This darkhast was dismissed, as the plaintiff failed to produce a copy of the mortgage-bond within the time allowed by the Court. The three months allowed by the decree for payment expired on the 23rd October, 1888.

On 11th February, 1890, the High Court confirmed the decree, and on 11th April, 1890, plaintiff presented a fresh darkhast for execution. Both the lower Courts dismissed this darkhast on the ground that the dismissal of the first darkhast operated as res judicata.

Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to execute the decree, and that his second darkhast was not barred either by limitation or on the principle of res judicata.

THIS was an appeal from the decision of Rao Bahadur R.D. Paranjape, First Class Subordinate Judge of Ahmednagar (with appellate powers), in appeal No. 54 of 1891.

On 23rd July, 1888, the plaintiff (mortgagor) obtained a decree for redemption of certain lands on payment to defendant No. 3 of what might be due to him under his mortgage-bond. The decree directed that the amount due to defendant No. 3 should be ascertained at the time of execution and that the lands should be redeemed within three months. It also provided that if the lands were not redeemed within three months, the plaintiff's right of redemption would be for ever foreclosed.

[259] On the 4th October, 1888, the plaintiff presented his first darkhast for execution (No. 440 of 1888). On receiving the darkhast the Court fixed a day for taking evidence and for ascertaining the amount of the mortgage-debt.

On the 6th September, 1889, the Court dismissed the darkhast for the following reasons:—

"A copy of the mortgage-bond is not produced, though two adjournments were given on the applications of Waman Trimbak. Without the mortgage-bond the Court is unable to make up the account of the mortgage-debt. So the darkhast is dismissed."

In the meantime the mortgagee (defendant No. 3) had preferred an appeal to the High Court against the original decree of the 23rd July, 1888. The High Court confirmed the decree with costs on 11th February, 1890.

Thereupon the plaintiff applied by darkhast No. 129 of 1890 on the 11th April, 1890, for execution of the appellate decree of the high Court.

This darkhast was rejected by both the lower Courts on the ground that it was barred by the dismissal of the first darkhast on the principle of res judicata.

Against this decision the decree-holder appealed to the High Court.

Dhondu M Sanzgiri, for appellant.—The decree which we now seek to enforce is the decree of the High Court and not that of the lower Court. The High Court's decree is the only decree capable of execution—Sakhalchand v. Velchand (1); Shivlal v. Jumaklal (2); Muhammad Sulaiman Khan v. Muhammad Yar Khan (3); Daulat v. Bhukandas (4). Limitation counts from the date of the High Court's decree. Our darkhast is, therefore, not time barred. The lower Courts wrongly held that the order dismissing the first darkhast operates as res judicata. That darkhast was not disposed of on the merits. It was an application for execution of the first Court's decree. The present is an application for execution of the High Court's decree. It is, therefore, not barred [260] by the first darkhast. Refers to Rupchand v. Shamsh-ul-Jehan (5) and Patloji v. Ganu (6).

Mahadev C. Apte, for respondent.—The question in the present case is not whether the appellant could have executed the High Court's decree, but whether he could ignore and disregard the execution proceedings taken under his first darkhast. Pending the appeal to the High Court, execution of the first Court's decree had not been stayed. The decree-holder applied for execution of the decree, and failed. He cannot re-open the same matter by presenting another application. The order passed on the first darkhast operates as res judicata—Mungul Pershad Dichit v. Grija Kant (7); Baron Forester v. The Secretary of State for India (8); Sheik Budan v. Ramchandra (9). The High Court decree can only give a fresh starting point about costs. Except on the question of costs awarded by the High Court, the present darkhast is barred.

JUDGMENT.

RANADE, J.—In this case, both the lower Courts appear to have assumed that the appellant plaintiff's darkhast No. 440 of 1888, and his present darkhast No. 129 of 1890, related to the execution of the same decree, and that in consequence the order of dismissal passed on the darkhast of 1888 operated as res judicata, and barred the entertainment of the present darkhast proceedings. The fact, however, appears to be that the decree sought to be executed in 1888 was the decree of the District Court in appeal No. 68 of 1887; while the present execution proceedings relate to the decree of the High Court which was passed subsequently to the disposal of the first darkhast. This point was brought to the notice of the lower appellate Court, but was passed over by it, presumably because the High Court confirmed the decree of the District Court. Such confirmation, however, it has been ruled, has the same effect as an order of reversal would have had, in so far as it leaves the decree of the High Court as the only decree which exists for the purpose of execution, and the decree of the lower Court becomes incorporated with it. See Sakhalchand v. Nelchand (1) and Muhammad Sulaiman Khan v. Muhammad Yar Khan (2).

[261] The respondents' pleader admitted the correctness of this view, but urged that as the two darkhasts of 1888 and 1890 covered the same ground of relief, the dismissal of the first darkhast barred the entertainment of the second darkhast, except in the matter of the costs. We cannot accept this contention of the respondents. Apparently the first darkhast was not proceeded with, because the respondents in the decree of the District Court had preferred a second appeal from that decree. Both parties must be held equally bound or equally benefited by the result of this second appeal, and if the original respondents would have become entitled to execute the decree of the High Court in case it had reversed the decision of the lower Courts, we do not see any reason which prevents the present appellant from claiming his right to execute the decree of the High Court in his favour. The proceedings of 1888 had no reference to that decree, and the order of dismissal passed thereon had, therefore, no operation as regards the appellant's right to seek execution of the decree in his favour. If the appellant has a right to execute this decree, there is admittedly no room for the objection about limitation.

We accordingly reverse the order of dismissal passed by the lower appellate Court, and direct the Court of the Subordinate Judge at Parner to proceed with the execution of the High Court's decree. All costs on respondents.

Decree reversed.

[12th March, 1894.]

Decree—Execution—Limitation Act (XV of 1877), art. 179, cl. 4—Step-in-aid of execution—Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), s. 230—Application for execution.

A obtained a decree against B upon an award, which directed that the sum of Rs. 1,840 awarded to A should be recovered with interest by attachment of the mortgaged property and not by sale, except in case of its being held that the property was not liable to attachment.

[262] On 12th October, 1874, A applied for execution of the decree, and thereupon the mortgaged property was attached and placed under the management of the Collector, who paid the proceeds from time to time into Court till 1891. The Court paid the proceeds to A on 25th February, 1876, 5th February, 1877, and 7th October, 1877.

In 1878, A being dead, his son C applied to the Court to be made a party to the record and to be allowed to continue the execution proceedings.

In 1880 C applied to the Court under s. 248 of the Code of Civil Procedure (Act XIV of 1882) to issue notice to D, as B's heir and legal representative, to show cause why the decree should not be executed against him. D did not appear, and an ex parte order was passed for execution to proceed as against him.

The Collector continued in management till 5th February, 1892, when the application (darkhast) of 1874 was withdrawn and a fresh application was made by C on 12th June, 1892.

D resisted on the ground that the application was time-barred under art. 179 of the Limitation Act (XV of 1877).

Held, that the application was not barred by limitation, as the execution proceedings under the first darkhast of 1874 were continuously going on during the whole period that the Collector's management lasted under the orders of the Court, and as each year's payment received by the decree-holder was but a partial step-in-aid of execution of the decree.

Held, further, that the applications made by C in 1878 and 1880 were also "steps-in-aid of execution" within the meaning of art. 179, cl. 4 of the Limitation (Act XV of 1877).

SECOND APPEAL from the decision of Gilmour McCorkell, District Judge of Ahmedabad, in appeal No. 404 of 1892.

The sole question argued at the hearing of the appeal was whether the plaintiff's dharkhast or application for execution of a decree was barred by limitation.

On the 26th January, 1874, one Tribhuvan Jetha obtained a decree in terms of an award, which directed that the defendant Bechar should pay him the sum of Rs. 1,840; that the said sum was not to carry interest if paid within one year, and that after that period it was to be recovered with interest at 6 per cent. per annum, by attachment of the mortgaged property, which property was, however, not to be sold unless it was held that it was not liable to attachment.

On the 12th October, 1874, Tribhuvan applied for execution of this decree. The mortgaged property was attached and placed under the management of the Collector, who from time to time paid the income into Court up to 1891.

[263] Tribhuvan received payments from the Court in part satisfaction of the decree on 25th February, 1876, 5th February, 1877, and 7th October, 1877, respectively.

In January, 1878, Tribhuvan having died, his son Pitamberdas applied to the Court to be made a party on the record, and to have the money levied and paid to him.

In 1880, Pitamberdas applied to the Court under s. 248 of the Code of Civil Procedure (Act XIV of 1882) to issue notice to the present defendant, as Bechar's heir and legal representative, to show cause why the decree should not be executed against him. On his application an ex parte order was passed that execution should proceed as prayed for.

The Collector's management accordingly continued till 5th February, 1892, when the darkhast of 1874 was withdrawn. The present darkhast was filed on 12th June, 1892.

The defendant resisted this darkhast on the ground that it was barred by limitation both under s. 230 of the Code of Civil Procedure (Act XIV of 1882) and under art. 179 of the Limitation Act (XV of 1877).

The Court of first instance held that it was barred under art. 179 of the Limitation Act (XV of 1877).

On appeal the District Judge was of opinion that the darkhast was not barred either under s. 230 of the Civil Procedure Code or under art. 179 of Act XV of 1877. He, therefore, reversed the first Court's order and directed execution to issue.

JUDGMENT.

JARDINE, J.—In this case the chief point that was argued before us related to the question of limitation.

The undisputed facts of the case are: Tribhuvan and Bechar, fathers respectively of the parties to the present execution proceedings, agreed to a private award, which was duly filed in Court on 26th January, 1874. Plaintiff's father Tribhuvan gave darkhast No. 1791 of 1874, on 12th October, 1874, and the execution work was transferred to the Collector, who attached the defendant's san-mortgaged property in the terms of the award, and paid over the proceeds from time to time in Court down to 1891. The Collector's management continued till 5th February, 1892, when the darkhast of 1874 was disposed of, and a fresh darkhast No. 570 of 1892 was given on 12th June, 1892.

The contention of the appellant-defendant in both the lower Courts was that the darkhast of 1892 was time-barred under s. 230, Civil Procedure Code, and art. 179 of the Limitation Act. The Court of first instance held that the darkhast was not barred under s. 230, but that it was barred under art. 179 of Act XV of 1877. The District Judge held that the darkhast was not time-barred either under s. 230 or art. 179. In the appeal before us, the appellant urges that the darkhast of 1892 [265] was barred by limitation, chiefly under art. 179. The objection of the bar under s. 230 was not seriously pressed in the argument of the appellant's pleader.

It was urged by Mr. Govardhanram that as the decree was passed in January, 1874, and the first darkhast was given on 12th October, 1874, the second darkhast ought to have been given before 12th October, 1877, under art. 179 of Act XV of 1877, which came into operation in July, 1877. He urged, further, that the payments received by the plaintiff of the proceeds of the property under the Collector's management from 1874 to 1891 did not prevent the bar of limitation from being operative, and that there were no applications made or steps taken by plaintiff to keep alive his right of execution under the decree. It was finally contended that the plaintiff's right to execute his decree being once lost in 1877 could not be revived by the change in the law in 1879 which introduced s. 325-A, on which the lower Court of appeal has relied in support of its view.

On respondent's behalf it was contended by Mr. Bhaishankar that verbal applications had been made by the plaintiff to the Court before the moneys received from the Collector were paid over to plaintiff, that these verbal applications were as good as written, and these applications and receipts of money were steps-in-aid of execution, which enlarged the period of limitation. It was further urged that in January, 1878, plaintiff, as heir of deceased Tribhuvan, had applied to be made a party to the record, and allowed to continue the execution proceedings, and that in February and September, 1880, written applications were made to the Court by plaintiff to issue notice to the present defendant under s. 248, and to adjust the interest accounts. These applications, it was contended, saved the darkhast from being time-barred, and that since the Act of 1879, s. 325-A entitled plaintiff to exclude from computation the time during which the defendant's property was under the management of the Collector, and, lastly, that defendant was estopped from raising this contention in 1893 when he failed to urge it in 1880.

After a careful consideration of the authorities cited on both sides, and the fuller statement of facts placed before us by the [266] respondent's pleader, we feel satisfied that the contentions of the appellant in this case must be disallowed. In considering the true character of the payments of the proceeds received by the decree-holder, it is necessary to bear in mind the particular circumstances of this case. The attachment in this case was not so much an order of Court, as an enforcement of the particular agreement arrived at with the consent of the parties in the arbitrator's award. That award directed that the sum found due and awarded to plaintiff (Rs. 1,840) should be paid by defendant in one year, and that during that period it should carry no interest, and that after that time, plaintiff should receive 6 per cent. interest, and recover the sum due to him by the attachment of the san-mortgaged property, which property was, however, not to be sold except in case of its being held to be not liable to attachment. The decree, therefore, in express terms directed that the sum found due with interest should be recovered by the attachment of the property of the defendant, and not by sale. The parties appear to have expressly contemplated that the debt should be satisfied by a long-continued sequestration of the profits, and the Collector's management under the Court's order only gave effect to this private arrangement. The arrangement was meant to protect the debtor from the risk of losing his property altogether by sale. There are always a few darkhasts in all Courts when such permanent or long-period attachments have to be made (see Mahadaji v. Krishnaji (1) and Jamnadas v. Lalitaram (2)), and s. 325-A has been expressly enacted to remove all doubts as to the legality of such long sequestrations. There is nothing in the law which requires that the execution of a decree may not continue for a period of years till the debt is satisfied.

This peculiar nature of the arrangement between the parties furnishes a satisfactory explanation why both parties remained quiet for the whole period of eighteen years (1874—1892). The cases—Hem Chunder v. Brojo Soondury (3), Toree Mahomed v. Mahomed Mabood (4), Fazal Imam v. Metta Singh (5), and Gunga [267] Pershad v. Debi Sundari (6),—cited by the appellant's pleader, in which it was ruled that the mere receipt of money by the decree-holder, or payment of batta by him in Court, does not extend the period of limitation, have, therefore, no application in the present case. They were all cases of mere money decrees, in which the execution by attachment was never intended to be a permanent arrangement. Mere receipt of money under such circumstances is not a step-in-aid of execution, but the present case is clearly distinguishable from such single acts. Here the payments were made almost every year up to 1886, and it cannot be presumed that plaintiff took no steps to move the Court in this behalf. It was not necessary—Maneklal v. Nasia (1), Amarsingh v. Tika (2)—that these applications should be in writing. They may be verbal. There have been rulings in Nukanna v. Ramasami (3), Paran Singh v. Jawahir Singh (4), Jogesh Prokash v. Kalee Coomar (5) and Chowdhry Paroosh Ramdas v. Kali Puddo (6) that, under certain circumstances, applications made by the judgment-creditor to receive the proceeds of the attached property in part execution of the decree do extend the period of limitation, as being steps-in-aid of execution. Of course, ineffective or informal attempts will not be deemed sufficient for such a purpose—Jibhai Mahipati v. Parbhu Bapu (7) and Prabhacararow v. Potannah (8); but there is no suggestion here that the attachment was ineffectual, or the payments from year to year anything but a bona fide execution of the decree—Shankar Bisto v. Narsinghrao (9).

Under these circumstances we must hold that the execution work of the first darkhast of 1874 was continuously going on during the whole period that the Collector's management lasted under the orders of Court, and that each year's payment received by plaintiff was only a partial step-in-aid of execution of the decree—Maneklal v. Nasia (1) and Ambica Pershad v. [268] Surdhari Lal (10). There appear to have been three such payments on 25th February, 1876, 5th February, 1877, and on 7th October, 1877. From 1878 there is admittedly no difficulty. In January, 1878, the original plaintiff being dead, his son, the present respondent, applied to be made a party to the record and to have money levied and paid, and such an application has been held to be a step-in-aid of execution—Govind Shanbhog v. Appaya (11). In 1880 he again applied to the Court to issue notice under s. 248 to defendant as heir to his deceased father, and to require him to adjust the interest account. This application was clearly a step-in-aid of execution, since the date Act XII of 1879, s. 325-A, came into operation, and there is admittedly no difficulty either under s. 230, Civil Procedure Code, or art. 179 of Act XV of 1877.

It may also be observed that the question as to whether the plaintiff's claim was or was not time-barred before, 1878, appears to have been expressly decided in November, 1880, by the Court of first instance after serving defendant with notice to show cause against plaintiff's application. It may fairly be questioned whether it is open to the defendant now after twelve years to raise this objection, which he should have raised in 1880—Dalichand Bhudar v. Bai Shivkar (12). If defendant chose to allow the order in 1880 to be passed against him ex parte, he cannot claim the right to urge this objection now. On the whole, we feel satisfied, on the Hindu family—Joint family property—Injunction—Injunction obtained by one member of a joint family against another, when granted.

In disputes between members of a joint Hindu family with respect to joint property, the exercise of the Court's jurisdiction to grant relief by injunction should be confined to acts of waste, illegitimate use of the family property, or acts amounting to ouster.

[F., 29 C. 500; R., 23 B. 144; 11 C.L.J. 189=5 Ind. Cas. 171.]

SECOND APPEAL from the decision of T. Hart-Davies, Acting District Judge of Ahmednagar, reversing the decree of Rao Saheb Dinanath A. Dalvi, Second Class Subordinate Judge of Parner.

The plaintiff and defendant were members of a joint Hindu family. The plaintiff sued to recover joint possession with the defendant of the door of a certain house, and for an injunction against the defendant, who (he alleged) obstructed his use of the door. He alleged that he and the defendant were owners of the house in equal shares; and that the door was jointly used by both of them.

The defendant pleaded that the plaintiff was not entitled to an injunction, and that his remedy lay in a suit for partition.

The Subordinate Judge dismissed the claim, holding that the suit was one virtually for partition, and that the plaintiff was not entitled to succeed, as all the family property had not been brought into hotch-pot.

On appeal the Judge held that one member of an undivided Hindu family can get an injunction against another who caused obstruction. He, therefore, reversed the decree and allowed the claim.

The defendant preferred a second appeal.

Dhondu M. Sanzgiri, for the appellant (defendant).—An injunction cannot be granted to one co-parcener against another. The aggrieved party can seek redress by bringing a suit for partition—Balaji Anant v. Ganesh Janardan (1); Watson and Company v. Ramchand Dutt (2). A complete remedy, namely a suit for [270] partition, being open to the plaintiff, he is not entitled to an injunction under s. 56 of the Specific Relief Act (I of 1877).

Daji Abaji Khare, for the respondent (plaintiff).—There is no authority to show that in a joint family an injunction cannot be granted. Although a suit for partition would be a remedy, that cannot prevent one member from obtaining an injunction against another. There is only one door through which both the portions of the house can be approached.

The defendant has shut the door by putting a lock over it, and the plaintiff is thus prevented from using his portion of the house—Sheo Pershad Sing v. Leelah Singh (1); Lloyd v. Soyra (2); Bapuji v. Mansukhram (3).

JUDGMENT.

SARGENT, C.J.—The exercise of the Court's jurisdiction to grant relief by injunction must, it is plain, in disputes between members of a Hindu family, be attended from their very nature with great difficulty. However, we do not think that there would be any practical objection to the Court interfering by injunction in those particular cases in which, as between tenants-in-common, the Court grants that form of relief. Following the practice of a Court of Equity in England, that would be confined to acts of waste, illegitimate use of the family property, or acts amounting to ouster. See Bapuji v. Mansukhram (3). This would appear to have been the opinion of Phear, J., as regards illegitimate use of the property. See Sheo Pershad Sing v. Leelah Singh (1). In the present case, assuming that the plaintiff was in possession and enjoyment of portion of the house before the door was closed, and that the only ingress to that portion was by the door, the closing of it would amount to ouster.

As there is no distinct finding on these issues, we must send down the case to the District Court for findings on the following issues :—

1. Was the plaintiff in enjoyment of the portion of the house as claimed by him in his plaint when the door in question was closed by the defendant ?

2. Was the door the only mode of ingress to that portion ?

Finding to be transmitted to this Court within two months.

Issues sent down.

APPELLATE CIVIL.

19 B. 271.

The plaintiff's father Shankarbava as manager of the temple of Yavteshvar granted the land in question for building sites at fixed rents to certain European residents about forty years before the date of this suit. Bungalows were built and occupied, and in the year 1867 the lands with the buildings thereon were sold to one Krishnaji Limaye, who in 1884 sold them to the defendants. Meantime the original grantor Shankarbava had died in 1880 and his son the plaintiff had succeeded him as manager of the temple. In 1886 the plaintiff brought this suit to recover possession of the lands and for mesne profits.

The defendant pleaded (inter alia) that he had the right of occupancy, that the plaintiff's only right was to the rents, and that the suit was barred by limitation.

The lower Courts rejected the plaintiff's claim, holding that the defendant had a right of perpetual tenancy.

The plaintiff preferred a second appeal.

[272] Daji Abaji Khare, for the appellant (plaintiff).—It is settled that a manager of temple property cannot permanently alienate it except in the case of absolute necessity—Konwur Doorga Nath v. Ram Chunder(1); Tahboonissa v. Koomar Sham (2). Here absolute necessity is not shown, nor is it even pleaded. Alienations of temple property by a manager stand good only during the lifetime of the grantor, and after his death come to an end— West and Buhler (3rd ed.). p. 557 ; Bhagu v. Byramji (3). Further, the grant was made for the purpose of erecting buildings. The buildings which were erected have fallen, and the lands are now cultivated. The buildings having disappeared, the grant must be set aside.

Mahadev B. Chaubal, for the respondent (defendant).— Shankarbava, who made the grant, died in the year 1880, and since then plaintiff's management began. Most of the lands were brought under cultivation by us in 1884, and we have paid rent to the plaintiff. The plaintiff has confirmed the grant by accepting the rent from us, and he is now estopped from disputing its validity.

JUDGMENT.

SARGENT, C. J.—The authorities show that permanent under-tenures, such as mirasi, putni and mokurruri grants, by managers of endowed temple lands, are not void if made for a necessary purpose—Konwur Doorga Nath v. Ram Chunder (1); Tahboonissa v. Koomar Sham (2). It is no part of the defendants' case that the miras grant in question was for a necessary purpose, nor is there any evidence in the case which even points to this having been the cause of the grant, although it may establish that the rent reserved was a proper one.

The effect of such a grant according to the decisions in Arruth Misser v. Juggurnath (4) and Bhagu v. Byramji (3) would be to enable the grantee to hold the lands during the life of the grantor Shankarbava, but would not confer on him any title binding on his successor in the management of the temple lands.

As the District Judge held that the miras granted was valid and binding on the plaintiff, we must reverse the decree and send [273] back the case for a fresh decision, but we think it is necessary for a satisfactory decision on the rights of the parties, having regard to the manner in which

AMBASHANKAR HARPRASAD (Plaintiff) v. SAYAD ALI RASUL AND ANOTHER (Defendants).* [19th March, 1894.]

Mahomedan law—Money due by a deceased Mahomedan—Suit by a creditor against only one of the heirs of the deceased—Practice—Procedure.

A suit for money due by a deceased Mahomedan lies against one of his heirs in respect of his share in the property left by the deceased, though it may not bind the share of another heir.

Quære—Whether, there having been no division of the estate, the share of the heir sued is liable for the whole debt of the deceased.

REFERENCE by Khan Bahadur B. E. Modi, Judge of the Court of Small Causes at Broach, under s. 617 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882).

The plaintiff sued in the Court of the Small Causes at Broach to recover the amount due on a bond executed in his favour by Rasul Karim and Jamiatram Sobharam. He sought to recover the amount from Jamiatram personally and from the estate of Rasul Karim who was dead. The case came on for hearing on the 3rd October, 1893, and the defendant Sayad Ali, the son and heir of Rasul Karim, deceased, was examined as a witness, and admitted the bond. In his evidence he stated that the deceased had left behind him (among other relatives) a widow, who, according to Mahomedan law, being interested as a sharer in the property of the deceased, ought to have been joined as a co-defendant in the suit. As the cause of action had arisen on the [274] 26th September, 1890, the plaintiff's suit against her would have been time-barred if she had then (i.e., on 3rd October, 1893) been added as a party. The plaintiff, therefore, asked the Court to pass a decree against the share of the defendant Sayad Ali alone and not against the entire estate of the deceased as prayed for in the plaint. The point then arose as to whether such a decree could be passed, and the Judge submitted the following question to the High Court :—

"Whether, when the original debtor is dead, the creditor, in bringing a suit, is or is not bound to bring all the heirs or representatives on the record, and whether it is allowable for him to ask for a decree against one heir only to the extent of the share represented by him."

The Judge was of opinion that a decree could not be passed against a part only of the deceased's estate, that the entire estate should be represented, and that the omission of some of the heirs was fatal to the claim.

Kalabhai Lallubhai (amicus curiæ), for the plaintiff.—We contend that a decree should be passed against the entire estate of the deceased, because until the debts are paid there can be no shares. The whole estate would be divided into different shares after the debts of the deceased are paid off, because the entire estate is liable for the debt and not any particular portion of it. Even if the widow be now joined, still our remedy against the estate would not be barred, because under s. 22, para. 1, of the Limitation Act (XV of 1877) only the personal remedy against the added defendants is barred, but not the remedy against the property. The question as to the joinder of the widow was not raised by the defence. It was during the hearing that it was ascertained that the deceased had left a widow, and it was then that the question of making her a party was raised by the Court. The question having been raised by the Court, the point of limitation cannot arise—Khadir Mohidin v. Rama Naik (1). In any case the plaintiff is entitled to proceed against the defendant Sayad Ali, who is in possession of the property; it does not matter whether our claim against the widow is barred or not.

[275] Vasudeo G. Bhandarkar (amicus curiæ), for the defendant.—When an owner of property dies, each of his heirs gets an interest in it. The vesting of that interest is not postponed until the debts of the deceased have been paid. In order that a decree should be passed against a co-sharer, he must be in possession of his share of the property. The plaintiff here seeks to recover the debt from the property of the deceased, but he cannot succeed, because he has not brought on the record all the persons interested in the property. The following cases were referred to;—Hamir Singh v. Mussummat Zakia (2), Pirthi Pal Singh v. Husaini Jan (3), Jafri Begam v. Amir Muhammad (4), Bussunteram Marwary v. Kamaluddin Ahmed (5).

JUDGMENT.

SARGENT, C.J.—We agree in the decision of the majority of the Judges in Assamathem Nessa Bibee v. Roy Lutchmeeput Sirgh (6) which was approved of by Mahmood, J., in Jafri Begam v. Amir Muhammad Khan (4), that the suit against Sayad Ali, although it could not proceed so as to bind the widow's share, would still lie against Sayad Ali in respect of his share in the property of Rasul.

A question may arise whether, there having been no division, his share in the property would be liable for the whole debt. That question has not been referred to us, but we may refer the Small Cause Court Judge to Bussunteram v. Kamaludin (5) and Pirthi Pal Singh v. Husaini Jan (3) to assist him in arriving at a conclusion.

Before Mr. Justice Jardine and Mr. Justice Ranade.

ABA BIN KHESAJI (Original Defendant No. 2), Appellant v. DHONDU BAI (Original Plaintiff), *Respondent.

[27th March, 1894.]

Decree—Execution of decree—Death of judgment-debtor after attachment but before sale in execution—Sale without legal representative of judgment-debtor being made a party—Effect of such omission on validity of sale—Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), ss. 311, 316—Practice—Procedure.

Tukaram obtained a decree against one Subhankhan, and in execution attached certain land which Subhankhan had previously mortgaged to Krishnaji. On the 11th June, 1877, a warrant for sale was issued followed by the usual proclamation. Subhankhan died on the 27th September, 1877, and a few days afterwards, viz., on the 3rd October, 1876, the sale took place without any notice being given to Dhondu Bai, who was the heir and legal representative of Subhankhan, who, however, came to know of it shortly after. Tukaram, the decree-holder, purchased the land at the sale, and in 1883, sold it to Aba, who redeemed the mortgage from Krishnaji and took possession. In 1891 Dhondu Bai, as heir and legal representative of Subhankhan, brought this suit claiming to redeem the mortgage. She made Krishnaji (original mortgagee) and Aba (the purchaser) parties to the suit. She contended that the sale in execution was bad, having taken place after the death of the judgment-debtor and without his legal representative having been placed on the record.

Held, that the plaintiff was not entitled to redeem.

Per JARDINE, J.—As no "substantial injury" was alleged to have resulted by reason of the plaintiff not having been brought on the record of the execution proceedings immediately on the death of the judgment-debtor and before the sale took place, the purchaser acquired a valid title under s. 316 of the Code of Civil Procedure (Act XIV of 1882).

Per RANADE, J.—The omission to join the name of the representative of the deceased judgment-debtor as a party to the record was a material irregularity and a serious defect in the title of the auction-purchaser. But this irregularity did not vitiate the sale under the special circumstances of the present case, viz., that the plaintiff had taken no step to set aside the sale although she came to know of the sale within a few days after it took place; that there was no fraud or mala fides on the part of the judgment-creditor; that the sale had not resulted in any substantial injury to the plaintiff, and that the auction purchaser and his assignee had been in adverse possession for more than twelve years.

[Appr., 21 B. 424; R., 23 C. 686; 19 M. 219.]

SECOND appeal from the decision of Rao Bahadur C. N. Bhat, First Class Subordinate Judge A. P. at Satara, in Appeal No. 322 of 1892, reversing the decision of Rao Saheb Shivram Sitaram Wagh, Second Class Subordinate Judge of Karad.

[277] Suit for redemption. The plaintiff Dhondu Bai was heir and legal representative of one Subhankhan, deceased.

Subhankhan had mortgaged the land in dispute to the first defendant (Krishnaji Vyankatesh) in 1871.

Subsequently the land was attached in execution of a decree obtained by one Tukaram Dhanji against Subhankhan, the mortgagor. The warrant for sale in execution was issued on 11th June, 1877.

Subhankhan died on 27th September, 1877.

The sale took place on 3rd October, 1877, without any notice being given to Dhondu Bai, the daughter and legal representative of the deceased

Subhankhan, and without her name being placed on the record of the execution proceedings.

Dhondu Bai became aware of the sale fourteen days after it took place, but took no steps to set it aside.

Tukaram Dhauji purchased the property at the auction sale, and afterwards sold it to Aba bin Khesaji Mane (defendant No. 2) on the 8th November, 1883.

Aba redeemed the land from Krishnaji on payment of Rs. 947-14-6 in 1886.

In 1891 Dhondu Bai filed the present suit as heir and legal representative of Subhankhan, deceased, to redeem the land in dispute.

The Subordinate Judge dismissed the suit, holding that the mere omission to make the legal representative of the deceased judgment-debtor (Subhankhan) a party to the record of the execution proceedings did not vitiate the auction sale of the 3rd October, 1877, and that as the plaintiff had not taken any steps to set aside the sale, it was binding on her.

On appeal the Subordinate Judge with appellate powers was of opinion that the sale in execution which took place after Subhankhan's death, without bringing Subhankhan's heir on the record, was illegal and invalid; that it was not necessary to set it aside; and that as the plaintiff was not bound by the sale she was entitled to redeem the property in dispute. The decree of the first Court was, therefore, reversed, and the case remanded for the [278] purpose of determining the amount of the mortgage-debt due to Krishnaji (defendant No. 1).

Against this decision Aba (defendant No. 2) appealed to the High Court.

Shamrao Vithal, for appellant.—The judgment-debtor was the mortgagor of the land. In execution of the decree his interest was attached during his life-time, but the sale took place after his death, and the question is whether the sale is vitiated by the fact that before it took place his legal representative was not placed upon the record. On this point there is a conflict of authorities. The Madras High Court decides that a sale held under such circumstances is invalid—Ramasami v Bagirathi (1) and Krishnayya v. Unnissa Begam (2). But the Allahabad High Court decides the other way—Dulari v. Mohan Singh (3); Stowell v. Ajudhia Nath (4); Sheo Prasad v. Hira Lal (5). These rulings of the Allahabad High Court are completely in our favour. It does not appear that the latest of these rulings, which is a Full Bench ruling, was brought to the notice of the Madras High Court in Krishnayya's case. Even assuming that it was necessary to bring the representative of the judgment-debtor on the record, still I submit that under the circumstances of the present case it is not open to the plaintiff to impeach the validity of the sale. She came to know of the sale within a few days after it took place, and yet she did not apply under s. 311 of the Civil Procedure Code (XIV of 1882) to set it aside. It is, therefore, binding on her.

Vishnu K. Bhatavdekar, for respondent.—The provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure (XIV of 1882) relating to abatement of suits do not apply to execution proceedings. See s. 647 of the Code as amended by Act VI of 1892—Hajrat Akramnissa Begam v. Valiunissa Begam (6); Gulabdas v. Lakshman (7). The policy of the Code is to give the defendant the fullest opportunity of being heard. No step is allowed to be taken by any party to a suit or other proceeding behind the back of his opponent. Otherwise the greatest injustice would result from ex-parte proceedings. [279] The Code contemplates the presence of the judgment-debtor at every stage of the execution proceedings. The interest of his representatives would suffer if they were not brought on the record immediately after his death. They can save the property from attachment and sale by payment of the judgment-debt or by adjustment of the decree to the satisfaction of the decree-holder. See ss. 257, 257-A, 290, &c., of the Code. This opportunity would be lost if they were not brought on the record. If all questions relating to the execution of decrees between the parties to the suit and their representatives are to be determined under s. 244 during the course of execution proceedings, and not by a separate suit, then the representatives of the judgment-debtor must be brought on the record—Punchanun v. Rabia Bibi (1). Abrahamji v. Nathwa Kallya (2); Ramchandra Bapuji v. Vinayak Anant (3).

Shamrao Vithal in reply.—It is not alleged that any substantial injury has resulted from the omission to make the representative of the judgment-debtor a party to the record. That being the case, even if the omission be treated as a material irregularity, it would not be a ground for setting aside the sale—Tasadduk Rusul Khan v. Ahmad Husain (4).

JUDGMENT.

JARDINE, J.—Subhankhan mortgaged the land in suit to Krishnaji, defendant No. 1. One Tukaram Dhanji Guzar, a creditor of Subhankhan, obtained a decree against him, and during Subhankhan's life-time a warrant for sale was issued and the proclamation published for the sale of the land. It is found as a fact that Subhankhan died on the 27th September, 1877; the sale took place on the 3rd October, 1877, without any notice being given to Dhondu Bai, the present plaintiff, daughter of Subhankhan and his legal representative, or her name being placed on the record. Tukaram became the purchaser. Dhondu Bai became aware of the sale some days after it took place. She took no steps to set it aside. The second defendant Aba is in possession, claiming as purchaser from Tukaram by a sale-deed dated the 8th November, 1883.

[280] The defendants allege that Aba redeemed the land from Krishnaji by means of a redemption suit, No. 982 of 1882. No mala fides or fraud on the part of Tukaram or Aba is alleged or found; and there is no finding that at the time of the auction sale in 1877 Tukaram was aware of Subhankhan having died.

The lower Court of appeal has held that the plaintiff may redeem the property on payment of the mortgage-money due to the second defendant, as in its opinion the purchaser at the Court sale acquired no title as against the plaintiff Dhondu Bai, her name not having been put on the record upon her father's death.

Whether this substitution is required by the Code of Civil Procedure (Act XIV of 1882) and whether the omission makes the sale invalid, are questions on which no direct authorities have been found in the decisions of this High Court. Baswantapa v. Ranu (5) and Akoba v. Sakharam (6) must be distinguished, as they relate to the constitution of suits, and not to matters in execution. As pointed out in Gulabdas v. Lakshman (7) before execution can be had at all, a right must have been fully established; and s. 647 of the Code does not apply the provisions about abatement to these proceedings—Krishna v. Bhau (1); Dhonkal v. Phakkar (2). Hub Lal v. Kanhia Lal (3) is a case of a sale being upheld as against an objector who had not been a party to the suit.

The views expressed in Gulabdas v. Lakshman have been approved by the High Court at Allahabad in Dulari v. Mohan Singh (4) by Oldfield and Straight, JJ. (where the question was whether the Court sale was invalid by reason of the prior death of the decree-holder), in Stowell v. Ajudhia Nath (5) by the same learned Judges (where the death of the judgment-debtor was prior to the sale), and in Sheo Prasad v. Hira Lal (6) by Edge, C J., and Straight, Brodhurst, Tyrrell, JJ. (Mahmood, J., dissenting) where the judgment-debtor had died after the attachment and before the sale.

[281] In the last named case the fully considered judgment of Sir John Edge discusses and dissents from Ramasami v. Bagirathi(7) (followed in Krishnayya v. Unnissa Begam (8), the authority followed in the present case by the lower Court of appeal. Sir John Edge's reasoning supports the Bombay decision, when after considering ss. 234, 275, 276, 280 and 284 of the Code of Civil Procedure he observes that he does not find in that Code any provision requiring notice to be given personally to a judgment-debtor or his legal representative of a sale of property under attachment. The view that the abatement sections do not apply to execution proceedings has been adopted by the Legislature in Act VI of 1892 amending s. 647. The learned Chief Justice then goes on to consider s. 311, about which, in the last of the two Madras cases, the learned Judges of Madras say that the sale without notice to the legal representative of a deceased party was a material irregularity and must necessarily cause him substantial injury. The Act of 1892, however, shows that this procedure by notice is not obligatory. It would appear from the Madras Report that the Allahabad Full Bench decision was not brought to the notice of the Court in that case.

The present case resembles the two last Allahabad cases in that there is no question raised that the sale might have been voidable by reason of valid objections which the plaintiff had no opportunity of preferring at or soon after the time of sale, or on other equitable grounds. The contention is that the sale is absolutely void by reason of the plaintiff not having been brought on the record of the execution proceedings immediately on her father's death. Sir John Edge treats this as mere technical pleading and as not touching the merits and at p. 446 points out the uncertainty and risk which such a doctrine would impose on the purchaser at the execution sale. On this point, the construction of s. 311, Mr. Justice Mahmood concurs, and at p. 459 notices the important decisions of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, which show that for the purpose of setting aside a sale on the ground of irregularity, "substantial injury by reason of such irregularity" must be proved. In the present case, none such is averred.

[282] It follows that under such circumstances the purchaser acquires a valid title under s. 316 even if the doctrine of Gulabdas v. Lakshman, distinguishing execution proceedings from suits, had not been followed by the Legislature.

It appears unnecessary to discuss the effect of s. 244 on the present litigation.

For the above reasons my opinion is that the decree of the District Court should be reversed, and that of the original Court restored, and that the respondent here should pay the costs of both appeals.

RANADE, J.—The only point of law which has to be considered in this case relates to the question whether an auction sale in execution of a decree is invalidated by reason of the death of the judgment-debtor after attachment, but before sale, and the failure of the attaching creditor to join the heir or representative of the deceased debtor as party to the record of the execution proceedings. There has been no authoritative ruling of this Court on the points, while there has been a conflict of rulings in the decisions of the Madras and Allahabad High Courts.

The Madras High Court held in Ramasami v. Bagirathi (1) that the representatives of the deceased judgment-debtor ought to have been brought in, and that the further process of sale could not legally issue without some person being on the record to represent the deceased judgment-debtor, and that the sale held under such circumstances must be set aside. This same view was re-affirmed by the Madras High Court in Krishnayya v. Unnissa Begam (2), although its attention was specially drawn to the ruling of the Allahabad High Court in Stowell v. Ajudhia Nath (3). In this last case the Allahabad High Court held that as the sale was held on the authority of the order of the Court which had jurisdiction to make it, it was not affected by the prior death of the judgment-debtor. The Madras High Court distinguished this Allahabad case, as being one in which the contest was between two mortgagees. The second mortgagee was the first purchaser and purchased the judgment-debtor's [283] interest subject to the first mortgagee's claim, and the death of the original owner could not affect the proceedings in any way. It was further observed that Mr. Justice Straight did not concur with the remark of Mr. Justice Oldfield on this point, and that both Judges agreed that the question whether the sale might be voidable at the instance of the representative of the judgment-debtor did not arise for decision in that case. The Madras High Court held that the sale which took place under such circumstances without notice to the representative, was vitiated by a material irregularity, and must necessarily cause the debtor substantial injury.

Although the decision in Stowell v. Ajudhia Nath (3) was thus distinguished, the point now in dispute came again directly before the Allahabad High Court, and a Full Bench of that Court held in Sheo Prasad v. Hira Lal (4), (Justice Mahmood dissenting), that the sale was regular and valid, notwithstanding the failure of the judgment-creditor in the matter of joining the name of the representative of the deceased judgment-debtor as a party to the sale proceedings. The Judges of the Allahabad High Court remarked that the Judges who decided Ramasami v. Bagirathi (1) gave no reasons for their opinion that s. 234 applied to such cases. It may also be observed that although this Full Bench decision was passed in 1889, it does not appear to have been noticed by the Madras High Court in their second decision quoted above, though that Court referred to the earlier ruling in Stowell v. Ajudhia Nath (3).

In this state of the law, it becomes necessary to consider the grounds on which the decision of the Allahabad High Court rests. The chief grounds appear to be, (1) that execution proceedings, such as attachment, &c., do not abate by reason of the death of the judgment-debtor, (2) that property under attachment must be considered as being in the custody of the law, (3) that it is not necessary to give notice of the sale to the judgment-debtor after his property has been duly attached, (4) that the interest of the representative of the judgment-debtor cannot in any way be damnified by the sale, and (5) that he has his remedy, if the [284] sale was irregularly conducted and resulted in actual injury, under s. 311 of the Code (Act XIV of 1882). The Chief Justice of the Allahabad High Court noticed in detail ss. 234, 275, 276, 280, 284 and 311 of the Code, and as the result of this review he held that there was nothing in the Code of Civil Procedure which warranted the suggestion that an attachment would abate on the death of the judgment-debtor, or that his death would render it necessary for the judgment-creditor to take steps to issue notice to the representatives of the deceased judgment-debtor. There are, however, other sections of the Code which were not noticed in that judgment, and which appear to me to show clearly that the Code does contemplate the necessity of the judgment-debtor or his representative being a party to the sale proceedings. Sections 286—295 lay down general rules for the sale of immoveable and moveable property. Section 290 provides that no sale shall take place without the consent in writing of the judgment-debtor, until after the expiration of thirty days from the fixing of the proclamation. Section 291 similarly requires a fresh proclamation of an adjourned sale, unless the judgment-debtor consents to waive it. The same section provides that, even after proceedings in auction-sale have commenced, they shall be stopped, if, before the lot is knocked down, the debt and costs are paid or tendered. This indulgence clearly presupposes the active presence of the judgment-debtor or his representative as the person paying or offering to pay the sum due. Section 293 gives the judgment-debtor a right to recover loss caused by the resale of property in consequence of the default of the first purchaser. Section 294 permits the judgment-debtor to apply to the Court for setting aside a sale, if the attaching creditor purchases without previously obtaining the permission of the Court. Sections 304—325 lay down special rules for the sale of immoveable property. Section 305 empowers the Court to grant time to the judgment-debtor to raise money even after an order for sale has been made. The judgment-debtor can of course apply under s. 311 to set aside a sale on the ground of irregularity. Section 322 specially contemplates that the Collector shall make an inquiry into the liabilities of the judgment-debtor, and on the basis of that inquiry he may even stop the sale, in whole or in part, if any of [285] the expedients suggested in s. 323 can be adopted with advantage.

I do not, therefore, think that it can justly be laid down that the Code contemplates ex parte sale proceedings in execution, and dispenses with the necessity of having the judgment-debtor or his representative before the Court at all stages of these proceedings. It may be conceded that s. 234 is not mandatory, but permissive, and that under the amended s. 647, execution proceedings do not necessarily abate by reason of the death of the judgment-debtor; but it does not follow from this that the sale, when it takes place under such circumstances, cannot be challenged by the representative of the judgment-debtor, whose rights were ignored by the judgment-creditor, either by an application under s. 311, or by a regular suit. There have been decisions of this Court where the judgment-creditor joined the names of other than the true heir of the deceased judgment-debtor, and it was held that the sales which took place in such proceedings did not affect the right of the true heir, in one case a minor son, and in the other a widow, to sue for redemption, which they could only do by first suing to set aside the sales—Baswantapa v. Ranu(1) and Akoba v. Sakharam (2). This analogy appears to me to suggest that, on the point of law now in issue, the decisions of the Madras High Court are entitled to greater consideration than those of the Allahabad High Court, and that the omission to join the name of the representative of the deceased judgment-debtor was a material irregularity, and a serious defect in the title of the purchaser.

The next question for consideration is, whether this irregularity and defect vitiated the sale. In this connection, it must be noted that the plaintiff in this case could have applied under s. 311 to have the sale set aside. It is in evidence that she came to know of the sale within the period allowed by law for applications to set the sale aside. She remained quiet, and allowed the sale to be confirmed. No fraud or mala fides on the part of the judgment-creditor is alleged in this case. He was not aware of the death of the judgment-debtor. It is not contended that [286] the sale has resulted in any substantial damage. More than twelve years have elapsed since the date of the confirmation of the sale. Since then the purchaser became adverse owner of the property, and his long possession must be held to have operated as a bar to the legal remedy of the present plaintiff. Moreover, a third person, who had no notice of the plaintiff's right and the defect in the sale proceedings, purchased the property for valuable consideration so far back as 1883. In the Madras cases, this question of limitation did not arise, and was not raised. Under all these special circumstances, I think that the present plaintiff cannot maintain her suit for redemption, and that, notwithstanding the legal defect in the sale proceedings, the defendant's title cannot now be questioned after more than twelve years.

I would, therefore, reverse the order of remand of the lower Court of appeal, and restore the decree of the original Court. Respondent should pay the costs of both appeals.

Order reversed.

[287] Under s. 53 of the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act (Act XVII of 1879) the Special Judge has a revisionary power in all cases where a failure of justice appears to have taken place. It is for him to decide whether the finding on a question of fact by a Subordinate Judge is of that nature, and in doing so he is entirely within his jurisdiction.

Shidhu v. Bali (1), dissented from.

THIS was an application under the extraordinary jurisdiction (s. 622 of the Civil Procedure Code, Act XIV of 1882) against the decision of Rao Bahadur Mahadeo Govind Ranade, Special Judge under the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act (Act XVII of 1879).

Plaintiff Chanmalappa bin Malkappa sued to recover Rs. 333-14-9 due on an account. The defendant disputed certain items in the account and among them one for Rs. 130; he further claimed a set-off on account of commission due to himself.

The First Class Subordinate Judge of Sholapur found that the defendant was not entitled to the commission, and that the plaintiff's claim to the item of Rs. 130 was not proved. He, however, allowed the plaintiff's claim to the extent of Rs. 203-14-9.

Against this decision both the plaintiff and the defendant applied for revision to the Special Judge, who found that the plaintiff's claim to the item of Rs. 130 was proved; that the defendant was entitled to the commission, and that the inquiry before the Subordinate Judge was defective. He, therefore, reversed the decree, and remanded the case for a fresh decision.

On remand the First Class Subordinate Judge gave to the plaintiff a decree for Rs. 40-14-9.

Both the parties again applied for revision to the Special Judge, who on retaking the account amended the decree and awarded to the plaintiff Rs. 275-14-9 and costs in proportion.

[288] The defendant thereupon applied to the High Court under its extraordinary jurisdiction, and obtained a rule nisi calling upon the plaintiff to show cause why the order of the Special Judge should not be set aside.

Ganesh Krishna Deshamukh appeared for the applicant (original defendant) in support of the rule, and relied upon Shidhu v. Bali (1).

Nagindas T. Marphatia appeared for the opponent (original plaintiff) to show cause, and relied upon Usmanbhai v. Imratbhai (2) and Rayachand v. Sultan Rahimbhai (3).

JUDGMENT.

SARGENT, C. J.—We think the decision in Shidhu v. Bali (1) proceeds upon a mistaken application of s. 622, Civil Procedure Code, which only gives this Court jurisdiction to interfere where the lower Court acts without jurisdiction or has exercised its jurisdiction "illegally or with material irregularity."

The Special Judge by s. 53 of Act XVII of 1879 has a revisionary power in all cases where a failure of justice appears to have taken place. It is for him to decide whether the finding on a question of fact by a Subordinate Judge is of that nature, and in doing so he is entirely within his jurisdiction. The practice of this Court under the criminal procedure referred to in the above cases is determined by our own view of the proper way of exercising our revisionary jurisdiction, but cannot, in the absence of words to that effect, be properly imposed on the Special Judge as matter of law determining his jurisdiction.

This view of the law is no doubt more distinctly expressed than in either of the cases of Usmanbhai v. Imratbhai (1) or Rayachand v. Sultan Rahimbhai (2); but Mr. Justice Telang, who was one of the Judges who decided Shidhu v. Bali (3) when sitting with the Chief Justice in the above cases, was, on reconsideration, of the same opinion as that now expressed. We must, therefore, discharge the rule, with costs.

KHANDERAO (Original Defendant), Applicant v. NARSINGRAO (Original Plaintiff), *Opponent. [3rd April, 1894.]

Mamlatdars' Act (Bombay Act III of 1876). s. 15†—Possessory suit—Mortgagee's possession not on behalf of the mortgagor—Jurisdiction.

The possession by a mortgagee is not possession on behalf of his mortgagor within the meaning of s. 15 of the Mamlatdars' Act (Bombay Act III of 1876) so as to give the Mamlatdar jurisdiction under that section.

APPLICATION under the extraordinary jurisdiction of the High Court (s. 622 of the Civil Procedure Code, Act XIV of 1882) against the decision of Rao Saheb C. K. Hardikar, Mamlatdar of Koregaon, in the Satara District.

The plaintiff brought a summary suit in the Mamlatdar's Court against the defendant to recover possession of certain lands. He alleged that he had been in actual possession up to within six months before the institution of the suit, and that the defendant had wrongfully dispossessed him on the 29th April, 1893. The suit was filed on the 27th October, 1893.

The Mamlatdar found that the plaintiff had been in actual possession of the lands up to the 14th November, 1892, and that from that date up to the date of dispossession by the defendant, plaintiff's mortgagee was in possession. He, however, held that the mortgagee was in possession on plaintiff's behalf, and, therefore, awarded the plaintiff's claim.

[290] The defendant applied under the extraordinary jurisdiction of the High Court and obtained a rule nisi to set aside the decision, on the ground (inter alia) that the plaintiff having had no actual possession within six months prior to the institution of the suit the Mamlatdar had no jurisdiction to entertain it.

Inverarity (with B. A. Bhagavat) appeared for the applicant (defendant) in support of the rule.

Daji Abaji Khare appeared for the opponent (plaintiff) to show cause.

JUDGMENT.

SARGANT, C. J.—The possession of the plaintiff's mortgagee after 14th November, 1892, cannot, we think, be regarded as a possession "on his behalf" within the meaning of s. 15 of Bombay Act III of 1876, and, therefore, the plaintiff, upon the findings of the Mamlatdar, was not in possession six months before the suit, and the Mamlatdar had, therefore, no jurisdiction to entertain it. We must, therefore, make the rule absolute and reverse the decree of the Mamlatdar, and direct him to restore possession to the defendant.

Defendant to have his costs of this application.

[12th April, 1894.]

Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), s. 135—Construction—Assignment of an actionable claim—Suit by the assignee—Recovery of the full amount of debt.

Vishnu owed a sum of Rs. 483 to Govindsing, who assigned the debt to the plaintiff for Rs. 200. The plaintiff sued Vishnu to recover the whole amount.

Held, that under s. 135 of the Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882) the plaintiff was entitled to recover the whole amount of the debt.

[R., 3 O.C. 18.]

APPLICATION under the extraordinary jurisdiction of the High Court (s. 622 of the Civil Procedure Code, Act XIV of [291] 1882), against the decision of Rao Babadur N. N. Nanavati, First Class Subordinate Judge of Dhulia, in a Small Cause suit.

One Govindsing Ramsing was prosecuted by the defendant Vishnu Mahadev Sonar upon a charge of cheating in respect of certain cloth, and was convicted and sentenced to imprisonment and a fine of Rs. 1,000, which sum was to be paid to Vishnu for his loss. Vishnu then filed a civil suit against Govindsing to recover the price of the cloth, obtained a decree, and applied for execution, but the execution proceedings were compromised on the 6th October, 1890, for Rs. 760 paid by Govindsing to Vishnu, who thereupon gave Govindsing a receipt in full discharge of the decretal amount and agreed to take steps to cancel the warrant for the recovery of the fine. The Magistrate, however, declined to cancel the warrant, and Rs. 483 were recovered under it and paid over to Vishnu.

Govindsing subsequently assigned to the plaintiff for Rs. 200 his right to recover this sum of Rs. 483 from Vishnu. The plaintiff gave due notice of the assignment to Vishnu and brought the present suit against him to recover the amount.

The defendant (inter alia) pleaded that the plaintiff under s. 135 of the Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882) could not recover more than he had actually paid for the assignment.

The Subordinate Judge in the exercise of his Small Cause Court powers awarded the plaintiff's claim on the ground that the amount of Rs. 483 was held by the defendant for and on behalf of Govindsing.

The defendant applied under the extraordinary jurisdiction, and obtained a rule nisi calling upon the plaintiff to show cause why the decree should not be set aside.

Daji Abaji Khare appeared for the defendant in support of the rule :— Under s. 135 of the Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882) the plaintiff cannot recover more than Rs. 200 actually paid by him. There is a conflict of decisions on this point. The rulings of the Madras and Allahabad High Courts support our contention—Nilakanta v. Krishnasami (1) ; Jani Begam v. [292] Jahangir Khan (2) ; while the Calcutta High Court has held that, notwithstanding an assignment for a smaller amount, the assignee is entitled to recover the whole amount of the debt—Grish Chandra v. Kashisauri Debi (3) ; Khoshdeb Biswas v. Satar Mondol (4) ; Rajendra Narain v. Watson and Co. (5).

Hormusji C. Koyaji appeared for the opponent (plaintiff) to show cause.—He relied upon the rulings of the Calcutta High Court referred to above.

JUDGMENT.

SARGENT, C. J.—The question in this case turns upon the proper construction of s. 135, Transfer of Property Act, which says : " Where an actionable claim is sold, he against whom it is made is wholly discharged by paying to the buyer the price and incidental expenses of the sale, with interest on the price from the day that the buyer paid it." After giving the section the best consideration in our power we have come to the conclusion that the view of the Calcutta High Court as expressed in Grish Chandra v. Kashisauri Debi (3) and Khoshdeb Biswas v. Satar Mondol (4) is the correct one.

In Nilakanta v. Krishnasami (1) the learned Chief Justice remarks that " if the debtor is wholly discharged in law by payment of a certain sum, it seems to follow that the creditor is only entitled to recover that sum." But if that were intended, surely the learned compilers of the Act might be expected to have said so ; for the two propositions are quite distinct from a legal point of view. In Jani Begam v. Jahangir Khan (2) Mr. Justice Straight arrived at the same conclusion by discussing the mischief at which he considered the section was aimed, and the impossibility of distinguishing, " as regards morality, between the status of the assignee after suit and decree than before."

But whatever truth there may be in the above remarks, we cannot, as Mr. Justice Willes says in Fuentes v. Montis (6) in discussing the

We are "compelled to deal with the Acts of Parliament according to the expressions" we "find there." Applying this rule of construction we cannot, in the proper exercise of our function as a Court of construction, do more than give effect to the plain and unambiguous language of the section. We may add, however, that we agree with the Chief Justice of the Madras High Court in his opinion that cl. (1) Rule 158.—After direction given as to the mode of hearing or trial of a cause or in an earlier stage of a cause by order of the Judge Ordinary, or of the Registrars, to be obtained on summons, a wife who is petitioner, or has entered an appearance as respondent in a cause, may file her bill or bills of costs for taxation as against her husband, and the Registrar, to whom such bill of costs are referred for taxation, shall, when directions as to the mode of hearing or trial have been given, ascertain what is a sufficient sum of money to be paid into the Registry, or what is sufficient security to be given by the husband to cover the costs of the wife of and incidental to the hearing of the cause; and shall thereupon issue an order upon the husband to pay or secure the said sum within a time to be fixed by the Registrar; provided that in case the husband should by reason of his wife having separate property or for other reasons, dispute her right to recover any costs pending suit against him, the Registrar may suspend the order to pay the wife's taxed costs, or to pay or secure the sum ascertained to be sufficient to cover her costs of and incidental to the hearing of the cause, for such length of time as shall seem to him necessary to enable the husband to obtain the decision of the Court as to his liability (see Browne and Powles on Divorce (5th ed.), p. 588).

19 B. 293.

On the 19th of November, 1894, the respondent obtained a summons calling on the petitioner to show cause why her costs "should not be taxed from time to time as her attorneys may think fit, and why the petitioner should not be ordered to pay such costs when so taxed to the respondent's attorneys, and why the petitioner should not be ordered to secure to the satisfaction of the Prothonotary of this Honourable Court the due payment of such sums to the extent of Rs. 1,000 and such further sums as the Taxing Master of this Honourable Court may from time to time certify to be sufficient to cover the costs of the respondent of and incidental to, and up to and including the hearing of this suit, and why until such security be given all proceedings herein should not be stayed, and why the petitioner should not pay the costs of and incidental to this application."

The petitioner filed an affidavit in which he stated that he had come to India in 1849, and that he intended to pass the remainder of his life here, and that at the date of his marriage with the respondent and at the date of suit he was domiciled in Bombay. He further stated that the respondent was born in Bombay, where her father had long been resident, and that he and his wife (the respondent's mother) were Eurasians and were both domiciled in India. He further stated that his salary was Rs. 500 a month, out of which he had to pay income-tax, insurance, &c., and that he was not possessed of any property.

Brown, for the petitioner, showed cause.—The parties are domiciled in India, and no such order as the summons asks for can be made—Macrae on the Indian Divorce Act, p. 154; Act IV of 1869, ss. 7, 34, 35, 45; Broadhead v. Broadhead (5).

JUDGMENT.

FARRAN, J.—This is an application by the respondent that the petitioner may be ordered to pay her costs hitherto incurred, and to lodge in Court sufficient money to cover her costs likely to be incurred. The application is resisted by Mr. Brown, who has appeared for the petitioner, and has contended that (1) the Court has no power to make the order; (2) the Court ought not to make the order under the special circumstances of this case.

Upon the unanswered affidavit of the petitioner I assume that his domicile, as well as that of the respondent, is in British India, and was so at the time of the marriage in 1882, and that the provisions of s. 4 of the Succession Act (X of 1865) are applicable to the parties to this suit. It does not appear to me that these provisions affect the rule as to costs which ought to be applied to the case. The rule has always been that an order as to costs pending the hearing ought not to be made against the husband, if the wife is possessed of means (technically styled separate property) sufficient to enable her to pay her own costs in the first instance. The reason for the continuance of the rule (whatever may have been its origin) being "that it is not considered just either that a wife should be left without the means of putting her case fairly before the Court, or that a practitioner should run the risk of losing the proper remuneration for his labours if he take up a case which he honestly believes to be genuine, but which may after all turn out to be unfounded" (Browne and Powles on Divorce, 5th ed., p. 342). It is a rule of public policy.

[296] Section 4 of the Succession Act (X of 1865) enlarges the possibilities of the wife possessing means to pay her own costs, but (if she does not possess such means) does not do away with the advisability of the rule. The passing of the Married Women's Property Act in England, even that of 1882 (45 and 46 Vict., c. 75), has not produced any alteration in the rule of the Divorce Court there. Rule 158, as amended in 1875, still continues to govern the practice of the Court in England (see Allen v. Allen(1)), and ought, I think, having regard to s. 7 of our Act (IV of 1869), to govern the practice of Indian Courts.

This view is in accordance with the practice hitherto followed in this Court and with the judgment in Natall v. Natall (2), and Broadhead v. Broadhead (3), but opposed to the decision in Proby v. Proby(4), which was recognized in Thomson v. Thomson (5). Too much stress seems to me to have been placed on the origin of the rule in Proby v. Proby(4), and too little upon the real reason for its continuance (see Allen v. Allen (1). The general rule is, therefore, I hold, applicable to the parties in this case.

The Court has, however, a discretion in the matter, and the further question which arises is whether there are sufficient grounds shown in this case to induce me to depart from the usual practice. The circumstances bring it near the border line, but I have come to the conclusion that the petitioner has not shown enough to exempt him from the operation of the general rule. It is manifestly a case in which the costs of the respondent ought to be kept within the narrowest possible limit consistent with her being able to place her case fairly before the Court. No extravagances in the way of costs can be allowed against the petitioner.

The order will be that the respondent's costs be taxed as between party and party down to the 8th day of January, 1895, other than the costs of the issuing of the commission to Madras, of which I have reserved the costs, and that such first mentioned costs be paid by the petitioner to the attorneys of the respondent, and that the Taxing Master fix a sum sufficient to cover the [297] respondent's further costs, and that the petitioner give security for the same, or at his option pay the same into Court.

INSOLVENT JURISDICTION.

Before Mr. Justice Farran.

IN THE MATTER OF HORMARJI ARDESIR HORMARJI, AN INSOLVENT.

[5th December, 1894.]

Insolvency—Indian Insolvent Act (Stat. 11 and 12 Vict., c. 21), s. 86 (1)—Entering up judgment against insolvent—Final discharge.

Under s. 86 of the Insolvent Act (Stat. 11 and 12 Vict., c. 21), the Court has a discretion to grant or refuse an application to enter up judgment against an insolvent for the amount of his debts. In exercising this discretion the Court must be guided by the circumstances of the insolvency.

[Rev., 19 B. 778].

APPLICATION for discharge under s. 60 of the Insolvent Act (Stat, 11 and 12 Vict., c. 21).

[298] The insolvent had filed his petition on the 1st May, 1891. In August, 1892, at the hearing of his application for discharge under s. 47 of the Act he was found guilty of reckless speculation and other offences, and was sentenced to a term of imprisonment under ss. 50 and 51 of the Insolvent Act (Stat. 11 and 12 Vict. c. 21). The case is reported in I. L.R. 17 Bom. 313.

Lang (Advocate General) for the insolvent now applied for his discharge under s. 60 of the Act.

(1) Section 86 of the Indian Insolvent Act (Stat. 11 and 12 Vict., c 21):—

"86. Provided always, and be it enacted, that in all cases where any Insolvent shall not have obtained his discharge in the nature of a certificate as aforesaid under this Act, the said Court for the Relief of Insolvent Debtors may, if in the circumstances of the case it shall think fit, before making such order for such discharge, direct a judgment to be entered up against such Insolvent in the Supreme Court of the Presidency within which such Court for the Relief of Insolvent Debtors shall be situate in the name of the Assignee or Assignees, or of such Official Assignee as the Court shall think fit, for the amount of the debts or demands stated in the schedule of such Insolvent as due or claimed, and of such as shall be established in the said Court against the said Insolvent's estate, or so much thereof as shall appear at the time of such order to be due, which said order shall be filed in the said Court for the Relief of Insolvent Debtors in India; and the production of such order, or of a copy of such order, under the seal of the said Court, of which order, copy and seal no proof shall be requisite other than the production of such order or copy, shall be sufficient authority to the proper officer for entering up the said judgment; and then in every such case, and notwithstanding the provisions hereinbefore contained, if at any time it shall appear to the satisfaction of the said Court that such Insolvent is of ability to pay such debts or demands, or any part thereof, or that he is dead, leaving assets for such purpose, and that under the circumstances the same is reasonable and proper, the said Court may, if it shall think fit, order execution to be taken out upon such judgment against the property of such Insolvent, whether the same may or may not be by law vested in his Assignee or Assignees, for such sum of money as under all the circumstances of the case the said Court shall order, such sum to be distributed rateably amongst the creditors of such Insolvent according to the mode hereinbefore directed in the case of a dividend; and such further proceedings may be had upon such judgment as the Court may from time to time order until the said debts or demands shall be fully paid and satisfied, and no scire facias shall be necessary to revive or execute such judgment on account of any lapse of time or change of parties, or otherwise, but execution shall at all times issue thereon by virtue of the order of such Court for the Relief of Insolvent Debtors from time to time: Provided always, that in case any application against any such Insolvent for the purpose aforesaid shall appear to the Court vexatious or oppressive, it shall be lawful for the said Court not only to refuse to make any order on such application, but also to dismiss the same, with such costs against the party making the same as to the said Court shall appear reasonable."

DEC. 5.

INSOLVENT JURISDICTION.

19 B. 297.

Macpherson, for the Official Assignee (1).—On behalf of the Official Assignee, who is put in motion by some of the opposing creditors, I apply, before the order of discharge is made, that judgment be entered up against the insolvent under s. 86 of the Insolvent Act for the amount of his debts.

This application, it is understood, will be opposed on behalf of the insolvent. Undoubtedly the Court has, under the section, a discretion to grant or refuse the application; but hitherto the practice has been to make the order as a matter of course, and this is certainly not the instance in which the practice should be altered. This is not a vindictive application by the creditors. Their losses have been enormous. The insolvent was found guilty, at the hearing, of concealing property. To that property they are certainly entitled, and judgment should be entered up for it. But there is no provision for entering up judgment for [299] less than the full amount of the scheduled debts, and therefore, judgment must go for the whole. It must be remembered that even with judgment for this large amount against him the insolvent is fully protected, for s. 86 does not allow such judgment to be executed without application to the Court, and the Court, before ordering it, must be satisfied that execution is reasonable and proper. In ordering execution the Court would adopt the English practice as stated by Jessel, M. R. in In re Clagett's Estate (2), and see also In re Pain (3). Counsel also referred to In re Coorlawalla (4); In the matter of Candas Narrondas (5), and Stat. 1 and 2 Vict. c. 110, s. 87.

Lang, for the insolvent, contra.—To grant this application would be to inflict a further punishment upon an insolvent already sufficiently punished. The English Act (Stat. 1 and 2 Vict., c. 110. s. 87), which has been cited as corresponding to our Indian Act only applied to non-traders who were insolvents, and not bankrupts. Under the Bankrupt Acts which applied to traders, after-acquired property was always protected. To enter up judgment against the insolvent would be to punish him a second time. He should only be punished once.—In re Marks (6); In re Huggins (7).

Macpherson in reply.—Until the Indian Act is repealed it is that Act which is to be enforced, and not the English Act. But, if the English Act were in force here, the insolvent would be much more severely dealt with than he can be under the Indian Act; e.g., see s. 31 of the Bankruptcy Act of 1883. Further, s. 28 of that Act seems to give the English Court the same power as is given by s. 86 of the Indian Act. The result of this application is only to compel an insolvent to do that which (if he is an honest man) he would do of his own accord.

JUDGMENT.

FARRAN, J.—I am glad that the order which I am about to make is one which, if I am wrong in making it, may be corrected by the Court of appeal. As far as I am aware, this is the first time that an application of this kind has come before the Court. The practice hitherto has been to enter up judgment against the [300] insolvent as a matter of course in every case. That is a practice which does not appear to be in accordance with the Act, for the 86th section, under which it is done, directs the

19 B. 297.

The Court, however, has now to exercise its discretion in this case, and the question is by what circumstances it ought to be guided in deciding whether to grant or to refuse an application of this kind. On the best consideration I can give to the matter I cannot but think that those circumstances must be found in the conduct of the insolvent previously to his insolvency. The Court must ask, what occasioned his insolvency? Was it his own misconduct? Was there recklessness or fraud in carrying on his business, or is it clear that the insolvency has been caused by unexpected misfortune, or by circumstances which he could not foresee or which were beyond his control? It is, I think, such considerations as these which must guide the Court in exercising its discretion under s. 86 of the Act.

Applying this test to the present case I am obliged to say that, in my opinion, the insolvency of Hormarji was not in any way due to unexpected misfortune, but was the result of recklessness and want of ordinary foresight and care in the conduct of his business. Being of this opinion I must grant this application. I do so with regret, for it is obvious that the insolvent must begin life again at great disadvantage. If I am wrong, the matter can be taken to appeal.

March, 1894. The applicant (plaintiff) now desired to appeal to the Privy Council, and a petition for leave to appeal was now presented on his behalf. He had obtained a copy of the decree for the purpose of this appeal on the 9th July, 1894.

Macpherson objected.—This application is too late, and cannot now be granted. The application must be made within six months from the date of the decree (sch. II of the Limitation Act, XV of 1877, art. 177). The time, therefore, expired on the 16th September, 1894. The period cannot be extended, for ss. 5 and 12 of the Limitation Act do not apply. This is not an appeal, and, therefore, in computing the period of limitation we cannot exclude the time requisite for getting a copy of the decree —Anderson v. Periasami (1); Lakshmanan v. Peryasami (2); Jawahir Lal v. Narain Das (3); Sita Ram Kesho's case (4).

Scott, for the applicant, (contra.).—This petition is the first step in an appeal, and is an appeal just as a memorandum of appeal is part of the appeal. This is evident from the words of [302] s. 603 of the Code. Sections 5 and 12 of the Limitation Act, therefore, apply.

JUDGMENT.

SARGENT, C. J.—The question arising here is whether ss. 5 and 12 of the Limitation Act apply to an application for leave to appeal to the Privy Council. In deciding it we think we should read the Act as a whole and not confine our attention merely to the sections referred to. The point is whether the petition now presented is to be regarded as an appeal or an application. If it is an appeal, it comes within the twelfth section, and its presentation is within time, and it is also within the fifth section, under which the period for its presentation may be extended. But reading the Act as a whole we must be guided in some degree by what we find in the schedule; and the schedule deals with an application of this kind as an "application," and as somthing different from an appeal. The third division of the schedule is headed "Applications," as distinguished from the second division, which is headed "Appeals." We cannot treat as an appeal under the fifth or twelfth sections what would fall into the class of "Applications" in the schedule. We must give the Act as a whole its plain meaning, and reading the sections and the schedule together we must hold that this is not an appeal but an application, and that there is no provision which enables us to exclude from the period of limitation the time required for obtaining a copy of the decree or for extending the period of limitation under special circumstances.

We think that the petition is too late, and this application must be refused with costs.

BAI SHRI MAJIRAJBA (Original Defendant), Appellant v. MAGANLAL BHAISHANKAR AND ANOTHER (Original Plaintiffs), *Respondents. [4th April, 1894.]

Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), ss. 53, 562 and 582—Remand—Amendment of plaint in appeal—Appellate Courts power to amend plaint—Suit for rent converted into one of ejectment.

When a suit is not disposed of on a preliminary point it is not competent to a Court of appeal under s. 562 of the Code of Civil Procedure (Act XIV of 1882) to remand the case for a fresh trial.

The section, moreover, contemplates a remand back to the Court which first disposed of the suit, and to no other Court.

An amendment of a plaint, which materially transforms the nature of the claim, cannot be made under s. 53 of the Code, and certainly not in appeal. Section 53 permits amendment of the plaint before judgment, and not after. The larger powers conferred on appellate Courts by s. 582 do not authorize such a material transformation of a suit in appeal.

APPEAL from an order of remand passed by G. McCorkell, District Judge of Ahmedabad, in appeal No. 134 of 1893.

The plaintiffs sued to recover Rs. 2,150 on account of arrears of rent, alleging that they had let the house in dispute to the defendant at a monthly rent of Rs. 50, and that she had passed to them a promissory note for Rs. 600 for a portion of the rent due.

The defendant denied both the letting and the execution of the promissory note, and pleaded that the house in dispute belonged to her and not to the plaintiffs.

The suit was filed in the Court of the Joint Subordinate Judge of the Second Class, who raised the following (among other) issues :—

(1) Are the plaintiffs owners of the house mentioned in the plaint, and have they let it to the defendant on the terms stated therein ?

(2) Is the promissory note proved ?

(3) What amount are the plaintiffs entitled to recover ?

[304] The Subordinate Judge found that the plaintiffs were not owners of the house in suit, that they had not rented it to the defendant, and that the promissory note was not proved. He, therefore, rejected the plaintiff's claim.

On appeal the District Judge was of opinion that in a rent suit like the present the question of ownership of the house in dispute could not be raised, and that only two issues could properly arise : (1) as to attornment, and (2) as to the amount due. He, therefore, refused to hear the appellants on the question of title and possession.

The appellants thereupon applied for leave to amend the plaint, by converting the suit into one for a declaration of their ownership of the house in dispute, and for possession, together with arrear of rent due.

The District Judge allowed this amendment, and remanded the case to the lower Court for a fresh trial.

* Appeal No. 1 of 1894 from order.

APPELLATE CIVIL.
19 B. 303.

Against this order of remand the defendant appealed to the High Court.

Ganpat Sadashiv Rao, for appellant.—The order of remand is opposed to the provisions of s. 562 of the Code of Civil Procedure (Act XIV of 1882). The Court of first instance did not dispose of the suit on a preliminary point. Evidence was taken and findings were recorded on all the issues involved in the case. The appellate Court was not, therefore, competent to reverse the decree and remand the case for a fresh decision. Nor had it the power to allow an amendment of the plaint. Section 53 of the Code of Civil Procedure, as amended by Act VII of 1888, allows a plaint to be amended before judgment, and not after. The plaint cannot, therefore be amended in appeal. The amendment in the present case is bad for another reason. It has changed the character of the suit altogether. Plaintiffs having failed to prove the lease sued upon, cannot be allowed to fall back on their general title—Lakshmibai v. Haribin Ravji (1); Ramchandra Bapuji v. Vasudev Morbhat (2); Gavrishankar v. Atmaram (3). The amendment has further the effect of ousting the jurisdiction of [305] the Second Class Subordinate Judge who originally tried the case. The house in dispute is worth nearly Rs. 15,000. A suit to recover possession of such a house must be brought in the Court of the First Class Subordinate Judge. That being so, the remand order in the present case can only be enforced by transferring the suit to another Court. This cannot be done under s. 562 of the Code. That section clearly contemplates a remand to the same Court which had originally decided the case. The remand order is, therefore, illegal.

Viccaji (with him Messrs. Gulabchand M. Damania and Kharsedji D. Shroff) for respondents.—The real point in the present case is whether the amendment can be allowed. Section 53 of the Code of Civil Procedure must be read with s. 582. The latter section confers on appellate Courts all the powers exercised by Courts of original jurisdiction, including the power of amending plaints. The amendment in the present case does not alter the nature and character of the suit as originally framed. The main question at issue between the parties relates to the ownership of the house in suit. A distinct issue on this question was raised and decided by the first Court. The appellate Court was of opinion that this issue could not be properly dealt with in a mere rent suit. It, therefore, allowed the suit to be amended so as to enable the Court to decide the question of title in a satisfactory manner. The amendment was, therefore, proper, and even necessary, to prevent a multiplicity of suits. The amendment does not materally alter the nature of the suit. In such cases regard is to be had "not to the mere wording of the plaint, but to the issue which was settled for trial, and to the manner in which the case was treated by the lower Courts"—Rajah Rup Singh v. Rani Baisni (4).

JUDGMENT.

RANADE, J.—The only point of law involved in this case is, whether the lower appellate Court was right in remanding the case back to the lower Court, after allowing plaintiff to amend his plaint.

The original suit was brought by plaintiffs Nos. 1 and 2 to recover Rs. 2,150 on account of the rent of a house alleged to [306] have been leased by plaintiffs to defendant in May, 1888. Defendant denied the alleged lease, and contended that she was not plaintiffs' tenant, but owner of the house. There was admittedly no written lease, and plaintiffs relied chiefly on oral evidence, and on a promissory note for a portion of the rent claimed, which note, defendant contended, was a forgery.

The issues laid down for inquiry included one about the ownership of the house. On this issue, evidence was given, and a finding recorded, although the Second Class Subordinate Judge remarked that this question could not be gone into in the present case, and that the inquiry must be confined to the question of the alleged lease, and the arrears of rent claimed. He held that the alleged lease was not proved, and that the promissory note, on which plaintiffs relied, was not passed by the defendant. He accordingly rejected plaintiffs' claim.

In appeal, the District Judge was of opinion that the issue about ownership ought not to have been laid down, and that the Second Class Subordinate Judge was right in confining the inquiry to the issues decided by him. At the same time, as the dispute between the parties related chiefly to the question of ownership, the Disrict Judge permitted plaintiffs to amend the plaint, and remanded the case back to the lower Court for fuller investigation and fresh decision.

The procedure adopted by the District Judge in this case is certainly open to the objection urged by the appellant's pleader. If the District Judge was at one with the Court of first instance, there was obviously no scope for a remand under s. 566, and he should have in appeal disposed of the case upon his appreciation of the evidence on the narrower issues decided by the Second Class Subordinate Judge, and referred plaintiffs to a separate suit on their general title. The suit was not disposed of on a preliminary point, and there was thus no proper occasion for a remand under ss. 562, 564 and 578—Lingammal v. Venktammal (1) ; Farzand Ali v. Yusuf Ali (2). Section 562, more over, contemplates a remand back to the Court which first disposed of the suit. In this case, as the value of the property in dispute exceeds [307] Rs. 5,000, the remand inquiry could not possibly be conducted in the Second Class Subordinate Judge's Court, and the suit would have to be inquired into by the First Class Subordinate Judge of Ahmedabad. An amendment, which transforms so radically the nature of the claim, cannot be made under s. 53, and certainly not in appeal. Section 53 requires and permits amendment of the plaint before judgment, and not after. The large powers conferred on appellate Courts by s. 582 do not authorize such a transformation of a suit in appeal.

We accordingly reverse the order of remand, and direct the District Judge to dispose of the appeal on the evidence in respect of the issues decided by the Court of first instance. The respondents should pay the costs of this second appeal.

Remand order reversed.

SECOND appeal from the decision of J. B. Alcock, District Judge of Surat.

The plaintiff sued to recover Rs. 4,521 due on a mortgage.

The defendant denied the plaintiff's claim.

After issues had been framed the defendant put interrogatories to the plaintiff on material points. The plaintiff evaded replying to them, and several adjournments took place to enable him to reply. Finally the Judge dismissed the suit under s. 136 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), the plaintiff not having replied to the defendant's interrogatories.

[308] The plaintiff appealed but the Judge held that the order of the Subordinate Judge was not appealable, and dismissed the appeal.

The plaintiff preferred a second appeal.

Kalabhai Lallubhai, for the appellant (plaintiff).—We submit that the order of dismissal passed under s. 136 of the Civil Procedure Code is appealable—Ramchandra v. Mdhav (1), *J. R. Chimanlal H. Setalvad, for the respondent (defendant).—There was no adjudication, by the Court, on the plaintiff's right to recover the money, and there being no adjudication there was no decree in the suit which could be appealed against—Lucky Churn v. Budurrunnisa (6).

JUDGMENT.

SARGENT, C. J.—The question in this case is, whether the order of the Subordinate Judge dismissing the plaintiff's suit under s. 136 of the Civil Procedure Code was appealable. It has been contended for the respondent that such an order is not a decree under the definition contained in s. 2 of the Civil Procedure Code, because it does not adjudicate on the "merits" of the right claimed. In Lucky Churn v. Budurrunnissa (6) the Court was "disposed" to take that view of the section, but did not decide it, being of opinion that in any case the appeal must be dismissed on the merits. However, we think that, having regard to the numerous authorities the other way, it is too late to reopen the question, although had it been res integra it must be admitted that there is force in the argument for the respondent based on the words of the section and also on the circumstance of there being a special provision for an order rejecting the suit. In Ramchandra v. Madhav(1) the cases were reviewed, and the conclusion come to by Birdwood, J., that an order dismissing the appeal under s. 556 was appealable. In J.R. Williams v. *T.A. In Lalla Dabee [309] Pershad v. Santo Pershad(3) and Prem Sukh v. Indro Nath(4) it was apparently assumed that an appeal would lie against an order made under s. 136. APPEAL from the order of Venkatrao R. Inamdar, Assistant Judge of Bijapur, in application No. 30 of 1891 under Act VIII of 1890.

The petitioner Nilgangava applied under Act VIII of 1890 for a certificate of guardianship to the persons of her minor sons. She also prayed that a certificate of administration, in respect of the minor's property, be issued either to the Collector or to the opponents Virupaksha and Siddappa, the former of whom was the step-brother and the latter the first cousin of her minor sons. She alleged that the minors were entitled to property worth Rs. 55,000 ; that the minors and the opponents were members of a joint Hindu family; that the whole of the family property was [310] in the possession of the opponents ; and that the opponents were given up to vicious habits and had been wasting and mismanaging the common property.

Opponent No. 1, Virupaksha, contended (inter alia) that the minor's property being an undivided share in joint family property, the Court had no power under Act VIII of 1890 to appoint a guardian in respect of such property.

Opponent No. 2, Siddappa, stated that he was not in possession of the minor's share of the family property.

The Assistant Judge ordered that a certificate of guardianship should be issued to the petitioner with respect to the persons of her minor sons, and to the Collector with respect to all the family property in the possession of opponent No. 1 in which the minors had shares.

Against this order, opponent No. 1 appealed to the High Court.

The appeal was at first heard by a Divisional Bench (Jardine and Ranade, JJ.) and then re-argued before a Full Bench (Jardine, Farran and Ranade, JJ).

Shamrao Vithal, for appellant.—The question in the present case is, whether a guardian can be appointed under Act VIII of 1890 for a minor who is a member of a joint Hindu family and possessed of no separate property. Under the Bombay Act XX of 1864 as well as under the Bengal Act XL of 1858 it was settled law that a guardian could not be appointed to take charge of the minor's undivided share in family property, the reason being that one member of a joint Hindu family has not such an interest in the joint property as is capable of being taken charge of and managed separately—Shivji Hasam v. Datu Mavji (1) Guracharya v. Svamirayacharya (2); Narsingrav Ramchandra v. Venkaji Krishna (3); Lakshmibai v. Govind (4); Sakharam v. Motiram (5); Bhagirathibai v. Sadashivrav (6); Kalidas v. Pranshankar (7); Chhagan v. Ramchandra (8); Ram Chunder Chuckerbutty v. Brojonath (9); Sheo Nundun Singh [311] v. Mussamut Chunsam Koeree (10). No doubt the decison of the Privy Council in Doorga Persad v. Kesho Persad Singh (11) would seem to show that the Court has the power to appoint a guardian for a minor co-parcener. But, as pointed out by this Court in Narsingrav v. Venkaji (3), the Privy Council did not consider, in Doorga Persad's case (11), the general principle of the Act with reference to the estate of an undivided Hindu family, and their observations must be read in connection with the particular case then under consideration. If the Legislature had intended to alter the law as interpreted by our Courts, it would have said so in express terms. On the other hand, the provisions of ss. 28, 29 and 34 of Act VIII of 1890 clearly show that the Act does not contemplate the appointment of a guardian in the case of a minor co-parcener governed by the Mitakshara law. See also the report of the Select Committee on the Bill (Gazette of India, January to June, 1890. Part V, p. 77). The ruling in Sham Kuar v. Mohanunda Sahoy (12) completely supports my contention.

N. G. Chandavarkar, for respondent.—Under the Hindu law the sovereign as parens patrioe is the legitmate and supreme guardian of the property of all minors—1 Strange's Hindu Law, 71; MacNaughten's Principles and Precedents of Hindu Law, p. 104; West and Buhler's Digest, p. 672. The sovereign delegates his authority in this respect to the minor's nearest relatives. No text has been cited showing that the sovereign, or the Court as representing the sovereign, has no jurisdiction to guard the property of a minor who is a member of a joint Hindu family. Very strong authority would be needed to exclude such jurisdiction. The report of the Select Committee regarding the omission of s. 17 in the original Bill does not imply that the Legislature meant to deprive the Courts of their jurisdiction in such matters. Specific words are required to exclude their jurisdiction. Section 7 of Act VIII of 1890 is wide enough to cover a case like the present, while

s. 19 does not exclude it. The cases cited do not show that the Court is not competent to appoint a guardian for a minor member of a joint Hindu family. [312] They merely show that it is not expedient to appoint a guardian for such a minor. As to the argument that in a joint Hindu family a minor co-sharer has no property to be taken charge of, I submit that he has some interest at least in the family property, and that interest the Court can, and will, protect by appointing a guardian. Take the case of a Hindu family consisting of a father, uncle and a minor son. Suppose the father and uncle collude and dissipate the estate, how is the minor's interest to be protected? The minor cannot enforce a partition against the will of his father and uncle—Apaji Narhar v. Ramchandra (1), and his interests may be seriously jeopardized if the Courts do not step in and appoint a guardian to protect his share of the joint estate. If the cases cited for the appellant proceed on grounds of expediency, is it not highly expedient, in a case like this, to appoint a guardian: Refers to Doorga Persad v. Kesho Persad (2); Babaji v. Sheshgiri (3); Saroda Soonduree Dossee v. Tarinee Churn Chowdhry (4); Shridhar v. Hiralal (5).

JUDGMENT.

The judgment of the Full Bench was delivered by FARRAN, J.—We are of opinion that the order of the Assistant Judge, F.P., appointing the Collector guardian of the property of the minors, must be set aside.

The Act, the applicability of which to the case of a minor forming one of the members of an undivided Hindu family governed by the Mitakshara law we have to consider, is a consolidating and amending Act, and in order to understand its scope we ought, we think, to have before us a clear view of the state of the law at the time when it was passed. That law, so far as Bengal was concerned, was contained in Bengal Act XL of 1858, and for the Bombay Presidency in Act XX of 1864. Both acts have been, in regard to their application to joint Hindu families, the subject of a long series of judicial decisions. The Bengal Act, s. 2, was as follows:—"The care of the persons of all minors (not being European British subjects) and the charge of their property shall be subject to the jurisdiction of the Civil [313] Court." The reason of this provision, not at first sight apparent, is explained in Ram Chunder v. Brojonath (6) to be that prior to the passing of that Act, by the Regulations then in force, the Courts were restricted from dealing, except by regular suit, with the estates of minors. The Act gave them a general jurisdiction over such estates. The Bombay Act was similar. Section I was this: "The care of the persons of all minors (not being European British subjects) and the charge of their property shall vest in the Civil Courts." Under these Acts, now repealed, no person was entitled to institute or defend a suit connected with a minor's estate of which he claimed charge until he had obtained a certificate of administration, except in the case of very small estates or when there was special cause for allowing it. Any person having the right to have the charge of a minor's estate under a deed or will was entitled to such a certificate, and the nearest relative of the minor had the next claim to it. Failing these, the Court was enjoined (if it thought it necessary for the interest of the minor that provision should be made by the Court for the charge of his property) to grant a certificate of administration to the Public Curator or other public officer, or in the case of land, to direct the Collector to take charge of it. The result of these provisions, therefore, was that it became as a general rule incumbent on the Court on application made to it by any relative or friend of a minor, or, in the case of land, by the Collector, to grant a certificate of administration to the person having a preferential claim to it. The Court had also a discretion, in the absence of a preferential claimant, to entrust the estate of the minor to the care of the Public Curator or of the Collector if it considered it to be for the interest of the minor that such a course should be adopted.

Under s. 8 of Act VIII of 1890, the same persons have the right to apply to the Court for the appointment of a guardian to a minor as under the repealed Acts, XL of 1858 and XX of 1864, and by s. 7 the Court is directed to appoint or declare a guardian if it is satisfied that it is for the welfare of a minor that such an order should be made, but the appointment of a guardian is not necessary for the purpose of bringing or defending a suit [314] (section 53). The Court has now a discretion as to the appointment of a guardian. Under the last mentioned Acts it was in most cases obligatory upon it to appoint one.

It was early held in Bengal, and the ruling has been generally followed there, that one member (although an infant) of an undivided family governed by the Mitakshara law had not such an interest in the joint property as was capable of being taken charge of and managed by the Civil Court or by a guardian appointed under Bengal Act XL of 1858 : Sheo Nundun Singh v. Mussamut Ghunsam (1). The same view of the law was adopted in Bombay. The earliest reported case is to be found in the Printed Judgments for 1874, and the same proposition has been affirmed, but in different and it must be admitted not always quite consistent language, in a long series of decisions ever since. (See Lakshmibai v. Govind (2), Shivji Hasam v. Datu Mavji (3), Govind v. Moro Ragunath (4), Narayan v. Balvant (5), Gurachrya v. Svamirayacharya (6), Sakharam v. Motiram (7), Bhagirthibai v. Sadishivrav (8), Kalidas v. Pranhankar (9) and Chhagan v. Ramchandra (10). It was at one time assumed that a different view of the law on this subject had been taken by the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council in Doorga Persad v. Kesho Persad (11). See Babaji v. Sheshgiri (12); but in a subsequent case, viz. Narsingrav v. Venkaji (13), it was pointed out that their Lordships of the Privy Council were not considering the question of the applicability of the Act of 1858 to a minor under Mitakshara law ; and the Court concluded that their Lordships' remarks must be taken to be confined to circumstances of the case actually before them which were of a special nature. We are ourselves, after a careful examination of the language of their Lordships' judgment, inclined to adopt the same view.

[315] It must, we think, be admitted that the difficulties in the way of applying the provisions of the Acts to which we have referred in the case of a minor governed by Mitakshara law owning no property, but having a co-parcener's interest only in undivided family estate, were very great. The Courts had held them to be insuperable. From the report of the Select Committee on the Bill, which eventually became Act VIII of 1890, it is clear that these difficulties, and the current of decisions upon the subject, were present to the minds of the Legislature when they passed the Act (VIII of 1890). The Mitakshara law remains unchanged. The difficulties of placing a minor's interest in family property under the charge of a guardian appointed by the Court continue as great as ever. The Legislature has not made any special provision to meet these difficulties. The question which we have to consider under these circumstances is whether the interest of a minor in such property comes within the scope and intention of the Act as it at present stands worded.

Now a guardian is defined to be a person having the care of * * the property of a minor: and we think that the Act does not contemplate the appointment of a guardian of the property of a minor unless the minor is possessed of property and of property capable of being taken care of by an appointed guardian. The application for the appointment of a guardian must state the nature, situation and approximate value of the property (if any) of the minor. The words "if any" are necessarily introduced because the application may be for the appointment of a guardian of the person only. The appointed guardian of the property of a minor has certain defined privileges and powers and duties over and in respect of such property granted to him and prescribed by the Act.

1. He is entitled to such an allowance (if any) as the Court thinks fit; or in the case of an officer of Government to fees to be paid to Government out of the property of the ward. There is no provision in the Act for obtaining such allowance or fees from the managing member of the joint family.

2. He is bound to deal with the property as a man of prudence would deal with his own. In the case of a Collector being [316] appointed, he can mortgage or charge it or lease it for a term exceeding five years without the leave of the Court, and in other cases the guardian has the same powers with the leave of the Court. The Court can no doubt define and restrict the powers of an appointed guardian in dealing with property of the minor (s. 32), but this only in cases where the Collector is not the guardian.

3. The duties prescribed by s. 34, cls. (a), (b), (c), and (d), are no doubt rendered optional with the Court to impose, and might be dispensed with in the case of a minor whose only property is an interest in an undivided family estate, but the provisions of cl. (e) are obligatory, and are wholly inconsistent with the position of a minor in a joint family of the kind we are considering. So, too, are the provisions for the guardian accounting (ss. 35 and 36) and delivering up the property of the ward (s. 41 (3)). In truth, if any of the powers or duties prescribed by the Act are exercised or performed by the guardian of a minor having only an interest in joint family property of this kind, they would be exercised not over the property of the minor, but over the property of the family in which the minor is an unit. If the Legislature, having their attention called to this subject, had intended to make provision for the case of a guardian who should have power merely to watch over and safeguard the interest of a minor in joint family property, they would, we think, have introduced special provisions on the subject and given him special powers. As a matter of history we know from the report of the Select Committee that they did so in the original Bill, but omitted the clause in deference to the weight of authority.

19 B. 309 (F.B.).

The conclusion we have arrived at from a consideration of the provisions of the statute would, therefore, seem to be in accordance with the intention of its framers as declared when it was passed. It is true that there is no special exemption in s. 19 of the case of a minor having only this species of interest in property from the provisions of the Act relating to appointed and declared guardians; but if the Legislature adopted the view judicially declared by the Courts that an interest of this kind is not property of which a guardian appointed by the Court [317] can take care, there would, we apprehend, be no need for the expression of su h an exemption. There would be nothing on which the Act could operate. We cannot doubt but that they did adopt that view. This decision does not, in any way, prevent the interest of the minor in joint family property being protected, in the only way in which if imperilled by corrupt or bad management, it can be efficiently protected, by separation. See Mahadev v. Lakshman (1). The Collector or any one interested in the welfare of the minor can, if the circumstances warrant that step, as next friend of the minor, file a suit on his behalf for partition, and on establishing a case for partition can have himself appointed guardian of the property, which may on partition fall to the infant's share. To appoint a guardian for the purpose of considering whether or not such a suit should be filed, does not, we think, fall within the purview of the Act. It certainly does not fall within its words. We are confirmed in the conclusion at which we have arrived by the judgments in the case of Sham Kuar v. Mohanunda (2) where the question was fully examined.

The appointment of the minors' mother as guardian of their persons has not been seriously objected to, and under Act VIII of 1890 we see no legal difficulty in making the appointment. Under the repealed Acts the appointment of a guardian of the person seems to have been dependent on, or ancillary to, the appointment of a guardian of the property. Under the present A t this is not the case. That portion of the order appealed against will, therefore, stand affirmed, as the circumstances of the case fully warrant the appointment being made. The parties to pay their own costs throughout.

Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act (Act XVII of 1879), s. 15-B†—Decree for redemption—Order for the payment of money within a certain period—Application for payment by instalments—Order to be made in the course of proceedings under the decree, that is, by the Court which carries out the decree.

In a redemption suit under the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act (Act XVII of 1879), the Court having passed a decree for the payment of the mortgage amount within a certain period, and the decree being confirmed in second appeal, the mortgagor after the expiration of the time for redemption specified in the decree applied to the High Court for an order for the payment of the amount by instalments under s. 15-B of the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act (XVII of 1879).

Held, that such an order could only be made in the course of the proceedings under the decree, that is, by the Court which carries out the decree.

Gulabpuri v. Pandurang (1) referred to.

THIS was an application made to the High Court under the following circumstances :—

The applicant as an agriculturist sued for the redemption of certain property, and obtained a decree. The decree directed her to pay the sum of Rs. 2,800 to the opponent within six months from the date of the decree, or, in default, to be for ever foreclosed. The decree was confirmed in second appeal by the High Court.

[319] The applicant failed to procure funds to satisfy the decree, and the period of six months expired. She now applied to the High Court to extend the period for six months more, or, in the alternative, to make the decree payable by annual instalments of Rs. 400 each under the provisions of s. 15-B of the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act (Act XVII of 1879). A rule nisi was granted calling upon the opponent to show cause why the prayer in the application should not be granted.

Daji Abaji Khare, for the opponent showed cause.—The application was not made until the six months given by the decree had expired. It could not, therefore, be entertained. Once the period had elapsed, there were no proceedings " in the course of which " the order could be made. Such an application ought to be made pending proceedings under the decree. The period given by the decree having expired, the mortgage is foreclosed—Ladu Chimaji v. Babaji Khanduji (1); Daito Narayan v. Balvant Narayan(2). An application for instalments should be made in the course of execution proceedings to the Court which executes the decree. A separate application like the present cannot be entertained—Gulabpuri v. Pandurang(3).

15-B. (1) The Court may in its discretion, in passing a decree for redemption, foreclosure or sale in any suit of the descriptions mentioned in section three, cl. (y) or cl. (2) If a sum payable under any such direction is not paid when due, the Court shall, except for reasons to be recorded by it in writing, instead of making an order for the sale of the entire property mortgaged or for foreclosure, order the sale of such portion only of the property as it may think necessary for the realization of that sum.

Shivram V. Bhandarkar, for the applicant, in support of the rule.—The period of six months mentioned in the decree expired during the Christmas vacation, and we presented the application on the first day on which the Court re-opened. The application is, therefore, within time—Peary Mohun Aich v. Anunda Charan (4). The applicant is an agriculturist, and as such she is entitled to the benefits conferred by the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act under which there is no foreclosure.

[SARGENT, C. J., referred to Shankarapa v. Danapa (5). The decree being exhausted by efflux of time, there are no proceedings under the decree before the Court.]

The decree had not exhausted itself when we made the application, because it was made on the day the Court re-opened after the vacation. We submit that, if an order for instalments be now made, it will be a proceeding under the decree. It is not [320] necessary that the proceeding should be a proceding in execution. Under the provision of s. 20 of the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act an order for instalments can be made at any time.

[SARGENT, C. J.—Such an application must be made to the Court which carries out the decree.]

We made an application to that Court. but it referred us to this Court, as the final decree was passed by this Court in second appeal.

JUDGMENT.

SARGENT, C. J.—The applicant in this case asks for an order under s. 15-B of the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act that the amount payable by the mortgagor shall be payable by instalments. Such an order, if it can be made at all under the circumstances of this case, as to which we express no opinion, can only be made as being one in "the course of proceedings under the decree," i. e., by the Court which carries out the decree. Such is the view taken by West and Nanabhai, JJ., in Gulabpuri v. Pandurang (3). I must, therefore, discharge the rule, and dismiss the application with ccsts.

[321] SECOND appeal from the decision of J. J. Heaton, Acting Joint Judge of Ahmedabad, confirming the decree of Rao Bahadur Lalshankar Umiashankar, First Class Subordinate Judge of Ahmedabad.

One Mansukh Nanabhai died on the 25th November, 1878, having made a will appointing the plaintiff his executor. He left him surviving a widow (defendant No. 1), two daughters (defendant No. 2 and another who was not a party to the suit), and his son-in-law (defendant No. 3).

The plaintiff applied for a certificate under the will according to Reg. VIII of 1827, and his application was granted by the District Court on the 26th July, 1879, but he did not take out the certificate.

On the 12th October, 1881, the plaintiff served the defendants with a notice calling on them to deliver up to him Mansukh's property which was in their possession, and they having failed to do so, he filed the present suit in 1890 to recover possession from them of a house and for an injunction restraining them from obstructing him in erecting a building on a certain piece of land. Subsequently, on the 15th August, 1891, the plaintiff amended the plaint by limiting his claim for possession to the upper story of the house only, as under the will the first defendant had a right to reside on the ground floor for her life.

Defendants Nos. 1 and 2, the widow and daughter respectively of Mansukh, replied (inter alia) that the claim was time-barred; that the plaintiff could not sue without producing a succession certificate, and that as the first defendant was already in possession of the site on which the plaintiff wanted to erect a building, the claim for injunction would not lie.

Defendant No. 3 disclaimed any interest in the property in suit.

The Subordinate Judge dismissed the suit, holding that the claim was not time-barred; that under the will the plaintiff was not entitled to obtain possession of the upper story of the house; that the suit could not be maintained without a certificate under Reg. VIII of 1827; and that as the plaintiff was not in [322] possession of the building-site, the claim for injunction would not lie.

LATE CIVIL.
19 B. 320.

On appeal by the plaintiff the Judge confirmed the decree on the grounds (1) that the claim to the upper story was time-barred under art. 144, sch. II of the Limitation Act (XV of 1877), the suit being held to have been instituted on the day the plaint was amended,— that is, after the lapse of twelve years from the death of Mansukh; (2) that, according to the ruling in Mulchand v. Motichand(1), the suit would not lie without a certificate of heirship or executorship; and (3) that the claim for injunction with respect to the building site could not be granted, as the site was in the possession of the first defendant. With respect to the injunction, the Judge stated as follows:—

"There is no doubt, on the evidence, that the defendant widow is in possession of the building site in respect of which an injunction is sought. Therefore an injunction cannot be granted."

The plaintiff preferred a second appeal.

Ganpat Sadashiv Rao, for the appellant (plaintiff).—We contend that no certificate under Reg. VIII of 1827 is necessary for the maintenance of the suit. This is not a suit to recover a debt due to the testator. Next, we say that it is not necessary for an executor appointed under a will to obtain a probate.

The suit is not barred. The time of limitation must be reckoned up to the date on which the suit was filed, and not up to the day on which the amendment of the plaint was made—Ram Lal v. Harrison (2); Khem Karan v. Har Dayal (3); Mengar Munder v. Baboo Huree Mohun (4).

Motilal M. Munshi, for the respondent (defendant).—In the plaint as it was originally filed the plaintiff did not set up a title under the will. Subsequently by the amendment he sought to recover the property as a legatee under the will. The amendment changed the original nature of the suit. The Judge was, [323] therefore, right in holding that the suit was instituted on the day the plaint was amended.

JUDGMENT.

SARGENT, C. J.—We think that the Joint Judge was in error in holding that the plaintiff could not establish his title under the will without producing a certificate under Reg. VIII of 1827. The decision in Mulchand v. Motichand (1) was in a case in which the plaintiff was suing to recover debts due to the estate of the deceased, and is not applicable to the present case.

We are also of opinion that the Joint Judge was wrong in holding that for purposes of limitation the suit commenced from the date of the amendment of the plaint and not from the date on which the plaint was originally presented. Taking the latter date as the one on which the suit was instituted, it is clear that it was within time under art. 144 of sch. II of the Limitation Act.

We are unable to accept as a sufficient finding the Joint Judge's statement that there is no doubt, on the evidence, that the defendant is in possession of the building site in respect of which an injunction is sought. The fact is disputed, and the Joint Judge should have given the reasons which led him to the conclusion at which he has arrived.

We must now reverse the decree of the lower appellate Court and remand the appeal for a fresh decision, having regard to the above remarks. Costs of this appeal to follow the result.

Decree reversed and case sent back.

Practice—Procedure—Plaint—Alternative reliefs—Partition—Findings of fact unaccompanied by reasons—Not conclusive in second appeal—Second appeal.

The plaintiff sued to recover possession of the northern half of a certain plot of land, alleging that it had fallen to his share at a partition made in 1887, and [324] that he was illegally dispossessed thereof by the defendant in 1890. He also prayed, in the alternative, that if the alleged partition were not proved, the land should be partitioned, and his share awarded to him. The suit was dismissed by the lower Courts on the ground that the alleged partition was not proved, and that no order for partition could be made in the face of the plaintiff's distinct allegation that it had already taken place.

Held, that the plaintiff's allegation of partition did not preclude him from seeking the alternative relief on the strength of his general title.

Held, also, that where no reasons are given by a lower appellate Court for the conclusions arrived at, such conclusions cannot be accepted as legal findings of fact in second appeal.

SECOND appeal from the decision of C. G. W. Macpherson, District Judge of Belgaum, in appeal No. 61 of 1891.

The plaintiffs sued to recover possession of the northern half of certain land (Survey No. 42), alleging that this northern half had fallen to their share at a partition between them and defendants' father in 1887, and that they had been dispossessed in 1890 in execution of a Mamlatdar's decree in a possessory suit. The plaintiffs also prayed, in the alternative, that if the alleged partition were not proved, the land should be partitioned, and a moiety thereof awarded to the plaintiffs.

The Court of first instance rejected the plaintiffs' claim, holding that the alleged partition of 1887 was not proved, and that the land, being service vatan land, was not liable to partition.

This decision was confirmed, on appeal, by the District Judge, whose judgment was as follows :—

"The points for determination appear to be—

(a) Have plaintiffs proved that the land in dispute fell to them on a partition?

(b) If not, should a partition be ordered?

(c) Apart from the alleged partition, have plaintiffs proved a title to the land in dispute.

"My finding on all the three points is in the negative.

"Exhibit A, the partition-deed relied on by plaintiff, is unregistered, and there can be no doubt that the property to which it refers is worth upwards of Rs. 100.....This being so, it follows that the deed, which may or can be genuine, is inadmissible for want of registration, and oral evidence of its terms is likewise inadmissible. Plaintiff, therefore, cannot prove partition.

"As regards point (b), a Court could not order partition in the face of plaintiff's distinct allegation that it had already taken place.

* Second Appeal, No. 666 of 1892.

APRIL 16.
APPELLATE CIVIL.
19 B. 323.

"As regards point (c), there is no satisfactory evidence that plaintiff was ever in possession of the land in dispute, or that he has any title to it."

[325] Against this decision the plaintiffs preferred a second appeal to the High Court.

Mahadev BhaskarChaubal, for appellants.—Our allegation of partition does not estop us from claiming partition in the alternative. We put forward the alternative case from the beginning. Having failed to establish the alleged partition, we are entitled to fall back on our general title, and claim the alternative relief—Lakhshmibai v. Hari bin Ravji (1); Maidin Saiba v. Nagapa (2) Raj Kishore Bhuddur v. Huree Mohun (3); Shivram v. Narayan (4). The lower Court's finding on the question of possession is not accompanied by any reasons. It is, therefore, not conclusive in second appeal—Kamat v. Kamat (5).

Mahadev Chimnaji Apte, for respondents.—Plaintiff alleges that a partition took place in 1887. If this be true, then he is not entitled to demand a fresh partition except on the ground of mistake or fraud. He does not rest his case on this ground. Nor does he say that the land in dispute was left undivided at the time of the alleged partition. His case is that he got possession of his share, and was then ousted. Such ouster does not entitle him to claim a fresh partition. If he were allowed to say that there was no partition, then the present suit is defective. He must seek partition of all the joint property, and not merely of the land in dispute. He must bring into hotchpot the family property which is in his possession. The plaint contains two inconsistent reliefs neither of which can be granted—Mahomed Buksh Khan v. Husseini Bibi (6); see O'Kinealy's Notes on Civil Procedure Code, p. 97, 4th edition.

JUDGMENT.

RANADE, J.—In this case, the appellants (original plaintiffs) brought this suit to recover possession of the northern half of Survey No. 42, which was admittedly shetsanadi service land and which plaintiffs claimed had fallen to their share in a partition effected in 1887 between plaintiffs and defendants' father. The defendants dispossessed the plaintiffs in execution of a Mamlatdar's decree in a possessory suit in 1890. Plaintiff claimed Rs. 100 as profits of their share of the land for three years, and the [326] plaint contained an alternative prayer that, in case the partition alleged were not proved, the claim might be treated as one seeking a partition of the land. Defendant No. 1 denied the alleged partition of 1887, and contended that separation had taken place twenty five years ago. Plaintiffs obtained no share in the land in dispute, which was, moreover, service land, and as this service was rendered by the defendant No. 1, he alone was entitled to the possession of the land. The Court of first instance held that the partition deed of 1887 was inadmissible in evidence, as it was not registered. It further held that as the land was service land, it was not subject to partition. This decree was confirmed, in appeal, by the District Court, which held that the partition deed was inadmissible in evidence, and that no oral evidence could be received also on the point. It further held that as plaintiffs admitted a previous partition, no fresh partition, could be ordered; and, finally, that plaintiff had failed to prove his title or his alleged possession of the land.

In the appeal before us, the appellants' pleader contended that the partition-deed was improperly held to be inadmissible in evidence, and that it could be at least used to prove plaintiffs' alleged possession. It was further contended that as plaintiffs' plaint had contained an alternative prayer, the lower Court of appeal was in error in holding that partition could not be ordered in this suit. Lastly, it was urged that as the lower Court had summarily disposed of the last two points, the judgment was defective.

To take up the last point first, there can be no doubt that it would have been far more satisfactory if the lower Court of appeal had decided the points (b) and (c) in a less summary manner, and had given reasons for its conclusions. This Court has laid down in Kamat v. Kamat (1) and Raghunath v. Nilu (2) that when no reasons are given for the conclusions arrived at such conclusions cannot be accepted as legal findings of fact in second appeal. In the present case, plaintiff's allegation of a partition effected in 1887 was held by the lower Court to preclude him from seeking an order for partition under the alternative prayer contained in his plaint. We do not think plaintiff's [327] allegation of partition was necessarily attended by any such consequence. In a similar case, viz., Raj Kishore v. Huree Mohun (3), where plaintiff alleged that a partition had been effected of his third share, and failed to prove it, the Courts allowed him to recover joint possession as before. In the present case, defendant No. 1 expressly admitted the fact of the double partition in his deposition, Ex. 34. He stated therein that plaintiffs had separated twenty-five years ago, and that afterwards there was a reunion, and as plaintiffs were minors, defendants' father managed the shares both of plaintiffs and defendants; and that finally there was a division of house and lands about four years ago. Defendant No. 1 thus virtually admitted the statements in the plaint in respect of all the other property, and his contention was limited solely to the land in dispute, which he stated had never been divided, but had been held by his family in lieu of service, as representing the eldest branch. It was, therefore, necessary for the lower Court of appeal to discuss the evidence about plaintiff's alleged possession and general title to the land, and it erred in disposing of the case on the ground that the plaintiff's admission of partition precluded him from seeking the alternative relief on the strength of his general title.

That relief, it may be mentioned, is not inconsistent with the prayer for recovery of possession. In Story's Equity Pleadings (s. 41, p. 37) the rule has been stated as follows:—"It has been said that a prayer of general relief, without a special prayer of the particular relief, to which the plaintiff thinks himself entitled, will be sufficient, and that the particular relief which the case requires may at the hearing be prayed at the bar. This as a general rule may be true; but it is not universal. Thus, for example, an injunction will not ordinarily be granted under a prayer for general relief; but it must be expressly prayed, because the defendant might, by his answer, make a different case under the general prayer from what he would, if an injunction were specifically prayed. So a writ of ne exeat regno will not ordinarily be granted unless expressly prayed for in the bill." It has been accordingly ruled that inconsistent assertions of fact cannot be permitted either in the plaint or in the pleadings, but that [328] on the same basis of facts, two distinct titles may be put forth—See Chova Kara v. Isa bin Kahlifa (4) and Mahomed Buksh Khan v. Husseini Bibi (5).

Plaintiff's principal claim was for a share of the land, a definite northern share if the alleged partition was held proved, or an equal share if no such partition was admitted. In the present case the fact of the second partition is not denied by the defendant. His contention relates solely to the impartible character of the land in dispute by reason of its being service land. There was, therefore, no inconsistency in plaintiff's claim.

The partition-deed on which plaintiffs relied, was very properly held to be inadmissible in evidence, as both the value of the entire property and of plaintiffs' share in it exceeded 100 rupees. The questions of plaintiffs' alleged title to the land independently of the partition of 1887, and the impartibility of the land as being service land (on which latter point the Court of first instance rejected plaintiffs' claim), were not at all considered by the lower Court of appeal. It virtually disposed of the case on a preliminary point which did not cover the whole of plaintiffs' claim. Under these circumstances we think that the ends of justice will be best served by a remand of the case back to the lower Court of appeal under s. 566, with directions that it should record its findings with reasons on the question of possession and title, and the impartibility or otherwise of the land in dispute. It should return these findings in the course of three months.

Case remanded.

TRIMBAK RAMRAO DESHPANDE (Original Plaintiff), Appellant v. GOVINDA (Original Defendant), *Respondent. [18th April, 1894.]

Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), s. 244 (c)—Claim to attached property—Order in execution proceedings—Separate suit—Execution of decree.

In execution of a decree passed against the plaintiff certain property in his possession was attached. Thereupon he laid claim to the property, on the ground [329] that it was his service vatan. This claim was rejected. The plaintiff then filed a regular suit for a declaration that the property was not liable to attachment and sale.

Held, that the suit was barred under s. 244 of the Code of Civil Procedure (Act XIV of 1882). The Court which originally rejected the plaintiff's claim in the execution proceedings had jurisdiction to investigate the claim under cl. (c) of s. 244 of the Code.

[R., 8 O. C. 405; D., 22 B. 475.]

SECOND appeal from the decision of A. Steward, District Judge of Khandesh, in Appeal No. 203 of 1891.

The property in dispute was attached in execution of a money decree obtained by one Govinda Vyankoba against Trimbak Ramrao Deshpande.

Thereupon Trimbak applied to have the attachment raised, alleging that the property was service vatan property, and as such not liable to attachment and sale.

This application was rejected.

Trimbak thereupon filed a regular suit to have it declared that the property in dispute was not liable to attachment and sale in execution of any decree, on the ground that it was service vatan.

* Second Appeal, No. 718 of 1892.

The Court of first instance dismissed this suit, holding that it was barred under s. 244 of the Code of Civil Procedure, as the order passed on plaintiff's application to set aside the attachment was one relating to the execution of a decree and made between the parties to the suit in which the decree was passed :

This decision was confirmed, on appeal, by the District Judge.

The plaintiff thereupon preferred a second appeal to the High Court.

Mahadev C. Apte, for the appellant (plaintiff).—The decree in execution of which the property was attached was passed against the present plaintiff personally, and not in his capacity as vatandar. When the property was attached, he claimed it as his service vatan. The order rejecting his claim fell within s. 280 and not 244 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The present suit will, therefore, lie as expressly provided by s. 283 of the Code—Roop Lall Dass v: Bekani Meah (1). Section 278 of the Code does not exclude the case of a judgment-debtor claiming the [330] property attached, not on his own account, but as a trustee for and on behalf of a third party. In the present case the plaintiff, a vatandar, claimed the property in dispute, not as his own private property, but as property belonging to Government and held by him as remuneration for service. The case, therefore, does not fall under s. 244.

Daji Abaji Khare, for respondent (defendant).—All questions between the parties to a suit in which a decree is passed, and relating to execution of the decree, fall within s. 244 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The claim made by the plaintiff in the execution proceedings was one between the parties to the suit, and relating te execution. It was, therefore, cognizable under s. 244, and could not be made the subject of a separate suit—Punchanun Bundopadhya v. Rabia Bibi(2). Section 278 contemplates the case of a claimant who is not a party to the suit ; the law, therefore, provides in his case that if he fails in the summary proceedings, he may bring a separate suit to establish his right. The present is not a case of this kind—Chowdhry Wahed Ali v. Jumaee (3).

JUDGMENT.

JARDINE, J.—A decree having been passed against the plaintiff, an inam jaghir village in his possession was attached ; whereupon he claimed that, as this property being service vatan was not liable to attachment of sale, the attachment should be removed. This claim was rejected. The plaintiff thereupon sued for a declaration that the property was not liable to attachment and sale. This suit has been rejected by the two lower Courts on the ground that the order was made under s. 244, and that no suit would lie.

Mr. Apte has urged the analogy of the mutawali of wakf, who was the judgment-debtor in Roop Lall Dass v. Bekani Meah(1), in which at p. 445 it was held, after a review of the cases, that where the judgment-debtor claims to hold the property which is sought to be attached as a trustee for third parties the order passed on the claim must be held to be a decision under s. 280, and not under s. 244. The present claim is not based on such a ground ; and following the decisions of the [331] Privy Council in Chowdhry Wahed Ali v. Mussamut Jumaee(3) and Abedoonissa v. Ammerooniss(4), as interpreted in Punchanun Bundopadhya v. Rabia Bibi(2) and Kuriyali v. Mayan(5), we are of opinion that the Court which

Hindu law—Adoption—Adoption by a mother after the death of her son who has left neither child nor widow—Adoption by a grandmother without the consent of her daughter-in-law—Objection taken for the first time in appeal—Practice.

Under the Hindu law a mother is competent to adopt when her son dies leaving no widow or other heir nearer than herself.

A Hindu of the Shudra class died, leaving him surviving his mother and a paternal grandmother. After his death his grandmother adopted the defendant. Subsequently to this adoption the deceased's mother adopted the plaintiff. Thereupon both plaintiff and defendant claimed the deceased's estate.

Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to succeed. The deceased's mother having succeeded as heir to her son, her mother-in-law could not by any adoption divest her of her rights as such heir without her consent. The defendant's adoption was, therefore, invalid.

An objection based upon a point of law may be made in second appeal, provided it does not involve the taking of any additional evidence on matters of disputed facts.

SECOND appeal from the decision of Venkatrao R. Inamdar, Acting Assistant Judge of Sholapur-Bijapur, in appeal No. 78 of 1891.

The property in dispute belonged to one Giriappa Jennappa.

Giriappa died leaving behind him his mother Rachava and a paternal grandmother also called Rachava.

[332] After Giriappa's death his grandmother adopted defendant No. 2. Subsequent to this adoption, Giriappa's mother adopted the plaintiff in 1879.

In 1888 the plaintiff's adoptive mother sold the property in dispute to defendant No. 1, and put him in possession on 1st April, 1889.

In 1890 the plaintiff filed the present suit to recover possession of the property in question, alleging that it had been illegally sold by his adoptive mother to defendant No. 1.

Defendant No. 1 denied the plaintiff's adoption, and contended that the plaintiff had obtained the adoption deed by fraud and misrepresentation, and that the sale to him of the lands in suit was valid and binding on the plaintiff.

Defendant No. 2, who was added on defendant No. 1's application, contended that he had been adopted by Giriappa's grandmother with the consent of Giriappa's mother, and that after his adoption plaintiff could not be validly adopted.

* Second Appeal No. 768 of 1892.

APRIL 19.
APPELLATE CIVIL.
19 B. 331.

The Court of first instance rejected the plaintiff's claim.

On appeal, the Assistant Judge held that on Giriappa's death his mother succeeded to his estate; that she was competent to take the plaintiff in adoption; that the parties being Shudras the plaintiff's adoption was valid; that the plaintiff's adoptive mother did not give her consent to the adoption of defendant No. 2 by her mother-in-law; that the adoption of defendant No. 2 was, therefore, invalid; that the sale to the defendant No. 1, having been effected after the plaintiff's adoption, was not binding on the plaintiff. He, therefore, awarded the plaintiff's claim.

Against this decision the defendant appealed to the High Court.

Ghanasham Nilkanth Nadkarni, for appellants (defendants).—The mother of the deceased Giriappa had no authority to adopt the plaintiff. It appears that Giriappa left a widow behind him; and though the widow was dead at the time of the adoption, that circumstance would not render the adoption valid. The mother's power of adoption was at an end when the estate passed from the son to the son's widow—Krishnarav Trimbak Hasabnis [333] v. Shankarrav (1). Even if the son had left no widow, the mother would not have been in a better position. The ownership of the estate together with the right of adoption having once descended to the son, the right to adopt could not go back to the mother. If she were allowed to adopt under such circumstances, the son would be placed in a worse position as regards the performance of his shradhas than if there had been no adoption at all—West and Buhler (3rd Ed.), p. 984; Piddappa v. Gurawa(2). If the mother can adopt, why cannot the grandmother? The plaintiff's adoption is, therefore, invalid.

B. A. Bhagvat, for respondent (plaintiff).—The objection now taken to the validity of the plaintiff's adoption was not raised either in the Court of first instance or even in the memorandum of appeal presented to the District Court. It must, therefore, be taken to have been waived. Nor is there any finding of either of the lower Courts that the deceased Giriappa left a widow behind him or ever had a wife. It is not open to the appellant to make a new case in second appeal. The case should, therefore, rest on the same footing here as it did in the Courts below, namely, that Giriappa died leaving his mother as his only heir. Dealing with the case on that footing, I contend that the mother was competent to adopt a son. In adopting a son she divests no estate but her own, and she may do so when she likes—Raja Vellanki Venkata v. Venkata Rama(3). The ruling in Hasabai's(1) case does not apply, as in that case the son's widow had survived him; while in the present case the son left no widow behind him. The bar created by the upanayan ceremony in the case of the higher classes does not affect the Shudras. The parties to this suit are Lingayet Shudras.

JUDGMENT.

RANADE, J.—In this case the respondent (original plaintiff) brought his suit, as the adopted son of Rachava, to recover possession of certain lands which Rachava had sold to appellant (defendant No. 1) in October, 1888. The appellant No. 1 denied the alleged adoption, and contended that respondent had obtained an adoption-deed by fraud and misrepresentation. There was a [334] further complication introduced by joining the name of appellant No. 2 (original defendant No. 2), who claimed to have been adopted by Rachava's mother-in-law, and who stated that Rachava had sold the land to appellant No. 1 with his consent. The chief grounds on which respondent's adoption was questioned in the first Court were (1) fraud on respondent's part, (2) his neglect to maintain Rachava, who, therefore, repudiated the adoption, and alienated the land for her own maintenance, and, (3), the prior adoption by Rachava's mother-in-law of appellant No. 2.

The Court of first instance held that respondent's adoption-deed, as also the sale-deed in favour of appellant No. 1, were both proved. It held further that as the land in dispute was acquired by Giriappa, the son of Rachava, and her husband Jennappa, and Rachava succeeded to it as mother and heir of Giriappa, she was absolute owner of the land, and respondent had no right to it, as it did not form part of Jennappa's estate. Neither had appellant No. 2 any right to the land, as it formed no part of his adoptive father's estate. The sale was effected for a legitimate necessity, and was, therefore, binding on respondent, whose claim was, therefore, rejected.

In appeal, the Assistant Judge, while agreeing with the Court of first instance on the question of respondent's adoption, held (1) that appellant No. 2's adoption was invalid, (2) that Rachava did not acquire an absolute interest in Giriappa's land, and (3) that, as there was no legal necessity for the alienation, he held that the sale to appellant No. 1 did not bind the respondent. The Assistant Judge held finally that the adoption of respondent by Rachava, as mother and heir of Giriappa, was not invalid, inasmuch as the ruling in Krishnarav Trimbak Hasabnis v. Shankarrav (1) applied to Brahmins only, and could not apply to Shudras, and this objection was not pressed by the appellants, who were, therefore, held to have waived it. Respondent's claim was accordingly decreed in full.

The appellants' pleader before us chiefly rested his contention on the ground that, as Rachava's husband Jennappa had left his son Giriappa behind him, Rachava, succeeding as Giriappa's [335] mother and heir to the land, could not adopt the respondent under the ruling referred to above, which applied both to Brahmins and Shudras alike. It was also contended on behalf of appellant No. 2 that his prior adoption by Rachava's mother-in-law was valid. Lastly, it was urged that appellants had never waived their principal objection to the validity of respondent's adoption. The other objections were not seriously pressed in the course of the argument, and need not be noticed here.

As regards the allegation about waiver, it appears from the record of the suit that the appellants did not urge their principal objection in the Court of first instance, but rested their defence solely on the ground of fraud and breach of agreement in respect of Rachava's maintenance. In the lower Court of appeal, however, this objection appears to have been pressed in the course of argument, and as it was an objection based on a point of law, there could be no bar to the lower Court's taking notice of it, even though it was not pointedly urged. It is certainly open to the appellants to raise the point in second appeal, and we must take notice of it, if it does not involve the taking of any additional evidence on matters of disputed facts.

The next question we have to consider is, whether respondent's adoption by Rachava was valid as against the appellant No. 2, who claims to have been previously adopted by Rachava's mother-in-law, and, secondly, whether it was valid as against appellant No. 1, who claims as purchaser from Rachava, who repudiated the adoption, and alienated the land in her right as sole and absolute owner. In so far as the contest lies between the relative claims of the two adoptions, we entertain no doubt that the finding of the lower Court of appeal is correct. It is true there is no clear finding as to the constitution of the family at the time of the death of the last full owner Giriappa, the son of Jennappa, by his wife Rachava, and the grandson of Maharudra. It is in evidence that Jennappa died before Maharudra, and that, on Maharudra's death, Giriappa was the sole owner of the property. It is plain that as between Maharudra's widow, the adoptive mother of appellant No. 2, and Jennappa's widow, the adoptive mother of respondent, the latter as mother succeeded as heir to Giriappa, who had himself acquired the land in dispute, and her mother-in-law [336] could not by any adoption divest her of her rights as such heir, unless she consented. There has been an express finding that Rachava did not give her consent. Appellant No. 2's claim, therefore, was very properly disallowed—Annammah v. Mabbu Bali (1); Rupchand v. Rakhmabai (2); Kally Prosonno v. Gocool Chunder (3); Bhoobun Moyee v. Ram Kishore (4).

(1) 17 B. 164.

As regards the validity of respondent's own adoption, it was contended before us that it was similarly invalid, inasmuch as Giriappa, the natural son of Rachava, had left a widow behind him, who was his heir, and this widow, and not Rachava, had the right of adoption.

The allegation that Giriappa was married and had left a widow behind him was made for the first time in second appeal. The judgments of both the lower Courts are silent on this point. If Giriappa had left a widow as his heir, the appellant No. 1 would not have failed to press the point in the lower Courts. We cannot, under these circumstances, take notice of this allegation, as it involves a question of fact, in respect of which there has been no issue and no distinct finding. We must, therefore, hold that Giriappa left no other nearer heir save his mother Rachava at the time of his death.

The appellants' pleader Mr. Ghanasham, however, contended that even if Giriappa had left no widow, and his mother was his only heir, yet the ownership of the land, together with the right of adoption, having once descended to Giriappa, the right to adopt could not ascend to his mother Rachava, and her adoption of respondent was, therefore, invalid under the authority of the ruling in Hasabnis' case (5). In that case, however, the widow of the last heir survived her husband, and it was accordingly held that, under the circumstances, the mother could not adopt even after that widow's death. The facts of this case clearly distinguish it from the authority cited above. Mr. Mayne in his Hindu Law, s. 104, recognizes a distinction between a mother adopting after her infant son's death, and adopting [337] after the death of that son's widow, and the ground of this distinction apparently rests on the decisions of the Privy Council that an adoption by the mother after the estate has vested in her son's widow is invalid—Bhoobun Moyee v. Ram Kishore (4); Pudma Coomari v. The Court of Wards (6); Thayammal v. Venkatarama (7). If it had been found in the present case that Giriappa had left a widow behind him, Rachava's adoption of the respondent would clearly have been invalid. The larger proposition which the appellants' pleader asks us to affirm derives no support from the authorities cited before us. If a widow cannot adopt after the death of her natural or adopted son under any circumstances, half the adoptions that take place would have to be declared invalid. Even the learned Editors of the Digest of Hindu Law admit that the widow can exercise her authority to adopt when her son, natural or adopted, dies unmarried, or leaves no child or widow behind him. If this were not so, the husband could not authorize his widow to make successive adoptions, and this power has been expressly recognized by the Courts in India—Raja Vellanki v. Vankata Rama (1) and Ram Soondur v. Surbanee Dossee (2). In this Presidency no express authorization by the husband is necessary, but the widow's power to adopt, when there are no other vested rights which would be defeated by it, has been fully recognized in Ramji v. Ghamau (3). In the higher caste, it is usual to permit such an exercise of power when the son dies before he attains full ceremonial competency, and cases of a second and third adoption under such circumstances have occurred. In this view of the law, we feel satisfied that Rachava could validly adopt the respondent after Giriappa's death without leaving any other heir nearer than his own mother.

The lower appellate Court was, therefore, not right in the way it distinguished the present case from the ruling in Krishnarav v. Shankarrav (4) ; but its view can be supported on other grounds, and we, therefore, see no reason to distrub its finding. Rachava [338] or her assignee, appellant No. 1, was certainly estopped by her own act from questioning respondent's adoption. She had, at the most, no more than a Hindu widow's estate in the land as heir to Giriappa, and she could not, after adopting the respondent in 1879 alienate the land without any proved necessity.

We accordingly confirm the decree of the lower appellate Court, and dismiss the appeal with costs on appellants.

APPLICATION under the extraordinary jurisdiction of the High Court (s. 622 of the Civil Procedure Code, Act XIV of 1882) against the decision of Rao Saheb G. V. Saraiya, Subordinate Judge of Bassein, in a Small Cause Court suit.

The plaintiff sued to recover Rs. 48-4-0 on a money-bond passed by defendant in favour of plaintiff's father on 22nd July, 1891. Plaintiff alleged that he and his deceased father were members of a joint Hindu family, and that the family business was transacted in the name of his deceased father.

Defendant did not appear.

The Subordinate Judge of Bassein with Small Cause Court powers found the bond proved, and that plaintiff and his deceased father were members of a joint family, but following the ruling of the Madras High Court in Venkatramanna v. Venkayya (1) [339] held that as the bond did not show on the face of it that the debt claimed was due to the joint family, it was necessary for the plaintiff to produce a certificate under the Succession Certificate Act (VII of 1889), s. 4, before a decree could be given in his favour. No such certificate being produced, the Subordinate Judge dismissed the plaintiff's suit with costs.

The plaintiff applied to the High Court in its extraordinary jurisdiction, contending that as he and his father were members of a joint family, no certificate under Act VII of 1889 was necessary to entitle him to recover the debt.

G. M. Tripathi, for the applicant.

The opponent did not appear.

JUDGMENT.

SARGENT, C. J.—The Subordinate Judge has found that a certificate under Act VII of 1889 is necessary on the authority of Venkatramanna v. Venkayya(1), where it was laid down that a certificate is necessary, unless it appear on the face of the bond passed to the plaintiff's father that the debt claimed was due to the joint family consisting of the father and son. The Madras Court would appear to have held that the plaintiff could not in such a case raise the question that the debt was a family debt. However, we have already decided in Raghavendra Madhav v. Bhima (2) that the necessity for the certificate upon the plain language of the Act depends on the question whether the debt was part of "the effects" of the deceased, or was in its nature a family debt and, therefore, "family" property. This does not of course prevent the defendant from insisting that all the members of the family be made co-plaintiffs. The Madras Court, however, would seem to have been influenced in its decision by a desire to give effect to the intention of the Act to protect debtors; but as the language of the Act is quite clear in showing that it is confined to the case in which the claim is to the "effects" of the deceased, and not to family property where the claim is by right of survivorship, it would, in our opinion, be contrary to sound principles of construction to adopt the view of the Madras Court.

Another question is also touched upon in the above case, viz., whether the debtor is entitled to insist on a certificate when the [340] family is admitted or proved to be joint; but there is no direct evidence before the Court as to the nature of the debt. We gather from the Madras judgment, that the Court considered that in that case there would be no presumption that the debt was a family debt. But we think that view is

A pleader, in addressing a Mamlatdar on behalf of his client, who was charged under s. 125 of the Bombay Land Revenue Code (Bom. Act V of 1879) with wilfully removing boundary marks, commented on some of the witnesses for the prosecution, and called them loafers. Thereupon one of those witnesses prosecuted the pleader for defamation. The Magistrate held that there was no justification for the language, and convicted the pleader, and sentenced him to pay a fine of Rs. 15 under s. 500 of the Indian Penal Code (XLV of 1860).

Held, reversing the conviction and sentence, that in the absence of express malice (which was not to be presumed) the pleader was protected by excep. 9 to s. 499 of the Indian Penal Code.

Held also that in considering whether there was good faith (i.e., due care and attention) the position of the person making the imputation must be taken into consideration. In the case of an advocate, where express malice is absent, a Court having due regard to public policy would be extremely cautious before depriving him of the protection of excep. 9 to s. 499 of the Indian Penal Code.

Semble.—Section 499 of the Indian Penal Code should be construed without reference to the English law.

[341] THIS was an application for the exercise of the High Court's revisional jurisdiction under s. 439 of the Code of Criminal Procedure (Act X of 1882).

The accused, who was a pleader practising in the district of Surat, was charged with defamation under s. 499 of the Indian Penal Code under the following circumstances:—

One Maneklal Pranshankar filed a complaint against Abdul Kadar under s. 125 of the Bombay Land Revenue Code (Act V of 1879) for wilfully removing certain boundary marks.

The Mamlatdar of Chorasi, who held a summary inquiry into this complaint, examined certain witnesses on behalf of the prosecution, one of whom was Narsiram Harderam, the complainant in the present case.

The accused, who defended Abdul Kadar, in commenting on the witnesses for the prosecution called them "loafers."

19 B. 340.

Thereupon Narsilal filed the present complaint againt the accused, charging him with defamation.

The accused pleaded that the occasion was privileged.

The case was tried by the First Class Magistrate of Surat, who was of opinion that the accused was not justified in calling the complainant a loafer.

The accused was convicted of defamation under s. 500 of the Indian Penal Code, and sentenced to pay a fine of Rs. 15. The judgment was as follows :—

"The accused in his defence has raised two main issues, viz.:—

"1st, that as a pleader it was his privilege to comment on the evidence of witnesses, and if it be considered proved that the complainant was called a 'loafer,' he had not gone beyond the limit of his privilege. 2nd, that the word 'loafer' used by him was not intended for complainant, but a dhed witness.

"I have seen the authorities quoted pro and con, and I do not think a vakil has the privilege of calling a witness who gives evidence against his client a loafer without any justification. The complainant Narsilal is a respectable man and a Government servant, and it was certainly likely to make him look small in the eyes of his friends and acquaintances to call him a loafer. [342] It is not necessary that he should be actually degraded. It has been hinted that he has been spending several hours in the company of Maneklal in idle gossip, and as the word 'loafer' has been defined in Webster's Dictionary as an idle man, there was no harm in calling the complainant a loafer. Loafer really means a vagrant, one who has no means of subsistence. The complainant is not of that stamp. Every one has his friend or club to go to, where he spends his leisure in merry talk, and that does not make him a loafer.

"It appears clear, from the Mamlatdar's evidence, that the complainant was one of those who were called loafers.

"The head surveyor said nothing in favour of Maneklal, and, therefore, comments made by the vakil were intended for the three witnesses who gave evidence in favour of Maneklal. The Mamlatdar says the word 'loafer' was used more than once, and it had reference to the complainant, who gave evidence against the vakil's client. The vakil's evident object in calling him a loafer was either that he might be disbelieved, or to pay off some private grudge, as the complainant says on solemn affirmation that the vakil told him once that he would mark him.

"The defence also insinuate that the accused is prosecuted because there is ill-feeling between his family and the vakil Kirparam's family, by whom he has been instigated to lodge the complaint. This argument cuts both ways. It shows also the mala fides of the accused, who to take revenge on account of his animosity with Kriparam's family called complainant a loafer, as he has some connection with the latter family.

"I, therefore, convict Nagarji Trikamdas under s. 500 of the Indian Penal Code and sentence him to pay a fine of Rs. 15."

Against this conviction and sentence the accused applied to the High Court under s. 435 of the Code of Criminal Procedure (Act X of 1882).

Goverdhanram M. Tripathi, for accused :—Section 499 of the Indian Penal Code has no application to the present case. A counsel stands in the same position and is entitled to the same protection as a Judge, a witness, or a party to a judicial proceeding. [343] A counsel speaks not from his own knowledge, but under instructions. He is a mere mouthpiece of his client. It is his duty to argue his client's case to the best of his ability. An argument is, therefore, not an imputation within the meaning of s. 499 of the Penal Code. A counsel is often compelled in the discharge of his duty to make unfavourable comments or disparaging remarks on his adversary's case. But that will not make him liable to a civil suit or a criminal prosecution. For words spoken by him in his character as an advocate he enjoys an absolute privilege and this privilege is founded on public policy—Munster v. Lamb (1); Rex v. Skinner (2); Dawkins v. Lord Rokeby (3): Odgers on Libel and Slander (2nd Ed.). p. 436. The law on this point is the same here as it is in England—Sullivan v. Norton (4) Queen-Empress v. Babaji (5); Queen-Empress v. Balkrishna (6). I adopt (Fulton, J.'s) agrument in the last case and contend that the case does not fall under s. 499 of the Penal Code. I do not rely on any of the exceptions to that section. Even if the privilege be qualified, the onus lies on the prosecution to prove express malice. This has not been found in the present case.

Gokuldas Kahandas Parikh, for complainant :—The Magistrate has found that the accused made the imputation complained of without any justification whatever. I submit it is wrong to refer to English cases in construing the Indian Penal Code—Abdul Hakim v. Tej Chandar Mukarji (7). The English law is based on public policy. But public policy cannot override the plain language of an enactment like the penal Code. The language of s. 499 of the Code is wide enough to include the case of counsel. If his words amount to an imputation, the section would apply, no matter whether the imputation be in the form of an argument or not—Reg. v. Kashinath Dinkar (8); Green v. Delanney (9); Queen v. Pursoram (10); Hinde v. Baudry (11). The observations of Fulton, J., in [344] Queen-Empress v. Balkrishna (6) are, I submit with due deference erroneous. Even if they are correct, they do not apply to the present case. The case of a witness is different from that of a counsel. A witness is compelled by law to make a statement, whether defamatory or not, in answer to questions put to him in the witness box. A counsel does not speak under such compulsion. A witness is, moreover, liable to a prosecution for perjury if he makes a false statement. A counsel is exposed to no such risk. A counsel is, therefore, bound to speak with due care and caution. If he makes reckless imputations, he will be liable to a prosecution for defamation. In a case like this the onus lies on the accused to prove good faith; and he is bound to show that his case falls within one or another of the exceptions to s. 499 of the Penal Code. The case of Sullivan v. Norton (4) is not in point, as it was not a case of defamation under the Indian Penal Code.

JUDGMENT.

Per Curiam :—The facts found are that the accused's pleader, in addressing the Mamlatdar on behalf of his client accused under s. 125 of the Land Revenue Code, of removing boundary marks, commented on some of the witnesses on the other side and called them loafers. One of them accused the pleader of defamation under the Indian Penal Code.

The Magistrate has convicted and fined him, holding that the word means a vagrant or one who has no means of subsistence; that it was used either to discredit the witness or to pay off some private grudge; and that the authorities cited did not extend the protection of privilege to the accused. Mr. Govardhanram has argued that the conviction is bad. A counsel or advocate of any sort speaks, he says, not from knowledge but instructions, is thus a mere mouthpiece as regards assertions, and as regards comments is bound to duty to his client. Therefore an argument is not "imputation" within the s. 499 of the Indian Penal Code defining the offence of defamation. Without relying on any of the exceptions, the learned pleader adopts fully the reasoning applied in Queen-Empress v. Balkrishna (1) by Fulton, J., about a witness. He relies also on the reasoning in [345] Sulivan v. Norton(2) and the dictum at p. 35 that an advocate in this country cannot be proceeded against criminally for words uttered in his office as advocate. He contends that an advocate stands in the same position as a witness and that s. 499 should be interpreted so as to accord with the public policy affirmed by the law of England which has always treated witnesses and advocate as alike exempt from suit for what of a defamatory nature they may say in the course of their advocacy or evidence.

The case of Dawkins v. Lord Rokeby (3) in the House of Lords is cited as conclusive upon the question as to witnesses, and the cases of Seaman v. Nethercliff (4) and Goffin v. Donnelly (5) referred to as examples of the application of the rule. This principle has been extended, it is said, to advocates for the same reason, and the case of Munster v. Lamb (6) is relied on as establishing that proposition. We think there can be no doubt that these cases do establish the propositions for which they are cited. Brett, M. R. (Lord Esher,) says, p. 603: "Of the three classes—Judge, witness and counsel—it seems to me that a counsel has a special need to have his mind clear from all anxiety. A counsel's position is one of the utmost difficulty. He is not to speak of that which he knows; he is not called upon to consider whether the facts with which he is dealing are true or false. What he has to do is to argue as best he can without degrading himself in order to maintain the proposition which will carry with it either the protection or the remedy which he desires for his client. If amidst the difficulties of his position he were to be called upon during the heat of an argument to consider whether what he says is true or false, whether what he says is relevant or irrelevant, he would have his mind so embarrassed that he could not do the duty which he is called upon to perform. For, more than a Judge, infinitely more than a witness, he wants protection on the ground of benefit to the public. The rule of law is that what is said in the course of the administration of the law, is privileged; and the reason of that [346] rule covers a counsel even more than a Judge or a witness. To my mind it is illogical to argue that the protection of privilege ought not to exist for a counsel, who deliberately and maliciously slanders another person. The reason of the rule is, that a counsel, who is not malicious and who is acting bona fide may not be in danger of having actions brought against him. If the rule of law were otherwise, the most innocent of counsel might be unrighteously harassed with suits, and, therefore, it is better to make the rule of law so large that an innocent counsel shall never be troubled, although, by making it so large, counsel are included who have been guilty of malice and misconduct.

"In Rex v. Skinner (7), Lord Mansfield, a Judge most skilful in enunciating the principles of the law, treated a counsel as standing in the same position as a Judge or a witness. In Dawkins v. Lord Rokeby(1) a most careful judgment was delivered on behalf of all the Judges in the Exchequer Chamber, and the opinion of Lord Mansfield was cited and adopted. If the authority of these two cases is to be followed, counsel are equally protected with Judges and witnesses. I will refer to Kennedy v. Hilliard (2), and in that case Pigott, C.B., delivered a most learned judgment, in the course of which he said, at p. 209: 'I take this to be a rule of law, not founded (as is the protection in other cases of privileged statement) on the absence of malice in the party sued, but founded on public policy which requires that a Judge, in dealing with the matter before him, a party in preferring or resisting a legal proceeding, and a witness in giving evidence, oral or written, in a Court of justice, shall do so with his mind uninfluenced by the fear of an action for defamation or a prosecution for libel.' Into the rule thus stated the word counsel must be introduced, and the rule may be taken to be the rule of the common law. That rule is founded upon public policy. With regard to counsel, the question of malice bona fides and relevency cannot be raised; the only question is, whether what is complained of has been said in the course of the administration of the law. If that be so, the case against a counsel must be stopped at once. No action of any kind, no criminal prosecution [347] can be maintained against a defendant when it is established that the words complained of were uttered by him as counsel in the course of a judicial inquiry, that is, an inquiry before any Court of justice into any matter concerning the administration of the law."

We have now to consider, in connection with the case before us, how far the above interpretation of the common law of England has been adopted in India. In Baboo Gunnesh v. Mugneeram (3) the rule that a witness is not liable to a civil action for defamatory words spoken in the course of his evidence has been laid down as applicable to India; this has been followed in Nathji v. Lalbhai (4), where the rule is extended to pleadings. In Manjaya v. Sesha Shetti (5), these views of public policy as interpreting the common law are adopted in regard to prosecutions under the Indian Penal Code for defamation; the only proper prosecution is held to be that for giving false evidence. This case is followed by Birdwood and Parsons, JJ., in Queen-Empress v. Babaji (6); and in Queen-Empress v. Balkrishna (7), Fulton, J., (Telang, J., dubitante) held that the case of a witness lay outside the scope of s. 499, on the ground that it was not the intention of the Legislature to bring statements made in the witness-box within the definition of defamation. The impolicy and the hardship on the witness as also other considerations were relied on in support of that view. We are inclined to share the doubts expressed by Telang, J. The case of Green v. Delanney (8) shows that this section of the penal statute must be construed without reference to the English law (based on public policy). The Queen v. Parsoram (9) is to the same effect. Sullivan v. Norton is not an interpretation of s. 499; although as to the extent of an advocate's privilege in England the learned Judges had Munster v. Lamb to guide them.

The extent of the witness's privilege is not as yet so clearly settled—see Lord Bramwell's dictum in Seaman v. Netherclift (10); and in Queen-

Empress v. Balkrishna, Fulton, J., refrains from laying [348] down that wholly irrelevant statements of a witness may not come within the scope of the enactment we are now considering. It would then be difficult, in the present state of the authorities, to state with reference to these decisions the limits of the privilege they concede to witnesses charged criminally for defamation. It would, however, in our opinion, be beyond the province of mere interpretation to engraft a new exception on the definition.

The Legislature has enacted a general exception in favour of Judges,—to wit, s. 77 of the Penal Code, and in s. 132 of the Indian Evidence Act has gone a certain length in protecting witnesses against the criminal law; it may be assumed that it had no intention of going further. As stated in Macaulay's Report on the First Draft of the Penal Code, the requirement of "good faith" was intentional in s. 499. Without, however, importing into this carefully considered statute the rules of the common law of England based on public policy, we are of opinion that a witness in India is adequately protected by the exceptions 1 to 9 in s. 499, where the defamatory statement is not untrue to the knowledge of the person making it. If, however, it be untrue to his knowledge, the real offence committed is, as pointed out by the Privy Council in Baboo Gunnesh v. Mugneram (supra), that of false evidence; and the Court would not, when such is the offence, allow the onus of proof to be shifted by the prosecution having recourse to s. 499, as that would be tantamount to dispensing with the salutary provisions of s. 195 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, which are clearly based on public policy. It has been pointed out in Queen-Empress v. Gundya (1) that it is an invasion of the law to treat an aggravated as an ordinary offence, and thus introduce a different jurisdiction or a lower scale of punishment. This applies as between defamation and the various givings of false evidence, all more severely punishable under ss. 193 to 195 of the Penal Code; it applies to the making of the charge under ss. 210 and 254 of the Procedure Code. In the present case it is unnecessary to decide whether advocates have or have not the unqualified privilege from criminal prosecution which the case of Sullivan [349] v. Norton would accord to them. We only follow the practice of the Court by interfering in revision, Queen-Empress v. Slater, per Candy, J. (2), where there is sufficient reason, as e.g., where the lower Court has approached the case from a wrong point of view. The record does not show what authorities were cited to the Magistrate. There is no discussion in it of the peculiar duty of an advocate. The judgment does not determine the motive, and there is no finding of express malice, and we have not to consider such a case.

The present case is, in our opinion, covered by exception 9 to s. 499. In considering whether there was good faith, i.e., under s. 52, due care and attention of the person making the imputation must be taken into consideration. That of an advocate is well expressed by the Master of the Rolls in the passage cited above. He speaks from instructions; he reasons from facts sometimes true, sometimes false. He draws inferences from these facts sometimes correct, sometimes fallacious. He does not express his own inferences, his own opinions or his own sentiments, but those which he desires the tribunal, before which he appears, to adopt. This duty the law allows, almost compels him to perform. Such being his duty, it seems to us that where express malice is absent (and it ought not to be presumed) a Court having due regard to public policy would be extremely cautious before it deprived the advocate of the protection of exception 9. In the present case we do not doubt that this protection applies. We, therefore, set aside the conviction and sentence.

Before Mr. Justice Farran.

NATHMULL NARSINGDAS, (Plaintiff) v. MALHARRAO HOLKAR, AN INFANT, AND ANOTHER. (Defendants)* [1st December, 1894].

Practice—Procedure—Inspection—Affidavit of documents—Minor.

An affidavit of documents may be required from a minor defendant.

[R., 23 B. 100; D., 22 C. 891.]

SUMMONS for inspection. The plaintiff sued the defendants, who were both minors, as the legal representatives of their father Yeshwantrao Holkar, who died on the 22nd July, 1890. The plaintiff claimed payment of a large sum of money which he alleged to be due by the said Yeshwantrao Holkar, and also specific performance of a certain agreement, or damages.

On the 15th November, 1894, the plaintiff took out a summons calling on the defendants to "show cause why they should not produce, for the inspection of the plaintiff, all books, papers, &c., in their possession, power or control, or in the possession, power or control of any person or persons on their behalf, &c."

On behalf of the defendants it was objected that an infant defendant could not be required to make an affidavit of documents.

Scott, for the defendants, showed cause.

Macpherson, for the plaintiff, contra.

JUDGMENT.

FARRAN, J.—This is a summons taken out by the plaintiff seeking production of the documents in the defendants' possession for the purpose of inspection. The defendants are the minor representatives of their deceased father, and according to the practice hitherto observed in this Court, no affidavit of documents has been required to be made by them or on their behalf, and no such affidavit has been, in fact, made. It is not denied that there are documents in the possession of the defendants, or of their guardian ad litem, relating to matters in question in the suit.

Section 129 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882) provides that the Court may order any party to the suit to declare by affidavit all the documents in his possession or power relating [351] to the suit; and any party to the suit may apply to the Court for a like order. Section 130 enables the Court to make an order for the production of documents. These sections follow the wording of O. XXXI, rr. 12 and 14 of the Rules of the Supreme Court in England framed under the Judicature Act; and under these rules it has been held that an infant party to a suit should not be called on to make an affidavit of documents—Curtis v. Mundy (1). The hardship, not to say injustice, arising from that rule was pointed out in Mayor v. Collins (2), but the Judges there felt that they were bound by the established practice of the Court of Chancery, which had not been abrogated by the new rules, and was binding upon the Courts—Redfern v. Redfern (3). That practice has of itself no binding force on this Court, which is governed by the Civil Procedure Code, though it is followed as a guide in cases where the path is unmarked. The practice of not requiring an affidavit did not prevail in the Divorce Court, as appears from the judgment of Lindley, L.J., in Redfern v. Redfern (3), where the Lord Justice speaks of it as applied in Courts of Equity, as in his opinion "too rigid." It appears from the same case that it had been the practice to order infants to make affidavits of documents in the Queen's Bench Division, until in Mayor v. Collins(2) it was decided that the practice was opposed to the rules. Now by r. 29 of O. XXXI the old practice of the Court of Chancery has been swept away in this respect, and an affidavit may be required, in the Supreme Court in England, from an infant or from his guardian or next friend. The practice here has not been crystalized into a rule, or established by the decision of an appellate Court; nor has it, I believe, been laid down after argument. There is, therefore, no reason for retaining it, if it is an incorrect practice. To me it appears to be incorrect. Written statements are required from infant defendants, and are constantly filed on their behalf. I can see no reason why an affidavit of documents should not be similarly required. It would in many cases amount to a denial of justice to refuse to allow a plaintiff inspection of his opponent's documents vouched by affidavit.

[352] I shall, therefore, make the order that the defendants do produce upon affidavit the documents in their possession relating to the suit in the usual form. As to how it is to be obeyed, or what will be the consequence if it is not obeyed, I need not now determine. I understand that there will be no difficulty in complying with it in the present case. The guardian will, I understand, make the affidavit. To the order the proviso asked for by counsel for the defendants will be added that inspection need not be given until the plaintiff has made his affidavit of documents.

I do not by this order decide that the next friend or guardian of an infant can be directly ordered to make an affidavit of documents. Different difficulties stand in the way of the making of such an order, such as are pointed out in Waghji Thackersey v. Khatao Rowji (4), Ingram v. Little (5) and Dyke v. Stephens (6), which the alteration of the Supreme Court Rules in England does not get rid of, and which apparently the Legislature only can remove; but I give no opinion upon this point. Costs to be costs in the cause.

Before Mr. Justice Candy.

DORABJI JEHANGIR RANDIVA (Plaintiff) v. MUNCHERJI BOMANJI PANTHAKI (Defendant).* [11th December, 1894.]

Limitation—Limitation Act (XV of 1877), sch. II, art. 60—Deposit—Loan.

The plaintiff claimed to recover from the defendant, who was his grandfather, the sum of Rs. 4,917, which was the amount standing to his credit in an account in the defendant's books. In November, 1869, the plaintiff being then one year old, his mother (the defendant's daughter) paid over to the defendant the sum of Rs. 650, [353] and at her request the money was credited in the books of the defendant's firm in the name of her son the plaintiff. A further sum was similarly paid over by her in December, 1871, and at her request was credited to the same account. The plaintiff alleged, and the Court found, that these sums were presents which had been made to him on his birthday and other auspicious occasions. The said sums had been carried over from year to year in the firm's books, the interest being added each year, but no payment had ever been made to the plaintiff, or on his behalf, out of the sum so standing to his credit. Compound interest had been allowed in the account, and on the 9th November, 1893, the amount standing to the credit of the plaintiff was Rs. 4,917.

The plaintiff contended that the money had been paid to, and accepted by, the defendant as a deposit to be held in trust for him. The defendant alleged that the money in question had been lent to him by the plaintiff's mother, and contended that the plaintiff's claim was barred by limitation.

Held, that the plaintiff's claim was not barred. The defendant stood in a fiduciary position to the plaintiff, and, therefore, there was a "deposit" within the meaning of art. 60 of the Limitation Act (XV of 1877), and limitation did not commence to run until demand.

THE plaintiff was the grandson of the defendants and was at the date of suit twenty-six years of age. He alleged that at the time of his birth, and subsequently on ceremonial occasions, presents of money had been made to him, which were received by his mother (the defendant's daughter) and were deposited by her on his behalf with the defendant, who accepted the same as a deposit and in trust for the plaintiff, opening an account in the plaintiff's name in the books of his firm, of which he was the sole proprietor. The said moneys were credited to the said account, and interest was credited to the said account every year, and the balance carried forward.

The plaint stated that the defendant had a similar account with him as trustee for the plaintiff's sister. She died in 1877 an infant, unmarried and intestate, and on her death the plaintiff's mother presented the said moneys to the credit of the plaintiff's account, and got the amount transferred to the plaintiff's account, and ever since such transfer the said moneys had been held by the defendant as depositary and trustee for the plaintiff.

The plaint also stated that the defendant from time to time furnished the plaintiff's father with statements of accounts of the moneys belonging to the plaintiff; that the account of the plaintiff [354] in the defendant's books was carried forward and appeared in the books for 1893; that nothing had ever been drawn from the account, and that the whole amount received by the defendant and interest was due to the plaintiff, who believed that the sum due was about Rs. 4,900.

The plaint prayed for full discovery of the amount standing to the plaintiff's credit, and for payment thereof with interest.

The defendant denied the alleged deposits, but alleged that on 18th November, 1869, the plaintiff's mother, Virbaiji, had lent to his defendant's firm a sum of Rs. 650, and directed that it should be credited in the name of the plaintiff, which was duly done in the defendant's book. A further loan of Rs. 942 was made by her to the defendant's firm on 6th December, 1871, which was at her request credited to the same account. He further stated that the said account in the plaintiff's name had been carried over from year to year in the firm's books, the interest being added each year, but that no payment, either of principal or interest, had been made to the plaintiff or on his behalf out of the moneys standing to the plaintiff's credit. He contended that the plaintiff's claim was barred by limitation, and that in any case he was entitled to set off the sum of Rs. 1,080, being the cost incurred by him in maintaining the plaintiff for three years prior to the suit.

JUDGMENT.

CANDY, J.—Defendant is a Europe shopkeeper. Plaintiff is the son of the defendant's daughter, Virbaiji, who died in 1889. It is not denied that plaintiff was born on 16th November, 1868. [355] It is admitted that on 18th November, 1869, when plaintiff was just a year old, Rs. 650 were credited in defendant's book in the name of the plaintiff, to bear interest at 5 per cent. On 6th December, 1871, a further sum of Rs. 942 was credited to the same account, which has evidently been carried forward from year to year, bearing 5 per cent. compound-interest. On 9th November, 1893, the balance stood at Rs. 4,917.

As stated by the learned Advocate-General, for the defendant, the question simply is, did this money reach defendant's hands under circumstances which show "a deposit" within the meaning of that term in art. 60, sch. II, Act XV of 1877 ? If it did, then the claim is not barred, for the only demand on the part of the plaintiff which is proved is within three years of the filing of the suit.

Defendant stated in his deposition that the plaintiff made an oral demand in 1889, but this is not proved. He contradicted himself more than once on the point. He said that neither Virbaiji nor plaintiff had ever demanded the money. I am not satisfied that plaintiff did make such a demand in 1889. At that time apparently, the members of the family were living in harmony, and were all content to leave the money standing in their names in the books of the firm invested in the business.

The question then is, what were the circumstances under which the money shown in the books in the name of the plaintiff came into defendant's hands? It is common ground that it was Virbaiji, the plaintiff's mother, who paid the cash or caused it to be paid, and that it was at her request that the money was credited in the name of her son. But while plaintiff says that he always understood that the money belonged to him, being presents on his birthday and other auspicious occasions, defendant says that he always understood the money to be Virbaiji's own, and advanced as an ordinary loan to her father. I have no hesitation in holding that plaintiff's story appears to be the true one. He himself can have no personal knowledge of the circumstances under which the money was paid, but he called his grandmother, defendant's wife, who deposed to the first payment of Rs. 650 being a birthday present given by plaintiff's father, and [356] by her advice handed to defendant. The learned Advocate-General, for defendant, dwelt on the fact that plaintiff's father, though present, was not called as a witness; but the argument cuts both ways. The plaintiff says that he is on bad terms with his father, and so he refrained from calling him. Why did the defendant not call him if he (plaintiff's father) could have sworn that he had no knowledge of the money, or that he was aware that the money belonged to Virbaiji? it is clear that, in Parsi families, presents are sometimes given to infant children on birthdays and such like occasions, and nothing would be more natural than that the infant's mother should invest such money in her father's business for the infant's benefit. Whether she added to the fund, which commenced with the item of Rs. 650, by paying other sums given similarly as presents to the infant, or by payments from her own pocket or otherwise, it is clear that the moneys mounting up each year by compound-interest, were treated as one fund for the benefit of the infant. Since Virbaiji's death in 1889, her husband apparently never put forward any suggestion that the money was Virbaiji's to which he has a claim. It was argued that Ruttonbai (the witness called by plaintiff) is on such bad terms with her husband, the defendant, that no reliance can be placed on her statements. But the same argument would hold good against the evidence of defendant and his son and partisan, Dinshaw. The family quarrel is evidently so fierce that the evidence of one member against another should be carefully scrutinised.

We must look at the surrounding circumstances and judge of the general probability. Directly this is done, it is seen that defendant's story cannot be true. It is that being in want of money, he asked his daughter for a loan which was given by her just as any ordinary banker would have done. As to further payments, he asked for loans and she made them. He admitted that he had similar accounts in the names of various members of his family, and he alleges that these are all ordinary loans. In fact, he stated that he never borrowed from outsiders. But his son Dinshaw contradicted him, and said that they did borrow from outsiders and repaid after intervals, when convenient. If the sums credited to the various members of the family are ordinary [357] loans, how is it that repayments have not been continually made? The only repayment mentioned in this case was in regard to a sum paid by Virbaiji and credited in the name of her infant daughter, Pootlibai, who died while still an infant, and so the money was subsequently repaid to Virbaiji. This is just what might have happened had the money been invested by the mother in her father's business for the benefit of the infant. At present we are only concerned with the moneys paid to the credit of the plaintiff; and looking at all the circumstances, I cannot regard them as ordinary loans made by Virbaiji to her father, but must regard them as moneys invested by her for her son's benefit in her father's business. They did not bear the ordinary mercantile interest of 9 per cent., which would probably have been the case had they been ordinary loans, but they carried 5 per cent. interest, which was calculated at compound rate, the intention apparently being that a fund should be accumulated for the benefit of the infant, invested in the business of which defendant is the sole owner, and which should so remain in the business till plaintiff, after he came of age, should demand the same.

These being the facts which I find, it only remains to consider whether such a transaction is a deposit within the terms of art. 60 of sch. II of the Limitation Act, 1877? The authority quoted of our own High Court (Iccha v. Natha (1))is not of much assistance in the present case. The judgment shows (p. 342) that, in the case of a loan payable on demand, the Act of 1871 made the time run from the date of the demand, but by the present Act of 1877 it is made by art. 59 to run from the date of the loan, and a new art. 60 has been introduced, applicable to suits to recover money deposited under an agreement that it shall be payable on demand, in which case the time runs from demand being made. But, whatever may be the cases to which this article is intended to apply, it is at any rate not applicable where the transaction is regarded by the law as a loan, and which is the case in the ordinary banking dealings between a native savkar and his customers. It may be remarked that this judgment was delivered in October, 1888, though not [358] reported till the middle of 1889. In July, 1888, (reported in January, 1889) Wilson and O'Kinealy,JJ., held in Ishur Chunder v. Jibun Kumari (2) that money paid to a man's credit with his banker is a deposit within the meaning of art. 60. But it should be remarked that, in the last quoted case, no reference was made to any authorities, while in the judgment of the Bombay High Court (3) mention is made of the authorities which show that both in England and in India all money paid to a man's credit with his banker is nothing but an ordinary loan, and not a deposit. So far, therefore, the Calcutta case can be disregarded, but I agree with the remark in the judgment that the question is not whether a particular case is covered by the words of art. 59 or any other article, but whether art. 60 applies to it; for if it does, the more specific provision must prevail. In the present case the learned Advocate General sought to apply not only art. 59, but also art. 57 or 62. The words of these articles may, in a general sense, cover the facts of the present case, but those facts may also show that there was a "deposit" as that term is used in art. 60, and if so, the more specific provision must prevail.

There is another remark in the Calcutta judgment with which I wish to express my concurrence. In my judgment in suit No. 179 of 1894, which was a suit by a son (and his wife) of the present defendant against the present defendant(3) to recover certain sums credited in the books of defendant in the name of the plaintiff, under circumstances somewhat similar to the present case, I held that it was not a case of an ordinary loan or a transaction between banker and customer, but, adopting the language of White, J., in Ram Sukh Bhunjo v. Bhrohmoyi Dasi(5), that the money was lodged under an express trust or under circumstances from which a trust could be implied. On consideration, I am of opinion that this language must be qualified and explained. I agree with the judgment in Ishur Chunder v. Jibun Kumari(1) (at p. 31) that it is impossible to apply art. 60 to those trusts which are covered by s. 10 of the Limitation Act, but it is to be remarked that there is no mention of [359] "express" trusts in s. 10, which speaks of property vested in trust for any "specific" purpose. The marginal heading of the section speaks of "express" trusts, but it does not follow that the word "specific" in the Indian Act of Limitation corresponds exactly to the word "express" in the English Act (see remarks of Markby, J., in Kherodemony Dossee v. Doorgamoney Dossee(2). However that may be, it is clear that art. 60 cannot apply to suits to recover property vested in trust for any specific purpose, for to them s. 10 would apply. But there are many cases of implied trusts or trusts which the law would infer merely from the existence of particular facts or fiduciary relations. These would not come under s. 10 (see the case just quoted, pp. 465, 469 and 470, and see also in the same volume the remarks of White, J, and Garth. C.J., (in Greender Chunder Ghose v. Mackintosh, pp. 918, 919, 923). These, in my opinion, would come under art. 60. There must be some definite distinction between money lent under an agreement that it shall be payable on demand, and money deposited under an agreement that it shall be payable on demand. That distinction between a loan and a deposit I take to be that, in the latter case, there must be something partaking of the nature of a trust, or at any rate fiduciary relations. Story on Bailments (7th Ed. Boston), s. 84, describes an irregular deposit as when a person having a sum of money which he does not think safe in his hands, confides it to another, who is to return him, not the same money, but a like sum when he shall demand it. Here the mother wanting to create a fund which would be of use to her son when he grew up, instead of letting the money lie idle, placed it with her father in order that he might use the same for the purpose of his business, and credit it in his accounts in his grandson's name with compound interest every year. There was no trust for any specific purpose. Defendant could have buried the money in the ground if he liked. But it was evidently intended that he would be at liberty to use the money in his business, and in any case the balance, to the grandson's credit was to accumulate at compound interest. There was, in short, a trust which made the transaction something more than a loan. It was a deposit. In In re Tidd; [360] Tidd v. Overell (3), the plaintiff Charles Tidd handed certain money to his brother, George Tidd, saying "you may as well take care of it, till I want it," or words to that effect. The Judge inferred from the evidence that it was in the minds of the parties present that the money might be useful to George in his business, and held that the transaction was not only a loan, but that George stood in a fiduciary position to Charles Tidd, and, therefore, the case fell within the principle enunciated by Pothier, that "where a man deposits money in the hands of another to be kept for his use, the possession of the custodee ought to be deemed to be the possession of the owner, until an application and refusal, or other denial of the right; for until then, there is nothing adverse, and I conceive that upon principle, no action should be allowed in these cases without a previous demand; consequently, that no limitation should be computed further back than such demand (4)."

In the well-known case of Foley v. Hill (1), a banking firm who on opening an account with a customer had agreed to allow him interest at 3 per cent. on the balance, which should from time to time be standing, to his credit, set up the statute of limitation as a defence to a bill filed against them by the customer for an account; but their Lordships ruled that money in the hands of a banker is merely lent. Accordingly in Tidd's case (supra), North, J., drew a distinction between money deposited in a bank to provide for a current account, and money paid in on a deposit account, quoting the remark of the Master of the Rolls in Atkinson v. Bradford Third Equitable Benefit Building Society (2), that the one transaction is very different from the other, and he came to the conclusion that the person to whom the money was paid stood in a fiduciary position to the person paying the money, and thus time did not begin to run under the statute of limitation (21 Jac. 1, c. 16) till demand. So here I must hold that defendant stood in a fiduciary position to the plaintiff, and, therefore, there was a deposit, and limitation did not commence to run till demand. It is to be regretted that there is no trace to be found in any public document, of the reason which induced the Indian Legislature [361] to insert art. 60 in the second schedule of the Limitation Act of 1877. When the Bill was first published (Gazette of India, 28th February, 1877), art. 57 (now art. 59) stood as it ran in Act IX of 1871, "for money lent under an agreement that it shall be payable on demand three years from when the demand is made." No change was made in the wording of the art. (No. 59) in the Bill published with the report of the Select Committee (Gazette of India, 31st March, 1877). Nor is there any mention of the point of the report. On the 28th June, 1877, a further report of the Select Committee was presented (Abstract of the Proceedings of the Legislative Council, 1877, Vol. 16, p. 462). But I can find no trace of any such report having been published. When the Honourable Mr. Stokes moved that the reports of the Select Committee should be taken into consideration (Idem, p. 464), the only reference which the honourable member made to the subject was that the time from which limitation was to run in the case of money lent under an agreement that it should be payable on demand, was changed from the date of the demand to the date of the transaction. This was in accordance with the ruling in Norton v. Ellam (3), and made the law in England and in India in accord; but at the same time art. 60 was inserted, and no reason was given for the insertion, nor was any indication offered as to the difference between a loan and a deposit. In the absence, then, of any such indication, I hold that a deposit is a loan and something more, i. e., the depositee stands in a fiduciary position to the depositor. I, therefore, hold that the plaintiff is entitled to the relief claimed with all costs, i.e., Rs. 4,917 with costs and 6 per cent. interest on judgment.

[362] CRIMINAL REVISION.

Before Mr. Justice Jardine and Mr. Justice Ranade.

In re JIVAN AMBAIDAS.* [29th March, 1894.]

Criminal Procedure Code (Act X of 1882), s. 195—Sanction to prosecute—Requisites of a proper sanction.

A sanction to prosecute for giving false evidence should specify clearly the statement alleged to be false, so that the person sought to be charged may be definitely informed what is the criminal act alleged against him.

[R., 36 C. 808=9 C.L.J. 690 (693)=13 C.W.N. 942=10 Cr. L.J. 150; D., 9 C.P. L.R. 27 (29).]

THIS was an application for the exercise of the High Court's revisional jurisdiction under s. 439 of the Code of Criminal Procedure (Act X of 1882).

One Bai Divali made a complaint of rape against Narsi Bhaichand, whereupon he was committed for trial to the Court of Session at Surat.

Narsi was acquitted of this charge by the unanimous verdict of the jury, and he thereupon applied to the Sessions Judge of Surat for sanction to prosecute the complainant, Bai Divali, and her witnesses, Kila, Jivan and Parshotam, for giving false evidence.

The Sessions Judge granted sanction to prosecute Bai Divali under cl. 3 of s. 211, and Kila and Jivan under s. 195 of the Indian Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860). His reasons were as follows—

"The petitioner prays for a sanction to prosecute Bai Divali for making a false complaint of rape against him and the other opponents for giving a false evidence against him. He was tried before this Court and acquitted by the unanimous verdict of the jury.

"The charge appears to be a false one, made by Divali to revenge herself on applicant for assisting her last husband in his litigation against her. The evidence of the witnesses, opponents Nos. 2 and 3, is incredible. It is physically impossible that the woman could have been violated in the manner she describes without receiving any injury, if, as she says, she resisted. Sexual intercourse could only have been had with her in the manner she describes, if at all, then with her full consent and co-operation.

"Applicant now set up an alibi, but his witnesses were not examined in this Court and there is nothing on the record to prove that opponent Parshotam's evidence is false. The application is, therefore, refused in his case. I grant the application against the other three. Divali may be prosecuted under s. 211, cl. (3), Indian Penal Code, and Kila and Jivan under s. 195."

[363] Jivan thereupon applied to the High Court to set aside the sanction, as it did not refer to any specific portion of his deposition as being untrue.

Govardhan M. Tripathi for the accused.

JUDGMENT.

JARDINE, J.—Section 195 of the Code of Criminal Procedure ought to be used in such a way as to give the person, against whom the sanction for prosecution is given, some means of knowing definitely in what the criminal act consists—In re Balaji Sitaram(1); In re Har Dial(2). In the present case the sanction relates to the giving of false evidence in a long deposition; but not the very slightest indication is given in the proceedings as to what story or statement was in the opinion of the Sessions Judge false. The Judge issuing a sanction for a prosecution ought to apply his mind closely to the facts with a view to ascertain whether they really constitute an offence, and also to prevent a sanction issued with one purpose or design being abused to the furtherance of some other—Chintaman Dev v. Chintaman Dev (3).

We, therefore, on the petition of Jivan Ambaidas revoke the sanction for his prosecution.

Evidence Act (I of 1872), ss. 25 and 26—Confession—Confession made to a police officer by accused while in police custody—Accomplice—Spy—Distinction between a spy and an accomplice—Evidence of an accomplice—Evidence.

A statement made to a police officer by an accused person while in the custody of the police, if it is an admission of a criminating circumstance, cannot be used in evidence under ss. 25 and 26 of the Indian Evidence Act (I of 1872).

The action of a spy and informer in suggesting and initiating a criminal offence is itself an offence, the act not being excused or justified by any exception in the Indian Penal Code (XLV of 1860) or by the doctrine which distinguishes the spy from the accomplice.

[364] But the act of a detective in supplying market money for the detection of a crime cannot be treated as that of an accomplice.

Distinction between a spy and an accomplice pointed out.

APPEAL from the decision of W. R. Hamilton, Presidency Magistrate.

The accused Javecharam, who was a ticket collector at the Grant Road Station in the service of the B. B. & C. I. Railway Company, was charged, under s. 408 of the Indian Penal Code (XLV of 1860) with criminal breach of the trust as a servant for selling certain railway tickets and appropriating the sale-proceeds to his own use. He was also charged with abetment of the offence of criminal breach of trust under s. 116.

Accused No. 2, Ahmed Hussein, was charged with dishonestly receiving stolen property, knowing the same to be stolen, under ss. 411 and 414 of the Penal Code.

APPEL-
CRIMINAL.
19 B. 363.

The Presidency Magistrate convicted both the accused of the offences charged, and sentenced accused No. 1 to eighteen months' rigorous imprisonment, and accused No. 2 to one year's rigorous imprisonment.

His reasons for convicting, as stated in his judgment, were as follows :—

"There is no doubt that accused No. 2, Ahmed Hussein, was caught in the act of selling the second halves of certain railway return tickets to Mahomed Ali. The money he had received for 15 tickets was found on him, which was marked money, and the 15 tickets were in the hands of Mahomed Ali. Besides, 7½ other tickets were found on Ahmed Hussein which had not been sold. Mahomed Ali may be an informer, and may not have a good character, but the fact of buying and selling these tickets cannot be disputed.

"Ahmed Hussein explained how he got these tickets from one Javecharam and one Paul. This statement is not a confession, but is merely an explanation of a fact which may be innocent. For instance, a person might say 'I did not steal these things, but I got them from A.' This would not be a confession, but a denial of guilt and a simple explanation of the fact of possession. Therefore the admission of so much of Ahmed Hussein's statements as merely explained how he got the tickets, does not appear to be open to objection, although by itself it is of no value to prove that he did get them from Javecharam.

[365] "In consequence of this statement, the police laid a trap to discover if Javecharam had any connection with Ahmed Hussein. On the morning of the 30th January, 1894 (Ahmed Hussein was arrested on the evening of the 29th) they took Ahmed Hussein and others to the Grant Road Station, and it is proved that Ahmed Hussain had a short conversation with Javecharam, who is a ticket collector at the station, and that Ahmed Hussein with Mahomed Ali and Ali Aga, a police sepoy in plain clothes, went into a coffee shop at the foot of the Grant Road bridge, while the detectives placed themselves on the other side of the road. In an hour or more, Javecharam was seen to go to the coffee shop and speak to Ahmed Hussein for a few minutes. He went back to the station and returned to the coffee shop in half an hour. There he sat down with Ahmed Hussein and Mohomed Ali, and Ahmed Hussein asked him for some tickets. Javecharam asked him for the money for the tickets he had given to him the day before. Ahmed Hussein explained he had sold them and that Mahomed Ali wanted to buy two more. Javecharam replied that he had just been to the station, but had not been able to get any tickets; he would bring them the next day. It was then arranged that Mahomed Ali should pay for the two tickets he wanted, and that they should be sent to his address, which Javecharam wrote down on a piece of paper. This writing is proved to be the writing of Javecharam. He also gave Mahomed Ali a recipt for Rs. 4 for the price of the two tickets promised, and as Ahmed Hussein said he would pay Javecharam Rs. 10 for the 12 tickets already sold through him the day before, Javecharam included that in the receipt which was handed over to Mahomed Ali. The money Rs. 10 plus Rs. 4, which was marked money, was paid to Javecharam, and then on a signal the detectives crossed the road, entered the room, and found them all together in the back room of the shop.

"Mahomed Ali, who in fact is the informer in the case, at once told the police officer that the money had been paid to Javecharam, and Javecharam produced the money and cried that 'zulum' had been committed on him. This is said to mean that Mahomed Ali had forced the money into Javecharam's pocket against his will or without his knowledge. It is proved, however, that when the police came in, they were sitting happily together, and 'zulum' therefore, does not imply any violence, but some trick. Mahomed Ali also said that a paper with his address would be found on Javecharam, and the paper was found. The receipt for the Rs. 10 plus Rs. 4 was produced by Mahomed Ali.

"It is contended that as the receipt is a receipt for 12 tickets only, and as 15 tickets were sold, besides 7½ taken from Ahmed Hussein, it is impossible that the 12 tickets could be the same as these 22½ tickets, and, therefore, that there is no connection between Javecharam and Ahmed Hussein which can be proved. Ahmed Hussein had stated that he had got the tickets from Javecharam and Paul, and the tickets were as likely to be those which Paul had supplied. The fact that the receipt refers to 12 tickets only, is not inconsistent with the fact that Javecharam gave the 22½ tickets to Ahmed Hussein or at least a part of them. It is consistent with the fact that Javecharam was told that 12 tickets had been sold and that Rs. 10 had been paid for them. It must be remembered that these statements were part of a plot. Mahomed Ali had only Rs. 10 in marked money, and he would know that Javecharam would accept Rs. 10 for 12 tickets, the balance being the share of [366] Mahomed Ali for selling these tickets. It may possibly be true that Paul had given some of the 22 tickets to Ahmed Hussein, but I think it to be clearly proved that 12 at least of these tickets were given by Javecharam for which he received Rs. 10.

"It is denied, however, that the receipt is in his writing. Unfortunately the prosecution have not been able to call any witnesses to prove the handwriting, in Gujarathi, of Javecharam. The fact that it is his writing must, therefore, rest upon the statement of Mahomed Ali alone. It is also noticeable that no pencil was found on Javecharam, or in the shop. It is not said that the pencil was searched for, but the fact that it was not found, tells in his favour.

"Javecharam was first charged with criminal breach of trust in respect of the tickets sold, but I have found it necessary to add another charge of abetment with reference to the conspiracy to sell 2 tickets to Mahomed Ali for Rs. 4. This rests on the evidence of Mahomed Ali and the fact that his address was written down by Javecharam and found upon him, and, further, that the receipt given by Javecharam refers to his having received the Rs. 4, and the fact that the Rs. 4 were found in his pocket. Ali Aga was an eye-witness to the payment of the money, although he did not see any writing being made, this having taken place in another room. I believe there is no reasonable doubt that the facts occurred as stated by Mahomed Ali, and I, therefore, conclude that he was engaged with Mahomed Ali and Ahmed Hussein in a conspiracy to obtain for the former 2 tickets of the company, and that he received Rs. 4, which is an act in pursuance of that conspiracy: see s. 107, cl. 2, Indian Penal Code. I presume it is not meant by that section that he must have done something to obtain the tickets, and that any collateral act is sufficient to satisfy the terms of the section, but this construction is open to question.

"I find Javecharam guilty, first, of criminal breach of trust as a clerk or servant, and, secondly, of abetment of criminal breach of trust as a clerk or servant, and I sentence him to eighteen months' rigorous imprisonment —Sections 116 and 408, Indian Penal Code; that is, to one year on the first charge and six months on the second charge.

"I find Ahmed Hussein guilty of dishonestly receiving stolen property, knowing it to be stolen, and sentence him to suffer one year's rigorous imprisonment—Sections 411 and 414, Indian Penal Code."

The accused No. 1 appealed to the High Court.

Jardine and Russell (with Motilal M. Munshi) for accused.—The statement of accused No. 2, that he received tickets from accused No. 1, is an admission of an incriminating character, and being made to the police while accused No. 2 was in police custody, it is inadmissible under ss. 25 and 26 of the Evidence Act—Imperatrix v. Pandharinath (1). The witness Mahomed is an informer and the real instigator of the offence. [367] He was a tool in the hands of the police, whose object was to get the offence committed. This man and the detective who supplied the marked money, as well as the other police witnesses who laid a trap for the accused, are all tainted witnesses; they are accomplices, and as such their evidence is entitled to no weight unless it is corroborated in material particulars. There is nothing to corroborate their statements. The receipt which is produced, is a clear fabrication. The money found on the accused No. 1 was thrust on him against his will and in spite of his protest.

Lang (Advocate General) for the Crown.—The Magistrate rightly held that the statement of accused No. 2 was not incriminating. He does not say that he got the tickets from accused No. 1, knowing the same to be stolen property. He does not admit his guilt His statement does not amount to a confession. It is, therefore, admissible in evidence. As to the evidence of Mahomed Ali and of the police witnesses, it cannot be treated as accomplice evidence. Mahomed Ali's story is, moreover, amply corroborated by independent evidence. The accused is found in possession of the marked money. He also produced from his pocket the Rs. 10 note which was given him on account of the price of the tickets sold. His explanation that the note and the money were thrust on him by the police, is a lie and an afterthought. He did not protest against it at the time of the arrest. He does not account for his presence at the tea shop where he was arrested. He does not explain what he was doing there at the time. The receipt, Ex. 1, is conclusive proof of his guilt. There is nothing to show that it is forged.

JUDGMENT.

JARDINE, J.—Mr. Jardine, as counsel for the prisoner Javecharam, has raised several questions on the law of evidence, which we will consider before dealing with the facts. He objects to the Magistrate recording and using as evidence the statements made by the other prisoner, Ahmed Hussein, while in the custody of the police, viz., that he had received the railway tickets from Javecharam and another. We are of opinion that this is an admission of a criminating circumstance on which the prosecution evidently rely, and which has weighed with the Magistrate [368] in his judgment on the facts. The ruling in Imperatrix v. Pandharinath (1), being applicable, we must hold that the admission of this statement as evidence was contrary to ss. 25 and 26 of the Indian Evidence Act.

Mr. Jardine then contended that the witness Mahomed Ali, as well as the detective Murar Rao, who supplied the marked money used as payment for the tickets, and the other two policemen, Mya Jan and Aga Ali, who were present as detectives when the alleged corrupt payment for the tickets was made to Javecharam, are participators in the crime, and that, therefore, their evidence, being that of accomplices, must be weighed with caution and requires corroboration, as settled by a long series of judgments—Queen Empress v. Maganlal (1) ; Queen Empress v. Chagan (2). But we find in the evidence no suggestion of any criminal act as done by Mya Jan and Aga Ali.

With regard to Murar Rao's supplying the marked money, we are not able to pronounce that this act makes him an accomplice. We believe that in an unreported case a similar act was so treated here, following the principle of Empress v. Umi (3). The action of the spy and informer, Mahomed Ali, in suggesting and initiating the present offence of selling these tickets, by going to the prisoner. Ahmed Hussein, and offering to buy some used tickets, does appear to this Court to have been a criminal offence, the act not being excused or justified by any exception in the Indian Penal Code, or by the doctrine which distinguishes the spy from the accomplice, applied by Lord Ellenborough in Rex v. Despard (4), by Mr. Justice Maule in Reg. v. Mullins (5), and by this Court in Queen-Empress v. Mona Puna (6) and Queen-Empress v. Shankar (7). Mahomed Ali appears from his own account to have been the first instigator of the present offence ; not merely a spy, who knowing of criminal doings, or doings which will culminate in a crime, merely pretends to concur with the perpetrators. Mere good intention does not ordinarily excuse a criminal act. As remarked by Cockburn, C. J., in the case of [369] the Confessional Unmasked, The Queen v. Hicklin (8), whom we quote about illegal proclamations of indemnity to criminals in Queen Empress v. Chagan (2), honest objects may not be attained by breaking the law, and a man must be taken to have intended what was the natural consequence of his act.

The strictness of the law and the habit of the Courts not to allow exceptions not sanctioned by the Legislature have been illustrated in several important judgments of this Court, e. g., in Maganlal's case (1), where we dealt with the excuse of fear as regards criminal acts done to avert supposed injury to the perpetrator, in Queen-Empress v. Ganesh Khanderao (9) as regards hoaxes and jokes carried too far. The reason may be found in the fact, that when an enterprise stamped as criminal by the law is once begun, the beginner, who without any immoral intention has started it, may soon find himself powerless to control the circumstances, the passions of others, or his own inclinations ; and so the very evil he sets himself to combat may result from his criminal act. He may set his trap to catch a habitual criminal, and the bait may be an enticement to a person who has not been tempted to the crime before. Therefore, as a safeguard to the temptor and the tempted, whose good faith may waver, as well as to other people put in peril, the law marks off certain acts as punishable. This discussion shows the need of appraising the action of Mahomed Ali, whom the learned counsel discredits as a breaker of the law and an accomplice.

We will now examine the authorities. At the trial of Colonel Despard for high treason, Lord Ellenborough says (p. 489) those persons do not partake of the criminal contamination of accomplices who enter into "communication with the conspirators with an orginal purpose of discovering their secret designs, and disclosing them for the benefit of the public." In Reg. v. Mullins, Mr. Justice Maule defined two sorts of witnesses. Of one sort he said (p. 531): "They were persons who understanding, as they say, that there were dangerous designs entertained by certain Chartist societies, joined the meetings and pretended to sympathise with [370] the views of the conspirators in order that they might communicate their designs to Government. They joined the scheme for the purpose of defeating it, and may be called spies." The others, he says, "were really Chartists, concurring fully in the criminal designs of the rest for a certain time, until getting alarmed, or from some other cause, they turned upon their former associates and gave information against them. These persons may truly be called accomplices." The learned Judge afterwards gives the following direction:—"An accomplice confesses himself a criminal and may have a motive for giving information, as it may purchase immunity for his offence. A spy, on the other hand, may be an honest man; he may think that the course he pursues is absolutely essential for the protection of his own interests and those of society; and if he does so, if he believes that there is no other method of counteracting the dangerous designs of wicked men, I can see no impropriety in his taking upon himself the character of an informer. The Government are, no doubt, justified in employing spies; and I do not see that a person so employed deserves to be blamed if he instigates offences no further than by pretending to concur with the perpetrators. Under such circumstances they are entirely distinguished, in fact and in principle, from accomplices, and although their evidence is entirely for the jury to judge of, I am bound to say that they are not such persons as it is the practice to say require corroboration."

We have to apply these principles to such indications as the evidence affords of the conduct of Mahomed Ali; and treating him as the first instigator of the offence, we are inclined, but not without doubt, to hold him to be an accomplice.

But in the present case the sagacity of the Court has to be applied to the whole evidence. Turning to the merits, we find, as indeed the Magistrate points out, that Mahomed is not confirmed by any other person as to Javecharam having written the highly incriminating receipt, Ex. 1, which was found on Mahomed. Neither is any pencil produced. It is argued that Javecharam could not have been so foolish as to give so damning a writing as this receipt. It is clear that Mahomed might have brought such a writing with him, and that he has an interest [371] in procuring a conviction. But, on the other hand, all our experience shows that criminals are often very rash; were it otherwise, many more would escape. Again, as the spy may be a liar about this incident, it may be remarked that the receipt chimes in with the trap laid by giving a note of Rs. 10 value and four marked rupees. This note and money were found on the prisoner, who says they were thrust upon him, as also the paper containing Mahomed's address. A careful study of the evidence induces us to believe that these articles had not been thrust on Javecharam against his will. He made no reasonable vigorous protest at the time. His story is inconsistent with his actions that morning: he does not explain what he was doing at his visits to the tea shop. Moreover, the detective Ali Aga deposes to seeing Javecharam receive the marked money from Mahomed and the other prisoner. The whole story told by the prosecution witnesses, including the events of the 28th and 29th January and the capture of Ahmed Hussein, appears to hang together; and even the incident of the receipt, Ex. 1, becomes less improbable when we remember that Javecharam was dealing with artful men, anxious to detect him and to produce good evidence in the Police Court. He got a large sum, considering his pay, viz. Rs. 10 for tickets received and Rs. 4 payment in advance; and it may well be that his avarice made him incautious and complaisant with these good paymasters. There appear to be no signs of falsehood in the evidence, which, moreover, the prisoner has not in any way rebutted. There is no reason to give more weight to his mere denial than to the evidence, which has been believed by the Magistrate who took it, and which contains much corroboration of Mahomed's story at all points. There being no rebutting evidence, the rule of the Privy Council, that when there are two conflicting stories the Court should believe the one which is the most probable, does not come into play.

For these reasons we confirm the sentence of one year's rigorous imprisonment awarded in respect of the first charge. We do not think the mere receipt of the Rs. 4 from the instigator, Mahomed Ali, and the promise of Javecharam to supply more used tickets, constitute the offence of abetment within the meaning of [372] s. 107 of the Indian Penal Code. We, therefore, acquit the prisoner of that offence and reverse the sentence of six months' rigorous imprisonment passed therefor.

IN RE RAGHUNATH MAKUND.* [4th April, 1894.]

Municipal Act (Bombay Act III of 1888), s. 353—Notice to a house-owner to reduce the height of his building given more than three months after its completion—"Completion"—Meaning of the word.*

One Raghunath Makund was served with a notice, under s. 353 of the City of Bombay Municipal Act (Bombay Act III of 1888), requiring him to reduce the height of a building which he had erected. The building was completed in June, 1893, and the notice was issued on 13th January, 1894. Raghunath was prosecuted for not complying with this notice. He contended that the notice was time-barred, as it had not been given within three months after the completion of the building. In answer to this plea it was urged, on behalf of the Municipality, that the building could not be said to have been completed, unless and until such accommodations as privies and cesspools had been executed in accordance with the requirements of the Health Department, and that therefore, the notice was within time.

Held, that the notice was time-barred. The word "completion" in s. 353 of Bombay Act III of 1888 must be taken in its ordinary sense, and the Court cannot read into the section "in accordance with sanitary regulations" or "sanitary officers' opinions."

THIS was a reference by P. H. Dastur, Fourth Presidency Magistrate, under s. 432 of the Code of Criminal Procedure (Act X of 1882).

The reference was in the following terms:—

"Mr. Raghunath Makund has built a new house at Girgaum Back Road. The width of the street on which it abuts is about 9' 7" and the height of this building from the ground level to the eaves is 47' 6."

"By by-law 30 of the building by-laws made by the Bombay Municipality it is provided that 'a person who shall erect a new building which abuts on a street of less than 50 feet in width. . . . shall not without the written permission of the Commissioner erect such a building to a greater height than one and a half times the width of that street.'

[373] "This building is, therefore, clearly in contravention of the by-law, and a notice dated 13th January, 1894, was issued to Mr. Raghunath requiring him under s. 353 of the Municipal Act to reduce the height of his building. This has not been done, and it is now contended on behalf of the defendant that the notice is time-barred.

"Now s. 353 above cited requires that the notice should be given within three months after the completion of the building, and as a matter of fact I find from the evidence that the house in question was completed in its physical sense in June last, and the only work then left undone was the connection of the sewer with the drains, which was also completed in September. I hold, therefore, that the notice issued on the 13th January is time-barred.

"It is, however, contended on behalf of the Municipality, that because all the requirements of the Health Department have not been complied with in the construction of this building, it can never be said to have been duly completed, and that, therefore, this notice is within time.

"The objections to this building are enumerated in a document filed in this case, and are briefly as follows:" (the reference then stated the defects in the pipes and cesspools connected with the privies).

"Now, it seems to me absurd to hold that because these defects exist in the building, therefore it is incomplete. I understand the word to mean physical completion, and not a completion as is desired by the officers of the Health Department. For, if such a construction were put on the word, there would practically be no limitation to the action of the Municipality under this section, and any house, no matter how long it has stood in this city, could be brought within the purview of the section, by the Health Department finding some flaws in its construction.

"Indeed, the matter seems to be so clear that I was reluctant to trouble the High Court about it, but Mr. Burder cites a case decided by the learned Chief Magistrate in which it was said an opposite view was expressed and as the point raised is of some importance to the public, I have found it desirable to make this reference."

The reference was heard by a Division Bench (Jardine and Ranade, JJ.).

JUDGMENT.

JARDINE, J.—The question referred by the Magistrate under s. 432 of the Code of Criminal Procedure relates to the meaning to be given to the words "completion thereof," in s 353 of Bombay Act III of 1888, used in regard to notice about "the erection of a building." The Municipality contends that a building is not completed, unless and until such accommodations [374] as privies and cesspools have been executed in accordance with sanitary regulations. In the present case, the building has been provided with these accommodations. It is so far complete. We are of opinion that the word "completion" must be taken in its ordinary meaning, and that the Court must not read into the section "in accordance with sanitary regulations" or sanitary officers' opinions."

KUVERJI (Original Plaintiff), Appellant v. BABAI (Original Defendant), Respondent,* [12th May, 1890].

Estoppel—Indian Evidence Act (I of 1872), s. 115—Estoppel by conduct—Mistake of law—Adoption—Acknowledgment of adoption.

One Ganpatrav Raje Shirke was possessed of considerable property both in British territory and in the territory of His Highness the Gaikwar. He died in 1858, leaving three childless widows, Laxmibai, Savitribai and Babai. Shortly after his death, the plaintiff Kuverji, who was then a minor, was taken to Baroda by Laxmibai, and on her representations as well as those of her co-widows he was acknowledged by the Gaikwar as their adopted son, and as such entitled to succeed to all the estate and privileges enjoyed by the deceased Ganpatrav. For several years afterwards the widows treated the plaintiff as the legitimate heir and successor of Ganpatrav in respect of the Baroda property. With regard to the estate in British territory, the widows at first put forward Kuverji as the adopted son of Ganpatrav. On their application a certificate of heirship was issued under Reg. VIII of 1827, declaring that "the Bais were the widow heirs, and the minor Kuverji the son heir, of the deceased Ganpatrav." In one case the widows obtained a decree as guardians of the minor, on a bond executed in favour of Kuverji as heir to Ganpatrav. When the Bombay summary Settlement Act (II of 1863) was passed, the widows accepted the summary settlement in respect of the inam holdings of their deceased husband, and thereupon the holdings were entered in their names in the Government records. Finding themselves secure in the possession of their husband's estate, the ladies now dropped the allegation of adoption, and dealt with the property in British territory in their own right, and not as trustees or guardians of the minor Kuverji. In 1871 Kuverji sought to have part of the property in British territory transferred to his own name as the adopted son of Ganpatrav. The widows resisted this attempt and denied his adoption. In 1881, Kuverji made a similar attempt, but failed, the Revenue authorities having eventually resolved to leave the question of Kuverji's title by adoption to be determined by the Civil Court.

[375] In 1884 Kuverji filed the present suit against the widows of Ganpatrav for a declaration of his adoption by Ganpatrav and for possession of Ganpatrav's estate in British territory. The widows denied the factum of the adoption, and disputed its validity. They also contended that the suit was barred by limitation. The Agent for Sardars in the Dekkhan, who tried the case, dismissed the suit, holding that the plaintiff's adoption by Ganpatrav was not proved, and that the claim was barred by limitation, the widows having been in adverse possession of the property in British territory for more than twelve years.

The plaintiff appealed against this decision to the High Court, contending (inter alia) that the widows were estopped by their conduct from denying the plaintiff's adoption.

Held, that the widows were not estopped.

Per BIRDWOOD, J.—The fact that the plaintiff was put forward by the widows as their adopted son in the Baroda territory did not estop them from disputing the plaintiff's allegation that he was adopted by Ganpatrav. Nor was the circumstance that the widows and the plaintiff obtained a joint certificate of heirship to Ganpatrav in British territory conclusive as an estoppel.

Per JARDINE, J.—There was no estoppel, (1) because there was nothing to show that the plaintiff had been led to alter his position in life through belief in any misrepresentations made by the widows, and (2) because the widows might have been under the same mistake of law as the plaintiff, viz., that the Gaikwar's recognition of his adoption created a status operative everywhere, as well in British territory as in the Gaikwar's territory.

APPEAL from the decision of E. T. Candy, Acting Agent for Sardars in the Dekkhan, in suit No. 3 of 1884. The plaintiff sued for a declaration that he was the adopted son of one Ganpntrav Raje Shirke, and as such entitled to have his name entered in Ganpatrav's place in the Government records, and to recover possession of the whole of Ganpatrav's property in British territory, excepting a portion set apart for the defendant's maintenance.

Ganpatrav belonged to a Maratha family of high rank and position in the Dekkhan. He was related to His Highness the Gaikwar of Baroda, and owned a paga or the hereditary right to command a certain number of horse in the service of the Gaikwar. He was possessed of considerable property both in British India and in the Gaikwar's territory. He died in 1858, leaving three childless widows, viz., Laxmibai, Savitribai and Babai. Within a few months after his death the plaintiff Kuverji, who was then a minor about twelve years old, was taken to Baroda by Laxmibai, and on her representations as well as those of her co-widows the Gaikwar publicly acknowledged Kuverji [376] as their adopted son, and as such entitled to succeed to all the honours and privileges enjoyed by the deceased Ganpatrav. Since that time the ladies treated the plaintiff as the legitimate heir and successor to the whole of their husband's estate in Baroda territory.

With respect to the estate in British India, the ladies at first put forward Kuverji as the adopted son of Ganpatrav. On their application the District Judge of Poona granted a certificate of heirship under Reg. VIII of 1827, declaring that "the Bais were the widow heirs, and the minor Kuverji, the son heir, of the deceased Ganpatrav." On one occasion they obtained a decree as guardians of their minor son on a bond executed in favour of Kuverji as heir to Ganpatrav.

In 1863, when the Bombay Summary Settlement Act (II of 1863) was passed, the widows accepted the summary settlement in respect of the inam holdings belonging to their deceased husband. And thereupon the holdings were entered in their names in the Government records. Finding themselves thus secure in the possession of their husband's estate, they dropped the allegation of Kuverji's adoption, and began to deal with the property in British territory in their own right, and not as trustees or guardians of the minor Kuverji.

In 1871 Laxmibai died. Thereupon Kuverji applied to the revenue authorities to transfer the property in the Satara District from her name to his own. Savitribai and Babai resisted this attempt, and utterly repudiated his status as the adopted son of Ganpatrav.

In 1881 Kuverji made a similar attempt to have the property in the Konkan transferred to his name, but failed, the revenue authorities having finally resolved to leave the question of Kuverji's title by adoption to be decided by the Civil Court.

In 1884 Kuverji filed the present suit against Savitribai and Babai to establish his adoption, and to recover his adoptive father's property in British India.

The suit was filed in the Court of the Agent for Sardars in the Dekkhan. Pending the suit, Savitribai died. Thereupon the suit was proceeded with against Babai alone.

[377] Babai in her written statement pleaded that the plaintiff was not adopted by her husband Ganpatrav, that Ganpatrav was not competent to adopt the plaintiff, and that the suit was barred by limitation.

The agent for Sardars held that the plaintiffs' adoption by Ganpatrav was not proved; that even if the ceremony of adoption was performed by Ganpatrav, it was invalid, as he was suffering from sanious leprosy; that the widows of Ganpatrav held the property in British territory in their own right, and not on sufferance from the plaintiff in lieu of maintenance; that since 1873 they utterly repudiated the plaintiff's status as the adopted son of Ganpatrav; and that their possession having been adverse to the plaintiff for more than twelve years, the suit was barred by limitation.

With regard to the property at Baroda, the Agent for Sardars found as follows:—

"It is evident that some months after Ganpatrav's death (27th December, 1858) the eldest widow, Laxmibai, went to Baroda with the present plaintiff, Kuverji, who was then a boy about twelve or thirteen years old, and was related to the Gaikwar; and it is conclusively shown that Khanderav acknowledged Kuverji as the successor to all the estate and privileges enjoyed by the deceased Ganpatrav. I do not say that it is shown that Khanderav admitted Kuverji as a son validly adopted by Ganpatrav. The presumption is, I think, to the contrary. But it is clear that on Laxmibai's representations, Khanderav fully recognized Kuverji as the son and heir of Ganpatrav, whether as adopted by Ganpatrav or by Ganpatrav's widow Laxmibai. It may easily be understood that the authorities were not so particular in Baroda in recognizing an adopted son as they would be in British territory. Khanderav was closely connected with Ganpatrav. He would naturally listen to Laxmibai's request not to let Ganpatrav's important rank and estate lapse for failure of male successor; and so he recognized Kuverji as son of Ganpatrav, and a few years afterwards married him to Kamabai, the daughter of his brother Malharrav.

* * * * *

"In my opinion it is clear that for several years after Ganpatrav's death the three Bais (widows) fully recognized Kuverji as son and heir to Ganpatrav in respect of all the Baroda property; but the property in British territory was entered in their names, and they did not show by their conduct that they considered themselves trustees for Kuverji in respect of the property."

On these grounds the Agent for Sardars dismissed the plaintiff's suit.

Against this decision the plaintiff appealed to the High Court, contending (inter alia) that the widows of Ganpatrav were [378] estopped by their conduct from disputing either the factum or the validity of the plaintiff's adoption.

JUDGMENTS.

BIRDWOOD, J.—The history of this case and the evidence relied on by the parties are fully and carefully set out in Mr. Candy's judgment. On a consideration of the evidence, and of the arguments presented to us at the hearing of the appeal, I am clearly of opinion that his decision is correct. The evidence relied on by the plaintiff to prove the alleged adoption is meagre; whereas, considering the rank of the Shirke family, an event of such importance would, in all probability, if it ever took place, have been established, even after the lapse of twenty-six years, by ampler and better evidence. It certainly weakens the case for the plaintiff that several persons who might have been called to prove it have not been called; while, on the other hand, the defendants call several witnesses who were so closely connected with the family that they would most probably have been able to give evidence regarding the ceremony if it was performed by the deceased Ganpatrav; and yet these persons distinctly deny that there was any adoption by Ganpatrav. The impression left on my mind by a perusal of the evidence is that either the alleged adoption never took place, or that, if it did, was not performed with such publicity as is claimed for it by one of the witnesses, and, moreover, that Ganpatrav must at the time (9 or 10 P.M, on the 26th December, 1858) have been so reduced in strength by the disease of which he died at 2 P.M. on the 27th December, that, if not unconscious, he was most probably incapable of understanding the nature of his act or indeed of performing any act "requiring the exercise of the powers of judgment and reflection." I have no difficulty, therefore, in holding with the Agent for Sardars that "the adoption is not proved and was invalid, even if the ceremony was performed."

[379] The argument of the learned counsel for the appellant was, however, mainly directed to the question whether the defendants were not estopped by their conduct from denying the adoption. There can be no question that the plaintiff was put forward by the defendant as an adopted son in the Baroda territory, and that he derived great personal advantage from the recognition by His Highness the Gaikwar of his status as an adopted son of the deceased Ganpatrav. But I see no reason to dissent from the conclusion arrived at by the Agent that it was as a son adopted by the widows of Ganpatrav, not by Ganpatrav himself, that the plaintiff was admitted to the honours and property of the Shirke family at Baroda. There is no evidence to warrant a finding, in the terms of s. 115 of the Evidence Act, that the respondent has, by her declaration, act or omission, intentionally caused or permitted the plaintiff to believe that he was adopted by Ganpatrav and to act upon such belief. No such plea was set up on behalf of the plaintiff in the Court below; and it is obvious that, even if the widows did not themselves adopt the plaintiff,—a matter which does not form the subject of inquiry in the present case,—any belief as to such an adoption which they may by their conduct have induced in the plaintiff's mind would not estop them from now denying that the plaintiff was adopted by Ganpatrav. It is not impossible that the plaintiff and the defendants were really acting in concert at Baroda. If that was so, then it would not have been in consequence of any conduct on the part of the respondent, or her co-widows, who are now dead, that the plaintiff consented to give up his rights in his natural father's family in order to secure wealth and position at Baroda.

Nor again, is the circumstance that the widows and the plaintiff obtained a joint certificate of heirship to Ganpatrav from the Poona District Court under Reg. VIII of 1827 conclusive as an estoppel. The circumstance is susceptible of the explanation suggested by Mr. Candy.

The decision of the Court below must, in my opinion, be upheld on the merits; and I think it unnecessary, therefore, to discuss the point of limitation arising in this case, which has also been decided by the Agent against the plaintiff.

[380] The decree of the Court below must be confirmed with costs.

JARDINE, J.—This suit was filed on the 2nd July, 1884, in the Court of the Agent for Sardars in the Dekkhan. The plaint sets forth that the plaintiff Kuverji was in 1858 adopted by Ganpatrav bin Waghojirav Raji Shirke before his death. The cause of action is dated as of the 10th October, 1881. The prayer among other reliefs claims a declaration that the plaintiff is the adopted son of Ganpatrav, and a decree for possession of certain property in the British territories under the Presidency of Bombay. The defendants Savitribai and Babai, widows of Ganpatrav, contested the whole claim, alleging that the plaintiff was not adopted by Ganpatrav, that Ganpatrav was not competent to adopt, and that the suit was barred by limitation. The learned Agent for Sardars rejected the claim with costs, for reasons fully set forth in his judgment, holding it to be time-barred and to fail on the merits.

The defendant Savitribai died before the decree was passed. Kuverji has appealed here, making Babai the sole respondent.

Towards the end of the hearing, Mr. Vasudev for the appellant faintly argued that if this Court were to hold the adoption by Ganpatrav unproved or invalid, the appellant is entitled to succeed on proof that, after the death of Ganpatrav, his widows or one of them adopted Kuverji at Baroda, which adoption had been recognized as valid by Khanderav Gaikwar of Baroda, the prince in whose territories this adoption occurred. This point is also taken in the petition of appeal. But in opening the case for the appellant, Mr. Jardine, his counsel, practically repudiated this ground, resting his client's case on the adoption by Ganpatrav and describing the Agent's finding about the acts done at Baroda as setting up a new case, his own being that these acts were not an adoption there and then, but evidence and recognition of the adoption made in Ganpatrav's lifetime. It appears to us clear, from the pleadings and proceedings, that the parties went to trial on the question of an adoption by Ganpatrav: and following the rule of decision secundum allegata et probata we must confine the appeal to that question.

The adoption by Ganpatrav is alleged to have been made at his house at Kadve, in the territory of the Pant Sachiv, which is [381] in the Dekkhan. It is not disputed that Ganpatrav died on the 27th December, 1858, in the day time. The adoption is said to have occurred during the previous night.

Ganpatrav was a man of high family and rank. He held a lucrative hereditary command of horse under the Gaikwars of Baroda and other property in the Gaikwar's territory, to which it is admitted Kuverji has succeeded without opposition. Ganpatrav had a sister married to Sayaji Gaikwar; and a daughter married to Khanderav Gaikwar. Khanderav admittedly recognized Kuverji as son of Ganpatrav and got him married in 1867 to the daughter of Malharrav, who succeeded to the gadi of the Gaikwar's State. It was Laxmibai, the senior widow of Ganpatrav, who soon after his death took Kuverji to Baroda. It is not denied for the respondent that all the widows assented to what the Gaikwar Khanderav did on Kuverji's behalf; but when we pointedly put the question to the appellant's pleader, he did not deny that what happened at Baroda was substantially to Kuverji's advancement in life, a matter important with regard to what was contended here, that the respondent is bound by estoppel.

In the Court of Agent for Sardars it was contended that the widows (defendants) had in documents and by acts and conduct admitted the status of plaintiff as Ganpatrav's adopted son; but although no issue about estoppel was raised below, it was urged in the appeal that these admissions and conduct amounted to estoppel under s. 115 of the Indian Evidence Act, precluding them from denying the fact or validity of the alleged adoption by Ganpatrav. Much of this evidence relates to Kuverji's time of residence at Baroda and to the affairs transacted there and the property in the Gaikwar's territory about which the Gaikwar had power to pass orders. The Agent states his opinion that the widows treated Kuverji as an adopted son, qua Baroda affairs and the property under the Gaikwar's power; but did not recognize Kuverji's rights, as adopted son, except for a short period, qua the property in British India, most or all of which was held of the British Government.

The Agent for Sardars may be expected to have a considerable acquaintance with the past policy of the Government as regards [382] the recognition of adoptions in families in hereditary possession of inams and allowances granted by the Peshwas and other predecessors of the British Government. I agree with the Agent in the surmise he puts forth after discussing the proceedings before the Inam Commission in Ganpatrav's time and his death—Exs. 262, 263, 49, 88, 264, 266, 82, and 241. The widows, he thinks, had reason to fear that the British authorities would refuse to recognize any alleged adoption of a son by Ganpatrav, because it had not been formally sanctioned by the Government. The previous policy was reviewed by the Government of Bombay and a strict practice directed for the future under the orders of the Court of Directors in 1855 as appears from the official records on Captain Cowper's minute about adoptions and the statement of Sir J. P. Willoughby, a distinguised member of the Bombay Government, in his discussion of the Ahmednagar State case—Bombay Government Selections, New Series, Vol. XII, p. 188, and Vol. XXVIII, p. 61.

In the absence of evidence regarding motive, the Court can only state it as a surmise that the widows or their advisers may also have had reason to apprehend that the Government might in the absence of a male heir resume then, or on the widows' deaths, all or some of the property held of the Government. Whether the allegations were true or false, they may have thought that it suited the family interests to put forward a male heir,—that is, by alleging that Ganpatrav had adopted a son. It may also be surmised that one reason for dropping action on the allegations made by the widows' agent Chimnaji in Ex. 88 and on the certificate of heirship, Ex. 82, in 1860 may have been the levity or indifference of the Government which refrained from resumption of the property as is shown by orders dated 1862 and 1863.

Turning from the state of affairs in British India at the time to that existing in Baroda, I am of opinion that the learned Agent is right in his view that what was done there must be considered in relation with the power of the reigning prince, a factor which could not but greatly influence the conduct of all the members of the family. The Gaikwars, in those days at least, were not governed by the restraints of constitutional monarchs. If any one [383] had been brave enough to tell the Gaikwar, as Coke did King James I (case of prohibitions del Rey. 6 Coke R.), that he was inferior to the law, it is likely enough that the Gaikwar would have been greatly offended and said, as King James did, that this was treason. Probably the maxim rex nil potest jubere nisi per curiam legitime constitutam did not apply. There is nothing to show that Khanderav Gaikwar made or caused to be made any inquiry into the fact of an adoption of Kuverji by Ganpatrav. The Agent for Sardars inclines to think that as his dispositions were favourable to the ladies of the Shirke family, he readily allowed them to adopt a successor to succeed to the valuable property in his territory, a male being required by custom. I coucur in the statement of the Agent that Khanderav acknowledged Kuverji as the successor to all the estate and privileges enjoyed by the deceased Ganpatrav. The evidence relied on by the plaintiff shows that the recognition was made publicly at a Court ceremonial. It was most effectual in its consequences and advantageous to Kuverji, the widows, and probably to all the Shirke family. This solemn act of the Gaikwar cannot, therefore be treated as outside the range of jurisprudence. It may have led the widows into some mistake about its legal effect on Kuverji's status in British India and on the property in British India. It is necessary, then, to advert to its legal effect as well as to the views which the widows might naturally take of it in order to weigh the subsequent conduct of the widows and to estimate the meaning of their reference to Kuverji in the documents of later date for the purpose of seeing how far the Court can go in treating this conduct and these documents as estoppel or as admissions.

The Agent for Sardars has, I think, rightly estimated the force of the Gaikwar's act. He has practically treated it as according to Bar (Savigny's Private International Law, Guthrie's Translation, p. 263) the older writers treated legitimation bestowed per rescriptum principis, confining its effect to the territory of the grantor. See also the Note on Legitimation and Adoption in Story's Conflict of Laws, 8th ed., p. 142. I am inclined also to the opinion that in order to give a title to immoveable property in British India it is requisite that the adoption should be valid according to the lex loci rei sitoe: Wheaton's International Law, [384] Boyd's ed., p. 118. In applying the doctrine of estoppel where the parties may have been in doubt or under mistake as to the law, the peculiar circumstances must be kept in mind in order to explain the conduct. Here I think an illustration can be found in the law of legitimation. The interest of all parties coincided in getting the Gaikwar to treat Kuverji as a lawful son of Ganpatrav; exactly as the owner of landed estate in both England and Normandy at the time when the Statute of Merton was passed, having a bastard son, might advisedly marry the mother in order to legitimate the bastard per subsequens matrimonium under the canon law prevailing in Normandy, so that he might inherit the estate in that country. See Birtwhistle v. Vardill (1). There would be more motive for entering into wedlock if the legitimation of the ante natus saved those estates from confiscation; and parental pride would be still more deeply engaged if as a further result he were ennobled and admitted by marriage into the princely family. We would rather expect all future mention of the ante natus to be affectionate or at least respectful, and at any rate not such as would offend the susceptibilities of the despotic prince who had advanced the boy. In this way, ordinary allusions in letters and ordinary affectionate relations can be explained, and explained as existing, whether or not there was any acknowledgment of right of the son to the property in the other country where the law excluded him from inheritance.

Applying these principles to the facts, I would say that the widows' allusions to the plaintiff's heirship are almost irrelevant in the present suit, unless they distinctly relate to the property in British India: and as regards the law, the widows and their advisers may have been perplexed as to the legal effect of the acts of the Gaikwar. Similar questions as to the effect given by the comity of States have led to different opinions among Jurists and Judges, of which In re Goodman's Trusts (2) is an illustration. One reason why I would confine the effect of the Gaikwar's recognition to the territory of the Gaikwar is that it does not appear to have been a judicial act. Its effect was that the property there enjoyed by Ganpatrav was not confiscated by the prince. [385] The domicile of the plaintiff appears to have been in the Pant Sachiv's country, until he went to Baroda after Ganpatrav's death.

After this endeavour to state the peculiar circumstances of the family, I now advert to the evidence on various questions of fact which have been fully argued.

As to the factum of the ceremony of adoption by Ganpatrav, I agree with the Agent for Sardars that it is not proved. The three eye-witnesses, Baherji (witness 135), father of the plaintiff, Tanaji (witness 107), brother of Baherji, and on his own statement next heir to Ganpatrav, and Vithal Narayan (witness 140), a family priest, are in some points discrepant with each other. This Vithal and Kashiram Khanvalkar (witness 134) live at Baroda and are dependents of the plaintiff. If, as one of these witnesses says, there were above hundred people present when the sugar was given, more witnesses ought to have been called. As the Agent notices, there is no trace of any letter to the Agent for Sardars announcing the adoption. There is also no written announcement suggested to the Gaikwar of Baroda, nor to the prince in whose territory at Kadve the alleged adoption occurred, the Pant Sachiv, nor to any of the relatives or acquaintances of rank.

The alleged ceremony is placed at Kadve during the night preceding the day of December 27th, 1858, during 8 to 10 P.M. During the appeal it was pointed out by Mr. Branson for the respondent, that it is also the plaintiff's case that Ganpatrav died on the 27th December at 2 P.M. This is admitted. He urges that the discrepancy changing the date of the adoption to the 26th December is designed with a view to leave a reasonable time of consciousness between the ceremony and the death. Mr. Vasudev, for the appellant, tried to explain the matter as follows:—The witnesses have adhered to one native date, Margashirsh, Vadya 8th; and he produced a native almanac of the year 1858 to show that this Vadya 8 begins according to native computation some time in the night following our day 26th December. But he did not show or argue that Vadya 8 began so soon as 10 P M. of the 26th December; and, therefore, I do not think the discrepancy is explained, nor is there any sufficient reason to [386] suppose that the witnesses compute time in the exact manner we were asked to presume.

On considering the meagre and discrepant evidence above noticed, the absence of the usual announcements to the British Government, the Gaikwar and the Pant Sachiv, the shortness of time before the death, and the serious illness of Ganpatrav, I incline to the opinion of the Agent for Sardars that it is not proved that Ganpatrav was of sufficient capacity at the time to understand the nature of such an act as adoption—Tayammaul v. Sashachalla (1).

The Agent for Sardars has recorded a finding that even supposing the plaintiff was adopted by Ganpatrav, the adoption was invalid because Ganpatrav was suffering from sanious leprosy. Evidence was taken on the subject, and the point was argued below and here. But it is contended for the appellant that this Court ought not to act on this finding, as there was no issue about sanious leprosy, nor any allegation in the pleadings; the only issue at all applicable being couched in these general terms. "Is the plaintiff the lawfully adopted son of the deceased Ganpatrav?"

(1) 10 M.I.A. 429.

If it were necessary to decide the question of sanious leprosy, I am of opinion that we would use a right discretion by referring an issue for trial, following the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council in the case cited to us, Oolagappa Chetty v. Hon. D. Arbuthnot (1), where their Lordships say of a general issue "that issue was too general; it involved several mixed questions of law and fact, and did not sufficiently direct the attention of the parties to the main question of fact necessary to be decided."

The evidence about what Khanderav Gaikwar did in regard to the plaintiff's status, is meagre. The plaintiff's witness, 137, Hari Vithal, makes statements to the effect that the Gaikwar assented to the senior widow Laxmibai returning to Dekkhan to adopt Kuverji and to obtain the sanction of the British Government. After consideration I agree in the view taken by the Agent for Sardars and stated in different paras. of his judgment. There is no evidence that the Gaikwar made inquiry about the [387] fact of the ceremony or its validity. There is evidence of what the British Resident, in 1871, calls a sanction; or what may be called a recognition of Kuverji's status as heir. Some accounts of May, 1860, show payments on account of an adoption already past "dattak ghetlya badal;" but the terms used are concise and ambiguous, as may be expected in mere accounts. The recognition and its results depended on the mere will of the prince: Kuverji was his relation, and his legitimation of Kuverji was tantamount to abstaining from confiscating the property to the benefit of his own exchequer. If Khanderav looked on Kuverji and his family with affection, it suited him and the friends of Kuverji as well as the widows who looked for maintenance that the property should be continued to Kuverji.

I now turn to the evidence relied on as admissions of the alleged adoption, and as constituting estoppel. It has been argued for the appellant that the respondent cannot urge that Kuverji has the status of adopted son in the Gaikwar's territory, and has not that status in British India. But the analogous case of the ante natus shows this argument to be unfounded. A large number of letters have been put in by the plaintiff in which he is mentioned by the widows in terms which it is said presume close relationship, e.g., the word "chiranjiv" which is a diminutive with a mixed sense of respect and endearment like the Italian "signorino" There occur also a good many formal blessings. But considering that Kuverji was by birth a relation, and by status an adopted son at Baroda where he usually dwelt, these words might reasonably be used to him; they are not restricted to sons. It has been pointed out also by Mr. Branson that in none of them is he called their adopted son and seldom their son. It followed from the recognition of Kuverji by the Gaikwar that he should perform such family shradhs as were required to be done, he performing them at Baroda; while there is one document at least which suggests an inference that the widow meant to perform a shraāh herself.

As regards the plaintiff and the widows living and eating together, I take these facts as evidence of familiar relationship, but not as admissions that the plaintiff was entitled to the property in British India. I concur generally in the conclusions drawn by [388] the Agent for Sardars regarding the memorials and correspondence between Government, the Resident and the Darbar in 1871 and 1872 which are sufficiently set forth in the judgment below. I do not infer that the respondent admitted the plaintiff's adoption by Ganpatrav or his title to the British India property; and to be relevant the admissions must relate to these facts.

I now turn to this part of the admissions. Exhibit 88, dated the 5th January, 1860, is a very plain admission in a petition to the Inam Commissioner of the alleged adoption. The certificate of heirship, Ex. 82, dated the 14th August, 1860, which is worded in extraordinary terms, coincides therewith. The Judge who issued it could only have supposed Kuverji to be a "son heir" by supposing him to be an adopted son. In 1862 the Government intimated that it would continue the estate: and so far as the widows are concerned, it may be assumed that they got what they wanted, and did not care to press for a recognition of the adoption. I see no reason to differ from the Agent's statement of this part of the case. It is clear that in 1860 the respondent relied on the fact of the adoption. This explains the filing a suit in 1863 in Kuverji's name on a bond executed in his favour in 1859. But this piece of evidence is slight and isolated: it is also neutralized by the fact of other proceedings being taken in the name of the widows about this time.

It is to be remarked about the money transaction, the petitions and other matters of business, that Babai and, doubtless, the other widows were parda ladies and must have relied on what their advisers told them. Their position was one of some difficulty, as they may have been informed that an unrecognized adoption would not avail either before the Government of Bombay or the Gaikwar: and we may not safely assume that all their statements have been true or always made in good faith. In Tayammaul v. Sashachalla, the Judicial Committee take into consideration the experience of our Courts, that the doings of Hindu females in matters of legal business are not always the results of personal knowledge.

The power of attorney (Ex. 49) is much relied on by the plaintiff in connection with the certificate of heirship. It is only [389] a copy of an uncertified copy of some original of the foreign State of the Pant Sachiv. I do not think it is proved, and even if it were, I would not draw any important inference from it.

In August and September, 1884, after this suit had been instituted, Savitribai seems to have made written admissions of the plaintiff's adoption —Exs. 100, 101 and 103—and to have been promised maintenance. It would appear from these papers that the plaintiff's status as adopted son has not yet been recognized by the Pant Sachiv or his officers. The value of these documents as admissions is reduced by the repudiation in Ex. 112, and by Savitribai giving no evidence about them, being too feeble when put in the witness box. The evidence about the mortgage in 1879 discloses a sort of admission by the respondent. But, as pointed out by the Agent for Sardars, pardanishin ladies are very much in the hands of their agents, and it is familiar experience that such people are very often induced to make statements or do things in order to get a present advantage, which statements and acts are used against them in later litigation as admissions, and complicate the evidence that comes before the tribunal.

I think the various admissions are capable of the explanations suggested, and that they do not impair the impression arising from the other evidence that there was no adoption. If there had been, there would have been plenty of written announcements and evidence of numerous eye-witnesses. The plaintiff has not even called his own brother, who is said to have been present. It is vain to ask the Court to infer an adoption of so public a kind from the vague allusions in letters written about other matters, from forms of compliments, and such doubtful things.

It remains to deal with what the plaintiff's counsel relies on here more than on the evidence of the factum, i.e., estoppel. Now this was not set up in the pleadings below. I do not think it is shown that the plaintiff has been led to alter his position in life through belief in any misrepresentations made by the widows or at least by Babai. He has not appeared as a witness or deposed to that effect. It is not clear that he has [390] left his natural family or lost any estate there. His going to Baroda must have been with the consent of his parents and relatives: his father has lived for years at Baroda. All that can be positively determined is that the Gaikwar Khanderav, being a sovereign prince whose will was law, determined to treat him as heir to Ganpatrav. He could have done this whether there was an adoption or not; he might have conveyed the property to the plaintiff by a new gift; such matters depended on the will of the Gaikwar, except so far as the British Government might in its mere grace interfere diplomatically. Malharrav followed the same line of conduct. The plaintiff has thus gained largely in wealth and rank. What he has done may, therefore, be referred to his self-interest and the advice of his natural family and the patronage of the princes. He made no attempt to get the alleged adoption by Gangatrav recognized by the British Government till 1871. He has not got his name entered in place of Ganpatrav as a sardar of the third class. He does not appear to have sought or obtained recognition by the Pant Sachiv. He appears to me very much in the position of an ante natus whom his family with natural pleasure might have seen recognized and advanced by the sovereign of Normandy or Aquitaine, and who might under bad advice set up those facts as estoppel to defeat the heir to real estate in England. The conduct of all parties can be accounted for without supposing that the plaintiff's advancement in life is due to any belief in misrepresentations of Babai; and on the view I take of the effect of the Gaikwar's recognition as a matter of comity, I do not see how the plaintiff's rights in his natural family can be adversely affected thereby, at least as regards British India and probably as regards the Pant Sachiv's State. If the plaintiff has suffered loss in either territory, he ought to have given evidence thereof. But then he did not rely on estoppel at the trial. It is also to be remembered that Babai may have been under the same mistake of law as the plaintiff. His pleader argues that the Gaikwar's recognition created a status operative everywhere, which is the effect given by the Courts in France and Germany to legitimation granted by a foreign sovereign—Savigny's Private International Law, p. 264. The widows may have [391] thought the same, and in such case there is no estoppel—Gopee Lall v. Mussamut Sree Chundraolee Buhoojee (1); Vishnu v. Krishnan (2); Jhinguri Tewari v. Durga (3). For these reasons, I would confirm the decree of the Agent for Sardars with costs.

Section 30 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882) authorizes some of the rayats of a village to sue the proprietor of it for themselves and the other rayats for a declaration of their general rights, and for an injunction restraining the proprietor from interfering with their enjoyment of those rights.

In 1806 the East India Company granted a village to Ardeshir Dady, subject to the rayats' customary rights and privileges which were embodied in Reg. I of of 1808, but the deed of conveyance was not passed until 1819, and it was then executed to the executors of Ardeshir, who had died in the meantime. This deed made no reference to rights and privileges of the rayats. In 1868 the defendant purchased the village from its legal owners. In 1889, plaintiffs sued defendant for themselves and on behalf of the other rayats of the village to enforce their rights. The defendant pleaded that as the deed of conveyance of 1819 made no mention of these rights, he was not bound by them.

Held, that as at the time of the conveyance of the village to the defendant, the lands were in the occupation of the rayats, the defendaut ought to have made inquiry as to their rights. Having failed to do this he was bound by the rights of the tenants as much as if they had been specially mentioned in the conveyance to him.

SECOND APPEAL from the decision of R. S. Tipnis, Acting Assistant Judge of Thana, amending the decree of Rao Saheb D. W. Bhat, Second Class Subordinate Judge.

The village of Malad in the Salsette Taluka of the Thana District was granted to one Ardeshir Dady by the East India Company, the original owner of the village, in exchange for other property situated in the Fort of Bombay conveyed by him to the East India Company. Before possession of the village was given, the rayats were consulted about their wishes in this respect, and the Patils, Mahtaras and rayats submitted certain stipulations with regard to their customary rights and privileges, and consented to the proposed transfer subject to those stipulations.

In 1806 Ardeshir Dady was put in possession of the village on the express condition of his maintaining the several Curumbis in the enjoyment of their respective pieces of land, and of his preserving the rights and privileges of the rayats in accordance with the above-mentioned stipulations. These stipulations have been embodied in Reg. I of 1808.

There being some dispute with respect to the price of the land sold by Ardeshir to the East India Company, the deed of conveyance was not executed until 1819, when it was executed by the said Company to Kharshetji Ardeshir and Jahangir Ardeshir, &c., as executors of the will of the said Ardeshir, he having died in 1810. In this deed no reference was made to the stipulations made by the rayats when they agreed to become the tenants of Ardeshir.

In 1868 defendant puchased the said village from its then legal owners.

The defendant having interfered with the enjoyment of the said rights by some of the rayats, plaintiffs instituted the present suit in 1889, for themselves and on behalf of Patils, Mhataras, Curumbis and rayats of the said village, under s. 30 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), praying for a declaration [393] of their rights and privileges, and for a permanent injunction restraining the defendant from interfering with their exercise and enjoyment of the said rights and privileges.

They prayed for the following declarations :—

(1) That they are permanent tenants or sutidars of Malad.

(2) That the khot is not entitled to receive as assessment more than two-thirds of the measure of the land in faras at the rate of Rs. 20 per muda of rice.

(3) That the khot should remit the assessment in times of scarcity.

(4) That the khot should not force them to take his permission before cutting, threshing or taking home the rice.

(5) That the khot should allow them to sell, mortgage, inherit or otherwise alienate their suti lands, without imposing additional conditions upon the transferee at the time of change of name in the revenue records.

(6) That they are entitled to pay in instalments like Government rayats, and that the khot is not entitled to attach their crops at his own instance.

(7) That the khot is not entitled to levy any assessment on the grass and varkas lands, whether they grow grass only or any other crop is grown on them.

(8) That they are entitled to the free enjoyment of the produce of their grass and varkas lands, including trees, &c.

(9) That they are entitled to the free enjoyment of all ordinary wood and non-productive palms from the Sarkari lands for their building purposes.

(10) That they are entitled to the free enjoyment of fuel, bamboos, karvis and common wood for making agricultural implements, and mango and other trees at the time of marriages.

(11) That they are entitled to the complete ownership and enjoyment of their fazendari trees, whether on their own lands or Sarkari lands.

(12) That they are entitled to the use of gurcharan lands as mentioned in the plaint.

[394] (13) That the Patils, Mhataras and Devasthans should receive their haks and other rights from the khot without interruption.

(14) That they are entitled to the free use of the water and flowers from the tanks on the Sarkari land

(15) That they are entitled to the free use of materials for rab, thorns and inferior sort of palm leaves for making fences and enclosures.

(16) That they are entitled to pay no rent for the houses and vadas existing on the Sarkari land.

Defendant replied that he was not aware that the village was given to his predecessor-in-title on the aforesaid conditions ; that as no reference was made to them in the deed of conveyance of 1819, he was not bound by them; that plaintiffs could not sue on behalf of all the people of Malad; and that as the jungle did not belong to the villagers, but to him, he had a right to levy fees on firewood.

The Joint Subordinate Judge of Thana held (inter alia) that, under s. 30 of the Code of Civil Procedure, the suit was maintainable only with respect to the general rights of all the rayats of the village; that defendant by his purchase, became the sole proprietor of the village, subject to the rights and privileges of the rayats, he being clothed with the rights which Ardeshir had obtained in the village; that defendant was not entitled to demand security for the payment of assessment on suti lands before allowing the crops to be reaped; that the rayats were entitled to the free enjoyment of the forest-wood from the jungle, bamboos and implements of husbandry and of flowers from the Sarkari tanks, but not of all ordinary building-wood, and non-productive palms from the Sarkari land for their own private and domestic use, nor to the free use of materials for rab, thorns for making hedges, and the inferior sort of palm leaves for making roofs from the Sarkari land; and that no cause of action had arisen for the plaintiffs' claim with respect to remission from the khots in times of necessity, the varkas lands attached to private holdings of suti lands and the houses and vadas existing on the Sarkari land. The Subordinate Judge, therefore, made the following order:—

[395] "I order that the defendant is not entitled to demand security for the payment of assessment on suti lands from the rayat before allowing him the crops to be reaped; that plaintiffs are entitled to the free enjoyment of firewood, bamboos and implements of husbandry from the jungle; that they should make an application to the khot to take the above things from the jungle, and that the latter should grant them the necessary written permission according to his discretion; and that the rayats are entitled to the free enjoyment of flowers from the Sarkari tanks for their own domestic use. I enjoin the defendant that he should not prevent the rayats from exercising the above rights, and that he should not demand security for the payment of assessment from the suti tenants. The rest of the plaintiffs' claim is rejected. . . . . "

On appeal by defendant, the Assistant Judge of Thana found (inter alia) that there was no objection to the entertainment of the suit by the plaintiffs for themselves and other interested rayats so far as it claimed an interest alleged to be common to rayats of the whole village; that defendant was not entitled to demand security for the payment of assessment on suti lands before allowing the crops to be reaped; that the rayats were entitled to the free enjoyment of all forest common timber and unproductive brab-trees belonging to defendant for house-building, but that they should apply to defendant for permission to take them, and defendant should grant it having regard to the needs of the applicants and the exigencies of forest reservation; that rayats were entitled to free enjoyment of firewood from the forest, bamboos, purye, bundi, tatties, beleca kurgyia, implements of husbandry, but that they should apply to defendant for permission, and defendant should grant it having regard to the circumstances mentioned above; that the rayats were entitled to the free enjoyment of flowers fom the village tanks; and that Patels, Mhataras and Curumbis or rayats, as discribed in Reg. I of 1808, were entitled to the declarations, and that plaintiffs were of that class. He, therefore, amended the decree of the Subordinate Judge by declaring that the reliefs granted applied to the class of persons known as Patels, Mhataras and Curumbis or rayats of Malad described in Reg. I of 1808, and that plaintiffs belonged to this class, and by adding the words "purye, bundi, tatties, beleca kurgyia" before "and" after "bamboos" in the sentence commencing from "that plaintiffs are entitled to the free enjoyment of firewood, &c." The Assistant Judge further added to the decree as follows:—

[396] "The rayats are entitled to the free enjoyment of all common forest timber and unproductive brab-trees belonging to defendant for house building, but that they should apply to defendant, the proprietor of the village, for permission to take them, and that the said proprietor should grant them that permission, using his own discretion in the matter soundly and reasonably, having regard to the needs of the applicants and the exigencies of the forest reservation; and the discretion should similarly be exercised in the matter of granting permission to cut firewood, bamboos &c., allowed by the decree."

He further directed that an injunction should be issued against defendant forbidding him from interfering with the rights of rayats declared by the decree, and he confirmed the decree of the Subordinate Judge in other respects.

From this decision defendant preferred this second appeal to the High Court.

JUDGMENT.

The judgment of the Court was orally delivered by

BAYLEY, C. J. (ACTING).—This appeal cannot succeed. The suit was brought in 1839 by five persons for themselves and on behalf of others resident in the village of Malad in the Salsette Taluka for a declaration of their rights and privileges and for an injunction. The right of the plaintiffs to sue appears to be quite clear. It is found by the appellate Court that the village was granted in 1806 to Ardeshir Dady in exchange for other property situated in the Fort of Bombay conveyed by him to the East India Company. Before possession of the village was given, the rayats were consulted. They sent in a petition setting out certain articles to which the Government of Bombay agreed. The Collector by a letter dated 5th June, 1806, put Ardeshir Dady in possession. This shows that the consent of the villagers and rayats was considered by the East India Company to be necessary before the village could be transferred to Ardeshir Dady. On 24th February, 1808, certain rules were passed by the Governor in Council. Regulation I of 1799 had provided for the passing of Regulations, and Regulations were from time to time passed by the Governor in Council. See Morley's Digest (Introduction), Vol. I, pp. 76 and 77. The most recent reference to such Regulations is in the Lecture on the Laws and Administration of [397] Justice in India delivered before the University of Cambridge by Sir John Strachey, G.C.S.I., in 1884, and reproduced by him in his work "India," p. 143 (1888).

Two cases relating to property in the Salsette Taluka are in point:—Dadibhai Jahangirji v. Ramji bin Bhau (1); The Collector of Thana v. Dadabhai Bomanji (2). The Government, the vendors in the first of those cases, it was held, could not affect the rights of their tenants. It would have been a fraud if they had attempted to do so. Here, it would have been little else than a fraud if Government had attempted to convey the village irrespective of the rights and behind the backs of the rayats.

Ardeshir Dady got his conveyance subject to these rights, and he accepted subject to them. In the conveyance of 1819 there is, it is admitted, no mention of the rights of the rayats. It is a conveyance of the village and its lands then in the occupation of the villagers and rayats. A purchaser ought to inquire into the rights of the tenants on the property, and if he fails to do so he takes subject to such rights as the tenants may have—Mancharji Sorabji v. Kongseoo (1). That was a decision of Sir Richard Couch, C. J., on the Original Side of this Court, and he cited many cases in Courts of Equity in England where the rule just stated had been applied. He also referred to a decision of the Privy Council in 1853, Barnhart v. Greenshields (2), where their Lordships said (p. 32): "With respect to the effect of possession merely, we take the law to be, that if there be a tenant in possession of land, a purchaser is bound by all the equities which the tenant could enforce against the vendor, and that the equity of the tenant extends not only to interests connected with his tenancy, as in Taylor v. Stibbert (3), but also to interests under collateral agreements, as in Daniels v. Davison (4), Allen v. Anthony (5), the principle being the same in both classes of cases; namely, that the possession of the tenant is notice that he has some interest in the land, and that a purchaser having notice of that fact is bound, according to the ordinary rule, either to [398] inquire what that interest is, or to give effect to it, whatever it may be." The present appellant purchased in 1868 apparently without any inquiry at all. It is not suggested that he investigated the title, and he is bound by the rights of the tenants just as if they were specially mentioned in the conveyance to him. Government and Ardeshir Dady's descendants recognized these rights.

It is said, however, that the rights are barred by limitation, by acquiescence, and by a change of custom. There is no force in any of those contentions. The ground of limitation fails, because there does not appear to be a denial of plaintiffs' rights until quite recently. There was no acquiescence by the villagers in any claim made by the appellant, save that he insisted on his written permission being obtained in lieu of a mere verbal one, allowing the rayats to take away firewood and bamboos, &c., from the forests, nor is there any proof of any change of custom.

The next question is, whether the suit can be brought in its present form? It is a suit brought under the provisions of s. 30 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882). The appellant's counsel relied on Hallows v. Fernie (6). That was a very different case from the present. It was a suit on an alleged fraudulent representation, whereby the plaintiffs were induced to become shareholders of a company. We will refer to two cases which were not cited by counsel in the argument before us. In Phillips v. Hudson (7). Lord Cuelmsford, L.C., held that a bill can be maintained by one copy-holder on behalf of himself and other copy-holders, being numerous, against the lord of the manor to have their rights of common ascertained and for an injunction. This was decided in 1867. And in Smith v. Earl Brownlow (8) decided in 1870, it was held that the bill was not objectionable. At p. 256, Lord Romilly, M. R., says: The defendant "contends that the plaintiff cannot properly sue on behalf of himself and the free-holders and copy-holders of the manor, and that this constitutes a misjoinder; but I am of opinion that this objection fails, and that, though their rights of common might not be exactly co-extensive, yet, as the plaintiff is proved, [399] and, indeed admitted, to be a copy-holder as well as a free-holder of the manor, and, indeed, of both divisions of it, he is entitled to sue on behalf of all. This also appears to me to be established both by authority and by the constant practice of this Court in like cases, and also in cases where a right of fishing comes in question, as in the case of the Mayor of York v. Pilkington (1)."

Lastly, it is said that the Assistant Judge made an alteration in the form of the decree. It appears to the Court that that alteration is rather in favour of the proprietor, the appellant. What has been given by the appellate Judge is in accordance with the clauses of the agreement made in 1806, as evidenced by Exs. 56, 57, 58, 60 and 61. The appeal must be dismissed, with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

RANGUBAI (Original Opponent), Appellant v. ABAJI (Original Applicant), *Respondent. [16th June, 1894.]

Regulation VIII of 1827—Succession Certificate Act (VII of 1889), ss. 19 and 28—Certificate of heirship—Order refusing certificate of heirship appealable—Appeal.

An appeal lies from an order refusing to grant a certificate of heirship under Regulation VIII of 1827, by virtue of s. 19 of the Succession Certificate Act (VII of 1889).

APPEAL from an order of H. L. Harvey, Assistant Judge of Satara, in Miscellaneous Application No. 4 of 1893.

One Abaji Vaman Bendre applied under Regulation VIII of 1827 for a certificate of heirship to the estate of Vaman Abaji Bendre, deceased, alleging that he was the adopted son of the deceased.

This application was opposed by Rangubai, the widow of the deceased, on the grounds (1) that the applicant's adoption was [400] not valid, he being the only son of his natural father; (2) that the deceased had made a will in her favour, bequeathing the whole of his property to her. She, therefore, prayed that a certificate of heirship should be granted to her and not to the applicant.

The Assistant Judge held that the applicant Abaji was not the only son of his natural father; that his adoption was valid, and that the will set up by the opponent Rangubai was not proved. He, therefore, granted a certificate of heirship to the applicant.

Against this order the opponent appealed to the High Court.

JUDGMENT.

JARDINE, J.—A preliminary objection was raised by Mr. Ghanasham, but not pressed, that no appeal lies from the refusal of the District Judge to grant a certificate, seeing that his adjudication, as is expressly stated in s. 8 of Reg. VIII of 1827, does not finally determine the rights of the person whose application is refused, but leaves him competent to institute a suit for the purpose of establishing his claim. We are of opinion, following Javermal v. The Nazir of the District Court of Poona (1) and Pitambar v. Ishwar (2), that the appeal does lie by virtue of s. 19 of the Succession Certificate Act VII of 1889, which is applied to Reg. VIII of 1827 by s. 28 of that Act.

On the question of fact, whether the son given in adoption was an only son, we see no reason to differ from the Assistant Judge, whose order we, therefore, confirm with costs.

Order confirmed.

[401] ORIGINAL CIVIL.

Before Sir Charles Sargent, Kt., Chief Justice, and Mr. Justice Bayley.

F. YORKE SMITH AND OTHERS (Original Plaintiffs), Appellants v. TRIBHOVANDAS MANGALDAS (Original Defendant), *Respondent.

[12th October, 1894.]

Will—Construction—Bequest to executors and trustees in trust for son of testator and his widow—Life interest—Estate in fee—Control and management of executors and trustees.

Sir Mangaldas Nathubhoy, a Hindu, by his will bequeathed certain property to his executors and trustees "upon trust for my son Tribhovandas and his heirs from the time of my death to allow him to occupy and use the same, and to enjoy the income thereof and after the death of my son Tribhovandas, in trust to allow his widow to occupy and use the same and enjoy the income during her life; but if the said Tribhovandas Mangaldas shall die without leaving male issue him surviving, then in trust after the death of the survivor of them without leaving such male issue to my son Purshotamdas and his heirs according to the rules of Hindu law." The sons Tribhovandas and Purshotamdas both survived the testator, and Tribhovandas (the defendant) had a wife and three sons living at the date of suit. The defendant contended that under the above clause he was absolutely entitled to the property subject to the interest of his widow for her life. The plaintiffs (the executors and trustees) contended that the defendant had only a life interest in the property.

Held, that the defendant Tribhovandas took only an interest for life in the property. The words "in trust for Trobhovan and his heirs," which, standing alone, would give the property in fee, were to be read with the words immediately following, which showed a clear intention that Tribhovan should only take a life interest to be followed by the same interest in his widow, after whom the heirs of Tribhovan would take as purchasers.

Held, also, that the trustees were intended to take the legal estate and to have the control of the property, allowing Tribhovan to enjoy the income of it.

SUIT for the construction of a will.

The plaintiffs were the executors and trustees of the testator Sir Mangaldas Nathubhoy, who died leaving two sons, viz., Tribhovandas

(the defendant), and Parshotamdas. The Testator's will was dated the 27th January, 1888, and was duly proved by the executors on the 8th May, 1890.

The will contained the following clause :—

"I devise and bequeath all my property at Girgaum Back Road and Khetvadi Road, as well as the furniture, pictures, glass and crockery ware and cooking utensils, that it may contain at the time of my death, to my said executors and trustees, upon trust for my son Tribhovandas and his heirs from the time of my death to allow him to occupy and use the same, and to enjoy the income thereof, and after the death of my [402] son Tribhovandas, in trust to allow his widow to occupy and use the same and enjoy the income during her life; but if the said Tribhovandas Mangaldas shall die without leaving male issue him surviving, then in trust after the death of the survivor of them without leaving such male issue to my son Purshotamdas and his heirs according to the rules of Hindu law."

The defendant at the date of the suit had a wife living and three sons living. Under the above clause he claimed to be absolutely entitled to the property mentioned therein, subject to the interest of his widow for her life. He accordingly contended that he had a right to manage and deal with the said property, and had erected a building on it to be used as a club without consulting the plaintiffs.

The plaintiffs, on the other hand, contended that as trustees the legal estate of the property was vested in them; that the only right of the defendant was to occupy it and enjoy the income during his life; and that all expenses of repair, &c., ought to be provided out of the income of the said property and not out of the general estate of the testator.

The last three clauses of the plaint were as follows :—

"9. The defendant recently on the 7th day of October, 1892, without communication with the plaintiffs, got a vernacular agreement prepared purporting to be between the plaintiffs and Dada Fatubhai Patan and Bai Rai by which the plaintiffs purport to agree to let a portion of the said premises at Girgaum to Dada Fatubhai and Bai Rai for cultivation purposes. The said lessees have executed the said agreement.

"10. The plaintiffs object to the defendant using their names as aforesaid, and submit that the defendant ought to be restrained by injunction from using the names of the plaintiffs in any agreement with reference to the said premises.

"11. The plaintiffs although they have not consented to the conversion of a portion of the said premises into a residential club are unwilling, if they are not bound by their duties as trustees aforesaid to do so, to compel the defendant to restore the said premises to their original condition; but, if this Honourable Court should be of opinion that they are bound to do so, they will, in addition to the relief hereafter specially prayed for, seek to have the said premises restored by the defendant to the condition they were in prior to the said acts of the defendant."

The following were the prayers of the plaint :—

"1. That the respective rights and duties of the plaintiffs and defendant with reference to the said premises may be ascertained and declared by this Honourable Court, and that all consequential directions and relief that arise on such declaration may be granted.

"2. That the defendant may be restrained by the injunction of this Court from using plaintiffs' names in any agreement with reference to the said premises and from entering into any agreement in the plaintiffs' names without their authority.

[403] "3. That the said passage in the will of Sir Mangaldas Nathubhoy quoted in paragraph 2 of this plaint may be construed by this Honourable Court and the trusts created by the same may be ascertained and declared, and in particular what trust arises on the death of the survivor of the defendant and his wife in the event of the defendant leaving male issue him surviving."

At the hearing before Parsons, J., the following issues were raised :—

(1) Whether the defendant does not under the will take an absolute interest in the property, subject to the life interest of his widow, if any?

(2) Whether in any event the defendant is not entitled to use the said property during his lifetime as he pleases, and to alter existing buildings and erect new buildings on vacant portions so long as he does not thereby injure the reversion ?

(3) Whether the club in the plaint mentioned was built without the consent of the plaintiffs ?

(4) Whether the defendant has used the names of the plaintiffs as alleged in paragraph 9 of plaint ?

(5) Whether the plaintiffs are entitled to an injunction.

Macpherson and Inverarity, for plaintiffs.—We say the defendant is equitable tenant for life of the property. He can occupy it, but cannot alter it. If he leaves no issue, the property will go to Purshotamdas ; but if he leaves issue, there will be an intestacy, as the will does not say who, in that case, is to take the property on the death of the defendant and his wife.

Lang (Advocate-General) and Scott, for the defendant.—The defendant is absolutely entitled. There is a gift to him and his heirs. The gift of the income carries the corpus—Succession Act (X of 1865), s. 159 ; Mayne's Hindu Law (5th Ed.), para. 388 ; Bhoobun v. Hurrish Chunder (1) ; Baker v. Sebright (2) ; Jones v. Chappell (3) ; Doherty v. Allman (4).

PARSONS, J.—I find on the first issue in the affirmative. It seems to me that the will while keeping the legal estate with the executors gives defendant an absolute interest in the property. It leaves it to him and his heirs. In the event, however, of his widow surviving him, it gives the widow a life interest. There is no question in this suit as to the legality of the bequest of that life interest or of the bequest to Purshotam after the death of the survivor without male issue. I think the latter gift cannot [404] take effect under s. 111 of Act X of 1865, but both of them relate to points which have not been raised, and which cannot be decided in the absence of the persons interested.

I find the second issue in the affirmative. There is no dispute about it.

I find the third issue in the affirmative. No consent is shown. I also find, at the request of the parties, the additional point that the building of the club is not an injury to the reversion.

4. I give credence to defendant that the agreement (Ex. E) was not prepared with his knowledge or consent, or sent by him to the executors. He knew of the draft only, and, therefore.

5. I do not grant an injunction, but only make a declaration.

6. The repairs must be done and paid for by the defendant out of the income of the property or his own money. They are not payable out of the general estate.

There will, therefore, be a decree declaring that the defendant under the will takes an absolute interest in the property, subject to the life interest of the widow if she survives him, with the following directions:—

(1) The trustees are to keep the legal estate to preserve it for the contingent interest of the defendant's widow.

(2) The trustees are not to interfere with the defendant's management so long as he does not injure the reversion.

(3) The repairs are to be provided and paid for by the defendant.

(4) The defendant is not entitled to use the plaintiffs' names as parties to any document without their consent previously obtained.

The costs of this suit are to come out of the general estate of the testator; those of plaintiffs being taxed as between attorney and client.

The plaintiffs appealed.

Macpherson, Inverarity and Macleod, for appellants (plaintiffs):—We say that on the death of Tribhovandas and of his wife, if Tribhovandas leaves no male issue, Purshotam takes [405] absolutely. Section 111 of the Succession Act (X of 1865) does not apply. If it does, the period of distribution is the date of the death of Tribhovandas or his wife, whichever of them survives the other.

[BAYLEY, J., referred to Ram Lal v. Secretary of State for India (1); Sreemutty Kristoromoney v. Maharajah Norendro Krishna (2).]

Lang (Advocate-General) and Scott, for respondent (defendant):—We contend there is an absolute devise to us subject to the life interest of the widow—Bhoobun Mohini v. Hurrish Chunder (3). The gift to Purshotam must refer to the date of the testator's death—Section 111 of the Succession Act (X of 1865). They also cited Jones v. Chappell (4); Doherty v. Allman (5); Doe Dem Grub v. The Earl of Burlington (6); White and Tudor's Leading Cases, Vol. I, p. 851.

JUDGMENT.

SARGENT, C. J.—The question in this case, which turns upon the relative legal position of the parties, depends upon the proper construction of the following clause in the will of the late Sir Mangaldas Nathubhoy (His Lordship then read the clause and continued:—)

The Division Court held that Tribhovandas took an estate in fee subject to the life estate of his widow. The words, however, "in trust for Tribhovan and his heirs" which standing alone would create a fee in Tribhovan, must, we think, be read with the words immediately following "to allow him to occupy and use the same and enjoy the income thereof and after his death to allow his widow to enjoy the income during her life," which words, in our opinion, show a clear intention that Tribhovan should only take a life interest to be followed by the same interest in his widow, after whom the heirs of Tribhovan would take as purchasers.

It is necessary, however, to consider another question in order to determine the rights of the parties which are in dispute, viz., whether Tribhovan or the executors take the legal estate. As to this it is to be remarked that the English authorities, for which we may refer to Jarman on Wills, Vol. II, Ch. 34, p. 293, show that [406] a distinction has been drawn between the words "on trust to pay the rents to a person" and a direction "to permit him to receive them," a distinction which, however, did not meet with Lord Mansfield's approval, who held that in each case it should be equally a trust, and that the estate should vest in the trustees. However, here it must, we think, in any view of the above distinction, be inferred that the trustees were intended to take the legal estate throughout, as the same words are used when speaking of the widow's interest, with respect to which it can scarcely be doubted that a Hindu testator would intend that the trustees should have the control over the estate both for her protection and that of the reversioner. This is held to be so by the English authorities in the somewhat analogous case of a wife, who is to take the income for her separate use; see Doe d. Stephens v. Scott (1).

In this view of the relative position of the parties, it follows that Tribhovan was not justified in his resistance to the plaintiffs' contention that "the control of property was with them, and that it was their duty to manage it, allowing you to enjoy the income" as stated in their letter of 15th July, 1891. The first two issues must, therefore, be answered in the negative. And the decree varied by declaring that Tribhovan takes a beneficial interest for life under the will in the property in question.

Passing to the other questions, which were alluded to in argument, viz., as to who would be the heirs to succeed on the death of the survivor of Tribhovan and his wife, and what was the proper construction of the devise over, their determination, as the Divisional Court pointed out, is not necessary for the cardinal purpose for which the suit was instituted. Moreover, they could not be determined in the absence of the parties interested in them so as to bind them, and it is not the practice of the Court, as pointed out by the Privy Council in Kathuma Natchariar v. Dorasinga (2), to determine questions of title as to future interests. We may here remark that s. 43 of the Specific Relief Act (I of 1877) relied on by the Advocate General only applies to a case under s. 42; and no such case has arisen except between the plaintiffs and Tribhovan.

[407] The Division Court has, at the request of the parties, expressed an opinion as to whether the building the club is not an injury to the reversion. No objection has been taken to this declaration, and we see no reason to differ from it, but it is to be remarked that it will not bind the reversioners, who have not been made parties to the suit.

As to costs, we think that as the suit has been rendered necessary by the wording of the will, the costs were properly thrown on the general estate. Costs of this appeal to come out of the same funds.

MANEKLAL MOTILAL AND ANOTHER (Plaintiffs) v. THE MUNICIPAL COMMISSIONER FOR THE CITY OF BOMBAY (Defendant).*

Municipality—City of Bombay Municipal Act (Bombay Act III of 1888), ss. 298, 299, 301, 504, 527—Land taken by the Municipality for street improvement—Compensation—Dispute as to amount of compensation—Limitation.

In 1891 the Municipal authorities of Bombay gave notice to the plaintiffs under s. 299 of Bombay Act III of 1888 that they required 23·30 square yards of the plaintiffs' land for street improvement. On the 14th December, 1891, the plaintiffs gave possession of the land to the Municipality, and on 27th January, 1892, claimed Rs. 60 per square yard as compensation. By letter dated 23rd February, 1892, the Municipal Commissioner (without prejudice) offered Rs. 50 per square yeard as compensation and stated that on the plaintiffs producing the title-deeds and papers to establish their title the necessary documents in connection with the payment would be prepared. Nothing further took place in the matter until the 14th February, 1894, on which date the plaintiff wrote a letter to the Municipal Commissioner in which, without mentioning any sum, he requested the payment of the amount which might be due to him as compensation for his land taken by the Municipality. The Commissioner refused to pay the compensation, contending that the plaintiffs' claim was time-barred. The plaintiffs thereupon brought this suit claiming Rs. 1,165 (being at the rate of Rs. 50 per square yard) as compensation for the land taken up by the defendant or in the alternative for that sum as damages for the breach of contract to [408] pay purchase money for the land. The defendant pleaded (1) that notice under s. 527 of the Municipal Act III of 1888 was necessary before suit filed and (2) that the suit was barred by limitation. The Chief Judge of the Small Cause Court found for the defendant with costs and dismissed the suit contingent on the opinion of the High Court. On a case stated,

Held (1) that notice under s. 527 of Bombay Act III of 1888 was not necessary, that section not being applicable to suits brought to enforce payment of compensation under s. 301 of the Act;

(2) that the suit was not barred by limitation.

Per FARRAN, J.—A suit against the Municipality of Bombay for compensation for land acquired by the Municipality under s. 299 of Act III of 1888 is not an action of tort or quasi-tort but a simple action for the price of land, which the terms of s. 301 of the Act impose upon the Commissioner to pay. The obligation to pay that price is of the same nature (1) whether the owner assents to the valuation of the land placed upon it by the Commissioner, (2) whether the value is determined by the Chief Judge of the Small Cause Court, or (3) whether it is left undetermined. Section 527 does not apply to any of these three cases. In all of them the obligation to pay is imposed by s. 301, and does not arise from the manner in which the amount of the price to be paid is arrived at.

2. Section 504 prescribes the only mode in which in case of dispute the value of the land can be determined. If the owner of land disputes the Commissioner's valuation he must apply to the Chief Judge of the Small Cause Court within a year. If he does not do so, the result is that he loses the power of effectually disputing the Commissioner's valuation but does not lose his right to the amount of the valuation.

3. The owner of land has a remedy independent of the provision of s. 504. The section only deals with cases where there is a dispute as to the value of the land, and leaves untouched those cases where there is no such dispute but where the Commissioner for some reason declines to pay. In such cases the owner is left to his ordinary remedy, no special mode of procedure being prescribed. Cases in which there has been a dispute, but in which the owner abandons his claim to dispute the valuation of the Commissioner, fall within the latter category.

CASE stated for the opinion of the High Court by C. W. Chitty, Chief Judge of the Bombay Court of Small Causes, under s. 2 of Act XII of 1888 (Bombay Municipal Act Amendment Act).

In 1891 the plaintiffs, who were the owners of a certain house in Dadysett Agiary Street in Bombay, desired to rebuild it. In the usual course they submitted a plan of the proposed new building to the Municipal authorities, who approved of it, but gave notice under s. 299 of the City of Bombay Municipal Act III of 1888 to the plaintiffs that the Municipality required 23·30 [409] square yards of the land in front for the improvement of the street. On the 14th December, 1891, the plaintiffs gave possession of the required land to the Municipality.

On the 24th December, 1891, the Executive Engineer of the Municipality addressed the following letter to the plaintiffs :—

"I have the honour to request the favour of your producing the original title-deeds of your property at Agiary Street for investigation, in order to prove your right to receive compensation for the piece of ground admeasuring 23·30 square yards taken up out of the said property by the Municipality."

On the 27th January, 1892, the plaintiffs through their solicitor wrote as follows in reply, claiming Rs. 60 per square yard :—

"As regards the rate of Rs. 25 per square yard, my client objects to receive it, and claims compensation at Rs. 60 per square yard. He says that no property can be purchased in this locality for less than the above rate as the value of the ground.

"You will, therefore, reconsider this matter, and make adequate compensation to my client."

On the 23rd February, 1892, the Executive Engineer sent the following letter to the plaintiffs :—

"Bombay, 23*rd February*, 1892.

"SIR,—With reference to your letter dated 27th January, I have the honour to state that the Municipal Commissioner on further consideration has been pleased to direct me to offer (without prejudice) the rate of Rs. 50 per square yard as compensation for the land. The necessary documents in connection with the payment will be prepared on your client producing in this office such deeds and papers as he may have to establish his title to the premises.

"I have, &c.,
"JAMES W. SMITH, M.I.C.E.,
"Acting Executive Engineer."

Nothing further took place until the 14th February, 1894, on which date the plaintiffs wrote a letter to the Municipal Commissioner, in which without accepting the above offer of Rs. 50 he requested payment of compensation for the land taken up by the Municipality. His letter was as follows :—

"Bombay, 14*th February*, 1894.

"TO THE MUNICIPAL COMMISSIONER FOR THE CITY OF BOMBAY.

"SIR,—As directed by you, I have come from Khambat (Cambay) to receive the amount of compensation due by the Municipality to me with reference to the portion of land taken up by the Municipality for setback purposes in front of my property [410] (Ward No. 4150—4151, and street

"(Signed) R. D. DESAI,
"for MANEKLAL MOTILAL."

To this letter the Executive Engineer replied as follows on the 12th March, 1894:—

"In reply to your letter dated 14th February, 1894, to the address of the Municipal Commissioner, I have the honour to inform you that I regret the payment of the amount cannot now be made, as the claim is time-barred."

On the 30th March, 1894, the plaintiff through his solicitor sent the following letter to the Executive Engineer:—

"SIR,—Our client Mr. Maneklal Motilal has placed in our hands your letter to him, No. 17105 of 1893-94 of the 12th instant, with instructions to state in reply that our client is surprised at the Municipality pleading limitation against payment of compensation for land taken from him under set-back line. We have, therefore, to request you to let us know your authority for pleading limitation.

"We may say that the fact as to what amount should be paid to our client still remains undecided, inasmuch as although the Municipality acquired from him 23'30 square yards of land at Agiary Street at Rs. 50 a square yard, our client was not and is not liable to the Municipality for ¾ the value of land under his gallery constructed by him in the lane adjoining his property; and as the area and value of the land in this lane is not fixed, our client could not and does not still know what amount is due to him.

"Under the above circumstances we submit you cannot plead limitation, and we request you to pay to our client what is, on making proper calculation, due to him."

On the 9th April, 1894, the Executive Engineer wrote as follows to the plaintiff's solicitors:—

"Bombay, 9th April, 1894.

"GENTLEMEN,—With reference to your letter dated 30th March, 1894, on behalf of Mr. Maneklal, Motilal, I have the honour to state that I am advised that under s. 504 of the Municipal Act the claim is time-barred, possession of the land having been taken on the 14th December, 1891, on which date the compensation became payable.

"2. I may add that until the party pays the municipal fees due for the gallery, and obtains a permit for it, the projection is not lawful, and the Municipal Commissioner has a right to call upon the party to remove it.

[411] On the 18th July, 1894, the plaintiffs filed this suit in the Court of Small Causes claiming Rs. 1,165 as compensation for the land, being at the rate of Rs. 50 per square yard. The Chief Judge held that the claim was barred under s. 527 (1) of the City of Bombay

(1) Section 527, Bombay Act III of 1888:—

Municipal Act (III of 1888), and dismissed the suit contingent on the opinion of the High Court on a case stated by him at the request of the plaintiff.

The judgment of the Chief Judge was as follows :—

"This is a suit brought by the plaintiff to recover from the defendant a sum of Rs. 1,165 as compensation for the land of the plaintiffs taken up by the Municipal Commissioner for street improvement, and, in the alternative, for the same sum as damages for the breach of contract on the part of the defendant to pay the purchase-money for the said land.

In this case there is no dispute as to facts. The land in question (some 23'30 square yards) was taken possession of by the Municipal Commissioner on the 14th December, 1891. The Municipal Commissioner at first offered compensation at [412] the rate of Rs. 25 per square yard. The plaintiffs wanted Rs. 60. On the 23rd February, 1892, the Municipal Commissioner increased his offer to Rs. 50 (without prejudice). This letter remained unanswered for two years, when, on 14th February, 1894, the plaintiffs without directly accepting that offer asked the defendant to pay them the compensation due. They were then told that their claim was time-barred.

The only defences raised in this case were, (i) that notice under s. 527 of the City of Bombay Municipal Act, 1888, was necessary before suit filed, and (ii) that the suit is barred by limitation. In this case the plaintiffs stand in a somewhat better position than the plaintiff in the recent suit No. 18029 of 1894 so far as regards the lapse of time, inasmuch as they bring their suit within three years.

Before proceeding to the questions under s. 527, I may deal with the case as one for damages for breach of contract. As such, in my opinion, it cannot be maintained, as there was never any contract between the plaintiff and defendant for sale and purchase at Rs. 50 or any given price. It is argued that the offer of Rs. 50 of the defendant, dated 12th February, 1892, remained open till the letter of the plaintiffs of 14th February, 1894. I am of opinion that the proposal was revoked by lapse of time (see Indian Contract Act, s. 6, cl. 2). It could hardly be said that two years was a reasonable time for which it should remain open for acceptance. But further than this, the letter of 14th February, 1894, is, in my opinion, no acceptance, and as the letter of 12th March, 1894, must amount to a withdrawal of the offer, it follows that there was no contract.

SMALL CAUSE COURT REFERENCE.

19 B. 407 = Chitty's S. C. C. R. 430.

I now proceed to consider the case under s. 527. First, as to limitation, I am of opinion that this section must be held to apply to cases like the present. There is certainly nothing in the section itself to exclude it. Indeed the words "suit in respect of any act done in pursuance or execution or intended execution of this Act, or in respect of any alleged neglect or default in the execution of this Act" would seem directly to include it. This is a suit for compensation for land taken up under the Act (s. 299) and for default in payment of such compensation (s. 301). This point has been before the learned Second Judge in suit No. 16139 of 1894 and before him and myself in the Full Court, and I am fortified by his judgment in that suit. I think that the six months allowed by s. 527 must be taken to be the period of limitation applicable to this case. It is admitted that if that be so, the suit is barred, and so I must hold it.

As to the notice, there again it appears to me that s. 527 must apply. It has been argued that s. 527 was only intended to apply to cases of torts and quasi-torts. If that be so, it is difficult to account for the wording of sub-s. (d), which clearly contemplates other actions that those for damages. In the case in 12 Bom. H. C. R. cited by the plaintiffs, the word compensation seems wide enough to include such cases as the present. The intention of the Legislature in requiring notice is to enable persons acting under the Act to tender reasonable compensation, and there seems no reason why it should not apply to cases like the present. I must hold that no notice having been given, the suit is not maintainable. The suit is dismissed and defendant's professional costs Rs. 51 certified. My judgment will be contingent on the opinion of the High Court on a case to be stated at the request of the plaintiffs' counsel.

[413] The following was the statement of the case by the Chief Judge :—

"This was a suit brought by the plaintiffs to recover from the defendant a sum of Rs. 1,165 as compensation for land of the plaintiffs taken up by the defendant, the Municipal Commissioner, for street improvement, and in the alternative for the same sum as damages for the breach of contract on the part of the defendant to pay the purchase-money for the said land.

"2. In this case the only defences raised were (1) that notice under s. 527 of the City of Bombay Municipal Act of 1888 was necessary before suit filed, and (2) that the suit was barred by limitation. On both these points I found for the defendant, and the suit was accordingly dismissed, and the defendant's professional costs Rs. 51 certified.

"3. The facts of the case (which were not in dispute) are fully set out in my judgment, as are also the reasons for my decision.

"4. At the request of the plaintiffs' counsel I made my judgment contingent on the opinion of their Lordships. The only questions to be submitted, are :—

"(i) Whether in this case notice under s. 527 of the City of Bombay Municipal Act, 1888, was necessary before suit filed?

"(ii) Whether this suit is barred by limitation?

"5. The plaintiffs have deposited in Court Rs. 51 professional costs and Rs. 50 to meet the costs of reference."

Russell, for plaintiffs :—The plaintiffs' land was taken under s. 299 of the Bombay Municipal Act, III of 1888, and compensation was payable to them under s. 301 of that Act. This latter section is imperative, and the plaintiffs' right under it is clear. Section 527 does not apply to a claim of this kind. It refers to cases of tort or quasi tort—Sorabji N. Dundas

That section mentions municipal officers and servants, and it is clear that they could not be liable to pay compensation for land taken by the Commissioner, although they might be made liable for illegal acts. Sub-cl. (d) also shows the scope of the section. He referred to Bombay Act II of 1865, s. 240, Bombay Act II of 1873, s. 287, and Bombay Act VI of 1873, s. 86.

Macpherson, for defendant:—The suit is barred either under s. 504 (8) of the Act or under s. 527. We contend that s. 504 applies, and the plaintiffs' claim was barred at the end of one year. It is plain there was a dispute as to the amount of compensation, and this section provides for such cases and fixes the period of limitation. There are only two possible classes of cases. First, where there is no dispute, i.e., where the parties are agreed as to the amount of compensation; second, where there is a dispute. In the first case, (i.e., where there has been an agreement) the parties would be on the usual footing and the ordinary law of limitation would apply, and the suit might be brought in any civil Court. But in the latter case (where there is no agreement and where the parties have not come to terms, i.e., where there is a dispute,) this section gives exclusive jurisdiction to the Small Cause Court and prescribes a period of limitation, viz., one year.

If, however, the Court holds that s. 504 does not apply to this case, we submit that the suit is barred by s. 527, in which case the period of limitation is only six months. This suit is clearly one in respect of taking the land, or (2) for default in paying compensation. In either of these cases the section [415] applies. Reference was made to Foat v. The Mayor, &c., of Margate (9); Midland Railway Co. v. Withington Local Board (10).

Russell in reply:—Section 504 does not apply here, for there has been no dispute.

JUDGMENT.

SARGENT, C. J.—The facts of the case which have led to this reference are set out in the judgment of the Chief Judge of the Small Cause Court. The two questions submitted to us are:—

1. Whether in this case notice under s. 527 of the Municipal Act of 1888 was necessary before suit filed?

2. Whether the suit is barred?

It will be convenient to deal first with the second question.

SMALL CAUSE COURT REFERENCE.

19 B. 407 = Chitty's S. C. C. R. 430.

The suit in question presents the claim of the plaintiff in a double aspect—1st, as a claim for compensation which the Commissioner is directed by s. 301 to pay to the owner of land taken up under ss. 298, 299; and, 2nd, for damages for breach of an alleged contract to purchase the land.

The Judge of the Small Cause Court has found that there was no such contract of purchase. The question, therefore, submitted to us has only to be answered with reference to the first branch of claim, viz., for compensation.

Where the parties are not agreed as to the amount of compensation to be paid as directed by s. 301, or, in other words, where the amount is "in dispute," s. 504 provides the course to be followed, viz., by application to the Chief Judge of the Small Cause Court within one year from the date when such compensation became claimable.

The facts as stated by the Judge show that the last offer of the Commissioner of Rs. 50 per square yard on the 23rd February, 1892, had not been accepted, and that no agreement of any sort was come to between the parties within a year from the date of the Commissioner's taking possession of the plaintiff's land.

It was contended for the Commissioner that under these circumstances all claim to compensation under s. 301 was barred by s. 504. I cannot doubt that the language of that section shows that the course provided by it in the event of the [416] amount of compensation being in dispute is the only one open to the owner of the land taken,—in other words, that when there is such dispute it is in substitution for the ordinary right of action in the Civil Court to recover Compensation as directed to be paid by s. 301, and, therefore, after the expiration of a year if the owner has not been paid, his only course is to agree to the Commissioner's terms.

It was contended for the Commissioner that in that case the plaintiff's cause of action, would be for a breach of contract and not the right to compensation given by s. 301. That is, in my opinion, a mistaken view of the jural relation between the parties. The obligation to pay compensation for the land based on its value, which the Act imposes on the Commissioner by s. 301 would still be in force, although proceedings under s. 504 might be barred, and if the plaintiff accepts the value placed on the property by the Commissioner, he is entitled to enforce payment of it, assuming of course that he can establish his title as owner. I think that the correspondence between the parties, which begins with plaintiff's letter of 14th February, 1894, shows that the plaintiff has accepted the value offered by the Commissioner by his letter of 23rd February, 1892. That valuation was never withdrawn or revoked. In the above view of the relation of the parties, cl. (2) of s. 6 of the Contract Act (IX of 1872) has no application and the correspondence shows that the Commissioner's only objection to pay the compensation claimed was that the claim to any compensation was barred. It was not contended that the suit was barred by the general law of limitation, and the second question must be answered in the negative.

As to s. 527, whatever may be the suits to which it is applicable, I do not think it could have been intended to apply to a suit arising out of s. 301. It is plain it could not apply to proceedings under s. 504, as they can be brought within a year from the time when compensation became claimable, and that being so, it must, I think, be inferred that s. 527 was not intended to apply in the present case, as both the compensation became claimable and the cause of action accrued [417] (according to the above view of the present suit) under s. 301 of the Act, i.e., from the time the lands were taken possession of by the Commissioner.

FARRAN, J.—I agree in the answers given by the Chief Justice, but I have also prepared a judgment expressing my reasons.

This is a suit for the value of land acquired by the Municipal Commissioner under the provisions of ss. 298 and 299 of the Municipal Act. The more cumbrous phrase, "compensation for the value of the land" adopted in s. 301, is, I think, only used to suit the convenience of the draftsman. The land has been rightfully acquired by the Commissioner. The plaintiff makes no complaint on that head. He merely asks to be paid the price of the land as ascertained upon the basis of its value which the Act directs that the Commissioner shall pay him.

The first question submitted to us is, whether such a claim is barred under s. 527 after the lapse of six months from the time when the land is acquired, (at which time, I apprehend, the plaintiff's cause of action accrued) and whether notice of action must under that section be given to the Commissioner. It has been settled law that the provisions of the English Statute analogous to and, in my mind undistinguishable from the terms of the section with which we are dealing, do not apply to claims arising out of contracts or quasi contracts, but do apply to claims arising out of torts or quasi torts done under colour of, or in carrying out the provisions of Statute: Midland Railway Company v. Withington Local Board (1). But the Courts disregarding the form of the action inquire into the nature of the transaction out of which the claim arises. If we ask whether this action arises out of a tort, injury, or quasi delict, the answer must, I think, unhesitatingly be in the negative. It is a simple action for the price of land, which the terms of s. 301 impose upon the Commissioner the obligation to pay. The obligation to pay that price is of the same nature whether (1) the owner assents to the valuation of the land placed upon it by the Commissioner, (2) whether the value is [418] determined by the Chief Judge of the Small Cause Court, or (3) whether it is left undetermined. It is admitted that in the former two cases the section does not apply. I am quite unable to distinguish the third case in principle from them. In all three cases the obligation to pay is imposed by the terms of s. 301, and does not arise from the manner in which the amount of the price to be paid is arrived at. When goods are purchased to be paid for at the market rate, the obligation to pay for them arises from the contract of purchase, not from the ascertainment of the market rate. When land is acquired to be paid for at its value, the obligation to pay arises from the acquisition of the land in accordance with the provisions of the Act, and not, it appears to me, from the ascertainment of its value by agreement or otherwise. It is quite clear to my mind that the framers of the Act did not intend the short period of limitation of six months to apply to this case. It would appear unreasonable that they should do so. Section 504 gives the owner twelve months to apply to the Chief Judge to determine the value of the land in case of dispute, but if s. 527 applies to the claim, it is barred after six months. It cannot be that the value is to be ascertained after the claim is barred. In my opinion, s. 527 does not apply at all. Some difficulty in adopting this view arises from the wording of sub-cl. (d) to the section, but the relief is that damages may be sought in respect of a delict or wrong or quasi wrong committed, as, e. g., a declaration or mandatory injunction, or possibly such relief as was asked for in Nagusha v. Municipality of Sholapur (1), and damages are sought in cases of breach of contract to which the section admittedly does not apply. I answer the first question, therefore, in the negative.

Section 504 prescribes the mode, and, in my opinion, the only mode, in which, in case of dispute, the value of the land can be determined. The imperative words used in the section, I think, almost compel that conclusion, and the consideration that the policy of the Legislature has long been to have the value of land taken up for a public purpose determined by a specially [419] constituted tribunal (see Bombay Act III of 1872, s. 289, and Act X of 1870 passim) establishes its correctness. If the owner of land disputes the Commissioner's valuation (which usually assumes the form of an offer and often, as in this case, of an amended offer) he must make an application to the Chief Judge within a year. If he does not do so, the result, in my opinion, is that he loses the power of effectually disputing the Commissioner's valuation, but does not lose his right to the amount of that valuation. The section does not enact that his non-application shall have the latter result, and it appears rather an unreasonable, and certainly not a necessary, implication to draw from its provisions that it shall, especially as these provisions are conversant only with the determination of the quantum of value. There is nothing, in my opinion, in the provisions of s. 504 which deprives the owner of land, who does not apply under it to have his compensation determined, of his right to compensation, if independently of its provisions he has a right to receive it; nor is there, in the section, anything to relieve the Commissioner in such case from his obligation to pay the value of the land.

That the owner has a remedy independent of the provisions of s. 504, is, I think, clear. The section only deals with cases where there is a dispute as to the value of the land, and leaves untouched those cases where there is no such dispute, but where the Commissioner from default as to the title of the owner or for some other reason, as in this case, or arbitrarily declines to pay. In such cases the owner is left to his ordinary remedy, no special mode of procedure being prescribed. Cases in which there has been a dispute, but in which the owner abandons his claim to dispute the valuation of the Commissioner, fall, it appears to me, within the latter category. It would be absurd for the owner to apply to the Chief Judge to determine the amount of compensation saying, "I disputed the valuation of the Commissioner, but I do so no longer. Determine the amount." There would be nothing left for the Court to determine. That would not be making an application to the Court in case of dispute as to the amount, but in a case where there was no dispute. Such, I think, is the present case, and the plaintiff has properly resorted to the ordinary [420] jurisdiction of the Court. As to limitation, the case falls, I think, under the general law, and is admittedly not barred by its provisions. I agree, therefore, that the second question also should be answered in the negative.

Before Mr. Justice Jardine and Mr. Justice Ranade.

HARI KRISHNA JOSHI (Original Defendant), Appellant v. SHANKAR VITHAL (Original Plaintiff), *Respondent. [18th June, 1894.]

Easement—Trees—Trees overhanging neighbour's land—Nuisance—Easement Act (V of 1882).

Plaintiff sued for an injunction restraining the defendant from allowing the branches of a tree belonging to him to overhang plaintiff's land, and for an order directing him to cut off such branches.

Defendant pleaded that the branches of his tree had projected over plaintiff's land for forty years, and he contended that he had, therefore, acquired a prescriptive right of the nature of an easement over plaintiff's land.

Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to cut away the branches which overhung his land, though they had done so for more than forty years.

SECOND appeal from the decision of Rao Bahadur Kashinath, B. Marathe, Subordinate Judge, First Class, A.P., at Ratnagiri, in appeal No. 445 of 1891.

The plaintiff sued for an injunction restraining the defendant from allowing the branches of his cashew tree to overhang the plaintiff's ground, and for an order directing him to cut off such branches.

Plaintiff alleged that the branches of the trees overhung a part of his land measuring about 22 cubits by 15, and that, in consequence of the shadow cast by the branches, his cocoanut trees died.

Defendant pleaded that the branches had overhung the plaintiff's ground for more than forty years.

The Court of first instance dismissed the plaintiff's suit, holding that the right claimed by the defendant was an easement [421] which he had enjoyed for more than forty years, and that the prescriptive right so acquired could not now be disturbed by an injunction.

The plaintiff appealed and the appellate Court reversed the decree of the lower Court and granted an injunction. The judgment of the appellate Court was as follows:—

"No right of easement can be acquired by the natural growth of a tree. No part of the tree or branch that overhangs the land of another can remain constant or unchangeable for any length of time. The foliage, the sprouts, the twigs, the flower and the fruit change every day in form and size and number; and even the bark and concentric wooden tissue round the axis of the trunk and branches change within short periods, and they cannot last so long as is necessary to create the easement claimed. No tree or its branches can, therefore, be allowed to grow so as to cause injury to, or restrain a neighbour from enjoying, his property in the best possible manner, and the overhanging of a tree or its branches for any length of time cannot be brought within the purview of the definition of an easement as given in Act V of 1882."

The defendant preferred a second appeal to the High Court.

Vasudev G. Bhandarkar, for appellant (defendant).—The branches and foliage of our tree have been overhanging the plaintiff's ground for nearly forty years. We have thus acquired a prescriptive right to have this state of things continued. The existence of such prescriptive right seems to be admitted in Naik Parsotam v. Gandrap Fatelal (1). We have acquired a right of the nature of an easement as defined by Act V of 1882. The objection to the acquisition of an easement for roots of trees consists in the secrecy of the mode of enjoyment. That objection is not applicable with respect to branches of trees. Refers to Gale on Easements (5th Ed)., p. 524.

* Second Appeal No. 760 of 1892.

Manekshah Jahangirshah, for respondent (plaintiff).—There is no authority that an easement of the kind claimed by the defendant can be acquired by prescription. It is settled law that no easement can be acquired by user for roots of trees, the reason being that there is a perpetual change in the quality of inconvenience imposed by it. The same objection applies in the case of branches of trees. Refers to Gale on Easements (Ed.), p. 493. A nuisance of this kind is a continuing wrong, for which a cause of action accrues from due to due. Section 23 of the Limitation Act (XV of 1877) would save the bar of limitation—Vinayak v. Bhiwa (2).

JUDGMENT.

[422] JARDINE, J.—We are of opinion that the judgment of the lower Court is correct on the question of right.

The defendant contends, that because the branches of his tree growing on his own land have for forty years projected more or less over the adjoining land of the plaintiff he is entitled as against the plaintiff to have the continuance of this state of things decreed. The argument used is that the defendant has acquired, by prescription, a "right," which should be treated as an easement under Act V of 1882.

The first question is as to the law before the passing of that Statute. Two rules of Hindu Jurisprudence are quoted in the Vyavahara Mayukha, chap. XV, cl. 12, from Katyayana as follows: "The fruit and flowers of trees produced upon the boundary between two fields, are declared to be joint property, pertaining in common to the masters of the two fields." "But where the branches of trees growing in one man's fields, be spread over that of another, then he shall be considered as the owner [of their produce] over whose field they are so situated." We quote from the translation made by Mr. Borradaile of the Bombay Civil Service. In Mandlik's Hindu Law, p. 136, the second rule is, however, translated as follows:—"But where the branches of trees growing in one man's field are spread over that of another, then he shall be considered as the owner in whose field the trees stand." It is unnecessary to say which translation is correct, as the rule relates only to the overhanging produce or timber, and throws no direct light on the question of prescription or the plaintiff's right to cut away so much as overhangs his land. Apparently Borradaile uses the Sanskrit word samstit in the two places in the same one sense, while Mandlik gives it two meanings. No reported case has been shown us.

In similar matters the Indian Courts have often followed the principles applied by the Courts in England. These have lately been set forth, in the Supreme Court in Lemmon v. Webb (3) by Lord Justice Lindley, Lopes and Kay, L. JJ., concurring. The question raised at the trial was whether the owner of the land was entitled, there being no immediate danger to remove [423] the overhanging boughs, without notice to the owner of the tree.

Kekewich, J., held in the negative, treating the inconvenience as a nuisance of omission and long standing. The Court of appeal took a different view: and as its judgment supports the reasoning of Rao Bahadur Kashinath B. Marathe in the judgment now before us, where he excludes from the category of easements this overhanging of boughs, on the ground that they are constantly undergoing change in foliage, sprouts, twigs, flowers and fruits, in form, size and number as also in girth, we think it right to read it from beginning to end, as we concur altogether in the reasoning and consider it applies to the case before us. Lord Justice Lindley said, pp. 12-15 :—

"The plaintiff and the defendant in this case are adjoining landowners. Some old trees situate on the plaintiff's land had branches which projected over the defendant's land. The defendant cut off so much of these branches as projected over his land, and he did so without going on to the plaintiff's land and without previous notice to him. The question is whether the defendant was justified in so doing. Mr. Justice Kekewich thought not, and gave the plaintiff judgment for £5 and costs, and from this judgment the defendant has appealed.

"There is some controversy as to whether the defendant did not cut rather more than he himself says he did and more than he seeks to justify. But the evidence is clear that he certainly did not intend to cut more than so much of the branches as overhung his land; and the evidence is not sufficient to prove that he did in fact cut more. Having noticed this matter, I pass it over without further comment, for the action was not brought for such a trumpery purpose as to obtain damages for the wrongful cutting of two or three inches too much. The action was brought to obtain a declaration that the defendant had no right to cut the branches at all, or, at all events, no right to cut them without previous notice to the plaintiff and a request to him to cut them and a non-compliance by the plaintiff with that request.

"It was contended on behalf of the plaintiff that, having regard to the age of the trees and of the projecting branches, he had [424] acquired a right to the exclusive possession of so much of the space above the defendant's soil as the branches actually filled, and that either under the Statute of Limitations or by prescription the plaintiff had a right to keep the branches when they had grown. It was contended that if a man erected on his own land something which projected over his neighbour's land, and it remained undisturbed for a sufficient length of time, his neighbour could not remove it nor maintain any action in respect of it. This is true. But to plant a tree on one's own land infringes no rights, and if the tree grows over the soil of another, I cannot discover that any action lies for the encroachment unless damage can be proved. I can find no authority for the proposition that an action of trespass would lie in such a case, and it is plain that Lord Ellenborough did not think it would (see Pickering v. Rudd) (1). According to our law, the owner of a tree which gradually grows over his neighbour's land is not regarded as insensibly and by slow degrees acquiring a title to the space into which its branches gradually grow. This is the view taken in the third edition of Gale on Easements, (6th Ed., p. 461) to which reference will be made presently. Considering that no title is acquired to the space occupied by new wood, and that new wood not only lengthens but thickens old wood, and that new wood gradually formed over old wood cannot practically be removed as it grows, and considering the flexibility of branches and their constant motion, it is plain that the analogy sought to be established between an artificial building or projection hanging over a man's land and a branch of a tree is not sufficiently close to serve any useful purpose. The argument to which I am referring had the charm of novelty, but it is quite inconsistent with the authorities to which I will refer presently, and no Court can introduce by judicial decision a perfectly new mode of acquiring a title to land or to a portion of the space above it.

"The right of an owner of land to cut away the boughs of trees which overhang it, although those trees are not his, is too clear to be disputed. This has been declared to be the [425] law for centuries—see Bro. Ab. "Nusans," (Vol. II, p. 105, pl. 28); Narris v. Baker(1), Pickering v. Rudd (2); Crowhurst v. Burial Board of Amersham(3)—and there is no trace of the age of the tree or its branches being a material circumstance for consideration. Nor did Mr. Justice Kekewich intimate any doubt upon the law up to this point. He, however, held that notice ought to be given to the owner of the tree before it was interfered with, and the real question is whether notice is required by law. The authorities to which I have referred, do not allude to the necessity of notice. In Pickering v. Rudd, which was an action for cutting the plaintiff's Virginian creeper, the plea contained no averment of notice, and the plaintiff did not demur, but new assigned and alleged an excessive cutting. Lord Ellenborough held that the only question was whether the defendant had exceeded his right by cutting too much. Again, in Chitty on Pleading (7th Ed., Vol. 3, p. 364), a form of a plea justifying the lopping of overhanging branches is given, and there is no averment of notice to the owner of the tree. In the 7th Ed., Vol. 3, p. 364, such an averment is introduced, and reference is made to Jones v. Williams (4). Jones v. Williams was not a case of cutting trees, but it is the leading authority on the right to abate nuisances without notice; and it was decided that a person who suffers from a nuisance on another person's land can enter upon that land and abate that nuisance without notice if the person in possession of the land himself created the nuisance or in case of emergency, but that in other cases notice to the person in possession and a request to him to abate the nuisance and non-compliance with that request are necessary to justify the entry and the abatement of the nuisance by the person aggrieved by it. This is what the case decided, and so far the decision only applies to what one man may do on another man's land. It does not show what a man may or may not do on his own land. But in Jones v. Williams (ubi sup). Baron Parke, who delivered the judgment of the Court, referred to a case in Jenkins, p. 260, case 57, and to Penruddock's case (5) as authorities [426] for the proposition that an owner of land cannot without notice remove the overhanging eaves of a neighbour's house erected by a former owner through whom the neighbour had acquired title by feoffment. The reason of this doctrine is not explained.

"But, assuming it to be correct as regards an overhanging house or eaves, it does not follow that it applies to the overhanging branches of a tree. The judgment of Mr. Justice Best in Earl of Lonsdale v. Nelson (6) is explicit, that overhanging trees may be lopped by the owner of land over which they hang without notice. Mr. Justice Best says the right so to lop them is an exception to the general rule which requires notice before a nuisance, not created by the owner of what creates it, can be abated by a person injured by it. He is not alluding to a case of emergency, for in such a case no notice need ever be given. He refers to such cases afterwards (His Lordship read passages from the judgment of Mr. Justice Best and continued :—)

"What I have above said respecting the right to cut branches is equally true with respect to the right to cut roots see Gale on Easements, 3rd Ed , pp. 419—420, 6th Ed., p. 461). (His Lordships read an extract from that work and continued :— This passage has the authority of the late Mr. Justice Willes, who edited the edition from which I have read the foregoing extract.

"The law on the subject is, in my opinion, as follows :—The owner of a tree has no right to prevent a person lawfully in possession of land into or over which its roots or branches have grown from cutting away so much of them as projects into or over his land, and the owner of the tree is not entitled to notice unless his land is entered in order to effect such cutting. However old the roots or branches may be, they may be cut without notice, subject to the same condition. The right of an owner or occupier of land to free it from such obstructions is not restricted by the necessity of giving notice so long as he confines himself and his operations to his own land, including the space vertically above and below its surface.

[427] "The defendant contended that he was justified in cutting the plaintiff's trees because they were in imminent danger of falling, but this is not proved, and my judgment is not based on grounds of urgency.

"The appeal, therefore, must be allowed, and the appellant must have the costs of the appeal, and judgment must be entered for the defendant; but, having regard to the obscurity of the law as to notice and to the very unneighbourly conduct of the defendant, there will be no order as to the costs of the action."

Following the Lords Justices we are of opinion that the plaintiff may on his own land cut away the boughs that overhang. We are also of opinion that this judgment confirms the view of the lower Court that a growing tree being always in a state of change differs from such things as eaves and projecting beams. Thus the private nuisance caused by the overhanging boughs does not create a "right" under the definition of Easements in the Indian Statute, nor does the convenience to the owner of the tree, always changing in extent and position of space, become at any time so determinate that it can by length of time be held to be enjoyed as "of right," a matter essential under s. 15 of that Statute. In this way we deal with the argument about prescription.

It is unnecessary to determine here the other issue raised in the lower Court whether the plaintiff is entitled to the relief by injunction, as no contention has been raised before us on that point. Nor are we in a position to say whether for the purpose of relief the plaintiff if he tried to abate the nuisance himself would have to enter on the defendant's land. The point not having been raised it is unnecessary for us to consider whether the relief by injunction can be granted under s. 54, cls. (b), (c) and (d), of the Specific Relief Act.

For these reasons we are of opinion that the decree should be confirmed with costs.

Hindu law—Adoption—Adoption of an only son—Validity of such adoption among Lingayets—Custom of Lingayets—Gift by adoptive father at the time of adoption—Gift binding on adopted son—Conditional adoption—Custom—Evidence of custom.

According to the custom of Lingayets in the districts of Dharwar and Bijapur the adoption of an only son is valid.

Where a Hindu at the time of taking a son in adoption made a gift of a portion of his ancestral property to his daughters, and the deed of gift as well as the adoption deed were executed on the same day, and they mutually referred to each other.

Held that the plaintiff's natural father having been a party to the deed of adoption which referred to the deed of gift executed along with it, the case fell under the category of conditional adoptions which are allowed by law.

Held, also, that the deed of gift in favour of defendants Nos. 2 and 3 was valid and binding on plaintiff.

APPEAL from the decision of Rao Bahadur Babaji Lakshman, First Class Subordinate Judge of Dharwar, in suit No. 69 of 1888.

The main question raised in this appeal was whether the adoption of an only son was valid according to the custom of Lingayets in the Dharwar and Bijapur districts.

The plaintiff sued for a declaration that he was the adopted son of one Shivangauda, deceased, and to recover possession of the moveable and immoveable property belonging to his adoptive father. He alleged that he was adopted by Shivangauda on 31st March, 1887; that an adoption deed was executed in his favour by Shivangauda at the time of the adoption; that Shivangauda died on 13th April, 1887; that after his death he (the plaintiff) lived with his adoptive mother till October, 1887, when disputes [429] and differences arose, in consequence of which she denied his adoption and turned him out of his house.

Defendant No. 1 (the widow of Shivangauda) pleaded (inter alia) that the plaintiff's adoption was invalid under the Hindu law, as he was the only son of his natural father.

Defendants Nos. 2 and 3 (the daughters of Shivangauda), besides disputing the validity of the plaintiff's adoption, contended that part of the property in dispute had been given to them by their father under a deed of gift dated 31st March, 1887.

Defendant No. 4 did not contest the plaintff's claim.

Defendant No. 5 (the husband of defendant No. 2) raised the same defences as defendants Nos. 2 and 3.

The parties to this suit belonged to the Lingayet community of Dharwar and Bijapur. The plaintiff alleged that according to the custom of this caste the adoption of an only son was valid.

* Appeal No. 18 of 1890.

JUNE 20.
APPEL-
CIVIL.
19 B. 428.

The Subordinate Judge held that the custom set up by the plaintiff was proved; that this custom was a valid custom; that the defendants were estopped from questioning the validity of the plaintiff's adoption; and that the plaintiff was entitled to all the moveable and immoveable property in dispute, except the portion given by the deed of gift to the defendants Nos. 2 and 3 by the deceased Shivangauda. Subject to this exception, the plaintiff's claim was decreed with costs.

Against this decree the defendants appealed to the High Court.

The Advocate-General and Scott (B. A. Bhagvat with them), for the appellants.—In this Presidency it is settled law that the adoption of an only son is invalid—Waman Raghupati v. Krishnaji (1). The plaintiff relies on a special custom of the Lingayets in the Southern Maratha Country, according to which he alleges that the adoption of an only son is valid. Such a custom he has failed to prove. Out of fifty-one instances adduced by him, eleven are cases of adoption in the duyamushyayana form. In this group we include cases of adoption not only of a brother's son, but also of a brother's grandson, for the same reason and on the same principle that the Hindu law forbids an adoption so long [430] as a son or a grandson exists—West and Bubler (3rd Ed.), 917 and 944. These cases must be excluded, because they are valid without any special custom. We must also exclude eight other cases which are sought to be proved by hearsay evidence. So, too, we have to exclude four cases which are only supported by affidavits. Then there are about fourteen cases of adoption which took place in castes other than Lingayets. Excluding all these cases there remain not more than ten or fifteen cases of adoption of an only son among the Lingayets of Dharwar. These cases are of a comparatively recent date, and cannot establish an ancient and uniform custom such as can be recognized by a Court of Justice. The present case resembles the case of Gopal Narhar Safray v. Hanmant Ganesh Safray (2), where it is held that occasional breaches of general rules of caste or law do occur, but a few modern breaches of such a rule do not constitute an ancient and invariable custom. That such a custom does not exist among Lingayets, appears clearly from the Full Bench case of 1879 referred to in Waman Raghupati v. Krishnaji (1). Disputes occur when such adoptions take place among Lingayets, as is shown in plaintiff's case, and in about thirty other cases cited by the defendants; so plaintiff goes to other castes and to Native States like Miraj and Sangli. The wider the circle, the more breaches of religious law will be found. The cases adduced by the plaintiff do not, therefore, establish a valid custom.

Ganasham Nilkanth (with Jardine), for respondent.—The present case comes from a district which lies on the borders of the Madras Presidency, where adoptions of an only son are held valid—Chinna Gaundan v. Kumara Gaundan (3); Narayansami v. Kuppasami (4). In Gawri v. Shivaram (5) this Court has held that the adoption of a daughter's son, though invalid according to the strict Hindu law, is permissible according to the custom of Saraswat Brahmins in the neighbouring district of Kanara. The custom set up by the plaintiff has been satisfactorily proved. The instances cited are mostly from the Southern Maratha Country—from Dharwar and Bijapur districts. Most of the cases [431] are from watandar families. If such adoptions had not been sanctioned by custom, they would have been contested. Yet there has been no dispute or litigation in civil Courts. Such of the adoptions as came under the cognizance of the district authorities, of Government, or of the Native States were confirmed by them. The instances given range from the commencement of the British rule up to the present time; and they are sufficiently numerous to establish a valid custom, and not occasional breaches of the law—Chain Sukh Ram v. Parbati (1); Vayidinada v. Appu (2); Viraragava v. Ramalinga (3). The existence of such a custom among the Lingayets of the Southern Maratha Country is probable, because the law on this subject, though now authoritatively settled by the recent Full Bench decision of this Court in Waman Raghupati v. Krishnaji (4), was differently interpreted by the other High Courts and even by this Court—Hanuman Tiwari v. Chirai (5); Beni Prasad v. Hardai Bibi (6); Narayanasami v. Kuppusami (7); Mandlik's Hindu Law, pp. 496—514; Strange's Hindu Law, Vol. I, p. 87. The prohibition against the adoption of an only son has reference to the performance of funeral rites, and shradhas, &c., which are not observed among Lingayets. Like the Jains, the Lingayets adopt for temporal purposes only. The religious grounds which prohibit the adoption of an only son do not, therefore, apply to the Lingayets.

As to the cases of dwyamushyayana adoption, which the appellant's counsel seeks to exclude, some of them are cases of adoptions of a brother's grandson, to which the dwyamushyayana theory does not apply. It is restricted to the case of a brother's son and cannot be extended further. The remaining cases are cases of brother's sons, in which the brothers were separated in interest at the date of the adoptions. But the dwyamushyayana adoption takes place only in the case of united brothers—Wooma Daee v. Gokoolanand Dass (8). It requires a special agreement to the effect that the son adopted shall be son to both the adoptive and natural father—Vyavahar Mayuk, ch. IV, [432] s. 5, pl. 31, 32; Stokes Hindu Law, pp, 65, 69; Sarkar's Tagore Law Lectures, pp. 23, 301, Mandlik's Mayuk, 58; West and Buhler (3rd Ed.), 1134, 1208, 898 and 1045. In the case of united brothers, the existence of such an agreement may be presumed. But where the brothers are separated, such a presumption would work injustice to the heirs of the natural father, such as the widow, the daughter, &c.

JUDGMENT.

RANADE, J.—In this case, the appellant No. 1 is the widow, appellants Nos. 2, 3 are the daughters, and appellant No. 4 is the son-in-law, of the deceased Shivangauda, and the respondent, (original plaintiff), claims to be the adopted son of Shivangauda. Shivangauda, it was alleged, had adopted the respondent according to the custom of the caste and the Hindu Shastras on 31st March, 1887, and after executing a deed of adoption in respondent's favour, Shivangauda died on the 13th April, 1887. Respondent alleged that he first lived with his adoptive father, and since his death with the appellants till October, 1887, when differences arose, and appellants refused to recognize his adoption, and turned him out of the house. Thereupon he brought his suit to establish his alleged adoption by Shivangauda, and to recover possession of the moveable and immoveable property of the deceased Shivangauda.

The chief contentions of defendants Nos. 1, 2, 3, 5, were (1) that the deceased Shivangauda did not adopt the respondent, plaintiff, as his son according to the Hindu law, as plaintiff's natural mother was Shivangauda's daughter-in-law, and the plaintiff could not be validly adopted (2). It was also urged that as plaintiff was the only son of his natural father he could not be given or received in adoption according to Hindu law.

The defendont No. 1 also urged that all the moveable and immoveable property and cash in dispute belonged to defendant No. 1, excepting such property as was given by a deed of gift to defendants Nos. 2, 3, 5 by Shivangauda, and that no part of the property belonged to plaintiff. Defendant No. 4, the third daughter of Shivangauda, did not appear to defend the suit. Defendants Nos. 2, 3, 5 claimed to be owners of most of the moveable and some immoveable property in their own right, and [433] they also claimed a house and certain lands under a deed of gift Defendant No. 5 (appellant No. 4) was the husband of defendant No. 2.

The lower Court held (1) that plaintiff was the only son of his natural father; (2) that he was adopted by Shivangauda; (3) that the adoption was not valid according to Hindu law; (4) but that it was valid by the custom of the Lingayets in the southern districts of this Presidency, which permitted such adoptions; (5) that this custom was a valid custom; (6) that defendants were estopped from questioning the validity of plaintiff's adoption by reason of their conduct prior and subsequent to the date of adoption; (7) that the plaintiff was the owner of all the moveable and immoveable property, save that which was given by the deed of gift (Ex. 113) to the defendants Nos. 2, 3 by the deceased Shivangauda. Plaintiff's claim was accordingly awarded, subject to the exception noticed above.

Defendants Nos. 1, 2, 3, 5, appealed from this decree, chiefly on the grounds (1), that the alleged custom of Lingayets in the southern districts of this Presidency was not proved; (2) that the custom was not valid, and could not be enforced (3). It was also urged that the decision of the lower Court was based on insufficient and inadmissible evidence, and was against the weight of that evidence. As regards the details of the property, it was contended (4), that some of the moveable property had been set apart by Shivangauda for defendant No. 1's maintenance, and some property was her stridhan, and plaintiff had no right to the same. (5) The same objection was urged in respect of the rest of the movable property as belonging to defendants Nos. 2, 3, 5, in their own right. Respondent prefered cross-objections in respect of the portion of the claim disallowed by the lower Court, and he urged that the deed of gift was invalid and inoperative, as Shivangauda had no power to execute such a deed of gift of ancestral property in favour of defendants Nos. 2 and 3 to the prejudice of his adopted son.

This case came on before this Division Bench (Jardine and Telang, JJ.) on the 30th March, 1892, when the case was sent back under s. 568 for receiving the evidence of the parties [434] in respect of certain genealogies filed on plaintiff's behalf, which had been accepted by the lower Court, without being formally proved, on the strength of a presumed admission of the same by the parties. This additional evidence has been since recorded, and the whole of the arguments have been heard afresh, and the case has been pending for judgment since March last.

As the evidence filed in the case was of a very voluminous character, both the parties have, with the permission of the Court, filed printed statements (A and B) carefully prepared on the basis of the documentary and oral evidence bearing on the main point in controversy, namely, the evidence regarding the alleged custom of the Lingayets in the southern or Canarese districts of the Presidency of adopting an only son. The statements summarize the evidence affirming or negativing such custom. This was indeed the principal point argued before us by the learned counsel on either side. The Advocate General in his first argument admitted that this was the main point in controversy in regard to the adoption. The dispute was not in regard to the factum of adoption, but in regard to the legality of the alleged adoption of the plaintiff by Shivangauda. About the alleged custom, the Advocate General ; and after him Mr. Scott, contended that no such custom, even if proved, would be valid, as it was opposed to Hindu law, that the custom set up in this case was sought to be proved by instances which had no bearing on the alleged practice of Lingayets in the southern districts of the Presidency, and that the so-called instances were made up largely of exceptional cases of dwyamushyayana sons. It was admitted that the Hindu law allowed the adoption of an only son as a dwyamushyayana, but it was contended that the present case did not fall under this category. It may be of use to reproduce here a brief summary of the arguments urged on either side before examining the evidence in detail. On behalf of the appellants it was urged (1) that very few witnesses came from the immediate neighbourhood, and many instances occurred in Native States where the law was not settled ; (2) that many of the instances were based on erroneous views of the Shastras, which were upheld in the earlier decisions ; (3) that many instances were cases of dwyamushyayana, [435] being sons of uncles first removed, and not of second cousins' sons, as in this case ; (4) that many of the witnesses were women, who adopted after their husbands' death ; (5) that many of the instances were of very recent date, some having taken place after the suit, and others only a few years before the suit ; (6) that the evidence in the case of many of them did not make it quite clear whether the adoption was of an only son ; (7) that some instances were evidently based on vague hearsay evidence, and the facts were not personally known to the witnesses ; (8) that many instances did not belong to the members of the Lingayet caste, but belonged to Reddis, Hatgars, Dhangars, Brahmins, and other castes. In other words, no ancient, invariable, and general custom was proved. (9) Moreover, evidence was given on defendants' behalf to prove that the adoption of an only son was looked upon as illegal by Pandits and others, and the High Courts' decisions were against such a custom (10). It was also urged that there was no estoppel in this case, as the dispute was raised within six months after the alleged adoption.

On behalf of the plaintiff, it was urged (1) that the defendants were estopped by their conduct from raising the question of the validity of plaintiff's adoption; (2) that the deeds of gift and adoption were parts of the same transaction, and the defendants could not claim under the deed of gift, and repudiate the adoption. (3) As regards the evidence of custom, it was alleged, that there were very few cases of contemporaneous or subsequent adoptions ; (4) that out of 51 cases in all, in nine or ten cases only was the adoption made of a nephew, and such adoptions of nephews cannot be held to be dwyamushyayana in all cases; in the absence of special agreement to inherit from both families ; (5) that in none of the previous decisions where Lingayet adoption disputes came up before the High Court, was there any plea of custom set up ; (6) that most of the witnesses were from the neighbourhood; (7) that even if women adopted in some cases they did so in the presence of many persons, and the estates affected were watan properties where litigation might have been expected if the validity of the custom was not generally recognized ; (8) that those who gave hearsay evidence had also given evidence of similar adoptions within their own knowledge, and many cases [436] were presumably very old cases; (9) that even in cases where the adoptions were previously disputed, the dispute was raised on other grounds, and not on the ground alleged by defendants in this case; (10) that the Brahmin instances were given to show that, if custom prevailed over the Shastras in the Brahmin caste, with its devotion to ceremonials and shraddha offerings, it should ipso facto be less open to question among the Lingayets, who, like the Jains, are heretics, and observed no ceremonies, and performed no shraddhas; (11) that defendants' witnesses were either unreliable, or gave vague and hearsay opinion evidence; and (12) that no instances were cited by defendants' witnesses where the adoption of an only son had been disallowed.

This epitome of the arguments on either side brings out clearly the several bye-issues which have to be considered in properly appreciating the evidence of custom adduced in this case. These bye-issues resolve themselves into:—(1) Whether the evidence adduced comes from the part of the country under consideration, or from outside those limits. (2) Whether the instances noted are of recent or ancient date? (3) Whether the evidence relates to the Lingayet caste, or to other castes, whose practice in such matters can have no bearing on the point in dispute? (4) Whether the evidence is of a vague and hearsay character given by incompetent witnesses, or whether it is the result chiefly of personal knowledge? (5) Whether many of the cases cited were really instances of the alleged custom of the adoptions of an only son, or were adoptions in the dwyamushyayana form? Defendants' contention is that if proper exceptions be made under all these heads, out of the fifty-one instances adduced on plaintiff's behalf to prove the alleged custom, fifteen instances would go out as belonging to other than Lingayet castes (Brahmins, Marathas, Kostis, Reddis, Dhangars, Hatgars, &c.). The castes in five more are unknown. Ten cases fell under the category of the adoption of brothers' sons, permitted by Hindu law. Three more related to adoptions subsequent in date to the one in dispute. Eighteen were objected to on the ground of being supported by hearsay evidence only. Several instances came from Native States, where the law of adoption might be different, and from Poona and Satara districts, where the general law [437] obtains, and has been so applied by the High Court. In three or four instances it was not proved that the adopted child was the only son of his natural father. These deductions leave very few, if any, instances, which at all support the alleged custom. Plaintiff, on the other hand, contended that these objections did not apply, at least in a vast majority of the instances deposed to on his behalf.

In regard to the first bye-issue noted above, a glance at the printed statements filed by the parties shows clearly that most of the instances came from Dharwar and Bijapur districts. Ten instances came from Bijapur (one from Bagevadi, three from Bagalkot, and six from Badami talukas in that district), and thirty-two instances came from the Dharwar District, being spread-over all the talukas; one from Nargund; eleven from Navalgund; six from Bankapur; three from Kalghatgi; four from Hubli; three from Dharwar; and one each from Gadag, Hangal, Karajgi, and Ron. There are three instances from Lakshmeshwar, and one from Shirhatti, which are talukas of the Patwardhan Chiefs of Miraj and Sangli, surrounded on all sides by the Dharwar Districts. To prove the alleged custom, these last instances appear to us, for reasons given below, to be perfectly legitimate. There are only five instances from Poona and Satara districts and the Kolhapur State, which must be excluded from the category of the southern districts of the Presidency.

As regards the second by-issue as to the period of time covered by these instances, it may be noted that the period covered is nearly seventy-five years, from 1814 to 1889. One instance is of 1814-16, another of 1825, a third of 1829, one each of 1837, 1847, 1849, 1857, 1859 and 1861. The rest, about thirty-eight, occurred between 1867 and 1889, and only four are contemporaneous, or of subsequent years. It could not be reasonably expected that, either in respect of time or place, plaintiff should have produced all very old instances, or instances from his own particular taluka Ron of Dharwar District. The range of instances is both in respect of time and place wide, and evenly distributed.

1894 JUNE 20. APPELLATE CIVIL. 19 B. 428.

As regards the castes, there are 29 cases of Lingayets, 4 Reddis, 7 Brahmins, 4 Shepherds or Dhangars, 1 Hatgar, 1 Kunbiwani, [438] 1 Maratha and 4 of unknown castes. The instances of Brahmins, and of the Maratha, Kunbiwani and unknown castes, may at once be excluded from consideration, as proof of any custom among them cannot be of much use in the present case. The exclusion affects, thirteen instances, Nos. 28, 30 to 34, 36, 43, and 47 to 51. The last five cases are excluded also on account of the locality they come from, being outside the local sphere of the custom now pleaded. Four of these cases are further open to objection on the ground that they are based on affidavits filed in another case in 1879, which affidavits were not then accepted, and are certainly inadmissible in this case. This exclusion leaves about thirty-eight instances, which we must now consider in detail. We do not think that the few instances of recent adoptions should be excluded from consideration solely on that account, as it cannot be assumed that parties to them resorted to such a practice with a view to favour or disfavour the litigants in this case. These instances, being uncontested are useful as expressions of the general legal conscience of the country on this point. The exclusion or inclusion of adoptions by Reddis, Dhangars and Hatgars, (instances 1, 2, 8, 11, 18, 25, 41, 42, 44,) cannot be summarily made. It is a question of fact which will have to be considered later on on the evidence given, since the Reddis described themselves, and are described in the Gazetteers, as Lingayets by religion, and the Shepherds are in a similar condition, being alleged to be either half Lingayets, or affiliated Lingayets in that part of the country. We shall, however, for the present confine our attention to purely Lingayet cases, and proceed to a detailed consideration of the evidence to see how far they are satisfactiorily proved or disproved. These are 29 in number (3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 9, 10, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 19, 20—24, 26, 27, 29, 35, 37—40, 45, 46).

Instance No. 3.—The adoption in this case is alleged to have taken place in Bagalkot in Bijapur District in 1884. Plaintiff's witnesses, (Exs. 75, 159,) were present at the adoption. The only objection urged on defendants' behalf to this evidence was that one of the witnesses was a woman living in Bagavadi, while the adoption took place in Bagalkot, and that the parties to the adoption were not themselves examined. We do not think that [439] these are valid objections. The defendants might have examined the parties themselves, if they suspected the truthfulness of plaintiff's witnesses. As regards the objection that witness, Ex. 75, is a woman, she is over fifty-five years old and personally witnessed the adoption. This instance may, therefore, be held to be sufficiently proved. It is not alleged by defendants that this is a case of the adoption of a brother's son.

Instance No. 4 is not entitled to similar credit. It is only supported by the evidence of witness, (Ex. 159) who mentioned four instances in all, but whose knowledge in this case appears to be based on very vague hearsay. He cannot identify the parties to the adoption, and cannot say if the person adopted was an only son. We, therefore, hold that the evidence in this case is not of a very satisfactory character.

Instance No. 5 comes from Navalgund, Dharwar District. It is proved by the evidence of witnesses, Exs. 160, 232, who were present at the time, and by the far more valuable evidence of the natural mother, a woman seventy years old, and by the documentary evidence, Exs. 324, 325, the first being a letter of assent passed by the bhaubands, and the last an order of the Nargund State. The adoption occurred in 1857 before Nargund was annexed. Defendants' only objection to the oral evidence is that witness, Ex. 160, was too young at the time to remember the event. No such objection applies to the other witness, Ex. 232, and to the natural mother of the person adopted. As regards the documents, it is urged that they do not mention the fact that the adoptee was an only son. There was no occasion to make any such mention in 1857, and any mention of the fact would have been suspicious. The positive evidence of the natural mother removes all doubts. It is urged that the instance came from Nargund when it was a Native State, and the law there might have been different. This objection is not sustainable, because till the High Court first raised the point in 1868, the general understanding every where was that, though blameable, the adoption of an only son, once effected, was valid. Tht Advocate General himself admitted in his argument that the older decisions were to this effect. In such matters, true customary law is likely to be better preserved in Native States than in British territory. This [440] instance, supported as it is by oral and documentary evidence, is certainly entitled to great credit as evidence of custom. This is also not a case of the adoption of a brother's son.

Instance No. 6 comes from Navalgund in the Dharwar District, and the adoption is alleged to have taken place in 1829. It is proved by the evidence of witness, Ex. 160, who is the son of the alleged adoptee, and by the evidence of witness, Ex. 74, who saw the adoption. This instance, however, does not appear to be an illustration of the adoption of an only son, as the document, Ex. 328, produced on plaintiff's behalf, shows that Maregauda had other sons at the time. Witness, Ex. 74, is not sufficiently old herself to speak from personal knowledge about events that took place sixty years ago. We must, therefore, exclude this instance as being of a doubtful character.

Instance No. 7 comes from Navalgund, Dharwar District, and the adoption took place in 1877-79. It his proved by the evidence of witnesses, Exs. 160 and 74, who were present, and witness, Ex. 170, who is himself the adopted son. The defendants did not raise any doubts about the truthfulness of this evidence, except by saying that it is a case of the adoption of a brother's son. It is not quite clear from the evidence whether the brothers, Yellappa and Goundappa, were separate or united. It was for the defendants to prove that the adopted son succeeded to the property of both his natural and adoptive fathers. Such evidence ought to have been given to warrant the exclusion of this case from consideration of the evidence about custom. As it is, we must admit this instance provisionally, as an instance of the adoption of a brother's son by his uncle.

Instance No. 9 comes from Navalgund, Dharwar District, and the adoption took place in 1885. It is proved by the evidence of witness, Ex. 166, who is the adoptive father, and Ex. 245, who is the natural father of the adopted son. Witness, Ex. 161, was also present at the adoption. The adoption in this case was that of a brotner's son, but after, and not before separation, as is erroneously stated in the printed statement filed on defendants' behalf. No other objection is urged by defendants, save the one stated above to the inclusion of this instance.

[441] Instance No. 10 comes from Badami Taluka, Bijapur District, and the adoption took place in 1867. It is proved by the evidence of witnesses 161, 73, who were present at the time of the adoption, and witness 232, who is the natural father, and witness, Ex. 168. Defendants take exception to the evidence of witness, Ex. 73, because she lives in Bagalkot Taluka, while the adoption took place in Badami, and to the evidence of witness 161, because it is hearsay. Leaving aside these witnesses, there is nothing to shake the credit of witnesses 168 and 232, confirmed as it is by the official extract, Ex. 352, relating to the mutation of names. This is not a case of the adoption of a brother's son, as the adoptive mother was paternal aunt of the natural father.

Instance No. 12 comes from Bankapur, Dharwar District, and the adoption took place in 1886. It is proved by the evidence of the natural father, Ex. 165, and witness 169, who saw the adoption. The adoptive mother was the aunt of the father of the boy given in adoption. This was, therefore, not a case of the adoption of a brother's son. Defendants urged no objection to this evidence, except that witness, Ex. 169, said that his knowledge was of a hearsay kind, and witness, Ex. 165, stated that the watan in the adoptive family was in dispute. These circumstances do not detract much from the value of the evidence of witness, Ex. 165. It may, therefore, be accepted as a good instance of the alleged custom.

Instance No. 13 comes from Lakshmeshwar, Miraj territory, and the adoption took place in 1874. It is proved by the evidence of witnesses 165, 239, who stated that some 400 persons were present at the time. The only objection taken by defendants to this instance was that it took place in the territory of a Native State, which objection has not much force for reasons stated above. This is also not a case of the adoption of a brother's son, as the adoptive father is a distant bhauband of the natural father. The defendants were quite free to examine the parties to the adoption if they thought the evidence of witnesses, Exs. 165, 239, defective or unreliable. This case must, therefore, be accepted as a very clear instance of the alleged custom.

Instance No 14 also comes from Lakshmeshwar, and the adoption took place in 1884. It is proved by the oral evidence of the [442] adopting widow, Ex. 70, and of two witnesses, Exs. 165 and 239. The adopting widow produced the deed of adoption, which shows that the adoption was not that of a brother's son. The defendants' objections to this instance are, that it comes from a Native State, that the natural father was not examined, and, lastly, that the deed makes no mention of the fact that the adopted child was an only son. None of these objections appear to us to be at all valid. The omission in the deed to notice the fact, that the boy adopted was an only son, is itself suggestive that no doubts were felt on that point, and the defect is supplied by the oral evidence of witness, Ex. 70.

LATE
CIVIL.
19 B. 428.

Instance No. 15 comes from Badami in the Bijapur District, and the adoption took place in 1877—79. It is proved by the evidence of witness 167. Defendants' only objection to this instance is that the names of the parties given by the witness are not indicative of their being Lingayets. The witness, however, swore positively that the adoptive mother was an adherent of the Virkalmath of Badami, and he was not cross-examined. It was certainly open to the defendants to show by positive evidence that the parties were not Lingayets, and they could have adduced rebutting evidence if they desired to discredit the witness, Ex. 167.

Instance No. 16 also comes from Badami, and the adoption took place in 1885. It was proved by the evidence of witness No. 168, who, however, stated that his knowledge about the adopted child being the only son of his natural father, was derived from what the adopted son told him. This instance cannot, therefore, be accepted as satisfactorily proved for the purposes of this suit, and the defendants' objection is well sustained so far as this case is concerned.

Instance No. 17 comes from Bankapur, Dharwar District, and the adoption took place in 1867. It is proved by the evidence of witness No. 168, who was himself the adopted son. He stated that he had learnt the fact of his being an only son from his adoptive mother. Defendants object that the natural mother ought to have been examined in this case. As a matter of pedigree, the hearsay evidence in this case is not, in my opinion, open to the same objection as in instance No. 16.

[443] Instance No. 19 comes from Bankapur, Dharwar District, and the adoption took place in 1873. It is proved by the evidence of the natural father of the adopted son, Ex. 230, as also by the deed of adoption. This is not a case of the adoption of a brother's son, as the adoptive father was father-in-law of the natural father of the boy given in adoption. Defendants' only objection to this instance is that it was a family arrangement. That circumstance, however, does not detract from its value as evidence in support of the alleged custom. As an instance of the adoption of a daughter's son, it rather strengthens plaintiff's contention that the Lingayet caste in these parts does not observe the strict Brahminical doctrine which prohibits the adoption of daughters' sons. This liberty in regard to daughters' sons has been recognized in respect of this caste by judicial decisions, which have treated Lingayets as being Shudras, who might adopt daughters' and sisters' sons.

Instance No. 20 comes from Kalghatgi, Dharwar District, and the adoption took place in 1880. It is proved by the evidence of the person adopted, who also produced the deed of adoption, Ex. 238. Like the last case, this is also not an instance of the adoption of a brother's son, but of a daughter's son. Defendants' only objection to this instance is that this was also a family arrangement, which circumstance, however, does not detract from the value of the precedent. Defendants further contend that Ex. 238 shows that the son given in adoption was not an only son. A careful perusal of the deed, however, satisfies us that this contention is not correct. The deed only recites that the husband of the adoptive mother had directed her that she should adopt one of her daughter's sons. It does not necessarily follow from this that the daughter had more than one son at the time when the adoption took place. Witness, Ex. 233, states positively that this was a case of an only son. This is an instance of adoption in a watandar family; and is, therefore, of more than ordinary importance.

JUNE 20.
APPELLATE CIVIL.
19 B. 428.

Instance No. 21 comes from Hubli, Dharwar District, and the adoption took place in 1881. It was sought to be proved by the evidence of witness, Ex. 233, who was present at the time. His information about the adopted child being an only son was, [444] however, admittedly derived from the adoptive father, and it may, therefore, be regarded as hearsay evidence of no great probative value.

Instance No. 22 comes from Kalghatgi, Dharwar District, and the adoption took place in 1875. It is very satisfactorily proved by the evidence of the adopted son, Ex. 244, and the adoption deed produced by him, Ex. 331, as also by the evidence of witnesses, Exs. 233 and 70, who were present at the time. This is again not a case of the adoption of a brother's son, and the property is watan property of considerable value. Defendants' only objection is that this was an instance of the succession of a foster child, which theory is rebutted by the deed itself, and the oral evidence of the witnesses.

Instance No. 23 comes from Dharwar itself, and belongs to the respectable family of Chanbasapa, late Deputy Educational Inspector, Dharwar. The evidence of the only witness examined is, however, admittedly hearsay, and the defendant very properly objected to this instance being accepted as evidence of the alleged custom. This instance must, therefore, be excluded from consideration.

Instance No. 24 comes also from Dharwar, and the adoption took place so far back as 1837. It is very satisfactorily proved, both by documentary and oral evidence. There is, first, the will of the natural father, Ex. 242, and a petition of the adoptive mother, Ex. 329. Then there is a statement of the son of the adopted person made in Ex. 243, and finally an order of the Assistant Collector, Ex. 330, confirming the adoption. The son of the adopted person was examined as witness, Ex. 241. The property is watan and inam property of considerable value, and nazrana or succession duty had to be paid to Government. It is further stated in the printed statement filed on plaintiff's behalf, and apparently not controverted by the defendants, that the matter came before the High Court so far back as 1876, and the adoption was confirmed, no contention having been then raised on the point of the adopted person being an only son, though the fact was patent on the face of the will itself. Defendants' objection that the evidence of witness, Ex. 241, [445] is hearsay, is not entitled to consideration. Defendants stated further that the will and other documents did not recite the fact that the adopted child was an only son. This is certainly incorrect in so far as the will is concerned. This instance is perhaps the strongest case in support of plaintiff's allegation about the custom in dispute. The adoption in this case was not that of a brother's son, but of a sister's son, which, though disallowed among Brahmins, is permissible in the case of the Shudras and Lingayets.

Instance No. 26 comes from Navalgund, Dharwar District, and the adoption took place in 1859. It is proved by the evidence of the adopted person himself, Ex. 246. This is an instance of the daughter's son being made an heir by adoption. Defendants' only objection to it is that there is no documentary evidence, which objection by itself is not of much moment.

Instance No. 27 comes from Navalgund, Dharwar District, and the adoption took place in 1887. It is proved by the evidence of witness, Ex. 246, who was present at the time. Defendants' only objection to it is that the parties to the adoption were not examined. This objection is not entitled to any weight, as it was open to the defendants to examine the parties, if there was reason to suspect the truth of the statement made by the witness. This adoption appears to be that of a separated brother's son.

Instance No. 28 comes from Gadag, Dharwar District, and the adoption took place in 1880. It was sought to be proved by the evidence of witness, Ex. 70, and by the Assistant Collector's order, Ex. 351. Defendants' objection that witness, Ex. 70, is only thirty-four years old, does not disqualify her from being present at the ceremony of adoption, which took place in 1880. It is mentioned in defendants' statement that this witness is a cook. She is not a cook by profession. In answer to the question as to what her profession was, she stated that she performed household duties, cooking, &c., which means that she had no profession. We do not think that either of these objections are valid so as to discredit the evidence of this witness, confirmed as it is by Ex. 351. This is also not a case of the adoption of a brother's son.

[446] Instance No. 29 comes from Shirhatti, Sangli territory, and the adoption took place in 1887. It is proved by the evidence of the adopting widow, Ex. 71. The adoptive and natural fathers were separated in interest, and their relationship was described in Canarese by the word "bhava." Plaintiff contends that this word means both full brother or cousin, or sister's husband, while defendants contend that it means only full brother. Accepting defendants' contention, this is a case of the adoption of a separated brother's son. But defendants failed to prove that the adopted son inherited the property of both families.

Instance No. 35 comes from Bankapur, Dharwar District, and the adoption took place in 1880. There is a conflict of evidence on the point of this adoption. Plaintiff gave evidence to show that the natural father had no other son at the time he gave his only son in adoption, while defendants' witnesses seek to make out that the natural father had other sons at the time. Plaintiff's witnesses are Exs. 451, 452, 453, 454, and the genealogy, Ex. 340, was filed on plaintiff's behalf. Plaintiff's witnesses prove the genealogy, but the witnesses on defendants' behalf appear to be more entitled to weight, seeing that one of them is the natural father of the boy given in adoption, Ex. 484, and the other is the adopted son himself, while plaintiff's witnesses are comparative strangers, though distantly related to the person adopted. Defendants' witnesses are, moreover, borne out by the extracts, Exs. 492 and 512. We must, therefore, exclude this instance from consideration.

Instance No. 37 comes from Hangal, Dharwar District, and the adoption took place in 1868. This is also, like instance No. 35, the subject of conflicting testimony. Plaintiff's oral and written evidence is intended to show that the person adopted was the only son of Irappa, who was cousin of the adoptive father; while defendants' evidence goes to show that he was one of the sons of Gangappa, brother of the adoptive father. The genealogy, Ex. 342, filed on plaintiff's behalf is contradicted by the genealogy, (Ex. 472), filed on defendants' behalf. Plaintiff's genealogy is supported by the evidence of the patil, Exs. 472, 477, while defendants' genealogy is supported by the kulkarni, (Ex. 482), who, however, admits that he prepared Ex. 342, [447] but pleads that the statement about Irappa's son was made by mistake. The other Kulkarni, witness, Ex. 483, appeared to have prepared the genealogy, Ex. 472, but the occasion for preparing it, as mentioned by him, seems not to be supported by the genealogy itself. The official extracts 475, 484, 533, 534, however, appear to support defendants' contention. On the whole, as the burden of proof lies on plaintiff, and his evidence does not remove all doubts on the point at issue, we must exclude this instance also from consideration.

Instance No. 38 comes from Karajgi, Dharwar District, and the adoption took place before British rule commenced in those parts. This is also, like Nos. 35, 37, a case of conflicting genealogies. Plaintiff's genealogy is Ex. 343, and was first filed in 1878. Defendants' genealogy is a copy of a copy filed in 1866. Neither genealogy is properly proved, and both appear to be made up from some instructions given by an old lady. This instance must, therefore, also be excluded.

Instance No. 39 cannot also be included. It is a case of disputed genealogies and conflicting evidence, and as the adoption is said to have taken place sixty years ago, the oral evidence of the witnesses is not of much value either way.

Instance No. 40 comes from Hubli, in Dharwar District, and the adoption is alleged to have taken place about 1866, according to plaintiff, and about 1844—1852, according to the defendants. It is also a case of disputed genealogies, like the three preceding instances. Plaintiff's genealogy is Ex. 345, and was sought to be proved by witnesses, Exs. 446, 447, and the official extract, 539. Defendants' genealogy, (Ex. 504), was produced by witness, Ex. 496, and proved by the evidence of witnesses, Exs. 497, 498. These last witnesses push back the date of the alleged adoption, and they urge also that the adopted son had a brother living at the time. Extracts 504 and 525 support defendants' story. On the whole, the evidence is not free from doubt, and as the burden of proof is on plaintiff, and defendants' witnesses appear to be relatives of the adopting family, we must exclude this case also from consideration.

Instance No. 45 comes from Navalgund, Dharwar District, [448] and the adoption is alleged to have taken place before 1875, about 1864. It is also a case in regard to which both parties have given evidence, but plaintiff's genealogy, Ex. 350, is proved by the evidence of witness, Ex. 435, who professes to have seen the adoption, and witness, Ex. 436, who has attested the pedigree, and who shares the estate. Plaintiff's evidence is confirmed by the order of the District Deputy Collector, Ex. 537, and the deposition, Ex. 437, of witness, Ex. 436. given so far back as 1876. Against this evidence, defendant examined only one witness, Ex. 576, who is not a member of the family, and whose evidence to the effect that the adopted son had a brother at the time is too vague and uncorroborated to be entitled to credit. Plaintiff's evidence is more reliable, and this case must be regarded as affording good evidence in support of the alleged custom.

Instance No. 46 comes from Ron, Dharwar District, and the adoption is alleged to have taken place about 1834. It is also a case of conflicting evidence. Plaintiff's witnesses 428, 478 are both sons of the person given in adoption, and prove the genealogy, Ex. 377. Witness, Ex. 434, is patil, and supports their testimony. On defendants' behalf, a third son was examined, Ex. 501, who denied the adoption, but was unable to explain the statement made in the genealogy. Defendants' witness, Ex. 502, is a stranger, and gave hearsay evidence, and the extracts 493, 523, 524, are not decisive either way. The balance of evidence in this case is decidedly in plaintiff's favour. This is a case of the adoption of a nephew by a separated uncle.

This completes the analysis of the twenty-nine Lingayet instances. As the result of such analysis, nineteen instances aprear to us to be satisfactorily proved, while ten instances have to be rejected, chiefly on the ground of doubtful or conflicting evidence or the hearsay character of the testimony. Of these nineteen instances in three cases the adoption was of daughters' and sisters' sons, and in five of separated brothers' sons. Out of the ten rejected cases, in only two instances the evidence suggests any doubt as to whether the adoption was that of an only son. These nineteen cases are those numbered in plaintiff's statement [449] as Nos. 3, 5, 7, 9, 10, 12, 13, 14, 15, 17, 19, 20, 22, 24, 26, 27, 29, 45, 46, and the excluded cases are 4, 6, 16, 21, 23, 35, 37, 38, 39, 40. In most of these latter cases, as stated above, the failure of the plaintiff was due to the rejection of secondary or hearsay evidence. It is not easy for a private party to hunt up cases of adoption all over the country, and to secure the attendance of the most competent witnesses when the events took place many years ago, and the parties thereto were in many cases dead. It may be also noted that in the cases of disputed genealogies, some witnesses, summoned at first on plaintiff's behalf, apparently went over to defendants' side. Witnesses Nos. 501, 514, 408, 457, 459, 485, 482 fall under this category. Bearing in mind that adoptions are not very common, and the adoptions of only sons are still rarer, it is by no means a small task to establish by satisfactory evidence nineteen Lingayet adoptions of only sons, some of them in watandar and inamdar families, with Government sanction. The cases, moreover, are spread over a large extent of country including Bagalkot, Navalgund, Badami, Bankapur, Lakshmeshwar, Kalghatgi, Dharwar, Gadag, Shirhatti, and Ron talukas, and cover a long period of seventy years and more. Plaintiff appears to us to have thus fully discharged the onus of proof thrown on him. His failure to establish his allegation by equally satisfactory evidence in the remaining ten Lingayet cases is not a fact which detracts from the general credibility of plaintiff's evidence about the prevalence of the alleged custom among Lingayets in these districts as shown in the nineteen proved instances.

APPELLATE CIVIL.
19 B. 428.

Turning next to the Reddis, they described themselves (Exs. 479, 159, 161, 73, 78,) to be Lingayets by religion. The Dharwar Gazetteer also states that most Reddis wear ling, and are reckoned as Lingayets. They call Jangams as priests, though a few call Brahmins to officiate on marriage occasions (p. 141). In Bijapur out of six divisions of Reddis, five profess the Lingayet faith, and are married by Jangam priests (p. 145). There are only four Reddi instances in plaintiff's statement which require consideration.

Instance No. 1 comes from Bagevadi in Bijapur District, and [450] the adoption took place in 1887. It is satisfactorily proved by the evidence of the natural father and adoptive mother, Exs. 159, 75, witness, Ex. 73, and the Collector's sanction, Ex. 326. Defendants object to the evidence of witness, Ex. 73, on the ground that it is hearsay, but this circumstance cannot detract from the value of the evidence of witness 150. The omission in Ex. 326 of all mention of the fact of the adopted boy being an only son, is of no great consequence, and it rather strengthens plaintiff's case. Defendants' reference to Ex. 388 is not in point, for that order was passed in the case of a Maratha family, and it is not at all likely that, if the Collector had thought the same objection would apply to Lingayets, he would have given his sanction in this case. This does not appear to have been a case of the adoption of a brother's son.

Instance No. 2 comes from Nargund, when it was a Native State, and the adoption took place in 1814—1816. It is proved by the evidence of witness, Ex. 159, and the order of the Nargund Darbar, Ex. 375, as also by the genealogies, Exs. 369, 376. The defendants' objection that this instance comes from a Native State has been more than once noticed before. Witness, Ex. 159, is not an entire stranger, but bases his information on the papers produced by him. This is also not a case of the adoption of a nephew by an uncle. The order, Ex. 375, speaks of purvaja, which word would not have been used if the relationship was very close.

Instance No. 8 comes from Bagalkot, Bijapur District, and the adoption took place in 1888. It is proved by the evidence of the adoptive mother and natural father, Exs. 161, 73, as also by the evidence of witness, Ex. 160, and the document, Ex. 327. The only objection urged by defendants to this instance rests on the ground that it is a brother's son's adoption, which it no doubt is, though the brothers appear to be separated.

The last Reddi instance is No. 25, which comes from Navalgund, Dharwar District, and the adoption took place about 1873. This case is not satisfactorily proved, as witness, Ex. 245, only speaks from hearsay.

[451] There are only four cases of Shepherds or Dhangars. The District Gazetteers (Dharwar, 180-181), (Bijapur 122-123), do not throw any clear light on the religious condition of Dhangars. Some sub-divisions among the shepherds are plainly Lingayets by religion, and all are more under Lingayet than Brahminical influence. Kurubar or Dhangar witnesses, Exs. 510, 438, stated that Kurubars, Shepherds or Dhangars followed the tenets of the Lingayet faith. The Kurubar gurus are admittedly Lingayets in religion. The Kurubars bury their dead like Lingayets. The test of flesh-eating does not apply strictly to half Lingayets or affiliated Lingayets. The tests of burying the dead by Lingayet rites, and inviting Jangam Gurus on marriage occasions, are more decisive in such matters. On the whole, I am inclined to admit these Kurubar or Dhangar instances.

Instance No. 18 comes from Lakshmeshwar, Miraj State, and the adoption took place so far back as 1849. The adoption is proved by the evidence of the adopted son, Ex. 171. Defendants object that as he was only eight years old at the time, his evidence is of no great value. As, however, defendants did not give any counter evidence to discredit him, I see no reason to disbelieve his positive statement, based as it is on a knowledge of his own family. This is a case of a brother's son adopted by the uncle.

Instance No. 41 comes from Hangel, Dharwar District, and the adoption took place in 1863-64. There is in this case conflicting evidence. On plaintiff's side there is a genealogy, No. 446, proved by witness 510, and on the other hand the adoptee and his uncle, Exs. 513, 514, stated that there were two other sons. We must believe these last witnesses, and exclude this case from consideration.

Instance No. 42 comes from Navalgund, Dharwar District, and the adoption took place in 1876. This is also a case of disputed genealogies. The genealogy filed on plaintiff's behalf, Ex. 347, is supported by the evidence of the adopted person himself, Ex. 442, and his previous deposition, Ex. 443, given in 1878, and by the evidence of the patil witness, Ex. 444, and the Collector's order, 536. The evidence, on the other hand, of [452] defendants' witness, Ex. 537, is hearsay, and the silence maintained on this point in the reports 531, 532, 533 is not very significant, when defendants' own witness, Ex. 517, admits that the person alleged to be adopted was entrusted to the care of the alleged adoptive father. We feel satisfied that this instance is properly proved, and that it is an instance of the adoption of a brother's son, who had inherited both his natural and adoptive father's property.

Instance No. 44 comes from Navalgund, Dharwar District, and the adoption took place in 1853-54. It is also a case of conflicting evidence. The adopted son, Ex. 438, and witness, Ex. 440, proved the genealogy, Ex. 349, and the deposition, Ex. 439, given so far back as 1878, and the kulkarni's deposition, Ex. 441, and the Collector's order, Ex. 538, passed in 1878, prove the fact of adoption. Against this evidence, defendants examined witness, Ex. 515, and filed kulkarni's statements 527, 528 given in 1871, which either ignore the adoption, or speak of it as that of a foster child. The later orders of 1878 are, however, decisive on the point, and prove the adoption, which is of a nephew by his uncle.

The Hatgar witnesses, Exs. 162, 167, do not claim to be Lingayets, and state that only some among them were ling. The Gazetteers of Bijapur and Dharwar also confirm this statement. Hatgars have no affinity towards Lingavets, and their instance No. 11 must, therefore, be excluded from consideration like that of the Brahmins and Marathas.

We have thus passed in review the whole of the evidence in regard to the twenty-nine Lingayet cases, four Reddi Lingaye and four Shepherd (Dhangar) cases, in all thirty-seven instances, and excluded from consideration fourteen cases in all (1) the seven Brahmin cases, one Hatgar, one unknown caste, and the five instances coming from parts of the country other than the southern districts of the Presidency, to which alone these inquiries have been confined. As the result of these inquiries we find that the custom of giving an only son in adoption has been satisfactorily proved in nineteen Lingayet instances (2), three [453] Reddi (3), and three Dhangar cases (4), making in all twenty-five instances in favour of the alleged custom, while it has not been satisfactorily established in ten Lingayet, one Reddi, and one Shepherd case, making in all twelve cases (5). Plaintiff's failure to prove his allegation in these twelve cases is not a matter of much surprise, for that failure is chiefly due to the length of time that has elapsed since many of these adoptions occurred, and to the general difficulty of proving any positive allegation under the conditions imposed by law about the admission of relevant evidence, and the exclusion of secondary evidence. In only two or three out of these twelve cases, the failure was due to the fact that the evidence negatived the allegation of an only son. This sort of suspicion does not rest on the other cases, in which the failure was due to the length of time that had elapsed, and the absence of direct evidence This disposes of the bye-issue about the hearsay and the doubtful character of the evidence in support of the alleged custom of the adoption of an only son. This objection applies only to twelve out of thirty-seven cases in all.

The next point to be considered relates to the inquiry how far these twenty-five cases of the proved adoption of an only son can be explained on the ground that the adoption was by an uncle of his nephew in the dwyamushyayana form, which is permitted by the Shastras, and which cases, therefore, cannot be held to prove the alleged custom. Defendants' counsel himself suggested in all only eleven cases of this kind out of the entire list, viz., Nos. 6, 9, 25, 35, 46 being admitted by plaintiff's vakil to be adoptions of nephews by uncles, and 2, 7, 10, 27, 37,

(3) 1, 2, 8. (4) 18, 44, 42. (5) 4, 6, 16, 21, 23, 25, 35, 37, 38, 39, 40, 41,

38 being named by defendants' counsel, but not admitted by plaintiff's pleader. Out of the eleven cases named by defendants' counsel, we have found it necessary to exclude instances Nos. 6, 25, 35, 37 as being cases where the adoption was not satisfactorily proved. This deduction leaves only seven cases, 2, 7, 9, 10, 27, 38, 46, as the cases that we have still to consider in this connection. Out of these seven cases, in only one case, No. 46, has plaintiff's pleader admitted that the adopted son has inherited, or has a right to inherit, both his natural father's and adoptive father's property. Of the [454] other six cases, Nos. 2, 10, 38 are clearly not cases of nephews adopted by uncles. Nos. 7, 9, 29, as also Nos. 27, 8, 18, 42, 43, as shown above, are cases of adoption by uncles, but these adoptions were obviously made by separated uncles. It was open to the defendants to prove that the son had inherited in both families in these cases. In the absence of such evidence, it is not strictly necessary to discuss the question raised by defendants' counsel, at it does not affect seventeen out of the twenty-five cases we have held as being satisfactorily proved.

We may, however, observe, in passing, that the defendants' counsel sought to give an unwarranted enlargement to the doctrine of dwyamushyayana when he urged that it covered not only the cases of brothers' sons, but brothers' grandsons also. This enlargement was sought to be justified by the analogy of the rule of Hindu law by which the existence of a son, grandson or great grandson bars the way to adoption. This analogy, however, is too far-fetched to be readily accepted. The original dwyamushyayana son was a relic of the Niyoga form and as such this order of son is prohibited in Kuliyuga (West and Buhler (3rd Ed.), p. 879). Dwyamushyayana of the second and more modern form is still permitted, but Rao Saheb Mandlik has stated in his work that he had not come across such adoptions in this Presidency (p. 506). Steele also (p. 183) has stated that such adoptions seldom take place. The Madras Sadar Divani Adalat came to a similar conclusion in 1859. On the other hand, the learned authors of the Digest state that this form obtains in the southern districts of this Presidency (West and Buhler (3rd Ed.), p. 898), and Steele also refers to certain castes where it is still in vogue (p. 385.) The Judicial Committee of the Privy Council has recognized the existence of this form in the North-West Provinces: and there are also some Bengal cases to the same effect—Wooma Daee v. Gokoolanund Dass (1). The presumption in the case of an adoption by a united brother would certainly be in favour of the son adopted being the son of two fathers. No such presumption can be made in the case of separated brothers, for the dwyamushyayana is not equally effective as the Dattaka son to secure the spiritual salvation of the person adopting—Srimati Uma Dey v. [455] Gokoolanund Dass (1)—as also of his natural father (West and Buhler (3rd Ed.), p. 899). It is, thus, not difficult to understand why this form of adoption should have become generally, if not altogether, obsolete in this Presidency. Even if it still exists, the best test of it is either the proof of a special agreement, or evidence to the effect that the son inherited, or has a right to inherit, in both families. There is no such proof of agreement in the cases relied upon, and only one or two instances were cited where the son appears to have succeeded to the estates of both his father and uncle, who apparently were united. On this bye-issue accordingly, we find that the large bulk of the instances adduced on plaintiff's behalf are not touched by this ground of exclusion, and that for the purposes of this suit we may safely leave it out of consideration, except in regard to, at the most, two out of the twenty-five cases in which the custom of the adoption of an only son has been satisfactorily proved.

We have next to consider how far the twenty-five instances of the adoption of an only son satisfactorily proved to have occurred as facts among Lingayets over a large part of two districts of Bijapur and Dharwar, during a period of seventy-five years or more, can be held sufficient to prove the validity of the alleged custom as one which the Courts are bound to give effect to. In this respect several considerations have to be borne in mind. (a) The prohibition of the adoption of an only son, is not a generally recognized part of Hindu law. Neither the Sanskrit text writers, nor their English translators, are unanimous on the point, Shrinath Jagannath, Vijnyaneshwar and Mayukha range as authorities on one side, and Nundapandit and Kuber on the other. Similarly, Strange, Ellis and W. Macnaghten are on one side, and Colebrooke and F. Macnaghten on the other. (b) The Madras and Allahabad High Courts have interpreted the texts of Caunaka and Vasishta, on which the prohibition is mainly based, as commendatory only, and not directory, and held that the act of giving an only son is injurious to the giver, but does not affect the validity of the gift—Chinna Gaundan v. Kumara Gaundan (1), Hanuman Tiwar iv. Chirai (2). The Bombay and [456] Calcutta High Courts have interpreted the texts more strictly. (c) But even in Bombay and Bengal, the current of authorities down to very recent times was in the opposite direction—Huebut v. Govindrao (3); Vishram v. Narainrav (4); Lakshmibai v. Ganpat Moroba (5); Mhalsabai v. Vithoba by Sausse, C. J., and Hebbert and Forbes. JJ. (6); and Sreemutty Joymony v. Sreemutty Sibosundry (7). The first Calcutta decision to the contrary is reported in Raja Upendra Lal v. Srimati Rani (8), and was followed up later on in Wooma Daee v. Gokoolanund Dass (9).

On the Bombay side, the first case "questioning the correctness of the previous decisions" was decided on the Original Side of the High Court, and was reported in Bhaskar v. Mahadev(10). The doubt therein expressed was confirmed in Lakshmappa v. Ramava (11), but the Court did not pronounce its final judgment on the point even in that case. Next came the Full Bench, but unreported Lingayet, case of 1879 in certificate proceedings, and finally the Full Bench decision in Waman Raghupati v. Krishnaji (12). See also Dada v. Appa (13); Hanamagowda v. Hanamagowda(14). The Chief Justice Sir C. Sargent admitted in Waman Raghupati v. Krishnaji that until 1875, with the exception of Bhaskar v. Mahadev(10), the current of decisions, both of the Sadar Divani Adalat and of the High Court, was in favour of not setting aside such an adoption. These Full Bench decisions of 1879 and 1890 must of course be held to have settled the general law in this Presidency, but the fact, that the law was regarded to be otherwise for nearly sixty years (1820—79), cannot be lost sight of in judging of the weight and character of the evidence required to prove an alleged custom, contrary to the law as now declared, but in conformity with the law as previously enforced. (d) The Lingayet community may well be supposed to have first received notice in 1879 of the [457] change of views in the interpretation of the texts and it appears from plaintiff's printed statement in this case that, so late as 1876, the High Court affirmed on other grounds a Lingayet adoption of an only son, and no objection was raised in the course of that dispute on this ground. The presumptions, therefore, are all in favour of, and not against, such a custom or usage having been recognized by all parties as obligatory, more especially when it is borne in mind that in the neighbouring Madras districts, the law, even after 1868 and 1879, was declared to be in favour of such an adoption, not only among Shudras—Vasudevan v. The Secretary of State for India (1), but even in the case of Brahmins. (e) The Bombay High Court itself has recognized a custom about the adoption of daughters' sons in the neighbouring Brahmin communities such as the Saraswats—Gowri v. Shivaram(2)—and Haviks of Kanara—Devarshanbhag v. Devappa (Appeal No. 36 of 1881 decided on 3rd May, 1882)—at the same time that it laid down the law to be otherwise for Brahmins generally elsewhere. This High Court has thus recognized an essential difference between the customary law of Maharashtra and Carnatic.

(f) The binding force of custom as law was discussed in Tara Chand v. Reeb Ram (3): and it was there held that it is not the act or omission of the parties, but the recognition by the Courts which makes customs valid and obligatory. In conferring or withholding this recognition, the reason of the Shastra prohibition must never be lost sight of by the Courts, when applying and interpreting Shastra texts. The Lingayets are admittedly a heretical sect, and are not subject to Brahmin religious laws, and repudiate the Shastras in the matter of the obligatory character of funeral rites and shraddhas on which Brahmins lay so much stress. The exceptional character of the Lingayets in this respect has been recognized both by the Madras and Bombay High Courts—Koduthi v. Madu (4) Virasangapa v. Rudrapa (5); Gopal Narhar v. Hanmant Ganesh (6). The liberty of widow re-marriage, and even of wife re-marriage, has [458] been allowed to this Lingayet community, and so has the adoption of daughter's and sister's son been sanctioned among Lingayets on account of their status as Shudras—Mhalsabai v. Vithobaw(7); Gopal v. Hanmant. Bearing all these considerations in mind, we feel satisfied that the evidence of the alleged custom among Lingayets furnished on plaintiff's behalf, unrebutted as that evidence is by any attempt of the defendants to adduce a single case to the contrary, their evidence being mostly of the nature of opinion evidence, is sufficient both in quality and quantity to justify us in finding the custom to be a valid custom.

(g) Some of the decisions in regard to the proof of custom may be briefly referred to here. In Vayidinada v. Appu (8) the custom among Brahmins of adopting daughter's and sister's sons was affirmed precisely on the same sort of evidence as we have reviewed here. More evidence is rigorously exacted when it is sought to prove an alleged family custom—Suriya Ran v. The Raja of Pittapur (9). In Virasangappa v. Rudrappa (5), a custom of wife re-marriage among Lingayets was affirmed. In Mirabivi v. Vellayanna (10) the difference between custom and practice is thus set forth: "Practice may be more or less common, but it does not become a custom unless it is consciously accepted as having the force of law."

In the present case, the numerous acts of official recognition, and the absence of disputes, and the conduct of defendants themselves (Ex. 82), show clearly that the custom set up in this case is not a mere practice, but was recognized to be an obligatory custom by the people concerned, and by the authorities. A Bohra Brahmin custom of adopting a sister's son was similarly affirmed by the Allahabad High Court in Chain Sukh Ram v. Parbati(1). The Lingayet custom to the same effect was affirmed in Gopal Narhar v. Hanmant Ganesh(2). In order to prove a custom of Khoja inheritance according to rules of Hindu law, it was laid down by the High Court that "the mere opinion evidence of elderly persons in its favour was not sufficient. Specific instances must be proved where it has been observed and followed—Rahimatbai v. [459]Hirbai (3). The peculiar succession of dancing girls by force of custom was affirmed in Tara Naikin v. Nana Lakshman (4). The custom of Jains to adopt a daughter's son in opposition to the rules of Hindu law, which generally applied to them, was upheld by the Privy Council in Sheo Singh v. Mussamat Dakho (5). The reasons given in that judgment for departing from the general law apply with equal, if not with still greater, force to the Lingayets. It was stated in this judgment, quoting from the judgment in another case of Sir E. Perry, "that if a custom is proved to exist for a time whereof the memory of man runneth not to the contrary, if it is not injurious to the public interests, and if it does not conflict with the express law of the ruling power, such custom is entitled to have the sanction of the Courts" (Perry's Oriental Cases, p. 110, judgment in Khojas and Memons case; as also Abraham's case.(6) The judgment of the Privy Council went on to state "that the general rules of Brahminical law cannot be justly made to override well-established local and caste custom, especially when (as in the case of Jains and Lingayets) the ratio decidendi is inoperative." Lingayets like the Jains do not revere the Shastras, and their views of religious efficacy differ widely from those of the Brahmins.

On the whole, therefore, we feel satisfied that the evidence of the twenty-five proved instances in this case is sufficient to show that the custom of the adoption of an only son is an immemorial, invariable and recognized custom among the Lingayets in the southern districts of this Presidency, and that that it has been so affirmed both by Native and English rulers, and that in the present case it cannot be justly urged that the instances adduced are only breaches of a generally received law, and that they are not sufficient to justify this Court in affirming its validity. Not a single case was shown on defendants' behalf where an adoption of an only son by the Lingayets of these parts was disowned or repudiated by the people, or by their rulers, Native and British. In the Poona, Satara and Sholapur cases referred to above, the custom was neither alleged nor disproved. Those instances, therefore, cannot be allowed much weight in this case as disproving [460] the alleged custom. Of course it has never been contended that every person adopting a child was bound to adopt an only son. Cases of adoptions of one out of many sons will naturally be more numerous, but this preponderance by itself will not invalidate the adoptions of only sons, when the custom was properly proved.

The question of estoppel was not much pressed in argument on either side, and in the view we have taken of the merits, it is not necessary to go into that inquiry. On the whole, we are satisfied that the instances adduced cover a long range of time and place, and are proved by satisfactory evidence, and that they justify this Court in deciding in plaintiff's favour on the principal point in issue between the parties.

The finding recorded above on the point of adoption disposes of the first six contentions raised in the memorandum of appeal by the defendants. The next four contentions in defendants' appeal, and all the cross-objections urged by the plaintiff, relate to the question of property. Plaintiff claims the whole of the moveable and immoveable property as belonging to the estate of his adoptive father, the deceased Shivangauda; and this claim was allowed by the lower Court, except in respect of the immoveable property included in the deed of gift, Ex. 113, executed by Shivangauda in favour of his daughters, defendants Nos. 2 and 3. Defendant No. 1 contended that she was the owner of a portion of the moveable property (four ornaments worth Rs. 281-8, Ex. 35) as being her stridhan, and that another portion (a cash sum of Rs. 1,128) was hers because it was given to her by the deceased Shivangauda for her maintenance, and that generally she was the heir of Shivangauda in respect of the moveable and immoveable property not owned by defendants Nos. 2, 3, 5, or not bestowed on them in gift by Shivangauda. Defendants Nos. 2, 3, 5 confined their contention chiefly to the moveable property not claimed by defendant No. 1, and this property amounted to Rs. 7,863-2-6 in cash, and 115½ tolas in weight of gold ornaments, and 121 tolas of silver ornaments, besides pots, furniture, grain and cattle, Ex. 36. Plaintiff on the other hand contended that the deed of gift, Ex. 113, was invalid, and not binding on him. Such being the respective contentions [461] of the parties, the sub-issues involved in this part of the inquiry involve the following questions :—

(1) Whether the deed of gift, Ex. 113, was valid and binding on the plaintiff ?

(2) Whether a portion of the moveable property, the four ornaments claimed, belonged to defendant No. 1 as her stridhan ?

(3) Whether the cash sum of Rs. 1,128 belonged to defendant No. 1 as having been given to her for her maintenance ?

(4) Whether the rest of the moveable property, cash, ornaments &c., belonged to defendants Nos. 2, 3, 5 ?

As regards the first bye-issue, we see no reason to differ from the lower Court in the view it has taken of the same. Reading together the two deeds, the adoption deed (Ex. 112) and the deed of gift (Ex. 113), it is obvious that as they mutually refer to each other, and both were executed on the same day, they were really parts of one and the same transaction. The adoption deed states that plaintiff was to have the whole of Shivangauda's estate, except the property which he assigned in gift to his daughters in the deed, Ex. 113. The deed of gift similarly refers to the adoption of plaintiff, and Shivangauda gave thereby the house occupied by himself and 7 jirait lands with trees to his daughters. Both deeds were written and attested by the same writer and witnesses (Exs. 102, 103, 104, 109, 110, 255, 277, 278), and were executed on the day and registered together, Exs. 82, 83, 84. It was admitted on respondent plaintiff's behalf that, if the gift had been made prior to the adoption, no valid objection could have been urged, but that even half an hour's difference would have made it invalid as against the plaintiff if executed after the adoption. The Registrar's evidence, Ex. 84, however, shows that both the deeds were registered together, and the other evidence, both of plaintiff's and defendants' witnesses Nos. 102, 103, 104, 110, 255, 277, 278, shows that they were simultaneously executed, and formed in fact parts of one and the same transaction. Respondent's objection must, therefore, fail. There is nothing to show that, like some other property expressly stated to be ancestral, the house and lands mentioned in the deed of gift [462] had been inherited as ancestral property, and were not acquired by Shivangauda. As between the parties to the suit, he must, therefore, be held to have a full right to dispose of these his acquisitions. The consideration was a good one, seeing that the donees were his daughters, and would have been his ultimate heirs, if he had not adopted plaintiff. The property given in gift was, moreover, only a small portion of the entire estate. Plaintiff's natural father did not indeed expressly assent to the deed of gift, but as he was a party to the deed of adoption which referred to the deed of gift executed along with it, the case falls under the category of conditional adoptions which are allowed by law. We must, therefore, overrule respondent's contentions on this point, and hold that the deed of gift in favour of defendants Nos. 2 and 3 was valid, and binding on plaintiff.

As regards the next two sub-issues, it is to be noted that defendant No. 1 claimed a gold sargi, gold bracelets, silver tolbandis, and silver gundgudigi, as her stridhan, and she claimed Rs. 1,128 out of the cash as having been given to her by Shivangauda for her maintenance, Ex. 35. She also claimed to be the owner by right of heirship of the remaining property, so far as it did not belong, or was not given, to defendants Nos. 2 and 3. This latter claim of heirship must be disallowed, as plaintiff, and not the defendant No. 1, is the heir of Shivangauda.

About the ornaments claimed as stridhan, and about the cash sum, it is to be noted that in her deposition, Ex. 227, defendant No. 1 claimed to have received the ornaments and Rs. 1,000 in cash (in place of Rs. 1,128 mentioned in the written statement), and she claimed to have received this double gift one month before her husband's death. She did not rest her claim upon any reservation made by Shivangauda for her maintenance at the time of plaintiff's adoption. It is true that the deed of gift contains a statement that the moveable property was retained by Shivangauda for his own and his wife's maintenance. There is, however, no specification of the value of the property so retained, and there is no similar reservation in the contemporaneous deed of adoption, which makes plaintiff his heir in respect of all the property not included in the deed of gift. The oral gift [463] alleged to have been made one month before his death by Shivangauda is not referred to in either deed, though these last were executed within fifteen days before Shivangauda's death. Defendant No. 5, moreover, contradicted defendant No. 1 openly, for he stated that the gift of Rs. 1,000 was made by Shivangauda twenty or thirty years ago, Ex. 202. It is admitted by defendant No. 1 herself that there were no witnesses present at the time of the gift. The oral evidence on this point on defendant's behalf is thus entitled to no weight.

It is plain that the alleged oral gift is not proved, and defendant No. 1 has no right as against plaintiff either to the cash sum of Rs. 1,000, or to the four ornaments, claimed as stridhan by her. The yadis, Exs. 10, 16, show that, in this case, attachment before judgment was made at the instance of the plaintiff, and Rs. 8,991-6-9 in cash, about Rs. 3,550 worth of gold ornaments, about Rs. 154-8-0 worth of silver ornaments, and about Rs. 320 worth of other property, including utensils, grain and cattle, &c. in all property worth about Rs. 13,000, was attached on two occasions

The bailiff's report shows that defendants made away with some other property. The attached property was, moreover, subsequently returned back to the defendants after taking security from them for an equivalent amount, and defendants will have to account to the plaintiff for the value of the same. Defendant No. 1 has no doubt a right to be suitably maintained by the plaintiff out of her husband's estate; but till defendants have rendered a proper account to the plaintiff of the property in their possession, it will not be fair to decide upon defendant No. 1's claim for maintenance, and require plaintiff to settle any definite amount on her. She set up a specific defence about an alleged oral gift, and failed to prove the same. Both her objections, therefore, about the stridhan property and the cash gift must be overruled.

As regards the fourth sub-issue, which relates to defendants Nos. 2, 3 and 5, it may be noted that they claim in their written statement to be the owners of nearly the whole of the moveable property in dispute, excepting the portions to which defendant No. 1 laid claim. Voluminous evidence was given on defendants' [464] behalf to prove this portion of the claim. It is to be noted, however, that nearly all the witnesses who gave evidence in defendants' favour on this point gave evidence also against the alleged custom of adoption. These witnesses come mostly from Naregal, where the parties reside. Defendants' witnesses on this point were Nos. 255, 256, 258, 263, 264, 267, 270, 272, 276, 278, 279, 280, 281, 282, 283, 285, 286, 289, 290, 292, 296, 298, 301, 303, 304, 308; and bonds, Exs. 265, 271, 273, 275, 279, were produced as having been passed in defendants' name. Plaintiff also gave both oral and written evidence to prove that all the property in dispute belonged to Shivangauda, and not to his daughters. Plaintiff's witnesses are Exs. 100, 102, 103, 104, 109, 110, 111, 178, 181, 183, 184, 185, 186, 190, 193, 195, 198, 199, 200, 202, 203, 206, 207 and 302, and the written documents in his favour are 332, 338, 353, 366, 179, 180, 194, 196, 197, 201, 204, 205.

After a careful consideration of the whole of the oral and written evidence on both sides, we see no reason to disturb the finding of the lower Court on this point: (1) If defendants Nos. 2, 3 and 5 were so well off as they claim to be, it was not likely that Shivangauda would have made any gift of lands and house to them. (2) At least some mention would have been made of this fact in the deed of gift. (3) Defendant No. 3 has been a widowed daughter of Shivangauda for many years, and she and defendant No. 2 and her husband have been to all appearance dependent members of Shivangauda's family. (4) Defendant No. 5's deposition, Ex. 202, leaves little room for doubt that neither he nor his wife nor her sister were ever in possession of cash and ornaments of their own, as stated on their behalf by their witnesses. (5) A few of these witnesses themselves, Exs. 255, 262, 292, 293, admitted that the actual management was with Shivangauda, who, according to them, took bonds, and received payments, on behalf of his daughters. (6) The bonds, in defendant No. 3's name, Exs. 265, 271, 273, 275, 279, are few in number, and for small amounts. One of the bonds produced was in the name of defendant No. 3's deceased husband Appanna, but he was described in it as having been a party on behalf of Shivangauda. (7) Defendant No. 1 is sister of this [465] Appanna, and she is mother of defendants Nos. 2, 3, 4, and this relationship accounts for her partiality in favour of defendants Nos. 2 to 5, and her assumed ignorance about her husband's means. (8) Defendant No. 5 admitted that he only tilled the lands, and that he had no money of his own with him. (9) The census papers, Exs. 338 and 353—364, show that the houses were all entered in Shivangauda's name. (10) The bonds, 177, 180, 192, 196, 197, 201, 204, 205, are also in Shivangauda's name. Bearing all these circumstances in mind, we feel satisfied that plaintiff's witnesses on this point are obviously more entitled to credit than those of the defendants. The defendants Nos. 2 and 3 are of course entitled to the property given to them by the deed of gift. The rest of the property belongs to the estate of Shivangauda, and the plaintiff as his heir succeeds to the same, subject to the charge of maintaining defendant No. 1, his mother.

Defendants contended that certain properties did not belong either to them or to the estate of Shivangauda. The evidence of plaintiff's witnesses relates to the property generally. If strangers have a claim to any of these properties, they will in due course assert the same. It is not necessary to inquire into this point further here.

JARDINE, J.—I concur in all the findings on the issues and in most of the reasons just given.

The parties are Kudava Kaligars by caste and Lingayets by religion, and dwell at Naregal in the Ron Taluka of the Dharwar District, not far from the Nizam's territory.

It is now the settled doctrine of this Court, that the adoption of an only son is, by the general Hindu law, invalid—Waman Raghupati v. Krishnaji (1). The report of that case shows that in appeal No. 1 of 1879 under Act XXVII of 1860 this rule of law was applied to Lingayets by a Full Bench; and that an attempt to prove validity by custom in that appeal from the District Judge of Belgaum failed. In the report of Gopal v. Ganesh (2), which determines that the Lingayets are Shudras,—cf. Virasangapa v. Rudrapa (3),—some account is given of the case of Kashibai v. [466] Nagapa decided in 1828 between Lingayets of the Sholapur District, in which the Zilla Court at Poona held the adoption of an only son invalid.

In arguing on the instances relied on as proof of custom in the present case the counsel for the appellants asks the Court to exclude several on the ground of irrelevancy, they being valid at Hindu law as adoptions of dwyamushyayanas or sons of two fathers: Maynes's Hindu Law, 5th Ed., para. 132. The respondent meets this contention with the following arguments: 1st, that it is not shown by any cited case or otherwise that this form of adoption is still in vogue in the Presidency of Bombay; 2nd, that if not obsolete, it extends only to the son of a brother, and not to any other relations: and 3rd, that where the brothers are separate in interest, and there is no proof of an express agreement that the adopted son's relationship to his natural family shall continue, he is not a dwyamushyayana, and so the adoption stands on custom, not on law. The appellants reply to this third point that in all cases where the only son of a brother, divided or undivided, has been adopted, the law raises a presumption that the son is a dwyamushyayana.

The respondent, who denies that this status exists, relies on the Rao Saheb Mandlik's opinion arguendo at p. 506 of his work on Hindu law that this form of adoption is not recognized in this age and a Madras decision of 1859, Annamala v. Mungalam (4), against which, however, there is in Mr. Mayne's opinion overwhelming authority—Mayne's Hindu Law, para. 160. But in para. 132 of Mayne's Hindu Law it is said: "It seems to be admitted everywhere that there is no objection to the adoption of an only son, when he is taken as dwyamushyayana, or the son of two fathers." For this text, books and decisions are cited. The form is said to be common in the North-West Provinces—Jolly's Tagore Law Lectures, 166. It is argued that there is no case in the Bombay Reports. But several are mentioned by West and Buhler, 898, 1044, 1045, 1208. The learned writers say that from personal inquiries it appears that the dwyamushyayana son is not at all unusual in the southern districts of Bombay—898, 1045. [467] See also Steel's Law and Custom. 47, 384, 45, 183. The form is common in Malabar, though obsolete on the Coromandel Coast—Vasudevan v. Secretary of State (1). In Nilmadhub v. Bishumber (2), a Bengal case, the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council treat the dwyamushyayana son as recognized. Also in another Bengal case, Srimati Uma Deyi v. Gokoolanund (3). On consideration of these authorities, I am not inclined to hold that the dwyamushyayana son is obsolete in this age in the southern parts of the Bombay Presidency.

The second question is, whether the adoption of an only son, being the son of the son of the brother of the adopter, can, where there has been no special condition, be upheld as the adoption of a dwyamushyayana son, so that the instance must be imputed to Hindu law and withdrawn from the evidence of custom. No text has been shown by Mr. Scott to support this argument, nor any decision: it is merely based on the supposed analogy between a son and a grandson, drawn from the fact that the existence of either makes adoption impossible—West and Buhler, 917, 944. This basis appears far too slender for us to extend the meaning of dwyamushyayana in the absence of any reason for supposing that the brother's grandson would stand in the same spiritual relation to the adopter as a natural grandson does according to the Dattaka Mimansa, s. 1, pl. 13. But it appears from the decisions that a stranger may become a dwyamushyayana. As is said in 1 Strange Hindu Law, 96, "the same double relation may be the result of agreement, at the time of adoption, between the adopter and him who is willing to give his son for the purpose." For the formula of giving we may refer to West and Buhler, 1134, quoting the Vyavahara Mayukha.

The third point is, whether, when the two brothers are separated in interest, and one of them adopts the only son of the other, and there is no evidence of a special condition, the son is a dwyamushyayana son at Hindu law, or whether, as the respondent contends, the adoption and the inheriting in both families must be imputed to the custom.

[468] The distinction between united and separated brothers is not taken by Mayne, who in para. 132 says in general terms that when one brother takes in adoption the only son of the other, the double relationship of dwyamushyayana appears to be established without any special contract. Nor can I find the distinction in West and Buhler ubi supra. A general presumption may possibly be drawn from some of the decisions, viz., that where a dwyamushyayana can be given at all, as, e.g., between two brothers the presumption is that he has been given as such—West and Buhler, 1045, note h. The respondent relies on the remarks of the Judicial Committee in Srimati Uma Deyi's case (3) as authority for making the distinction between divided and united brethren. The remarks appear to me applicable on the question of evidence, and shew that the consent of the divided brother is more improbable. No text of Hindu law has been cited as authority for the distinction: I find none in the history of the dwyamushyayana son given by Dr. Joliy in his Tagore Law Lectures, 1883, 165, where it is traced to the obsolete custom of Niyoga (see Mitakshara, ch. I, s. x.), nor in the rules about dwyamushyayana at p. 318, nor in Colebrooke's Digest. But I think that the remarks in Srimati Uma's case do require the Court to consider in dealing with the present evidence of adoption between separated brothers such facts as the absence of any special agreement, and whether the adopted only son succeeded to property in his natural father's family. (For the Bombay rules on this point, see West and Buhler, 898, 1209). But the significance of the presumptions, especially those drawn from the ordinary motives of religious Hindus, is weakened much when we are dealing with Lingayets, who, as remarked by the Court below, attach no religious value to adoption and its ceremonies. Mr. Jardine compares this purely civil act of theirs to the adoptions of the Jains; it also resembles the Kritrima form of Mithila—Mayne's Hindu Law, para 95.

It is admitted by both sides that the instances numbered 6, 9, 25, 35 and 46, are adoptions of brothers'sons. The factum and in most cases the only sonship are not disputed. The respondent [469] has admitted that in cases 25 and 46 the adopted sons inherited in both their natural and adoptive families, but denies this as regards the cases 6, 9 and 35. But in case 6 we concur that the only sonship is not proved. Case 25 must be excluded as not being one among Lingayets. I find on examining Exs. 74, 160 and 328 that in case 6 there is no evidence on this point, nor can it be inferred whether at the time of the adoption the brothers were separated in interest. I also do not find this adoption proved. In case 9, to which Exs. 161, 166 and 245 belong, the brothers had separated; and as the natural father, Ex. 245, speaks of his elder brother (probably the adoptive father) as his heir, it would seem that the adopted son loses his rights as such in his natural family. The agreement, Ex. 332, shows that when the adoptive father married again, there was a dispute between the brothers, which was settled by the adoptive father agreeing that the adopted son and each natural son should have equal shares. In case 35 the brothers were separate, and the natural father still lives. But we concur in excluding this case, as both the natural father and the son, Exs. 494 and 495, say there was a second natural son at the time of the adoption, although Exs. 451 to 453 swear the contrary. We do not think it proved that the adoptee was an only son.

In case 46, though evidence to contradict was given, we are satisfied on the testimony of two of Irangauda's sons, Exs. 428 and 478, confirmed by the patil, Ex. 434, and the genealogy, Ex. 377, that plaintiff has proved this case and that the two brothers were separate in interest when Irangauda was adopted.

Thus, after excluding cases 6, 25 and 35 as irrelevant to the custom, we concur in finding that in cases 9 and 46 the brothers were separate in interest.

The appellants-defendants have declined to admit that the cases 2, 7, 10, 29, 37 and 38 are not cases of brothers' sons as the plaintiff avers. We concur in holding the only sonship in cases 37 and 38 to be not proved: and that in cases 2 and 10 the adoption was not between brothers.

[470] The contest then is as to whether the other proved adoptions, cases 7 and 29, can be presumed to be of the dwyamushyayana form without proof of special condition. I will now examine the facts of all these cases.

JUNE 20.
APPELLATE CIVIL.
19 B. 428.

Case 2 occurred about eighty years ago in what was then the Nargund State. The factum is proved, and the family is Lingayet. The son of the adoptee, Parvatgauda, though living has not been called. In Exs. 376 and 369 the fathers of the two fathers bear different names, which fact indicates that they were not brothers. The word of relationship used in Ex. 375 is "purvaj," which includes elder brother, but has also a wider meaning. The witness, Ex. 159, is not more specific. We are agreed that this is not an adoption between brothers.

The factum of case 7 is not disputed, and is deposed to by the adoptee, Ex. 170, who says the fathers were uterine brothers. But the adopting father is not called. Exhibit 74 gives different names to the fathers' fathers, and Ex. 160 knows nothing. I think we must hold them to be brothers, as the plaintiff has not disproved the assertion of the witness without whom the case is not proved. There is no evidence as to whether the fathers were joint or separated.

We agree that case 10 is certainly not a case of two brothers, although Ex. 161 says it is. It is clear from Exs. 73 and 232 that the woman who adopted was a relation of the natural father; but neither he, nor the son, Ex. 168, suggests the brotherhood of the fathers.

In case 29 the only evidence is the adoptive mother, Ex. 71, who says the giver was her "bhava", which in Canarese means, according to the dictionary, "husband's elder brother, wife's brother, maternal uncle's son if older than one's self." On studying her deposition I incline to hold that Mudibasapa, the father of the adopted son, was her husband's separated brother, as the appellants' counsel argues. The act occurred in the Sangli territory of Shirhati about the year 1887. The adoption deed and other documents have not been produced: and there is no official recognition of the act alleged. The facts that a dispute occurred with the natural father, and that some other son was also adopted, [471] and that at a private settlement both have been treated as adopted sons, somewhat discredit this instance. At the same time it is to be remarked that the dispute is not said to have been raised on the question of only sonship: and I would, therefore, admit this case as one relevant to the custom.

As we concur in finding that in cases 37 and 38 the fact of the only sonship is not proved, it is unnecessary to deal with them here.

The result is that we concur in holding cases 2 and 10 to be proved and relevant evidence of the custom and not cases of dwyamushyayana: and in holding case 29 to be like, cases 9 and 46, an adoption of a separated brother's only son. Case 7 is an adoption of a brother's only son. My learned colleague thinks the evidence shows separation: while I am unable to form an opinion. The discussion of the dwyamushyayana form thus only touches four cases, viz., 7, 9, 29 and 46 out of the twenty-two cases we find proved and relevant: in three out of the above four the brothers were separate, and perhaps in the fourth also; all but case 46 are recent.

It appears then that the only point regarding the dwyamushyayana form of adoption which we can be asked to decide is whether without proof of a special agreement such an adoption between separated brothers can be held proved. But I am of opinion that it is not necessary for us to decide the point; firstly, because, even if we exclude cases 7, 9, 29 and 46 there is material in the other eighteen proved cases on which we can adjudge the question of custom; secondly, because the religious motives of ordinary Hindus have little influence on the minds of Lingayets, who look on the destiny of their dead ancestors from a different religious standpoint.

The learned Judge below finds that among Lingayets no funeral ceremonies are performed; and he logically infers that, therefore, the salvation of the father who gives his only son is not imperilled: and he holds on the statements of the witnesses that he incurs no sin. These findings have not been seriously disputed. In discarding the shraddha ceremonies, they resemble the Jains from whom many of them are believed to be descended. We can, therefore, apply to the Lingayets Sir M. R. Westropp's remarks [472] on the Jains in Bhagvandas v. Rajmal(1). "This circumstance is fatal to the existence, amongst that sect, of the principal reason which renders adoption almost indispensible to the more orthodox Hindus when they are sonless, "the future beatitude of" such "a Hindu depending, according to the prevalent belief, upon the performance of his obsequies, and payment of his debts by a son as a means of redeeming him from an instant state of suffering." The motive for which a Lingayet adopts is the perpetuation of the the name and family, recognized by Westropp, C. J., in Bhala v. Parbhu(2). Now, it appears that the views of the Court below are confirmed by the interesting accounts of the tenets and practices of the Lingayets found in the volumes about Bijapur and Dharwar in Mr. James Campbell's Gazetteer. These were respectively supplied by Mr. Cumine of the Civil Service and Rao Bahadur Tirmalrao Venkatesh whom we remember as an experienced Judge, well informed about the locality. The latter reports: "As regards the future state, Lingayets believe that the wearers of the ling are not liable to transmigration. According to his conduct, a Lingayet after death is sent either to heaven or to hell, and where he is sent there he stays. The Lingayet belief that none of the house spirits can come back, frees them from one great section of the Brahmin ritual. They have no offering to the dead of sesamum, sacred grass, burnt sacrifices, new moon and full moon rites, and pourings of water. In their disregard of after-death rites the Lingayets agree with the Jains" (3). Mr. Cumine contrasts the tenets with the practices in his philosophic discussion and comes to the same opinion: "that the dead Lingayet goes to Shiv's heaven seems to be a practical belief which has greatly reduced the rites to the dead and probably the fear of spirits" (4).

I am of opinion, therefore, that these four cases may more reasonably be imputed to the influence of the alleged custom than to motives of religious law: and on considering the evidence I would impute them to the custom.

I see no reason to exclude the cases where adoptions occurred since the present suit began. Nor for excluding the cases arising [473] in Native States, in the absence of any reason to suppose that the Hindu law in force in those States differs from that of the neighbouring British Indian districts. Cf. Shivji v. Datu (5).

Before examining the evidence it may be remarked that the burden of proving the custom, by clear and unambiguous evidence, to be ancient and invariable lies on the plaintiff under the rulings of the Privy Council—Bhagvandas v. Rajmal (1). There must be "satisfactory proof of usage, so long and invariably acted upon in practice, as to show that it has by common consent been submitted to as the established governing rule of the particular family, class or district of country, and the course of practice upon which the custom rests must not be left in doubt, but be proved with certainty"—Sivanananja v. Muttu Ramalinga (1); Shidhojirao v. Naikojirao(2). It is to specified instances that the Court pays most attention—Bhagvandas v. Rajmal(3), and it is unsafe to act on mere opinions of witnesses—Rahimatbai v. Hirbai (4); Casumbhoy v. Ahmedbhoy (5). The Court below has applied these rules and found the custom proved by specified instances. It says: "On the whole, it appears that the defendants' witnesses are not very serious in asserting that there exists no custom of adopting an only son. They cannot cite instances of such adoptions having become null and void amongst the community."

It now becomes the duty of this Court to determine whether the specified instances outweigh the opinions of witnesses adverse to the custom, as the Subordinate Judge has held. We must examine each instance before giving our decision. We are of opinion that the defendants' witnesses have not proved any instance of an adoption of an only son being disallowed or even seriously disputed. Most of them come from Naregal, to disprove the factum or some other point alleged by the plaintiff. The Judge below is right in disbelieving their denial of the custom. As I have already noticed, they cannot seriously suppose that the desire of salvation from hell moves Lingayets at all, or that the dogma about the hell named Put is any part of their creed. One [474] witness, Ex. 296, tries to make out that one such adoption was disallowed in the Madras Presidency. But he must be ignorant of the decision of the Madras High Court in Narayanasami v. Kuppusami (6) which recognizes the adoptions of only sons as valid. It is admitted that the instances numbered 30 to 34, 36 and 43 relate to Brahmins. We exclude them as not relevant to the custom of so different a people as the Lingayets; and until the right of the Brahmins in the Dharwar and Bijapur districts to adopt only sons is established as a custom, it is as likely as not that these seven instances are infractions of the Hindu law as interpreted by this Court.

The two instances of Hatgars or weavers numbered 11 and 15 must next be considered. The Court has been referred to Vol. 22 and 23 of Campbell's Gazetteer, the volumes about Dharwar and Bijapur, pp. 165 and 267, respectively. People of this caste have in their habits and worship resemblances to both the Brahmin and Lingayet forms of Hinduism: and it is said that "though they have an hereditary feud with the true Lingayetism, half of them have gone over to Lingayetism and the other half have begun to feel its influence"— Vol. 22, 268. In case 11, witness 162, the adopted son, says plainly that he is not a Lingayet; and the adopting father, witness 167, does not contradict him. It is, therefore, clear to us that case 11 is not relevant. Case 15, about which witness 167 gives vague evidence, appears to us relevant.

Case 28 is objected to by the appellants as irrelevant, because there is no proof nor indication that the parties were Lingayets. But the questions put to the one witness examined, Ex. 70, confine her assertions to Lingayet cases. The order, Ex. 351, gives no indication of the caste. If, as appears, the adopters were Deshpandes, it would have been easy for the appellants to produce evidence about their religion, or to have asked witness 70 if they had any doubt. We, therefore, admit case 28.

The four instances, Nos. 18, 41, 42 and 44, occurring among the shepherds (called Dhangers in Marathi and Kurubas in Canarese) are disputed on similar grounds.

CIVIL.

19 B. 428.

[475] In case 18 no question was put about religion to the only witness, Ex. 171. We have been referred to the Gazetteer volumes, Dharwar, 180, Bijapur 121. The Dharwar writer does not treat the Kurubas, who number 87,800 in that district, as Lingayets at all, as appears from the table at p. 103, though he styles the Kuruba Gurus as half Lingayets. These Gurus seem to be what are known as Vaders in the Bijapur District. The Bijapur writer says at p. 123 that the Kurubas are Brahminical Hindus. Neither does he include this great caste numbering 94,786 in Bijapur District in his tables of True, Affiliated and Half Lingayets. In the full notice of the Kurubas in the Telugu country written by Dr. Buchanan in the early part of this century (Journey into Mysore and Canara, Vol. I, p. 395) there is nothing distinctive to show that they are Lingayets ; and another reference made by Mr. Ghanasham for the respondent (8 Bombay Royal Asiatic Society's Journal, 74) only shows a story in the Basava Purana, one of the Lingayet sacred books, in which a shepherd appears as an adorer of the linga.

In case 41 the only evidence that the parties were Lingayets is a statement of a collateral, Ex. 510, that although he is a Kuruba he follows Lingayet tenants. In case 42 there is nothing whatever in the evidence, Exs. 442 to 445, 347, 517 and 536 to show that the parties were Lingayets. In case 44 from the Navalgund Taluka of the Dharwar District the evidence is Exs. 349, 438 to 441, 515, 526 to 529 and 538. In Ex. 438 the son of the adopted son says that the Kurubas of his neighbourhood follow the religious tenents of the Lingayets. But the kulkarni of his village Ex. 440, a Brahmin called by the plaintiff throws doubt on the statement by pointing out that the Kurubas eat flesh, which he says is contrary to Lingayetism ; and witness 438 says himself that Lingayets do not dine or intermarry with them. The Kurubas in Dharwar District eat the flesh of sheep, fowls, hare and deer, but not of kine or swine (Gazetteer, Dharwar, 181). There is a class of shepherds called Hande-Vazirs or Hande-Kurubas separately described in Gazetteer, Bijapur, 244, and mentioned in the accounts of the Kurubas. These are real Lingayets, and it is stated that they have left off meat and liquor. The Vaders or Kuruba Gurus, who are the ecclesiastics [476] of the non-Lingayet Kurubas, appear to recognize a Lingayet superior. But the writers of the Gazetteer class these ecclesiastics as half Lingayets ; and it appears that unlike the laity of either division, these Vaders eat no flesh and wear the linga.—Gazetteer, Bijapur, 123. But these differences, though striking to the casual observer, are not a test enabling us to say whether or not a Canarese tribe has gone over to Lingayetism—Gazetteer, Dharwar, 102, 106 ; Bijapur 219. "In the northen districts, in Poona, Satara, Kolhapur and Belgaum, the Lingayet faith is declining, and many Lingayets are adopting Brahmincal ways of worship, ceremonies and gods. On the other hand, in Bijapur, in Dharwar and in parts of southern India, Lingayetism appears to be gaining ground" and getting converts from Brahminical Hinduism as it originally did from among the Jains, whose religion it in many respects resembles. On the whole I think case 44 must be excluded as not shown to be relevant, the onus being on the plaintiff.

I am of opinion, on the evidence, that cases 18, 41, 42 and 44 are not relevant to the issue of custom, it not appearing that the parties were Lingayets ; and the presumption being in the present state of the Kuruba community that the Kurubas have not gone over to Lingayetism.

The cases 1, 2, 8 and 25 occurred among the people called Raddis or Radders (Gazetteer, Bijapur, 145; Dharwar, 141). The Gazetteer shows that, excepting the division called Namad, these people are Lingayets. In the cases 1, 2 and 8 the witnesses make it clear that the parties were Lingayets. The only witness in case 25, Ex. 245, says that it occurred in his own village when one elder and divided brother adopted the only son of his brother, and that the adopted son has inherited in both families. This witness is explicit on every point and must be believed when he says that the son is not a Lingayet. Case 25 must, therefore, be excluded.

Cases 47 to 50 must be excluded for more reasons than one. The only evidence of them consists of affidavits, Exs. 384 to 387, made in appeal No. 1 of 1879, in which the High Court decided that the rule of Hindu law prohibiting the adoption of an only son applies to Lingayets. The present defendants filed [477] these affidavits in order to show that they had not convinced the High Court. They cannot be used to prove the plaintiff's case, as there has been no opportunity in this suit of cross-questioning the deponents. Moreover, cases 48, 49 and 50 are irrelevant, as there is nothing whatever to show that the parties were Lingayet, and the names suggest Brahmin and Maratha lineage. Case 47 is irrelevant, as the issue in the present case only relates to the Carnatic and not to the country where Poona stands amid a population not Canarese and Dravidian, but Maratha and Aryan.

Case 51 is based on Exs. 368, 371 and 374. Ex. 368 is P. J., 1882, p. 294, following which the District Judge of Satara held further inquiry, and in his judgment found on the evidence that the adoption of an only son was valid by custom in the country round Tasgaon in the Satara District. The parties were Lingayets. We exclude the case as coming from a different part of the country, hardly within the Carnatic. The final judgment of the High Court, P. J., 1885, 111, was based on other grounds.

It may here be mentioned that the Advocate-General drew attention to the fact that in a case where the Assistant Judge of Bijapur held the adoption of an only son of a Lingayet invalid, no plea that it was valid by custom was raised. See Cross Appeals 1007 of 1889 and 37 of 1890. It appears from the original judgment, in Canarese, of the Bagalkot Court that the Judge found that when the son was given he was not an only son, and the postponement of the ceremony which occurred after all his brothers had died did not invalidate it. That Judge held the case to be an exception, outside of the prohibitory rule. The Assistant Judge thought otherwise and acted on the obiter dicta in the cases Lakshmappa v. Ramava (1) and Kashibai v. Tatia (2). It is not safe under the circumstances to speculate why the plea of custom was not raised.

After careful examination of the evidence in the light of the arguments, we concur in holding the following twenty-two instances to be both proved and relevant:—

Cases 1, 2, 3, 5, 7, 8, 9, 10, 12, 13, 14, 15, 19, 20, 22, 24, 26, 27, 28, 29, 45, 46.

[478] And the following ten not proved:—

Cases 4, 6, 16, 21, 23, 35, 37, 38, 39, 40.

And the following fourteen irrelevant to the custom of Lingayets:—

Cases 11, 25, 30 to 34, 36, 43, 47 to 51.

And though our reasons differ, we agree to exclude case 41.

LATE CIVIL.
19 B. 428

We differ on the following instances :—

Case 17 which I think not proved.

Cases 18, 42, and 44, among Kurubas, not in my opinion proved to be Lingayets.

Case 1 occurring in 1887 in the Bijapur District in a family of Lingayet Reddis is clearly proved by the natural father and adopting mother, witnesses 159 and 75. The boy is the only son of a divided brother. Exhibit 326 F shows that an inquiry was made into the propriety of the act by the Revenue authorities, as the right to share in patelki watan was involved, and that the Collector solemnly confirmed the adoption.

Case 2 occurred about 1815, in a district then belonging to the Chief of Nargund. Exhibit 375 is the chief's sanction to the adoption of Parvatgauda in order that he might succeed to the patil's watan at Sirol. Parvat's son, father of witness 159, is the present patil. I do not doubt that Parvat was an only son—see the genealogies, Exs. 369 and 376—which the witness got from the kacheri when he was considering whether to give his own son in case 1 in adoption. It cannot be inferred that Parvat was son to his adopting father's brother.

Case 3 occurring about 1884 in the Bijapur District is spoken to by witnesses 159 and 75, who were personally present. Witness 159's wife belongs to the village of Bilgi. These persons are not rightly objected to as hearsay witnesses. I hold the case proved.

Case 4 depends solely on witness 159, who admits that he does not know whether the boy was an only son. The proof, therefore, fails.

Case 5 arose in 1857 in Navalgund, in what was then the State of Nargund. A faint objection was made that witness 160 [479] speaks from hearsay : and it was urged that the case is one of dwyamushyayana, being of a brother's grandson. The factum is clearly proved by the natural mother, witness 70, an eyewitness, Ex. 232, the Chief's sanction, Ex. 325, and the settlement, Ex. 324.

Case 6 I hold not to be proved to be one of an only son, for the reasons given by my learned colleague.

Case 7 already discussed (1) as one of a brother's son occurred about 1878. The factum is not disputed.

Case 8 is from the Bijapur District and dated 1888. The factum is not seriously disputed and the whole transaction is proved by the natural father and adopting mother, witnesses 161 and 73, by two persons present, witnesses 160 and 166, and by a registered deed, Ex. 327. All this evidence shows clearly that the parties believed the act was sanctioned by their law. The natural father says the adopting family was that of his cousin. It illustrates the pertinacity with which this case has been fought, to notice that the appellants object that they may have been brothers. This unfounded contention is based upon the ambiguous expression "annatammandaru", literally "elder and younger brethren" used by witness 73. The Canarese word is as ambiguous as our word "brethren", and does not exclude cousins. They were separate in interest.

Case 9 is clearly proved by the two fathers, witnesses 245 and 166 and the document, Ex. 332 B. It occurred in 1885, in the Navalgund Taluka between two separated brothers. The parties have had a dispute, but they have up till now treated the adoption as legal and binding.

Case 10 occurring about 1867 near Badami we have found not to be a case of two brothers. The son and natural father, witnesses 168 and 232, prove that the former is an only son. The adoption has been distinctly recognized by Government in Ex. 352.

(1) 19 B. 470.

Case 11 we exclude, as the parties are not Lingayets. In case 12 the factum is admitted. It is a proved instance of 1886 from the Bankapur Taluka. In case 13 the instance is, in our opinion, proved by the eye-witnesses, 165 and 239, as [480] occurring in 1874 in presence of hundreds of people near Lakshmeshwar in the principality of the Chief of Miraj. The fact in both cases 13 and 14 was admitted by Mr. Scott. Case 14 also comes from the Lakshmeshwar region. We agree that the evidence, witnesses 70, 165 and 239, prove it. The date is 1884. The registered document, Ex. 323 of 1885, which recites the transaction and its reasons, corroborates the adopting woman's statement that the adoption was believed to be legal and proper.

Cases 15 and 16 come from Badami, and are dated about 1878 and 1885. The evidence is slight. But I concur with Mr. Justice Ranade in his reasons for holding case 15 proved and rejecting case 16 As to case 17, dated 1867, from Bankapur I do not think it proved, as the only evidence, witness 169, says it occurred in his third or fifth year: and he does not allege his own direct knowledge of his only sonship. Case 18 of 1849 from Lakshmeshwar I have already excluded, there being no testimony that the Kurubas, parties thereto, were Lingayets. The only witness, No. 171, styles himself Hindu. Moreover, I think his statements do not prove the factum.

In case 19, dated 1873, from Bankapur the factum is fully proved by witnesses 230 and 231, the natural father and son. The latter was a daughter's only son. It is quite clear from the depositions and the solemn document of adoption, Ex. 327, that the parties acted, unconscious of any want of validity.

Case 20 occurred in the Kalghatgi Taluka under Dharwar in 1880 and is clearly proved to be the solemn adoption of a daughter's only son. The factum is not disputed. The adopted son, witness 233, says there was no dispute: and as a patil's watan was involved, there would have been objection taken, if any remote relation had thought the act improper. This witness and the adoption deed, Ex. 238, show clearly that the parties were conscious of nothing improper, but acted as if the adoption were in every respect properly performed. The document is fully attested by four witnesses and was registered. It shows that the widow acted under her husband's direction, and it bases the act on religion and custom, the two great forces [481] which dominate the rural society with its love of tradition. Other similar documents filed in this case show the same things.

We agree in holding that case 21 is not proved by witness 233's somewhat vague statements.

Case 22, dated 1875, comes from the same taluka as case 20, and the same remarks apply. Here the property, especially the inam fields, is considerable. See witness 244, the adopted son, and the deed, Ex. 331, drawn up ten years after. No serious objection to this case is raised by appellant. The adopted son inherited in both families.

Case 23 we reject, witness 240 speaking from hearsay. Case 24 from the Dharwar Taluka in 1837 is clearly proved by witness 241 and the documents, Exs. 242, 243, 329K and 330 to be the adoption of an only son of the sister of the adopting mother. There seems to have been no dispute; and the revenue authorities have recognized it.

Case 25 we have excluded, the Raddi family not being Lingayet.

JUNE 20.
APPELLATE CIVIL.
19 B. 428.

Cases 26 and 27 come from Navalgund and belong to the years 1859 and 1887. The one is an adoption of a daughter's son: the other of a separated brother's grandson. Both are proved by the testimony of witness 246, the adopted son in case 26, and related to the family in case 27.

I concur with Mr. Justice Ranade in holding case 28 from the Gadag Taluka to be proved by witness 70 and the revenue order, Ex. 351. It is of the year 1880 and is important as occurring in a family holding a Deshpande right.

We have both given reasons for admitting case 29 which occurred in the Sangli territory in 1887. We have excluded cases 30 to 34, which relate to Brahmin families as irrelevant.

In case 35 and some others we have no finding by the Court below. I concur in Mr. Justice Ranade's reasons for holding that this instance of only sonship is not proved.

Case 36 we exclude as relating to Brahmins. In cases 37 and 38 the testimony and documents being full of conflictions we hold only sonship not proved. Also in case 39, where the son [482] of the adopted person says the latter had brothers at the time. For similar reasons I concur in rejecting case 40.

Case 41 I would exclude on the ground that the Kuruba family in which the case is alleged is not shown to be Lingayet. My colleague excludes it for failure of proof of only sonship.

On case 42 I have already given opinion that the Kuruba family is not Lingayet. I entirely agree with Ranade, J., in holding the factum and the only sonship proved. The opposite contention of the appellants is vain and unfounded. The adoption, which was about 1878, in the Navalgund Taluka involved a right to police service and to a share in the police inam lands. Exhibit 443 shows that Bhima, the adopted son, said distinctly to the revenue officers that he was the only son of his natural father Basappa. A careful inquiry was made before Bhima was accepted to fill his adopting father's place. The other heirs must have known of these public proceedings, but there was no dispute. This is a clear instance of a brother's only son being adopted. The evidence does not show whether the brothers were joint or not.

We have excluded case 43 as one of Brahmins. I have given my reasons for excluding the Kuruba case 44 from Navalgund as not one of Lingayets. My learned colleague admits it as proved.

I agree with him in holding case 45 of 1864 from Navalgund to be clearly proved. The adopted son has not inherited in his natural family. The two fathers were cousins. As temple inam lands were involved, and the relations appeared at the inquiry, the recognition by the Collector of this adoption, of which the legality was not disputed in the family, makes this case important evidence of the custom.

Case 46 is alleged to have occurred in a patelki family in the Ron Taluka about 1834. Concurring in my colleague's remarks I hold this case proved. It is that of a nephew adopted by a separated uncle. The nephew was often described as son of the natural father. This fact is partly explained by his inheriting in both families.

[483] We have already given our reasons for excluding cases 47 to 51 as irrelevant.

The result of our consideration of the above cases is that we concur in finding that the existence of the alleged custom is clearly proved by the evidence. The instances range from 1814 till the present time, and belong to the Bijapur and Dharwar Districts, between the Bagevadi and the Hangal talukas. If the adoptions were considered invalid, it is incredible that no disputes should have been raised, either in the British districts or the Native States, especially where the right to service or watan or inam was in question. Many of the cases were publicly conducted, in the kacheri as well as the home: there is documentary evidence of them in registered deeds and public records. There is no sign of secrecy or indication that the transactions were improper or unusual. Like the adoption in the present suit, they must have been matter of great notoriety. If we turn to the remarks of the Judge below on the present adoption, the abundant evidence shows that it was treated as right and proper; the defendants concurred in it, and some of the witnesses who depose against the custom are found to have witnessed the deeds, and nobody protested against the adoption. I think it may, therefore, be inferred that the objection to validity is an after thought; and I find that the parties acted at the time with a consciousness that the act was valid by custom. Following the decisions already noted, we must give it our judicial recognition. "Thus by frequent iteration and multiplication of the act, a custom constituted, and being used for a time obtains the force of law"—Case of Tanistry (1).

Turning now to other questions on which we must give judgment, I concur with the Judge below and with my learned colleague, for the reasons he gives, in upholding the gift of house and lands by the deceased Shivangauda to his two daughters, the defendants Nos. 2 and 3, by Ex. 113. I do not think we can affirm, on the evidence, that either the deed of adoption, Ex. 112, was executed, or that the ceremony of adoption took place prior to the gift: and, therefore, I think we must treat the gift and adoption as substantially one transaction.

[484] We concur, for the reasons given by Ranade, J., with the Subordinate Judge in refusing to the widow, the defendant No. 1, the four ornaments and the sum of Rs. 1,128.

With regard to the claim of defendants Nos. 2, 3 and 5 to the residue of the moveable property and the endeavour to make out that the defendant Gangava did a large money-lending business of her own quite independently of her deceased father Shivangauda, I am of opinion, after careful examination of the evidence, that the Subordinate Judge, who examined the witnesses, is right in believing them to be false, and in his conclusions rejecting the defendants' claim. My reasons are substantially those of the lower Court, and I concur entirely in the reasons given by Ranade, J., on this part of the case. Both Courts are enabled to apply several tests to the conflicting evidence. It is to be noticed prominently that many of the defendants' witnesses on this claim are persons who professed complete ignorance of the practice of adopting only sons, although some of them were present at this particular adoption, which was performed with great publicity and without dispute. Moreover, these same people try to convince the Court that such adoptions never have occurred among Lingayets, by swearing to a religious reason, the Brahmin dogma about the delivery of the soul from hell by the begetting of a son.

Witness 282 even goes so far as to represent some unknown deceased Lingayet religious doctors preaching at Naregal some twenty years ago this dogma as a reason for objecting to these adoptions. This is as unlikely as a story would be that ministers of the Protestant Churches were insisting on marriage being treated as a sacrament. This story about these abbots or pandits, if there is any truth in it, points to the fact that the Naregal people were aware years ago of the custom of adopting only sons, and possibly people of the other religious community may have expounded the Brahmanical view. There is no statement that the three pandits, who, according to witness 293, met above thirty years ago in the Nizam's territory and declared that the custom was invalid, were Lingayets; and the authorities they are said to have quoted, Smriti and Sruti, indicate that they may have been Brahmins interpreting mere texts of Hindu law, possibly those [485] very texts on which the great dispute has turned, i.e., whether at Hindu law the adoption of an only son is valid. No living priest of importance nor learned man has been called to prove these adoptions to be wrong or contrary to religion or practice: there is no evidence of any such adoption being followed by caste meeting or penance or ecclesiastical censure. The family guru, witness 255, says he does not know the Shastras: and although his tongue declares these adoptions to be wrong, his acts speak differently, as he took a part without remonstrance in the adoption under our consideration in this case.

The Court now confirms the decree of the Subordinate Judge of the First Class in all particulars; but adds to it a declaration that the plaintiff-respondent takes the property awarded to him subject to the obligation to provide a sufficient maintenance for the first defendant Basava; the costs of the cross-objections to be paid by the respondent; and all the other costs of the appeal by the appellants.

Decree confirmed.

Before Sir Charles Sargent, Kt., Chief Justice, and Mr. Justice Farran.

H. A. ACWORTH, MUNICIPAL COMMISSIONER OF BOMBAY (Original Defendant), Appellant v. SHAVAKSHA DHUNJIBHAI (Original Plaintiff), *Respondent. [10th and 11th December, 1894.]

Malicious prosecution—Procuring wrongful execution of a warrant of arrest—Reasonable and probable cause.

The plaintiff sued the Municipal Commissioner of Bombay for damages, alleging that the Commissioner had maliciously and without reasonable and probable cause procured a warrant to be issued against him on 24th March, 1892, and subsequently procured that warrant to be executed at a time when its force was spent, and under circumstances when it ought not to have been executed. From the evidence it appeared that on the 21st December, 1891, a notice was served on the plaintiff under s. 232 of the City of Bombay Municipal Act (III of 1888) requiring him to do certain drainage work upon premises belonging to him. The work not having been done, a summons was issued against him on the 11th February, 1892, requiring him to appear before the [486] Presidency Magistrate to answer a charge of not having complied with the above notice. The summons was returnable on the 25th February, 1892, and on that day the plaintiff appeared, but the hearing was postponed until the 24th March, 1892. On the 27th February, 1892, the plaintiff wrote to the defendant objecting to the nature of the work he was required to do, and adding "after this explanation I will leave the matter in the hands of the Drainage Department to do the work, and will pay the expenses." In reply to this letter the Executive Engineer on the 21st March informed the plaintiff that he must appear in Court on the 24th March, and also requested him to "take the work in hand at once and complete it within the time now allowed." On the 22nd March, 1892, the plaintiff replied by letter stating that he did not understand the work, and asking the Municipality to get it done, he offering to pay the expense. The letter ended as follows :—"I do not see any reason now to attend in Police Court on 24th instant, as I am ready and willing to do the work." The plaintiff did not attend the Court on the 24th March. On that same day (the 24th) a letter signed by the Municipal Commissioner was delivered to the plaintiff, dated the 23rd March, informing him that a "fresh summons" had been issued against him for not complying with the requirements of the notice served on him. The Courts held that the non-appearance of the plaintiff on the 24th March was not caused by the receipt of this letter. On the 24th idem, in consequence of the non-appearance of the plaintiff in obedience to the summons, a warrant of arrest, was issued against him. The date originally inserted in the warrant for the plaintiff's appearance before the Magistrate was the 7th April, but this date was subsequently altered to the 2nd June. There was no evidence as to how or by whom this alteration was made. The plaintiff having heard on the 25th March of the issue of the warrant appeared next day (the 26th) before the Magistrate and surrendered, showing to the Magistrate the defendant's letter of the 23rd March and explaining why he had not attended on the 24th. A note was made of his surrender and he was told by the Magistrate to appear on the 7th April. The plaintiff, however, did not get the warrant cancelled. He stated that at the office of the Presidency Magistrate's Court he was informed that the warrant was with the Municipality, and that he then went away and did nothing more. On the 7th April the Municipal Engineer went to the plaintiff's premises and pointed out the work that was to be done. He (the plaintiff alleged) told the plaintiff that he need not attend the Police Court that day, as he would get the hearing of the summons postponed for a fortnight. The plaintiff then instructed a plumber to do the requisite work, which was completed (as plaintiff alleged) on the 26th April and was passed and approved by the municipal authorities. The plaintiff swore that he attended the Police Court on the 21st April, but apparently did not bring his appearance to the notice of the Magistrate, as the municipal officers had left the Court before he arrived. He further stated that he attended again on the 28th April, but was told by a municipal inspector that he might go away, as the work was done. Another hearing was apparently fixed on the 19th May, but the case was again adjourned to the 2nd June. On the 31st May the plaintiff was arrested in execution of the warrant of the 24th March. The evidence was that on that morning, at 8 o'clock, a municipal inspector (Hormasji Cursetji) who was not called as a witness at the hearing, accompanied by a police sepoy, went to the plaintiff's house and pointed out the plaintiff to the sepoy, who arrested him and took him in custody to the police station and subsequently before [487] the Magistrate. He was released on depositing Rs. 25 as security for appearing when required. On the 16th June the plaintiff again appeared in the Police Court when the summons was withdrawn. The plaintiff claimed Rs. 10,000 as damages for malicious prosecution, wrongful arrest and detention in custody, and false imprisonment.

The defendant denied that he had applied for or obtained the warrant for the plaintiff's arrest or that he or his servants had anything to do with the arrest or was responsible for it, save that a sub-inspector who knew nothing of the warrant had pointed out the plaintiff to a police officer at the latter's request. He further denied that the proceedings were malicious and without reasonable and probable cause. The lower Court (Starling, J.) held that the defendant was liable for the wrongful execution of the warrant against the plaintiff, and awarded the latter Rs. 500. On appeal,

Held, affirming the decree of the lower Court, that the defendant was liable. On the 28th April at any rate the warrant in question was a spent warrant and could not be properly executed, as it was, on the 31st May. As the warrant was issued by the Magistrate of his own accord, the defendant would not be liable for its execution (as shown by the case of West v. Smallwood (1)) unless he or his subordinates took an active part in executing it. The mere circumstance that the plaintiff was pointed out to the police officer who executed the warrant by a municipal inspector might not of itself amount to taking an active part. But there were special circumstances which should be taken into consideration in conjunction with it. The length of time which elapsed before the warrant was executed, and the alteration of the date in the direction contained in the warrant as to taking bail, not explained in any way and which could not have been made by the police, pointed to the warrant having been, if not in the actual keeping of the municipal authorities at any rate under their control, and to the police having been set in motion by them. Under these circumstances it was incumbent on the defendant to give rebutting evidence, and more especially to call the municipal inspector to explain the circumstances under which he pointed out the plaintiff to the police officer who executed the warrant.

APPEAL from Starling, J.

Suit to recover Rs. 10,000 as damages for the improper issue of a warrant against the plaintiff and for malicious arrest.

In December, 1891, the plaintiff in Bombay was served with a notice by the defendant under s. 232 of the City of Bombay Municipal Act, III of 1888, to do certain drainage work upon premises belonging to him in Bombay. The work not being done, a summons under s. 471 of the Act was issued against him in February, 1892, requiring him to appear before the Presidency Magistrate to answer a charge of not having drained his premises in compliance with the said notice. The summons was made returnable on the 25th February, 1892, and on that day the [488] plaintiff appeared before the Magistrate when the hearing was postponed until the 24th March, 1892.

On the 27th February, 1892, the defendant wrote the following letter to the plaintiff :—

"DEAR SIR,—I beg to bring to your information and at the same time protest that instead of decrease the nuisance, the Drainage Department will increase every day complaint under the following circumstances.

"To my house there is a pucka pavement gully and a cesspool well built according to the notice served on me under s. 257, No. 1016 which is working up to this time without any hindrance and it (sic.) also open to the garden. This will be certified by the inspector of the Health Department. Now I am summoned, No. 345, before Magistrate not complying to put gully trap, &c., I, therefore, inform you that I am ready to do the work, but mind there will be an often hindrance of the free pass of the water of the nani to the cesspool, and there will be an often complaint.

"Please, therefore, be good enough to order not to disturb the present system. At present nani water runs into the cesspool by a good slope, and not a drop stops into the chunam and cement gutter which they wanted to shut up and choked often ; at present water runs right into the cesspool, which watter every day removes by cart.

"All this place often visited by an inspector whose name I think Mr. Dosonere, who will inform you about it.

"After this explanation if you insist upon me I will leave the matter into the hands of the Drainage Department to do the work and will pay the expenses and at the same time they will be responsible for the future cleanlinees and nuisance."

In reply to that letter the plaintiff received the following letter from the defendant, dated the 21st March, 1892 :—

"SIR,—Referring to your letter dated the 27th February, to the address of the Municipal Commissioner, I have the honour to inform you that the case in the Magistrate's Court, Girgaum, in respect of the drainage of your premises in Gowalia Tank Road, has been postponed to the 24th March, 1892, on which day it will be necessary for you to appear.

"I have to request you that you will take the work in hand at once and satisfactorily complete it within the time now allowed."

On the 22nd March the plaintiff wrote as follows to the Municipal Executive Engineer :—

"22*nd March*, 1892.

"DEAR SIR,—In reply to your No. 8119 of 1892, I beg to inform you that I don't understand what to have it done, and at the same time to avoid the mistake I wish you will, kindly appoint one man to do the work to your satisfaction, and I will pay the expenses.

"I use to attend my business from 7 A. M. till 6 P. M., so I cannot show him the work what you wanted to have it; so please on receipt of this letter send one licensed [489] plumber with instruction, as well as, please, inform him what money will be required to purchase the pipes, &c., which I will pay him.

"I myself don't understand, so please get it done by the man of your satisfaction.

"I don't see any reason now to attend in Police Court on 24th instant as I am ready and willing to do the work."

On the 24th March the plaintiff received the following letter dated the 23rd March and purporting to be also a reply to his letter of the 27th February :—

"No. 29922 of 1892.

"In answer to his letter dated 27th ultimo, Mr. Shavaksha Dhunjibhai is referred to this office No. 17710 of 31st October last, and is informed that a fresh summons has been issued against him for not complying with requirements of the notice served on him."

The plaint stated that in consequence of this letter he did not attend the Police Court on the 24th March as he expected to be served with another summons; but on the 25th he read in a newspaper that a warrant had been applied for and obtained against him for not having attended on the 24th.

He accordingly went to the Police Court and surrendered himself, showing to the Magistrate the letter of the 23rd March, and explaining why he had not attended on the 24th. A note was made of his surrender and he was told by the Magistrate to appear on the 7th April.

On the 7th April, one of the municipal engineers visited the plaintiff's premises and pointed out the work that was to be done.

He (the plaintiff alleged) told the plaintiff that the hearing of the summons would be postponed for a fortnight and that he need not attend the Police Court on that day (i.e., the 7th April.)

The plaintiff attended the Police Court on the 21st April and again on the 28th April. On the latter day one of the officers of the Drainage Department met him at the Police Court and told him he might go away, giving him to understand that the matter had been settled. The work on the plaintiff's premises was completed on the 26th April and was passed and approved by the municipal authorities.

The plaint further stated that the plaintiff heard nothing more about the matter until the morning of the 31st May when he was arrested by a police constable who was attended by one of [490] the municipal inspectors, in execution of the warrant of the 24th March to which, as above stated, the plaintiff had surrendered.

The warrant when signed by the Presidency Magistrate was in the following form :—

"To all Constables and other Her Majesty's Officers of the Peace for the town of Bombay and the places subordinate thereto.

"Whereas Shavaksha Dhunjibhai at Gowalia Tank Road of Bombay stands charged with the offence of breach of Municipal Act, s. 232, you are hereby directed to arrest the said Shavaksha Dhunjibhai and to produce him at the Second Presidency Magistrate's Court at Bombay before such Presidency Magistrate as may then be present.

"If the said Shavaksha Dhunjibhai shall give bail himself in the sum of Rs. 25, with one surety in the sum of Rs. 25, to attend before me on 7th April, 1892, he may be released."

When executed the date 7th April had been erased with a pencil and 2nd June written above it.

The plaintiff was taken in custody to the police station and was subsequently brought before the Magistrate. He was then released on depositing Rs. 25 as security for appearing when required.

On the 8th June, 1892, the plaintiff received the following letter from the Executive Engineer of the Municipality :—

"SIR,—In continuation of this office No. D. $\frac{299}{16\text{-}4\text{-}92}$ I have the honour to inform you that the case in the Magistrate's Court, Girgaum, in respect of the drainage of your premises in Gowalia Tank Road, has been postponed to the 16th June, 1892, on which day it will be necessary for you to appear.

"I have to request that you will take the work in hand at once and satisfactorily complete it within the time now allowed."

To that letter the plaintiff replied as follows :—

"Bombay, 9th June, 1892.

"JAMES W. SMITH, ESQUIRE, Municipality.

"SIR,—In reply to your letter dated 8th instant, I beg to inform you that according to your department's instruction the disputed work has been done by the plumber since seven or eight days ago, and one of your inspectors, I am told by my man with plumber, been in my absence to see the work on the 7th instant.

"You will please note that as I am ignorant of the work. So please see again whether the plumber have worked to your satisfaction or not; if not, then insist upon him to do more work as the plumber is bound to do the work to your satisfaction.

"[491] I am quite at a loss to understand as per your letter No. D.—299 of 16th instant (April) which was shown to the plumber who informed me that such work has been done since 26th April, except the present disputed gully trap which was before disallowed, and now you wanted to have it, so the plumber has put it since many days.

"You write to take the work in hand while the work done many days ago.

"Please pay a visit to the work before the 16th June."

On the 16th June, 1892, the plaintiff again appeared in the Police Court when the summons was withdrawn.

The plaintiff claimed Rs. 10,000 as damages "for malicious prosecution, wrongful arrest and detention in custody, and false imprisonment."

The defendant in his written statement (inter alia) denied that he had applied for or obtained the warrant for the plaintiff's arrest. He stated that on the 24th March the case was called on in the Police Court and that on plaintiff's non-appearance the Magistrate had issued the warrant. The written statement further stated as follows :—

"8. The defendant says that neither he nor any of the municipal authorities caused or had anything to do with the arrest of the plaintiff on the 31st May, 1892, save and except that a sub-inspector who knew nothing about the issue of the warrant pointed out to the police officer at his request the plaintiff as the person who appeared to be named in a warrant which the police officer had with him for service. The defendant denies that he was in any way responsible for the said arrest or what followed thereupon.

"9. The defendant denies that the institution of the said proceedings against the plaintiff and the continuance thereof were malicious and without reasonable and probable cause, or that the said arrest and detention in custody of the plaintiff was improper, wrongful and illegal as alleged."

The case was heard by Starling, J.

Russell (with Lang, Advocate General), for the plaintiff.—He cited Addison on Torts (6th Ed.), p. 150; Churchill v. Siggers (1); Johnson v. Emerson (2); Morrell v. Martin (3); West v. Smallwood (4); Starling's Criminal Law (5th Ed.), p. 257.

Macpherson and Inverarity for the defendant.—They cited Pollock on Torts (3rd Ed.), p. 204; Huffer v. Allen (5); Bank of [492] New South Wales v. Owston (6); Metropolitan Bank v. Pooley (7); Spencer v. Jacob (8), Gibson v. Veasey (9); Addison on Torts (6th Ed.), p. 160.

STARLING, J.— This suit is filed by the plaintiff against the defendant, the Municipal Commissioner, to recover damages from him for the improper issue of a warrant against the plaintiff and for his improper arrest under that warrant. The facts upon which the plaintiff bases his case are fully set out in the plaint, but the plaintiff nowhere distinctly sets out the legal aspect of his claim. I, however, gather from para. 14 of the plaint that he charges that the defendant, maliciously and without reasonable and probable cause, procured a warrant to be issued against him on the 24th March, 1892, and that, subsequently, he maliciously and without reasonable and probable cause procured that warrant to be executed at a time when its force was spent and under circumstances under which it ought not to have been executed, and on this view of the case I shall found my judgment.

The defendant in his written statement sets out his view of the facts, and denies that the plaintiff has sustained any damage, and that he is in law liable for what has happened. The plaintiff is a man who, in the opinion of the municipal officers, has given "endless trouble" to them by neglecting to put the drainage into his cesspools into a proper sanitary condition; and I think that their opinion is a correct one, and that the conduct of the plaintiff before the 24th March, 1892, is certainly not such as to enlist the sympathy of the Court with him. During the whole of the latter half of 1891 correspondence was going on between the plaintiff and the Health Department about the insanitary condition of the plaintiff's drainage, but nothing whatever resulted therefrom, and on the 21st December, 1891, a notice was served upon him under s. 232 of Bombay Act III of 1888 requiring him to do certain works. That notice was not complied with, and on the 11th February, 1892, a summons, (which, however, bears no date) was issued against the plaintiff for not having drained his premises in compliance with the beforementioned notice and requiring him to attend at the Girgaum Police Court on the 25th February, 1892. [493] The plaintiff appeared on that day, and the hearing of the case was postponed from time to time until the 24th March, 1892. On the 24th March the plaintiff was not present, and the Magistrate, Mr. Hamilton, after taking evidence of the service of the summons, and, I presume, also taking judicial notice of the case having been called on before him, and the plaintiff having been ordered to appear on the days to which it was adjourned, and especially on the 24th March, all of which was necessary for his subsequent action, issued a warrant for the arrest of the plaintiff for non-appearance on that day. That warrant, in my opinion, is on the face of it bad. It simply recites that the plaintiff was charged with the offence of breach of s. 232 of the Municipal Act and orders his arrest. Now the Magistrate had no authority to issue a warrant against any one for non-compliance with a notice issued under that section, for by s. 471 of the same Act a neglect to comply with the provisions of s. 232 is only punishable by fine. He could only issue a warrant when he has reason to believe that the defendant has absconded, or will not obey the summons, or when the defendant fails to appear to the summons, and service of the summons in due time for him to appear is proved to the Magistrate (s 90 of the Criminal Procedure Code of 1882). Therefore, on the face of a warrant in a summons case there should appear a statement of the offence charged, that a summons was issued, that its service was duly proved, and that the defendant did not appear—or, as in the present case, that the defendant appeared on a certain day; that he was then ordered to appear on a certain other day, and that on the latter day he did not appear, otherwise the warrant on the face of it would appear to have been issued without jurisdiction. The form in use in England is given in Burn's Justice of the Peace, "Warrant of Apprehension," Vol. V, p. 1117. No. VII of the Forms of Process annexed to the Criminal Procedure Code is for a warrant for the arrest of a witness, and that shows how such a document should be drawn up in a case where a summons is ordinarily the proper means of compelling attendance.

There is no form given for a warrant for the arrest of an accused after non-obedience to a summons, but a little consideration of form No. II (Warrant of Arrest) in connection with No. VII [494] will show that what I have stated above ought to have appeared in the warrant in this case. The form is as follows: "Whereas ———of———stands charged with the offence of (here state the offence) you are hereby directed to arrest," &c. Now it is an elementary rule of law that the offence stated must be one for which the Magistrate can issue a warrant; the offence of contravening a notice under s. 232 of the Municipal Act is not such an offence; but the offence of having been summoned to answer a contravention of such a notice and not appearing in answer to such summons is such an offence. Consequently, the statement of the issue of a summons and non-obedience thereto must appear on the warrant. This objection may appear to be a technical one; but in my opinion the omission to state the real cause for arrest arises from a want of appreciation of what that cause is, and is probably a cause of the subsequent irregularities which I shall have to notice. The municipal officers have apparently not looked upon these warrants as merely instruments to compel the accused to attend at the next hearing, but as means of pressure by which the accused could be brought up at any time if he did not obey the notice served upon him; for they are not executed forthwith, or necessarily in time for the next hearing, but apparently are left in the hands of a police sepoy to be executed when he has time, or when he sees fit to execute them, or when some municipal servant points out the accused; whereas they ought to be executed at once, and the accused kept in custody or held to bail.

Then the question arises, how was it that the plaintiff was absent on the 24th March? He says that he did not attend in consequence of a letter from the defendant dated the 23rd March (Ex. G) in these terms (His Lordship read the letter above set forth and continued :—) Now that letter does not say that the plaintiff need not attend on the 24th March, though I am inclined to think that he might infer that as a fresh summons had been issued against him, the former one was cancelled, and that he need not attend till the new summons was served upon him. But in order that this letter should have any effect upon his mind, it was necessary that he should have received it before 1 P. M. on the 24th. He says he received it at his office in the Fort in the forenoon of the 24th, and in that he is corroborated [495] by his son. I cannot say that the evidence on behalf of the defendant satisfies me that I ought not to accept the story of the plaintiff and his son. The date 24-3-1892, 1-45 P. M. or else 7-45 P. M. (I really cannot say which it is) attached to the initials acknowledging the receipt of Ex. G. would be a very important piece of evidence if it was in the handwriting of the plaintiff's son. The plaintiff and his son, however, swear it is not. To me it appears to be in different handwriting to the initials and written with a different pencil. Byramji Dadabhai says these figures were there on the 17th June, 1892, when he made a pencil memorandum in answer to the defendant's first enquiry endorsed on Ex. Q; but if they were there then, I cannot conceive why, in answer to the defendant's enquiry when Ex. G was delivered, Byramji did not reply "on the 24th March, 1892, at 1-45 P. M."; whereas he only gives the date, and the defendant has to make another enquiry about the hour. If the case for the defendant had been that on the 16th June enquiries were made, and that the date and hour were then ascertained and noted against the initials as the result of the enquiry, I should have given considerable weight to those figures; but as that is not the case, they did not impress me at all. I cannot give any weight to the evidence of the peon Ganpet Gopal, who professes to remember all the details of the round he took when he delivered this particular letter, whereas he cannot remember any other round; and a comparison of the evidence of this witness with that of Byramji Dadabhai leaves me with the feeling that on this point I cannot give much weight to their evidence. Consequently, if I had definitely to determine this point, I think I should have to accept the evidence of the plaintiff and his son. I should also have to go into the circumstances under which this letter was written and sent. It is alleged that it was written under some misapprehension, but no evidence has been given as to how the misapprehension arose or who was liable for this mistake, except that Mr. James says he had nothing to do with drafting or sending it, though the draft is one which would issue from his office. I do not, however, think that it was this letter which determined the plaintiff's action in not going to the Police Court on the 24th March, though if he did receive it on the forenoon [496] of that day it might possibly have confirmed him in his previously formed intention. The Acting Executive Engineer by his letter of 21st March had told the plaintiff to appear on the 24th. In answer to that the plaintiff replied on the 22nd saying he did not know how to set about the business, and asking the Executive Engineer to send some plumber to put his drainage to right and that he would pay him. He then goes on, "I dont' see any reason now to attend in the Police Court on the 24th instant as I am ready and willing to do the work." Consequently, I am of opinion that on the 22nd the plaintiff had made up his mind that he need not attend on the 24th, and so did not attend. Under these circumstances I do not consider the defendant is responsible for the non-appearance of the plaintiff on that day. Then it appears from the evidence that on non-appearance of an accused the Magistrate issues a warrant as a matter of course on proof of service; and Mr. James swears he made no application for a warrant though he knew of its issue, as appears from a memorandum in his handwriting in Ex. I. Consequently, I am of opinion that the defendant is in no way responsible for the issue of the warrant; and he is not responsible for its defective form, as it was made out in the office of the Magistrate's Court without any intervention of the defendant's officers.

On the 26th March, the plaintiff, having heard of the issue of the warrant, went to the Magistrate at the Girgaum Police Court to surrender to the warrant, in order to avoid arrest. According to the plaintiff's account the Magistrate referred him to the office, and there he was informed that the warrant was] with the Municipality, and thereupon he went away and did nothing more. According to the evidence of Sitaram Dhakji the judicial clerk, the Magistrate would have sent him in to the office to see if a warrant had really been issued against him, and if so, he would have been referred to the officer in whose charge the warrant was. I think the latter account is more probable. Now, this does not seem to me to be a right mode of procedure. When the defendant surrenders to a warrant, it is the duty of the Magistrate to keep him in custody to answer the charge, or to hold him to bail, not to let him go again by sending him to search, perhaps all over Bombay, for the officer in charge of the warrant, and then be [497] arrested and brought in custody to the Court—the thing he wished to avoid. I do not suppose that the Magistrate would thus act if the charge were a serious one under the Penal Code, and this practice is probably only in regard to municipal warrants which do not seem to be of much account. But proceedings under any warrant should be conducted on the same principles whatever the offence charged against the accused, and if he surrenders before he is arrested, due provision ought to be made at once for his appearance at the proper time. The defendant is not responsible for the action of the Magistrate, and I think that the plaintiff has in part himself to thank for what happened afterwards, for any sensible man would have notified what he had done to the municipal officer and to the Police Superintendent in charge of the warrant, though, of course, he was not bound to do so.

The next day of hearing was on the 7th April, and for appearance on that day the plaintiff would have, under the order on the warrant to have given bail if he had been theretofore arrested; but on that day the matter was postponed till the 21st, when the plaintiff appeared, the warrant not having been executed. By the appearance of the plaintiff on that day without having been arrested, in my opinion the force of this warrant was spent, and he ought not to have been subsequently arrested for his default in appearance on the 24th March. If it was desired to arrest him afterwards it could only be as the result of subsequent non-appearance and on a fresh warrant. Mr. James, who was in charge of the case, knew from a memorandum on Ex. No. 1 that the warrant had not been executed, and in my opinion, he ought to have brought to the notice of the Magistrate that a warrant was out against the plaintiff and asked him to recall it and to have seen that the proper steps were taken for that purpose; for s. 75 of the Criminal Procedure Code (X of 1882) provides that every warrant shall remain in force until it is cancelled by the Court which issued it or is executed. Mr. James in his report to the defendant says that if the plaintiff had communicated with the Drainage Department after the 26th March, when he surrendered to the warrant, it would have been withdrawn as a matter of course. If so, I cannot understand why it was not withdrawn on the 21st April when the plaintiff appeared in Court. [498] I consider Mr. James' omission to withdraw the warrant on the 21st April a grave neglect of duty, probably arising from a want of knowledge of what the real meaning and end of the issue of such a warrant was; but as he was the officer in charge of these prosecutions it was his duty to have had the requisite knowledge. If the warrant had then been withdrawn, the necessity for this suit would never have arisen. Of course, the plaintiff knew the warrant was out against him, and might himself have asked to have it withdrawn, but an accused person may not know of the issue of a warrant, and consequently if the prosecuting officer does not do his duty, he would be helpless, and might be improperly arrested without opportunity of preventing it.

On the 28th April the plaintiff again attended at the Police Court, and the matter seems to have been adjourned. Then there seems to have been another hearing fixed for the 19th May, but of what happened then we have no account, though the municipal officers do not complain of the plaintiff not having been present then, and the case was adjourned till the 2nd June, at which time it would appear that the work which had to be done by the plaintiff was not completed to the satisfaction of the municipal officers, but the work seems to have been done all but some small matter which was considered necessary to complete it. On the 31st May the plaintiff was arrested. As to the reason why, no explanation was given; and whether the officer in charge of the warrant suddenly woke up to the consciousness of its being in his possession and got a municipal servant to point the plaintiff out, or whether one of Mr. James' subordinates thought the execution of the warrant would hasten the operations at the plaintiff's place, and so suggested that it should be executed, is left entirely to conjecture. If the latter were shown to be the case, that would be evidence of malice, for the use of a warrant or any other process for the arrest of a person for any indirect object is evidence of malice—Melia v Neute (1); Tebbutt v. Holt (2). All we know is that Mr. James says it was not executed by his orders, and from the evidence of the plaintiff that Hormasji Cursetji, a municipal inspector, who has not been called, accompanied by a police sepoy, went to the plaintiff's house about 8 A.M. [499] on the 31st May, and pointed the plaintiff out to the sepoy, who arrested him, the warrant seems then to have been in the possession of Hormasji. It also appears that when a police sepoy wants to have any one pointed out to him for the execution of a warrant, he goes to the Ward Office, and some one from the office is sent with him for that purpose. There certainly was a want of reasonable and probable cause for the execution of this warrant at the time it was executed; but the question is, whether the defendant is responsible for its execution? We have these facts proved—that Mr. James, the responsible officer in charge of the case against the plaintiff, did not take steps to have it recalled at a time when, in my opinion, he ought to have done so; he also took no steps to inform his office that it was not to be executed, in consequence of which one of his subordinates who, I think, was authorized to do so, pointed out the plaintiff to the police sepoy who arrested him. I do not think that the plaintiff could under the circumstances have brought responsibility home to the defendant by more direct evidence; while, on the other hand, it was open to the defendant to call the whole of the office responsible for this matter and show that the arrest was put in train in a way which did not render him liable for it. For instance, it might have been shown by Hormasji (if such was the case) that the police sepoy came to him of his own motion, and asked him to point out the plaintiff, and that, knowing the plaintiff, he did so as a matter of course; but not even Hormasji was called, though named by the plaintiff in his evidence, and in his letter of 4th June, 1892, (Ex. J) when he asked for an explanation from the defendant as to why he had been arrested. I think, therefore, that the defendant not having shown that this warrant was executed without the knowledge of any of the officers under him must be held responsible for its execution without reasonable and probable cause.

It still remains to determine whether it was also caused to be executed maliciously; for although malice may be presumed from want of reasonable and probable cause, it is not necessarily so to be presumed—Mitchell v. Jenkins(1). Malice is not merely a wrongful act done without just cause or execuse, but "a wrongful [500] act done intentionally without just cause or excuse"—Johnson v. Emerson(2). On the other hand, if what was done was a pure mistake on the part of those for whom the defendant is responsible, that would be no malice. See the summing up of Alderson, B., in Heath v. Heape (3), which was approved of by the Court in Banco; so, too, if the execution of the warrant was through carelessness—Spencer v. Jacob (4). There is, as I have said, no evidence to show that the arrest was through mistake or carelessness; consequently it is necessary to consider what is the effect of the omssion of Mr. James to see on the 21st April that the warrant was withdrawn. The case of Tebbut v. Holt(5), seems to me to be in point. There the defendants, as the attorney of one Eales, who had recovered judgment against the plaintiff, and one Frazer and a third person sued out two warrants of Ca Sa, one into London and the other into Surrey. On the former, Frazer was arrested, but was subsequently released by the defendant on his giving a promissory note signed by himself and another for the amount of the debt, and thereby the judgment was satisfied. A few days after the promissory note was given, the plaintiff was arrested in Surrey; and for this arrest he brought the suit. In summing up to the jury, Parke, B., made the following remarks:—"It appears here that the defendant, on the 9th September, took the promissory note of Frazer and another person, payable four months after date, for the amount of debt and costs. This note was a payment of the debt and costs, and was, in point of law, a satisfaction of the judgment as to all the three original defendants. And prima facie, it is to be considered the duty of Mr. Holt, the present defendant, to have given some directions to the Sheriff of Surrey not to proceed further against the present plaintiff on the writ which was in his hands; and it has been held that an omission by an attorney to do so is prima facie evidence of malice. But you must not find for the plaintiff unless you are satisfied that the defendant was actuated by what in law is termed malice . . . Still by this prima facie evidence of malice, Mr. Holt is called upon to give some explanation, but he does not appear to give any that is very satisfactory. . . . If the defendant has not satisfactorily [501] explained the matter to you, by showing you some good reason, why he did not countermand this writ, I think, you ought to find for the plaintiff."

Now that case seems to me to be on all fours with the present. I have held that it was the duty of Mr. James to have withdrawn the warrant against the plaintiff on the 21st April at the latest, but he did not do so, and the consequence was that the plaintiff was wrongfully arrested. The defendant has given no evidence to show why that warrant was not withdrawn or why no notice was given to the office not to point out the plaintiff, and I consider that I as a jury am thereupon entitled to find that there was malice in law.

There is, however, another fact which I discovered on an examination of the warrant itself. The warrant was on the face of it intended to have been executed before the 7th April, for in the direction at the foot as to taking bail, it is stated that the bail to be taken was for the plaintiff's attendance on the 7th April. The words and figures "7th April" have been run through with a pen, and over them "2nd June" has been written. The words "on the 7th April, 1892," seem to have been inserted at the time the warrant was originally issued, and appear to be in the same handwriting as the rest of the writing in the warrant. The words "2nd June" are in a different handwriting and are not verified by the initials or signature of the Magistrate, and as no mention is made in the record of the case as to any renewal of the warrant, I must come to the conclusion that the Magistrate did not authorize the alteration. The hearing before the 2nd June was on the 19th May, and there was no evidence given that the defendant was in default through non-authorized non-appearance on that day; consequently there would have been no ground on that day on which the Magistrate could have issued a fresh warrant or authorized the alteration of the return day of the old one. The date in the warrant must have been altered on or after the 19th May, because it would be on that day that the hearing for the 2nd June would be fixed. The police authorities could not have altered it on their own motion, because they are not in charge of municipal cases and, therefore, would not, except by the merest accident, know to what day the [502] hearing of a particular case was adjourned. Consequently, if the police altered it, it must have been from information given them by some one connected with the Municipality; but I do not think the police would thus tamper with a warrant, for such an action is a very serious one. and to my mind comes somewhat near to forgery. I must, therefore, come to the conclusion that it was altered by some one connected with the Drainage Department, and if I were sitting on a jury I should feel myself justified, legally and morally, in coming to the conclusion that the officers of the Department having got tired of the plaintiff's dilatoriness thought it advisable to put pressure on him by causing him to be arrested, and some one, in order to enable the warrant to be executed and bail to be given for the next day of hearing, altered the 7th April into the 2nd June. The want of any explanation as to why the warrant was executed is, as I have shown, sufficient to enable me to find malice, and this episode of the alteration of the date on the warrant shows a probable reason (I do not say known to the defendant or his solicitors) why no explanation on that point was forthcoming.

I must, therefore, find that the warrant was on the 31st May executed maliciously and without reasonable and probable cause under circumstances which render the defendant liable to the plaintiff in this action. If the inference drawn by me as to the reason of the execution of the warrant was proved by direct evidence, I should give the plaintiff very much heavier damages than I am going to award him, for it is intolerable that process restraining the liberty of the subject should be used for any other purpose than that for which it is directly intended, and where restraining process has been used for indirect objects very exemplary damages should be given. Under all the circumstances of the case I pass a decree for the plaintiff for Rs. 500 and costs.

The defendant appealed

Macpherson and Scott, for the appellant (defendant).—From the evidence it appears that the plaintiff's arrest was effected with the assistance of one of the municipal servants who pointed him out to the police. That was not within the scope of his employment, and the defendant is, therefore, not liable for [503] the arrest. The plaintiff must show malice; Pollock on Torts (3rd Ed.), p. 204; Addison on Torts (6th Ed.) 148; Hope v. Evered (1) The defendant had nothing to do with the issue of the warrant of arrest. It was issued because the plaintiff did not appear upon the summons. They cited Bank of New South Wales v. Owston(2); Heath v. Heape (3); Tebbut v. Holt (4).

JUDGMENT.

SARGENT, C. J.—This is an appeal from the decree of the Divisional Court awarding to the plaintiff Rs. 500 as damages for the improper issue of a warrant on the 24th March, 1892, and for the improper arrest of the plaintiff under that warrant on the 31st May, 1892.

The main facts of the case are not disputed. After a protracted correspondence between the Health Department of the Municipality and the plaintiff with respect to the state of his drains, a notice was served on the plaintiff on 21st December, 1891, under s. 232 of Bombay Act III of 1888 requesting him to do certain work. That work not having been done, a summons was issued against him on the 11th February, 1892, for not having complied with the notice and requiring him to attend at the Girgaum Police Court on the 25th February. The plaintiff appeared on that day and the hearing was adjourned to the 10th and then to the 24th March, when plaintiff failed to appear, and the Magistrate then issued the warrant for his arrest, of which the plaintiff complains.

It was scarcely contended that the Health Department was not justified in taking out the summons; but it was said that there was no necessity for going on with it after the plaintiff's letter of 27th February. But that letter was not a compliance with the notice, but an argumentative letter in which the plaintiff left the [504] work to be carried out by the Drainage Department at his expense, which the Municipality were not forced to accede to. It was urged, however, that the letter of 23rd March, written by the Municipal Commissioner in answer to plaintiff's letter of 27th February, was the cause of plaintiff's absence on 24th March. That letter no doubt speaks of "a fresh summons" having been issued against the plaintiff for not complying with the notice served on him; but as it was in answer to his letter of the 27th February complaining of a summons being issued, the plaintiff could scarcely have thought that it referred to any other than that summons, although it is termed a "fresh" summons. But in any case we entirely agree with the Divisional Court that having regard to plaintiff's statement in his letter of 22nd March to the Acting Executive Engineer "that he did not see any reason now to attend in the Police Court on 24th instant as he was ready and willing to do the work" it was not the letter of the 23rd March (assuming it to have been received on the forenoon of the 24th March) which determined the plaintiff's non-attendance at the Court. Lastly, there is no reason to doubt that Mr. James, the Drainage Engineer, who attended in Court on 24th March with reference to this summons, had no knowledge of its having been written, or that the use of the word "fresh" was other than a pure mistake.

With reference to the issuing of the warrant, the evidence of Mr. James as to what took place on the 24th March before the Magistrate read in conjunction with the statement of Sitaram Dhakji Wasliker, senior judicial clerk to the Magistrate, can leave no doubt that the warrant was not applied for by Mr. James, or any other official of the Municipality, but was issued by the Magistrate of his own accord for non-appearance, and after making the usual preliminary enquiry as to service of the summons and as to whether the work had been executed. It may be that the warrant so issued was technically invalid, as the Divisional Court pointed out, for not stating that it was on account of plaintiff's non-appearance on the 24th March that it was issued. But it was in the usual form according to the evidence of the senior judicial clerk, and in any case whatever defect there might be on the face of it, it was issued by the Magistrate of his own accord, [505] and the defendant would not be held responsible for its defects (Hope v. Evered (1).)

It was contended for the plaintiff that it was really issued for non-obedience of the notice and that, therefore, the Magistrate had no authority to issue it; but there is no evidence whatever to support such a view of what took place before the Magistrate; and even if there were, the defendant would not be liable for what was done by the Magistrate. It will be sufficient to refer to the remarks of the Judges in West v. Smallwood(2), where the Magistrate had issued a warrant without legal authority.

I now pass to the important questions in the case which arise out of the execution of the warrant by the arrest of the plaintiff on the 31st May, 1892. It appears that on the 26th March the plaintiff having heard of the warrant surrendered to it by presenting himself before the Magistrate, who told him to appear on the 7th April; that he did not, however, appear on that day, as Mr. Bragg, of the Drainage Department, told him that the hearing of the summons had been postponed to the 21st April. On the 21st April the plaintiff appeared in the Court, but found that the hearing had been adjourned to the 28th April. He appeared on the 28th when Mr. Bragg gave him to understand, as the plaintiff says, that the matter had been settled. From that time till the morning of the 31st May, when he was arrested, plaintiff says he heard nothing about it; but on being placed before the Magistrate he was released on depositing Rs. 25 as security for his appearance whenever required. On the 2nd June the case came on again before the Magistrate, both the plaintiff and Mr. James being present, when the hearing was postponed to the 16th June, on which day the work having been completed, the summons was withdrawn by the municipal authorities.

The history of this case, as well as the Magistrate's record of the case, shows, as the Judge of the Division Court points out, that warrants of arrest issued for non-appearance on a certain day are held over by the authorities to be executed at any time during the continuance of the summons proceedings. Whether such a practice is a correct one, it is not necessary to express an opinion, as it is plain, we think, that in the present case after the plaintiff attended before the Magistrate and surrendered to the warrant [506] he was told to appear on the 7th April. At any rate on 28th April the warrant in question was a spent warrant and could not be properly executed. As it is no part of the defendant's case that it was renewed by the Magistrate, the question, therefore, is whether the defendant is to be held liable for its execution on the 31st May. As the warrant was issued by the Magistrate of his own accord, the case of West v. Smallwood (1) shows that the defendant would not be liable for its execution unless he or his subordinates took an active part in it. The mere circumstance that the plaintiff was pointed out to the police officer who executed the warrant by Hormasji Cursetji, a municipal inspector, may not of itself, as the Judge seems to have thought, amount to taking an active part. But here there are other special circumstances which must be taken into consideration in conjunction with it. The long time which elapsed before the warrant was executed, and the alteration in the direction as to taking bail at the foot of it from 7th April to 2nd June, not verified by the Magistrate's initials, nor explained by any entry of renewal in the record of the case and which, we agree with the Division Court, could scarcely have been made by the police who knew nothing of what was going on in the summons proceedings, point to the warrant having been, if not in the actual keeping of the municipal authorities, at any rate to its having been under their control and to the police having been set in motion by them.

Under these circumstances it was incumbent, we think, on the defendant to give rebutting evidence and more especially to call Hormasji to explain the circumstances under which he was sent to accompany the police officer, and to deny, if possible, the statement of the plaintiff that the warrant was in his hand when it was served on the plaintiff. No such evidence has been given, and we feel constrained to come to the conclusion that the municipal authorities did take an active part in the execution of the warrant, and must be held liable for plaintiff's arrest, unless they can give some satisfactory explanation. Their explanation of the arrest is, that it was a mistake on the part of the police. In the view we have taken of the evidence, they have to show that it was a pure mistake on their own part; and we [507] agree with the Division Court that the municipal authorities cannot be heard to say that their action was due to a mistake, when they must have known that plaintiff had appeared at any rate on the 28th, if not on the 21st April, and must be credited with the knowledge of what would be the effect of such appearance on the issue of the warrant.

It has been, however, contended before us that the defendant, the Municipal Commissioner, is not liable for the action of his subordinates in this matter, and the judgment of the Privy Council in this case of the Bank of New South Wales v. Owston (1) was relied on. Sir Montague Smith, who delivered the judgment of the Council in that case, states the result of the authorities to be that the authority of a special agent to arrest may be implied when the duties which the officer had to discharge could not be efficiently performed unless he had such power. Looking at the nature of the business which Mr. James' Department was entrusted with, it is plain it would be practically impossible to enforce the provisions of s. 232 of the Municipal Act if one of the most ordinary steps in the proceedings against an offender before the Magistrate, viz., the enforcing attendance by summons of arrest, required the express authority of the Commissioner.

For these reasons we are of opinion that the decree of the Division Court must be confirmed with costs.

LALJI SHAMJI AND OTHERS (Plaintiffs) v. WALJI WARDHMAN AND OTHERS (Defendants).*

[12th, 18th, 19th and 21st February, 1895.]

The plaintiffs and defendants were members of the Kutchi Dossa Oswal caste of Hindus residing in Bombay. The plaintiffs alleged that by a resolution of the caste [508] unanimously passed at a caste meeting held on the 19th September, 1893, a committee, of which they were members, was appointed on behalf of the caste for the purpose of preventing Brahmans from attending the feasts of the caste in the caste oart in Bombay, and that on the 16th and 18th July, 1894, by resolutions unanimously passed the members of the caste were strictly prohibited from feasting any Brahman in the caste oart, and the committee was authorized not to allow any casteman wishing to feast Brahmans in the oart to use the caste oart and caste vessels, and if necessary to take legal steps in the matter. The plaint alleged that the defendants proposed to give a feast in the caste oart to which they had invited Brahmans, and prayed for an injunction and for a declaration that the above resolutions were validly passed and were binding upon the defendants and on the caste. The defendants contended that the subject-matter of the suit was a caste question and not cognizable by a civil Court, and further that the meetings referred to in the plaint had not been duly convened, and that the resolutions were invalid and not binding on those who were not present and who did not consent to them. They alleged that Brahmans had from time immemorial as a matter of course attended the caste feasts, and they denied that the plaintiffs or any members of the caste had now a right to exclude them. The Court found as a fact that a large majority of the caste were in favour of excluding Brahmans from caste feasts.

Held that the majority of the caste having arrived at a bona fide decision that the convenience and comfort of the caste were best advanced by the exclusion of the Brahmans from their oart, it was not a case in which the Court could say that the decision was so subversive of the interests of the minority as to amount to a practical confiscation of their property or denial of their rights, and that the Court ought to give effect to it.

The Court accordingly passed a decree in terms of the prayer of the plaint prohibiting the defendants from bringing Brahmans into the oart to dine so long as the resolution of the caste prohibiting the practice continued in force.

The Court does not decline to give effect to the expressed wishes of the majority of a caste as to the management and custody of caste property, which the minority seek to set at naught, by reason of the suit involving a caste question.

In matters relating to the management of caste property and the administration of its affairs the majority of the caste has authority to control the minority. But the Court will not by its decree enable the majority to make a tyrannical use of its power. It would not assist the majority to deprive without cause the minority of their right to use what is the common property of all, or give effect to a resolution passed in violation of the rules of natural justice or of a directly confiscatory nature.

SUIT to restrain the defendants from inviting Brahmans to caste feasts or to other feasts held in the caste oart.

The plaintiffs and defendants were members of the Kutchi Dossa Oswal caste resident in Bombay. The plaintiffs (fifteen in number) were described in the plaint as members of a committee appointed by the said caste. The defendants were eight in number.

[509] The plaint stated that the Kutchi Dossa Oswal caste was a Hindu Bania caste, of which about fifteen hundred adult male members resided in Bombay; that at a general meeting of the caste duly held on the 19th September, 1893, thirty-five members of the caste were, by resolution unanimously passed, appointed a committee on behalf of the caste for the purpose of preventing Brahmans from attending the feasts of the caste in the caste oart in Bombay, and that fifteen of such committee should constitute a quorum; that at subsequent meetings held on the 26th November, 1893, the 23rd June, 1894, and 6th July, 1894, the number of the committee was increased from thirty-five to fifty-six, and the plaintiffs were fifteen members of the said committee of fifty-six persons.

On the 16th July, 1894, at a caste meeting at which about 1,000 adult members of the caste were present, and at another meeting on the 18th July, 1894, at which about 800 were present, the following resolutions were unanimously passed :—

"IX. The caste hereby confirm and re-appoint the committee of 56 gentlemen appointed on the 9th day of Bhadarwa Sud 1949, and in subsequent meeting, and also confirm all the business done by the said committee up to this day, and specially the meeting of this day called by Mr. Thackersay Dewraj.

"X. The castemen are hereby strictly prohibited from feasting any Brahman in the caste oart, and the above committee are hereby fully authorized not to allow any casteman wishing to feast Brahmans in the caste oart to use the caste oart and vessels belonging to the caste. If necessary, they are authorized to take legal steps in the matter."

The plaint, which was filed on the 9th August, 1894, alleged that since the passing of the said resolution two caste feasts had been given at the caste oart: one of them by one of the defendants and the other by one of their supporters, to both of which, notwithstanding the protests by the plaintiffs, many Brahmans and their families were invited and came. The plaint then continued :—

"The plaintiffs and the majority of the caste who are entitled as of right to attend all caste feasts given at the caste oart strongly object to Brahmans and members of other castes being invited to and attending the feasts there, and they will not attend any feasts to which Brahmans are invited. The plaintiffs say that the majority of the caste are entitled to pass the resolution aforesaid against Brahmans being invited to caste feasts or feasted in the caste oart, and that a small minority of the caste cannot use the caste property in violation of the rule aforesaid.

[510] "10. The caste oart and the caste pots, utensils, dishes and benches used for the caste feasts are all the exclusive property of the said caste, and the plaintiffs say that no one not belonging to the caste is entitled to use them against the wishes of the majority of the caste.

"11. When the Brahmans attend the caste feasts abovementioned they use the cooking pots, utensils, dishes and benches belonging to the said caste, and when they are invited they attend with their wives and families to the number of about 800 or 900. This altogether prevents the wives and families of the majority of the said caste from being conveniently accommodated at such caste feasts.

"12. The plaintiffs have quite recently come to know that the defendants have arranged to give a caste feast in the caste oart at 2 o'clock next Friday, the 10th instant, and notwithstanding the above resolutions they have invited and intend to invite Brahmans to attend the said caste feast, and they intend to feast Brahmans in the said caste oart on the 10th instant and intend to allow the Brahmans to use the said caste oart and other caste property aforesaid.

"13. The plaintiffs further say that Friday the 10th instant corresponds with the native date 9th Shravan Sud, and that the feast which is to be given on that day will be given under the provisions of cl. 15 of the consent decree passed in suit No. 488 of 1888, dated 2nd August, 1890.

"14. The said cl. 15 of the said decree only provides for the giving of a feast to the Kutchi Dossa Oswal Vania caste and to priests, and does not permit Brahmans being invited to attend the feast. The priests are not Brahmans but Gurjis, and do not join the caste in their feasts, but take away their food with them.

"15. The plaintiffs say that the action taken on the part of the defendants above referred to will, unless they are restrained by injunction of this Honourable Court, prevent the plaintiffs and the majority of the caste from attending the said feast."

The plaint then prayed for an injunction restraining the defendants from attending the said caste feast to be given at the caste oart on the 10th August, 1894, and from feasting any Brahmans in the said oart, and from allowing Brahmans to use any portion of the oart or other property of the caste, or from inviting Brahmans to attend any other feast at the said oart, &c., and further for a declaration that the above resolutions were validly passed and they bound the caste and restraining the defendants from acting contrary to them.

The defendants filed a written statement, in which they submitted that the subject-matter of the suit was a caste question and not cognizable by a civil Court. They further contended that the meetings referred to in the plaint had not been duly convened and that the resolutions were invalid and not binding on those who were not present and who did not consent to them. [511] They denied that the plaintiffs were authorized or entitled to bring the suit. They alleged that Brahmans had from time immemorial as a matter of course attended the caste feasts, and they denied that the plaintiffs or any members of the caste had a right now to exclude them: that the Brahmans were absolutely necessary to the caste and had always performed ceremonies in connection with marriages, &c., for members of the said caste and that if now excluded the members of the caste would lose religious benefit of their services. They further claimed that any member of the caste had a right (subject only to his obtaining the consent of one Abhechand Raghowji, the principal member of the original donor's family) to the use of the caste oart and vessels both for general and for private feasts and had the right to invite Brahmans to such feasts.

The written statement contained the following paragraph :—

"The defendants admit that Brahmans were invited to and attended the feasts therein referred to as they have always done. The defendants say that the said Brahmans are so invited to their feasts from religious motives, and that there is a vested right in every member of the said caste so to invite the said Brahmans, and that no majority of the said caste is entitled to interfere with the same whether by resolutions or otherwise."

Macpherson (Inverarity with him) for the plaintiffs.—The members of this caste are Banias and follow the Jain religion. The caste came from Marwar to Cutch 300 years ago. From thence they went to Jamnagar, and 60 or 70 years ago a few members came to Bombay. As to the history of the caste see Thackersey Dewraj v. Hurbhum Nursey (1). As to the Jain religion see Bhagvandas v. Rajmal (2).

The questions raised are no doubt in a sense caste questions, but they do not come within the Regulations, and the jurisdiction of the Court is not excluded. The Court is not precluded from recognising and enforcing the decisions of the caste in matters relating to caste property. In reference to such matters what constitutes the caste? Clearly the majority of its members. The vote of the majority is the vote of the caste. The recalcitrant minority are not the caste. Here it is really the minority who invoke the assistance of the Court to override the will of the caste. [512] The Court cannot do this, but will give effect to the decision of the caste, i. e., the decision of the majority. The caste is an autonomous body, and when it comes to a decision which creates rights with regard to property the Court will enforce these rights. A question finally decided by a majority of the caste cannot be said to be a caste question of the class which is withdrawn from the jurisdiction of the civil Court—Girdhar v. Kalya (3); Mehta Jethalal v. Jamiatram (4); A'nandrav v. Shankar (5); Dullabh v. Narayan (6); Krishnasami v. Virasami (7); Civil Procedure Code (XIV of 1882), s. 11; Strange's Hindu Law (3rd Ed.), p. 93. Lang (Advocate General), Loundes with him, for the defendants.—The authorities clearly show that the questions raised here are caste questions. The fact that the right to property may be involved does not give the Court jurisdiction—Girdhar v. Kalya (1); Mehta Jethalal v. Jamiatram (2); Pragji Kalan v. Govind Gopal (3); Advocate General v. David Haim (4). The Court cannot interfere in disputes about the division of caste property. The cases in which this Court has held that it has jurisdiction were cases in [513] which the question was as to who should hold the property for the whole caste. It has interfered to protect the property for the caste. See also Krishnasami v. Virasami (5) This suit relates to charity—Goodman v. Mayor of Saltash (6); Attorney General v. Lawes (7); Gray v. Chaplin (8). The majority cannot divert a charity from the purpose for which it was intended. When this oart was given to the caste it was the practice for Brahmans to attend the caste feasts. The intention of the donor must be assumed to have regard to the caste practice prevailing at the time of gift. The feasting of Brahmans is meritorious—Lakshmishankar v. Vaijnath (9); Advocate General v. Vishvanath (10). The majority cannot change the practice contrary to the intention of the founder—Attorney General v. Pearson (11); Attorney General v. Shore (12). They also cited Gopal v. Gurain (13).

JUDGMENT.

FARRAN, J.—The parties to this suit belong to the Kutchi Dossa Oswal caste. The plaintiffs, who allege that they represent a majority of the caste, have, with the permission of the Court, brought the suit under s. 30 of the Civil Procedure Code (XIV of 1882) on behalf of all parties interested, including themselves. The main prayer of the plaint is that the defendants, who are eight in number, may be restrained by injunction from inviting any Brahmans to attend a particular feast which was to have been held on a day now past, and any other feast given at the caste oart to the caste, and from inviting any Brahmans into the caste oart, at any time that a caste feast is being given or otherwise.

Although the evidence which I have recorded in the case occupies many pages of my note book, and the recording of it has taken a considerable time, the facts actually proved may be condensed into a narrow compass. It will be convenient to state them concisely before considering whether the plaintiffs are entitled to, and the Court has jurisdiction, according to the principles which govern its practice, to afford to them the relief which they pray by their plaint.

[514] The Dossa Oswal caste are Jains by religion, though not of the most orthodox kind. The caste originally settled in Marwar, migrated thence about 300 years ago to Cutch, where they are now a numerous body. Thence a portion of them came to Bombay about 80 years ago. This suit concerns only the Bombay section and its property. That section consists now of from 1,400 to 1,500 adult males. When assembled at a caste feast the persons dining number about 2,500 or 2,700 including women and children.

When the caste came to Bombay they had no mahajanwadi, and for some time were without definite rules. Their caste dinners took place in a warehouse of Narsi Natha or in some vacant convenient building. Narsi Natha was the headman or shettia of the caste and was also the banker of its funds as well as of the funds of the temple which was built in his time. His representative for the time being is still recognised as the principal shettia of the caste. He signs in the name of Narsi Natha in caste matters. Narsi Natha died in 1842. His firm of Narsi Natha and Company devolved upon his son Virji Narsi. The present mahajanwadi and building which are at Khadak were purchased and built in Virji's time. It has hitherto been an accepted belief in the caste that Virji Narsi purchased and built the mahajanwadi and presented it to the caste. It was so stated by Kessowji Naik and the other headmen of the caste in 1869 in their written statement in suit No. 298 of 1869, a suit in which the Karad caste sought to share the property of the Dossa Oswals and it was repeated in the written statement in suit No. 424 of 1881. No one in fact thought of questioning the belief until lately. An examination of the books of the firm of Narsi Natha and Company has now unearthed a document (Ex. A) which throws doubt upon the accuracy of this general belief. It is a release given by Virji to Bharmal Tejsi and two other men who had been managing the firm of Narsi Natha and Company for him during his minority. It acknowledges that he (Virji) held two houses and a sum of Rs. 51,000 in trust for certain charitable purposes of which Bharmal Tejsi and the others were to have the management, and then deals with the acquisition of the mahajanwadi as follows:—

"Further the house or chal on [515] Khadak (road) which was purchased in my name from Memon Dawudbhai Ahmed for Rs. 15,000 has been purchased for the mahajan. On the same the work of repairing and rebuilding having been made (the same) is to be made over to the mahajan and the expense which may have to be incurred and the outlays that may be made in getting the same rebuilt are all duly to be paid by me. And the said chal having been turned into a mahajanwadi and a new deed having been got made in the name of Shah Narsi Natha, the same is to be given to the mahajan as a present for the purpose of giving feast and dinners. And in the books of Shah Narsi Natha there is an account of the mahajan. In that account Rs..... are found to be due to the mahajan. The same are to be debited to the account of the mahajan on the 30th of Asso Vad Samvat 1903 (8th November, 1847), and the account is to be kept as squared. No balance is to be struck in the mahajan's accounts as claimable or payable up to 30th Asso Vad Samvat 1903. And the deed relating to the same wadi having been got made in the name of Shah Narsi Natha and the said house having been turned into a mahajanwadi, the same is duly to be made over into the possession of the mahajan. The authority over the same belongs to the mukhtyars of the Bombay mahajan of our caste and the deed relating to the said wadi is to be kept by you. I am not to raise any objection or claim against the same." This document is dated 17th November, 1847.

Previously to this a subscription list had been started in the caste for the purpose of an oart, Rs. 15,784½ had been subscribed by 454 members. The evidence, I think, shows pretty conclusively that the subscriptions were never called up. The subscribers grumbled and Virji Narsi undertook to make up the amount. It was certainly intended that the funds of the caste then in the hands of Narsi Natha and Company available for the purpose should be employed in making the purchase, but the fact of the subscription being got up shows that they were considered insufficient for the purpose. The wadi and building cost from Rs. 35,000 to 40,000. A good deal of inconclusive evidence has been given to show what available fund Narsi Natha and Company then held, and how the blank left in Ex. A should [516] be filled up. The books of Narsi Natha and Company are not forthcoming. The temple books do not show the expenditure (if any) made by Narsi Natha and Company, but only the sums paid over to the firm. Ghelabhai Padamsi states that the money of the mahajan which Narsi Natha and Company had in hands was Rs. 2,700; but in the absence of books I cannot accept this sum even as the approximate amount. Nothing has been proved. Exhibit XXIII is not a reliable document. Its non-production in the earlier suits (Exs. A 8, A 9 and A 10) renders it impossible to attach any real weight to it. The last document on this subject is Ex. 7 passed by Harbhum Narsi after the death of Virji to Bharmal Tejsi and two others. It refers to the mahajanwadi thus:—"There is one mahajanwadi at Khadak. That oart has been built and given away as a present to the mahajan for giving feasts. The same has been given to our caste by my deceased brother Virji Narsi for being used as a feasting and feeding place; thereto I and my heirs have no claim whatever."

The inference which I draw from the several documents and the other evidence in the case in connection with the acquisition of the mahajanwadi are these:—The caste purposed to purchase a wadi for feasting purposes out of their surplus funds in the hands of Narsi Natha and Company supplemented by subscriptions; the managers of Narsi Natha and Company purchased a suitable place during the minority of Virji Narsi intending to pay for it eventually out of such funds; and Virji when he came of age and took over the estate undertook not to call in the subscriptions, but to make up any deficiency, beyond the fund in the hands of his firm, out of his own resources, thus squaring the account between his firm and the estate. In that sense he was treated or treated himself as bestowing the oart on the caste; but legally his firm purchased the oart as the agents for the caste, advancing money for the purpose, and he gave up his claim for repayment by the caste beyond the sum which he had in his hands belonging to the caste. The amount of that sum cannot now be determined with certainty.

[517] Under these circumstances it is, I think, impossible to treat the acquisition of the oart otherwise than as a purchase by the caste for the purpose of using it as a caste-feasting oart, or to consider the oart as having any trust impressed upon it by Virji Natha to use it in a particular manner, because he at the vastu ceremony and subsequently in common with other numbers of the caste, feasted Brahmans in it along with the caste. It is in the same position, I think, as if the caste had purchased the oart by subscription for a feasting oart, Virji Narsi being the largest contributor to the purchase-money. Since its acquisition by the caste the oart has always been used as a caste feasting place, and is still used as such. Virji and Hurbhum Narsi were in the habit of levying a small fee when a casteman used the oart. This was probably for the cleansing of the oart, and keeping its floor in order. The practice ceased in Samvat 1912 or 1913. No inference can, I think, be drawn from this circumstance. Though it is necessary for a casteman wishing to use the oart for the giving of a caste feast to ask formal permission to do so from the shettias of the caste or, according to Nursi Kessowji, from a mahajan meeting, I think it is clear from the evidence that upon payment of the customary fee to the caste funds, each casteman, in the absence of any special reason, is entitled to the use of the oart for such purpose. The regulation of the permission rests with the shettias of the caste or the caste, and not with the representative of Narsi Natha alone. Exhibit A, coupled with the other evidence, is conclusive upon this point. The oart is supplied with cooking utensils which have been purchased out of caste funds. They are used similarly by the members of the caste, also on payment of a small fee, for cooking caste dinners in the oart. They are also similarly used for cooking less important feasts given by the members not in the caste oart.

ORIGINAL CIVIL.
19 B. 507.

Though the Dossa Oswal caste follow the Jain religion in matters of doctrine and faith, they have not abandoned all Vishnu ceremonies and practices. Their marriage ceremonies, ayarni, and birth ceremonies and certain ceremonies after death are performed by, or in the presence of, Brahmans. From time immemorial—long before the caste came to Bombay—a sect or [518] class of Brahmans called Rajgur Brahmans have been closely connected with the caste and have performed these ceremonies for them. The defendants admit that such ceremonies are of a mundane and not of a religious nature. Shobhan Aspal explains them in detail. The origin of the connection between the Rajgur Brahmans and the Dossa Oswals has not been traced. A legend, invented probably by the former, ascribes it to the Rajgurs having degraded themselves by eating with the Dossa Oswals who are Banias to save the latter from slaughter by Mussalmans. The connection has been beyond doubt very remote. In consequence of this connection or from some other unknown cause these Rajgur Brahmans have been in the habit from very early times of dining with the caste at caste and other feasts. Some Rajgur Brahman families followed the Bombay section of the caste to Bombay and since then they have been accustomed to dine with the Dossa Oswals at their caste and other feasts in addition to performing for them the Vishnu ceremonies which I have mentioned. Since the acquisition of the caste oart they have always dined in it at the caste feasts. Formerly they came to feast by invitation. Exhibit B is a document passed by the Rajgur Brahmans in 1839 undertaking not to attend feasts unless invited. This undertaking was not adhered to, and the Brahmans attended all feasts in the oart whether invited or not. The plaintiffs say that this has for a long time been submitted to, but grumblingly, by a large number of the caste.

In Samvat 1949 this grumbling ripened into action. Under the guidance of the plaintiff Narsi Kessowji and others the section of the caste opposed to the feasting of the Rajgur Brahmans began to hold meetings and appoint committees to get rid of the practice. The movement began with a petition addressed to the caste leaders. On the 18th of September, 1893, a committee of 35 was appointed to take steps in the matter. Further meetings were held on 19th September and on 18th November, 1893. On the 23rd June, 1894, the committee was enlarged. On the 6th July it was resolved to engage barristers. The opponents of the Brahmans now found themselves strong enough to take a decisive step and called a caste meeting in the mahajanwadi [519] for the 16th July. The published notice of this meeting stated that the object was to consider certain accounts and trust matters. A large number of the castemen assembled, probably 900 to 1,000. The evidence of Mr. Morris and Exs. 29 to 32 do not throw any real doubt over this figure or those relating to the next meeting. The advertised objects of the meeting having been disposed of, it was proposed, seconded and carried unanimously, that the castemen should be strictly prohibited from feasting Brahmans in the mahajanwadi, and that legal measures should be taken, if necessary, to prevent a casteman from feasting even a single Brahman in the mahajanwadi, or using the mahajanwadi and the pots and vessels.

At the date of this meeting another meeting had been formally convened by Abhechand Raghowji, the leader of the Rajgur Brahman faction, for the 18th July. The chairman called the attention of the meeting of the 16th to that fact and took their sense as to whether they should attend the meeting of the 18th. The meeting resolved to attend it. The result of this meeting of the 16th quickly became known, and on the 17th there was great excitement in the caste. The rival party purported to put off their meeting of the 18th by public notices, but Narsi Kessowji and the anti-Brahmanites, notwithstanding such notices, attended it to the number of about 800. The resolutions passed at the meeting of the 16th July were all read out and confirmed at this meeting unanimously. The feeling of the minority of the caste appears to be not to attend a meeting at which they are sure to be outvoted.

The present leaders of the caste are four—Narsi Kessowji and Cuverji Jewraj, who desire to exclude Rajgur Brahmans from their feasts and caste oart and have followers to the number of about 1,000; and Abhechand Raghowji (who signs Narsi Natha) and Ghellabhai Padamsi, who favour the admission of Brahmans and desire to invite them, and feast them at feasts given by themselves and who have followers to the number of about 350. The latter party now only desire that it shall be optional with the castemen whether to invite Brahmans or not. The defendants having been about to give a feast in the oart as usual [520] on the 10th August, 1894, in accordance with the provisions of a certain trust-deed for feeding the caste, and proposing, as usual, to allow the Rajgur Brahmans to attend, the present suit was filed on the 9th August, 1894, to prevent their doing so, and generally in the future to restrain them from inviting Brahmans.

Since the suit the plaintiffs have convened and held another meeting of the caste on the 3rd November. Full notice of the business to be transacted at this meeting was published. At it the resolutions of the meeting of the 18th July were unanimously confirmed. About 903 members attended that meeting. It is, I think, beyond doubt that the plaintiffs command a large majority of the votes of the caste in favour of the resolution for excluding Brahmans from the feasts and prohibiting the castemen from feasting them in the oart, at least in the proportion of 2 to 1. The defendants do not contest this fact, though they do not admit that the voting represents the real opinion of the caste.

These are the facts. I have now to consider whether upon them the plaintiffs are entitled to a decree. The first point which arises for consideration is whether the Court is prevented from giving redress to the plaintiffs by reason that the question at issue is a caste question, which the Court is precluded from trying. For the purpose of considering that point I must assume that the majority of the caste had power to regulate the use of the mahajanwadi in the way that they have done, and that the defendants desire to use it in an unauthorized manner.

In suit No. 168 of 1879 Vasudev Vithoba and others suing on behalf of themselves and the majority of the caste sought to remove the defendant Hariba from the management of the caste property. The defendant alleged that he had been duly appointed by the caste to manage, and that the caste were still in favour of his continuing to manage. The Court (Sargent, J.) directed a caste meeting to be held and, it being found that the majority of the caste—176 to 117—were in favour of removing the defendant from the management, passed a decree directing the defendant to deliver to the plaintiffs possession of the immoveable and moveable property of the caste and restrained [521] him from performing or interiering in the performance of certain ceremonies unless and until he was duly elected a member of the panch of the caste.

In suit No. 367 of 1879, Gopaldas Madhawdas, alleging himself to be shettia of the Kapole Bania caste, sued Sir Mangaldas Nathubhai to recover possession of certain utensils and cooking pots of the caste which the defendant had taken forcible possession of. The defendant claimed to retain them by virtue of the authority given him by the caste. It being found that the majority of the caste were in favour of the defendant having the custody of the articles, the plaintiff's suit was dismissed by Kemball, J. Sir Mangaldas, as elected headman of the caste, also filed a suit (No. 290 of 1880) to recover from Gopaldas possession of some of the caste property. Sir Charles Sargent passed a decree in the plaintiff's favour on the ground that he had been appointed shett of the caste by a majority, and was entitled, therefore, to have the custody of the caste property.

These unreported cases show that this Court does not decline to give effect to the expressed wishes of the majority of a caste as to the management and custody of caste property which the minority seek to set at naught by reason of the suit involving a caste-question.

The Advocate General for the defendants relied upon Girdhar v. Kalya (1) which followed the Full Bench ruling in Nemchand v. Savaichand (2). That was a decision that a dispute which had arisen with reference to certain property was a caste-question within the meaning of Regulation II of 1827, s. 21, which provides that it is to be "understood that no interference on the part of the Court in caste-questions is warranted" by the wording of the section which gave the Courts general jurisdiction over all suits and complaints of a civil nature. The wording of this proviso has given rise to many questions of a delicate nature, and fine distinctions have been drawn as to what are and what are not caste-questions, and what does and what does not amount to an interference in such matters within the meaning of the section. The decisions, it must be admitted, are not easily [522] reconcileable with one another. The principal of them are mentioned in the foot-note (3).

The test which ought to be applied is, I think, that applied by Sargent, C. J., in Murari v. Suba (4), viz., "would the taking cognisance of the matter in dispute be an interference with the autonomy of the caste?" Will the Court be deciding a question which the caste as a self-governing body is entitled to decide for itself? If that be the true principle upon which the cases were decided, it follows, as remarked by West, J., in Pragji v. Govind (5) that "to take evidence of the customary law of a caste, to recognise that law and the vote of a majority as given effect to by that law, is not to interfere in caste matters. It is simply to recognise the existence of castes as corporations with civil rights and autonomy suitable to the purposes of their existence." In that view, upon the assumption which I have stated, it would not be an interference in a caste question to uphold by the sanction of the Court's decree the right of the majority of the caste in question to regulate the user of the caste oart and to restrain the recalcitrant minority from acting in opposition to a regulation laid down by the majority as to such user. If the decisions to which I have referred passed under the Regulation of 1827 go further than this, and prohibit the Civil Courts altogether from dealing with questions in which caste interests are involved, I consider that sitting on the Original Side of the High Court to which the Regulation does not extend, I should not be bound to follow them, but should rather follow the unreported Original Side decisions which I have mentioned. I must, therefore, disallow the plea raised by the defendants to the jurisdiction.

It is clear upon the authorities that in matters relating to management of caste property and the administration of its affairs the majority of the caste has authority to control the [523] minority. On this question it is sufficient to refer to the same unreported cases and to Lalsoonder v. Sumbhoo(1), Mootee v. Kuhandas(2), Pragji v. Govind(3), Raghunath v. Janardhan (4). References could be multiplied. But in the absence of a written or proved customary constitution I know not how the affairs of a caste could be administered if the decision of the majority duly arrived at and notified were not held binding upon the minority—Cooper v. Gordon (5). The proposition, in my opinion, amounts to little less than a legal axiom. This leads me to consider whether the resolutions in this case were duly arrived at and made known. The several meetings which preceded the meeting of the 16th July were of the preliminary character. They were attended only by the adherents of the movement, and were no doubt intended only to be so attended, though they professed to be caste meetings. As already stated, the notice convening the meeting of the 16th July did not mention the Brahman question. The minority of the caste protested against the manner in which the metting was convened, and there was a legal correspondence upon this subject. Ghelabhai Padamsi says that he and his party did not know that the Brahman question was to be discussed at the meeting of the 16th. As this is quite possible, I think that the minority are entitled to contend that the resolution as to Brahmans passed at that meeting was not duly arrived at. It cannot, however, I think, be said that the caste did not as a body know that the Brahman question would be discussed and a vote taken upon it at the meeting of the 18th July. That meeting had been summoned by Abhechand Raghowji for that day. On the 17th, however, there was great excitement in the caste when the purport of the resolution passed at the meeting of the 16th July became known, and I feel assured that Abhechand tried to put off the meeting of the 18th because he knew that the same vote would be taken at it as had been taken on the 16th, and that he and his followers purposely refrained from attending it, knowing that they were in a minority. It appears [524] from the evidence of Narsi Kessowji, who on this point has not been contradicted, that notice of the actual business to be transacted at a meeting of this caste is not usually given before the meeting: but when there is a burning question to be decided, the object of the meeting naturally becomes known beforehand. The notice convening the meeting of the 18th did certainly specify particular business to be transacted at it; but this did not preclude the transaction of other business, nor did it in this instance mislead the caste who, I am satisfied, knew why the meeting was attempted to be postponed and why notwithstanding such notice it was actually to be held. The letter of Little and Company of the 18th July on behalf of Abhechand and his followers shows this very clearly and so do the proceedings at the meeting itself. It is sought to get rid of the effect of the resolution passed on the 18th of July by showing that the meeting was misled by the speeches of Narsi Kessowji and Bharmal Ruttonsi into voting for a resolution of which they did not understand the real import. I think, however, that this was not so. The terms of the resolution were certainly read to the meeting, and there is no real evidence to show that they were not fully understood. By the 3rd of November their full import was certainly known and they were then unanimously approved. If it served any useful purpose it might be possible to hold that there were technical objections to the validity of the resolution of the 18th July, but as the proceedings of the caste are not governed by technical rules and as the resolutions express the wishes of the majority of the caste, and as the minority could have opposed the passing of them if so minded, and would, I doubt not, have done so had they thought that they could have done so successfully, I think that I ought to have regard to substance rather than to technicality in this case and hold that the resolutions were duly arrived at by the caste and promulgated.

The main difficulty which I have felt throughout the case is to determine whether the resolution to exclude Brahmans from the caste oart is really a question of the mere management of the caste property; and whether it is not rather a tyrannical use of their power by the majority which in effect deprives the minority of their right to use the oart because they entertain views upon [525] the subject of the Brahmans different from those of Narsi Kessowji and his school. The Court would not, I apprehend, assist the majority by its decree to deprive without cause the minority of their right to use what is the common property of all. It would not, I apprehend, give effect to a resolution passed in violation of the rules of natural justice or of a directly confiscatory nature—Jaganath v. Akali (1); Krishnasami v. Virasami (2), Dawkins v. Antrobus (3).

The contention on the part of the defendant, is that many, perhaps most, of the feasts given in the oart, and particularly the Swami Vasthal feasts are given from a religious motive, the giving of which benefits the soul of the donor in a future state; and it cannot be doubted that the giving of such feasts is inculcated as a primary duty upon followers of the Jain religion. The defendants go a step further and say that the religious efficacy of such feasts is increased if Brahmans are allowed to partake of them. The Jain works of religious authority which have been put in at the hearing and the evidence of the Gorip Nye Sagbur show, I think, that there is nothing in the Jain religion which forbids the feasting of Brahmans, but that the feeding of them, as well as of others, is meritorious, provided that they do not observe practices contrary to the tenets of the Jains. It seems, however, that it is rather because they need food than because they are Brahmans, that the feeding of them is set before the Jains as meritorious. In Ex. 17 they are classed with the poor generally. The Jain writers do not regard Brahmans as a body with any particular respect. The practice of the Dossa Oswal caste has been, as I have said, to allow Rajgur Brahmans to partake of their feasts. Exhibit B shows that the practice has prevailed rather on account of the persistence of the Rajgurs than from the anxiety of the Dossa Oswals for their presence. The further exhibits on this part of the case all tend to show that the Dossa Oswals have been constantly protecting themselves against the encroachments of the Rajgurs, both collective and individual, and regulating their claims and privileges.

[526] Ghelabhai Padamsi and several witnesses for the defendants say that they consider the efficacy of the feasts increased by the presence of the Rajgur Brahmans. They do not, however, allege that the feasts cannot be held without their presence, but they appear to be honestly averse to holding the feasts without them.

The plaintiffs equally honestly and earnestly desire to exclude them on the following grounds :—

(1) That it is superstitious and contrary to the doctrines of the Jain religion to think that religious feasts gain any further merit from the presence of Brahmans, and they think on religious grounds that Brahmans should not be allowed to partake of them.

(2) That they prefer not to have Rajgur Brahmans, who are not particularly clean in their persons, and are alleged not to behave with proper decorum at the dinners, sitting amongst them as members of the caste, and being the unwitting means of introducing people of other castes surreptitiously to the dinners. A caste feast, they say, should be strictly confined to the caste.

(3) That the Brahmans feasting leaves too little room for the caste themselves and crowd their women when dining.

(4) That the feeding of them is an intolerable burden on the poorer members of their community and a tax upon all.

The first objection is probably confined to the leaders and men of advanced views. The masses do not appear to share them. The last objection appeals most to the feelings and pockets of the mass, though they probably join with the leaders in the 2nd and 3rd objections. These latter, though exaggerated, are of some importance (see Ex. J). Balancing the considerations which press themselves upon me on each side of the question and conscious that there is much weight in the defendants' contention, I have nevertheless come to the conclusion that the majority of the caste having arrived at a bona fide decision that the convenience and comfort of the caste are best advanced by the exclusion of the Brahmans from their part, it is not a case in which the Court can say that the decision is so subversive of the interests of the minority as to amount to a practical confiscation of their property or denial of their rights, and that the Court ought to give effect [527] to it. I am much influenced in coming to that conclusion by the knowledge that the Vissi Oswal caste has arrived at practically the same result without the aid of a costly and protracted law suit.

I do not think that there is any objection to the plaint on the ground of misjoinder. One relief only is sought against the defendants whether they are considered as trustees or individuals. It is perhaps to be regretted that the defendants are not sued as representing the minority of the caste under s. 30 of the Civil Procedure Code, but that does not prevent the defendants being sued individually. It is not necessary for me to determine whether the decree will affect or can be enforced against members of the caste other than the defendants. Lastly, I consider that the decree prayed for will not conflict with the duties of such of the defendants as were parties to the consent decree in suit No. 488 of 1888, or are trustees under the deed of trust, Ex. B. It is quite clear that the terms of the trust deed as they now stand carry out the real intention of the decree and are not inconsistent with its actual wording. The Exs. A 22, A 23, A 21, when carefully considered in connection with the evidence of Bharmal Ruttonsi, make this rather involved question tolerably clear. I do not think that it is necessary for me to explain it in detail. The intention of the defendants to hold a feast in the caste oart and to admit Rajgur Brahmans to it is not denied. The notice to the defendants to desist from doing so is Ex. 38, dated the 9th August, 1894.

There will be a decree in terms of the prayer of the plaint prohibiting the defendants from bringing Brahmans into the oart to dine so long as the resolution of the caste prohibiting the practice continues in force. Seeing that the action of the defendants is backed up by a considerable number of the caste and that the point at issue is an undetermined one, I do not think it is a case for costs.

If I might be allowed to give unjudicial advice, I should suggest to the caste that they should act in accordance with this judgment for at least a year and see how the arrangement works and then call a full meeting and determine whether to continue it or [528] to revert to the former practice. At the end of a year they will approach the subject with calmer minds on each side.

APPELLATE CIVIL.

Before Mr. Justice Bayley, Acting Chief Justice, and Mr. Justice Fulton.

BALKRISHNA MHADSHET (Original Defendant No. 1), Appellant v. VISHVANATH KESHAV JOG (Original Plaintiff), *Respondent.
[26th June, 1894.]

Khasgi (private or personal) land of a khoti sharer—Mortgage of the khoti takshim (share) —Sale in execution of a decree on the mortgage—Partition among the khoti sharers—Interest acquired by the purchaser at the execution sale—Agreement by the mortgagor to be responsible for the revenue—Agreement coming to an end with the extinction of the equity of redemption.

Prima facie all land not shown to be alienated is liable to assessment, and the mere fact that no revenue was paid by a khoti co-sharer in respect of khasgi (private or personal) land in his occupation is not sufficient to prove its exemption from liability when it has passed into the hands of a stranger.

One Sadashiv, a sharer in a khoti village, mortgaged his khasgi land appertaining to his share in the khoti to the plaintiff and undertook to pay the Government dues on it. Plaintiff got a decree on his mortgage and in execution the land was sold, and purchased by defendant in the year 1878. In the year 1881 the khoti sharers effected partition. In 1883 defendant took possession of the land. In 1884 and again in 1885 Sadashiv having mortgaged his takshim (share) including the khasgi land to plaintiff, the latter as mortgagee brought a suit to recover makta (fixed) rent in kind payable for the khasgi land purchased by the defendant.

* Second Appeal No. 733 of 1892.

Held, that as the partition between the khoti sharers took place after the execution sale, only the occupancy of the land was sold to the defendant, and that the plaintiff was entitled under the circumstances to recover a fair assessment.

Held, disallowing the defendant's contention as to exemption from payment of the rent, that the agreement by the mortgagor to be responsible for the revenue came to an end with the extinction of the equity of redemption by the Court sale.

SECOND appeal from the decision of T. Walker, Assistant Judge of Ratnagiri, confirming the decree of Rao Saheb B. Y. Gupte, Second Class Subordinate Judge of Sangameshvar in the Ratnagiri District.

[529] The facts of the case were as follows :—

Sadashiv Raghunath Levalekar had a share (takshim) in the khoti of the village of Levale. On the 23rd June, 1874, he mortgaged with possession a certain field or thikan which was khasgi (private) land pertaining to his share situate at the said village to the plaintiff, and undertook to pay the Government assessment thereon. In 1875 the plaintiff obtained a decree on the mortgage, and on 24th January, 1878, in execution of the decree, the field was sold and purchased by the first defendant, Balkrishna.

In 1881 the khoti sharers in the village effected a partition in which the field in question was allotted to Sadashiv.

In 1883 the first defendant took possession of the field.

In 1884, and again in 1885, Sadashiv mortgaged with possession his share to the plaintiff who, in the year 1890, as mortgagee, brought the present suit against the first defendant and Sadashiv to recover makta (fixed) rent in kind and the local fund cess, Rs. 55-8-0, for the years 1886-87 to 1888-89 in respect of the thikan.

The first defendant set up his purchase at the execution sale, and contended that as the mortgage bond on which the decree was passed and property was sold contained no stipulation for the payment of the makta rent and the local fund cess, he was exempted from the payment of the same, and that the rent claimed was excessive.

The Subordinate Judge allowed the claim to the extent of Rs. 38-12-9. The following is an extract from his judgment :—

"The question, however, remains whether the first defendant is liable to pay any such rent. Defendant No. 1 pleads exemption from that rent on a double ground. His first contention is that he is not liable to pay any such rent because he purchased the land in execution of a decree obtained by the plaintiff on a mortgage-bond which stipulated that no Government revenue or rent should be paid in respect of the land. There is no dispute that the decree which led to the auction-sale was obtained on such a bond, and Ex. 15, which is a copy of the bond, shows that the plaintiff was not to pay any revenue or rent in respect of the land during the continuance of the mortgage. But I do not think that the stipulation can avail the first defendant. The stipulation was to bind the plaintiff and Sadashiv during the continuance of the mortgage transaction only, and I apprehend that it would not have exempted the plaintiff from the payment of the Government revenue on the land after the [530] extinction of the mortgage, if he had purchased the land. The liability to pay the Government revenue on a land is annexed to it and the real purport or signification of the stipulation under consideration was that Sadashiv was to pay the Government revenue on the land as long as the plaintiff should continue to hold the land as his mortgagee. In other words, Sadashiv was to pay the assessment on the land only as long as he held the equity of redemption in it. Sadashiv's liability to pay that assessment or rent ceased as soon as he lost the equity of redemption. It is true that where a mortgagee obtains a decree on his mortgage and brings the mortgaged property to sale for the purpose of satisfying the mortgage-debt, the interest of both the mortgagor and mortgagee passes to the purchaser as laid down in Sheshgiri Shanbhog v. Salvador Vas (1); but the first defendant's acquisition of such interest in no way affects his obligation to pay the Government revenue on the land, which is at all times annexed to the land. Defendant No. 1 could not have escaped his liability to pay the assessment on the land if it had been situate in a dharekari village, and it makes no material difference in the nature of the payment because it is styled makta by reason of the situation of the land in an inam village."

On appeal by the first defendant the Judge confirmed the decree on the ground that the defendant had by his purchase at the execution sale obtained only the right of occupancy of the land, and that Sadashiv's khoti rights therein had remained unaffected.

The first defendant preferred a second appeal.

Manekshah, J. Taleyarkhan, for the appellant (defendant No. 1).—Sadashiv mortgaged the field as his own. Being a khoti sharer, he had not to pay anything in respect of the land to anybody, nor could he as a khot recover rent from himself as tenant. Whatever rights Sadashiv had, passed to us by the Court sale; the plaintiff himself as mortgagee caused the land to be sold. Under the mortgage-deed he was exempt from the payment of assessment. He cannot, after the sale, seek to recover assessment from the purchaser. A grantor cannot derogate from his own grant —Elphinstone on the Interpretation of Deeds, rule 57. The plaintiff acquired no right over the field, as it was not mentioned in his deed. The partition effected by the khoti sharers in 1881 cannot affect us. The managing khot pays the assessment and recovers the rents in a khoti village. But the plaintiff's suit is not to recover assessment on the ground that he has paid it to the inamdar or that he is liable to pay it; nor does he say that he is the managing khot of the village.

[531] Vasudev G. Bhandarkar, for the respondent (plaintiff).—A khot in possession of khasgi land is a tenant in respect of that land of the whole khoti co-parcenery including himself—Ramchandra v. The Collector of Ratnagiri (2). In the absence of a special agreement among the khots, a khoti sharer is liable to pay rent in respect of the khasgi land in his possession, though as a matter of arrangement it may not be levied from him; but a purchaser from him is liable to pay rent—Ramchandra v. Visaji (3). By the Court sale defendant No. 1 only acquired the tenant right of Sadashiv over the land, and the plaintiff, who is mortgagee of Sadashiv's khoti takshim, is entitled to recover rent from him, as it has not been suggested that there was any special agreement among the khoti sharers exempting the land from payment of rent. The agreement in the mortgage-deed came to an end when the thikan was sold. The objection on the ground that the plaintiff was not a managing khot was not taken in either of the lower Courts.

JUDGMENT.

FULTON, J.—As the sale of the thikan to the first defendant took place in 1878 while the partition of the khoti between Sadashiv and his co-sharers was not effected till 1881, we agree with the Assistant Judge in thinking that only the occupancy of the land was sold, and that the rights of the body of khots, which have now by reason of the partition and subsequent mortgages become vested, so far as this thikan is concerned, in the plaintiff remained unaffected. It was indeed contended that the thikan was not specifically mentioned in the mortgage deeds, and that, therefore, the plaintiff had not acquired any interest in it; but this argument fails, because, as pointed out by the Subordinate Judge, it was comprised in Sadashiv's share, the whole of which was mortgaged.

Under these circumstances, we think the lower Courts were right in holding the plaintiff entitled to recover a fair assessment. Prima facie all land not shown to be alienated is liable to assessment, and the case of Ramchandra v. Visaji (2) is authority for holding that the mere fact of no revenue being paid by a khoti co-sharer in respect of khasgi land in his occupation is insufficient to prove its exemption from liability when it has passed into the [532] hands of a stranger. In the present case no special custom or circumstances have been put forward to establish such exemption. The agreement of the mortgagor to be responsible for the revenue while tending to show that the land was not considered exempt, came to an end, as explained by the Subordinate Judge, with the extinction of the equity of redemption by the Court sale which transferred to the purchaser both the personal rights and liabilities of the judgment-debtor.

We must, therefore, confirm the decree with costs.

Hindu law—Joint family—Partition—Accounts—Manager's liability to account—Right to mesne profits previous to partition—Mesne profits subsequent to partition, how recoverable—Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), ss. 13, 224.

Although as a general rule, no member of an undivided Hindu family can have any claim to mesne profits previous to partition, yet mesne profits may be allowed on partition where one member of the family has been entirely excluded from the enjoyment of the property, or where it has been held by a member who claimed to treat it as impartible, and, therefore, exclusively his own.

Where a decree for partition is silent about mesne profits subsequent to the institution of the suit, a party is at liberty to assert his right to such profits by a separate suit. Section 244, para. 2 of the Code of Civil Procedure (Act XIV of 1882) expressly reserves such a right of suit.

APPELLATE CIVIL.

19 B. 532.

The plaintiff, Sitaram Balvant Potnis, sued to recover Rs. 1,288-11-10 on account of his share in certain cash allowances payable to the defendant Bhivrao Madhavrao from the Government treasuries at Poona, Ahmednagar, Shrigonda, Sholapur, Barsi, Mangi, and Dadegaon.

[533] The parties to the present suit belonged to the Potnis family. Defendant was the representative of the eldest branch.

In 1881 one Atmaram Keshav, a member of the Potnis family, filed a suit for partition of the family estate consisting (inter alia) of the cash allowances in dispute in the present case.

The present defendant was defendant No. 1 in the partition suit, while the present plaintiff was defendant No. 5 in that suit.

The present defendant contended in that suit that the bulk of the property was saranjam and, therefore, not liable to partition according to the custom of the country.

The partition suit was ultimately decided by the High Court on 2nd December, 1890 (see I. L. R., 15 Bom. 519).

The High Court held that the property in dispute was partible, and ordered a partition among all the co-sharers according to their respective shares. The present plaintiff (who was defendant No. 5 in that suit) was declared along with his two brothers to be entitled to a third share. But no order was made in regard to mesne profits.

In 1891 the plaintiff filed the present suit to recover his share of the cash allowances received by the defendant from Government during the years 1887, 1888 and 1889, i.e., during the three years preceding the decision of the High Court in the partition suit.

Defendant pleaded (inter alia) that as no order for mesne profits had been made in the partition suit, the present suit was barred by ss. 13 and 244 of the Code of Civil Procedure (XIV of 1882).

The Court of first instance overruled this objection and awarded the plaintiff's claim.

This decision was upheld on appeal by the District Judge.

The defendant thereupon preferred a second appeal to the High Court.

JUDGMENT.

RANADE, J.—The main contentions urged by the appellant have direct reference to the proceedings in the partition suit No. 458 of 1881, which came up in appeal before this Court, and was finally decided on 2nd December, 1890. This partition suit was brought by one Atmaram Keshav, a sub-sharer of the Potnis family, to which the parties in the suit before us belong, for a partition of his shares in certain properties including saranjam cash allowance, together with the mesne profits of the same. The present defendant was defendant No. 1 in the partition suit, and the present plaintiff was defendant No. 5, and he filed a written statement, in which he urged that he had himself a 1/9th share, which had not been separated by the present defendant No. 1's father, and that if his share were separated, he had no objection to allow partition of Atmaram's 1/27th share. In the partition suit, the Court of first instance awarded Atmaram the shares and the amounts claimed by him, subject to certain deductions and conditions. The present defendant appealed from that decree, and so also the present plaintiff with some of the other defendants preferred a separate appeal, and one of the grounds urged in this latter appeal was that the lower Court had erred in not directing a partition of the whole property between all the sharers, according to their respective shares. The High Court reversed the decree of the lower Court, and declared the respective shares of Atmaram, and of the defendant and plaintiff in the present suit, as also of the other sharers in the Potnis family. The present plaintiff, who was, as stated above, defendant [535] No. 5 in the partition suit, was declared, along with his two brothers, defendants Nos. 6, 7 in that suit, to be owner of a $\frac{1}{3}$rd share. No order was made in regard to mesne profits.

The present suit was brought by defendant No. 5 in the partition suit in 1891 to recover from defendant, who represents the eldest branch, the amount due for plaintiff's 1/9th share of the saranjam cash allowances paid to the defendant from the Government treasuries of Poona, Ahmednagar and Sholapur, and the claim was made for the three years preceding the decision of the partition suit in the High Court, namely (1887-1889). Defendant, among other objections, urged that as no order about mesne profits had been made in the partition suit, plaintiff's claim for the same was not maintainable under ss. 13 and 244 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The Court of first instance overruled this objection, and allowed plaintiff's claim in part, and this decree was affirmed in appeal.

Before us, the appellant's pleader mainly rested his contention on the third and fourth grounds set forth in the memorandum of appeal. He urged that the Potnis family must be regarded as having remained joint till the decision of the partition suit in December, 1890, and as the final decree only declared the shares, and did not allow mesne profits, plaintiff's present claim could not be maintained. It was contended before us that all the parties in a partition suit are both plaintiffs and defendants as against one another, and that it has been settled by a long course of decisions that, as a rule, the sharers are not liable to be called upon to account for past receipts or disbursements, and that the present plaintiff had no right to claim his share of the receipts for the three years preceding the final partition decree of 1890, since it was really a claim for mesne profits, and that claim was not reserved or allowed by the decree. In support of these contentions, the following authorities were cited:—Lakshman Dada Naik v. Ramachandra Dada Naik (1), Konerrav v. Gurrav (2), Sakharam v. Hari (3), Jugmohandas v. Sir Mangaldas (4), Madan [536] Mohan v. Lala Sheo Sanker (5), Venkoba v. Subbanna (6). On behalf of the respondent Mr. Manekshah cited the following rulings.—Ranganmani Dasi v. Kasinath Dutt (7), Raja Venkata v. Rajah Rojagopala (8), Mon Mohun Sirkar v. The Secretary of State for India in Council (1), Damodardas v. Uttamram Maneklal (2).

On a careful consideration of these authorities, we feel satisfied that (1) while, as a general rule, it is true in the words of Mr. Mayne (5th Ed., para. 429) that "no member" of an undivided Hindu family "can have any claim to mesne profits previous to partition, because it is assumed that all surplus profits have, from time to time, been applied for the benefit" of the family, yet (2) that this is only a presumption, and that "mesne profits may be allowed on partition when one member of the family has been entirely excluded from the enjoyment of the property, or where it has been held by a member of the family who claimed a right to treat it as impartible, and therefore exclusively his own." This latter condition is fulfilled by the defendant in this case, for he has all along contended that the saranjam property is impartible, and in his written statement he urged that even the High Court's decree was not final, as he intended to prefer an appeal to the Privy Council. Mr. Mayne cites in his text as authorities for his second statement Lakshman Dada Naik v. Ramchandra Dada Naik (3), and Konerrav v. Gurrav (4). In the first case this Court only decided that the defendant, who was a brother of the plaintiff seeking partition, was not liable to account for moneys received by him from his father while living in commensality with him and his brother, unless the circumstances suggested fraud. In the second case, the Court held that in the case of joint enjoyment, or enjoyment by different members of different portions of the family properly, the Court will not, except under special circumstances, order an account to be taken of past transactions, but will make division of the property actually existing at the date of partition. Melvill, J., remarked (p. 595) in the course of the judgment delivered by [537] him, that "the ordinary rule, no doubt, is that the members of an undivided Hindu family are not entitled to an account of past transactions," yet "where one member of the family has been entirely excluded, there might be good grounds for ordering an account." The decision in Sakharam v. Hari (5) only ruled that the Court of appeal could vary the decree of the lower Court in a partition suit, if such variation was rendered necessary by the death of one of the sharers before the appeal was finally decided. This ruling does not conflict with the decision in Jugmohandas v. Sir Mangaldas (6), where it was held that the partition must be made of the property as it exists at the date of the partition suit. None of the authorities cited by the appellant's pleader thus supports the extreme position taken up by him. The proposition he contends for is only true as a general rule, but it is based on a presumption which may be rebutted.

The whole question of a manager's liability to account was considered in the judgment of Sargent, C. J., in Damodardas v. Uttamram Maneklal (8). It was there held, after a review of all the previous decisions, that besides the two cases noted by Melvill, J., in Konerrav v. Gurrav (4), a manager may be called upon to render an account if any of the plaintiffs were minors, and he had obtained a certificate of administration. This last exception has no bearing in the present case, but the Chief Justice laid down the much larger proposition that there was nothing "in the custom of the Hindu family which would justify the manager in refusing to give any account whatever of his management on the occasion of a partition." In a Calcutta case—Ranganmani Dasi v. Kasinath Dutt (1)—such an account was ordered where the property was a banking business, the profits of which were divided in certain proportions among the undivided members. Mesne profits were similarly allowed by their Lordships of the Privy Council in the partition of a Zemindari, where the defendant claimed that the Zemindari, was impartible—Raja Venkata v. Rajah Rajagopala (2). This is exactly [538] the case in the present instance. It may, therefore, be safely held that the general rule has no application in the present case, which falls naturally within one or other of the exceptions noted above, more especially in the extract from the judgment of Melvill, J., in Konerrav v. Gurrav (3).

It was, however, contended that though defendant might have been liable to account in the partition suit, yet as no such order was made by this Court in 1890, plaintiff has no right to claim his share of the profits for the preceding three years. It appears to us that this contention also is not well founded. In the partition suit, the present plaintiff was only a co-defendant, and though in his written statement filed in 1881, and in his appeal in 1884, the present plaintiff claimed a separation of his share, he made no claim for mesne profits. The plaintiff could not well be expected to make a claim in 1881 and 1884 for his share of the profits of 1887-89. The decision in Venkoba v. Subbanna (4) relates only to a claim for mesne profits prior to the date of the suit, and it was there held that if a plaintiff omitted to claim mesne profits or rent for such prior years, he could not under s. 43 bring a separate suit for them. The ruling of the Privy Council in Madan Mohun v. Lala Sheo Sanker (5), also had reference to the profits which had already accrued due at the institution of the suit. The reason assigned for disallowing such a claim is that the plaintiff could have joined the claim for profits along with his claim for the property. This reason does not hold good in respect of subsequent profits. All doubts, however, are removed by the latest ruling of the Calcutta High Court in Mon Mohun Sirkar v. The Secretary of State for India in Council (6), where it was expressly held that "where a decree for possession is silent as to the mesne profits between the date of the institution of the suit and the delivery of possession, a separate suit will lie for such subsequent mesne profits, and ss. 13 and 244 of the Code are no bar to such a suit." The Privy Council decision in Sadasiva Pillai v. Ramalinga Pillai (7), was to the same effect, as it laid down that where the decree [539] was silent about mesne profits subsequent to the institution of the suit, plaintiff was at liberty to assert his right to such profits in a separate suit. See also Mussummat Bebea Sahodra v. Roy Jung Bahadur (8). There is in fact no room for a difference of opinion on this point, as para. 2 of s. 244 expressly reserves such a right of suit. We must, therefore, overrule this contention of the appellant.

There was only one other contention urged by the appellant, and that related to the vadilki allowance. The defendant claimed a right to deduct 1,200 rupees reserved to him by the partition decree out of the moneys received by him, and contended that no deduction should have been made in respect of the proportion chargeable to the allowance received from the Satara Treasury, which was not included in the

ANDANAPA (Purchaser) Applicant v. BHIMRAO ANNAJI AND ANOTHER (Decree-holders), *Opponents. [3rd July, 1894.]

Execution—Decree—Decrees of different Courts against same judgment-debtor—Leave given by both Courts to the judgment-debtor to raise amount by private sale—Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), s. 305—Confirmation of such sale by one Court—Subsequent application for confirmation to other Court—Practice—Procedure.

Panchlingapa Baslingapa obtained a decree against Venubai in the Court of the Second Class Subordinate Judge at Saundatti. He applied (darkhast of 1892) for execution, but Venubai, on 19th April, 1893, obtained permission, under s. 305 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), to raise the amount of the decree by private sale on or before the 6th June, 1893, the day fixed for the sale. She obtained a certificate of leave under s. 305.

[540] Another decree was obtained against Venubai in the Court of the First Class Subordinate Judge at Belgaum by one Annaji Ramchandra, and he attached in execution (darkhast 351 of 1892) the same lands, which were already attached by the Saundatti Court. From the Belgaum Court, however, Venubai also obtained a certificate under s. 305 of the Civil Procedure Code, on 22nd April, 1893, authorizing a private sale.

Relying on these two certificates Venubai sold the lands under attachment to the applicant Andanapa bin Rachapa for Rs. 2,000 by deed dated 25th May, 1893. On the 28th June, 1893, Andanapa applied to the First Class Subordinate Judge in Belgaum, under s. 305 of the Civil Procedure Code, for confirmation of the sale and that the purchase-money paid by him should be distributed as follows, viz., Rs. 518-14-2 in satisfaction of the decree of the Belgaum Court, Rs. 128-7-10 in satisfaction of the decree of the Saundatti Court, and the balance, Rs. 1,352-10 0, to be paid to Venubai. The Court of Belgaum granted the application and directed that the above sum of Rs. 128-7-10 should be paid into the Court of Saundatti. On the 17th July, 1893, Andanapa applied to the Court at Saundatti to confirm the sale already confirmed by the Belgaum Court, and he brought into Court the said sum of Rs. 128-7-10. On the 19th June, 1893, while the above proceedings were going on, a third decree-holder (the opponent) had applied to the Second Class Subordinate Judge at Saundatti for execution of his decree. He objected to the confirmation of the sale applied for by the applicant. The Subordinate Judge allowed the objection and refused confirmation of the sale. The applicant then applied to the High Court under its extraordinary jurisdiction.

Held, that the application to the Saundatti Court by Andanapa was superfluous and ought to have been rejected inasmuch as the sale had already been confirmed by a competent Court (viz., the Court of Belgaum) and nothing further remained to be done in regard to it.

Panchlingapa Baslingapa obtained a decree against Venubai in the Court of the Second Class Subordinate Judge at Saundatti. He applied (darkhast 232 of 1892) for execution, but Venubai, on 19th April, 1893, obtained permission under s. 305 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882) to raise the amount of the decree by private sale on or before the 6th June, 1893, the day fixed for the sale. She obtained a certificate of leave under s. 305.

Another decree was obtained against Venubai in the Court of the First Class Subordinate Judge at Belgaum by one Annaji Ramchandra, and he attached in execution (darkhast 351 of [541] 1892), the same lands which were already attached by the Saundatti Court. From the Belgaum Court, however, Venubai also obtained a certificate under s. 305 of the Civil Procedure Code, on 22nd April, 1893, authorizing a private sale.

Relying on these two certificates Venubai sold the lands under attachment to the applicant Andanapa bin Rachapa for Rs. 2,000 by deed dated 25th May, 1893. On the 20th June, 1893, Andanapa produced the deed in the Court of the First Class Subordinate Judge at Belgaum and applied for confirmation of the sale as required by s. 305 of the Civil Procedure Code. He asked that the purchase-money paid by him should be distributed as follows, viz.:—Rs. 518-14-2 in satisfaction of the darkhast in the First Class Subordinate Judge's Court, Belgaum; Rs. 128-7-10 in satisfaction of the darkhast in the Saundatti Subordinate Judge's Court, and Rs. 1,352-10-0 for payment to Venubai.

The First Class Subordinate Judge of Belgaum on the application confirmed the sale, and ordered that Rs. 518-14-2 should be paid into Court at Belgaum under darkhast No. 351 of 1892, and that the amount due under the darkhast (No. 252 of 1892) of the Saundatti Court should be paid into that Court. In the order the Court stated that there was no objection to the balance being paid to Venubai.

Andanapa accordingly paid Rs. 1,352-10-0 to Venubai on that day and obtained her receipt.

On 17th July, 1893, Andanapa applied to the Second Class Subordinate Judge at Saundatti to confirm the sale, which, as above stated, had already been confirmed by the Belgaum Court. He brought in the money due (Rs. 128-7-10) under Panchlingapa's darkhast No. 232 of 1892.

On 19th June, 1893, while the above proceedings were going on, a third decree-holder (the opponent) had applied (under darkhast No. 295 of 1893) to the Saundatti Court for execution of his decree. He objected to the private sale being confirmed, contending that the whole money realized had not been produced in Court.

[542] The Saundatti Court allowed the objection and rejected the application to confirm the sale. The following is an extract from the judgment of that Court:—

"I think the objection must prevail. Under s. 295, Civil Procedure Code, this decree-holder is entitled to a rateable share in the money realized by the private sale under s. 305, for his darkhast was presented on 19th June and the applicant produced the money and sale-deed on 17th July, 1893. Under s. 305, Civil Procedure Code, it is provided that all the money payable under the private sale must be paid into Court and not to the judgment-debtor. Applicant ought to have, therefore, produced the money that remained with him after satisfying the darkhast of the Belgaum Court into this Court, and ought not to have paid to Venubai without the permission of this Court. The decree-holder in darkhast No. 295 of 1893 was certainly prejudiced by the applicant having paid the money to Venubai without producing it into this Court. I, therefore, must decline to confirm the sale to applicant by Venubai by the sale-deed, Ex. 35, unless the whole money paid to Venubai is produced into this Court.

"As the sale does not become absolute, the Rs. 128-7-10 produced by applicant in this Court cannot be applied towards the satisfaction of any decree; and the lands must be again put up to sale unless applicant produces the money paid to Venubai into this Court."

Against the said order the applicant presented an application under the extraordinary jurisdiction of the High Court and obtained a rule nisi calling on the opponents Bhimrav Annaji and another to show cause why the order should not be set aside on the following among other grounds: —That the Court of the First Class Subordinate Judge of Belgaum, being a Court of superior grade to that of the Second Class Subordinate Judge of Saundatti, and that Court having confirmed the sale to the applicant, the Saundatti Court had no jurisdiction to re-open the question, and that the sale having been confirmed by the Court of the superior grade, there was no interest left in Venubai with respect to the property which could be sold over again.

Branson (with Vasudeo G. Bhandarkar), for the applicant in support of the rule:—The Court at Saundatti had no jurisdiction to sell the property again. Even our application to that Court for the confirmation of the sale was superfluous, and the rejection of that application does not in any way affect our title.

Shamrav Vithal, for the opponents, showed cause:—The sale was not valid until confirmed by both the Courts. Execution was pending in both Courts and both of them gave time [543] under s. 305 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882) to raise the money by private sale. The confirmation of both the Courts was, therefore, necessary to validate the sale. After the sale was confirmed by the Belgaum Court the applicant himself applied to the Saundatti Court for confirmation, and that Court not having confirmed the sale, the property was liable to be sold again. Section 285 of the Civil Procedure Code is not applicable to such a case. The applicant was bound to pay the money into the Saundatti Court instead of paying it to the judgment-debtor. Although we did not apply to the Belgaum Court which was the Court of a higher grade, nor apply for the transfer of our application to that Court, still we are entitled to share rateably in the money payable into Court. The Saundatti Court had power to act on the application made to it to execute the decree, although there was another application pending in the Belgaum Court—Clark v. Alexander (1); Patel Naranji v. Haridas Navalram (2).

JUDGMENT.

FULTON, J.—The facts are sufficiently stated in the Subordinate Judge's judgment. We think that the First Class Subordinate Judge having, under s. 305 of the Civil Procedure Code, confirmed the sale to the applicant, there remained in the judgment-debtor Venubai no interest which could be sold to satisfy the opponents' decree.

Mr. Shamrav contended that having regard to the fact that on the 19th June the opponents had applied to the Saundatti Court to execute their decree against Venubai, it was not competent to the First Class Subordinate Judge to confirm the sale without taking cognizance of their application, but having regard to Mr. Justice Farran's judgment in the case of Nimbaji v. Vadia (1) we cannot adopt this view inasmuch as they had neither obtained the transfer of their decree to the First Class Subordinate Court nor applied to that Court under s. 295.

(1) 21 C. 200. (2) 18 B. 458.

Our attention was called to the judgment of this Court in Patel Naranji v. Haridas Navalram (2); but although this decision may be regarded as the authority for the proposition that a sale [544] ordered by an inferior Court before the attachment of such property by a Court of higher grade is not null and void in consequence of such attachment, it does not follow that the latter Court has not also power to sell the property or confirm the sale under s. 305, nor is there any section of the Code which can be referred to in support of this proposition. It may be inconvenient that two Courts should have jurisdiction to sell the same property; but however this may be, it cannot, we think, be doubted that the Court of higher grade had at least concurrent jurisdiction to confirm the sale, and that having exercised its jurisdiction the applicant acquired a good title to the property sold.

Under these circumstances the application made by the applicant to the Subordinate Judge of Soundatti to confirm the sale under s. 305 was superfluous and ought to have been rejected, not for the reasons given by the Subordinate Judge, but on the ground that as the sale had already been confirmed by a competent Court there remained nothing more to be done in regard to it.

The question as to the disposal of the item of Rs. 128-7-10 is the matter between the rival judgment-creditors on which we can express no opinion in this application.

Subject to the above remarks we discharge the order directing the lands to be again put up to sale, but confirm the order rejecting the prayer to confirm the sale. Parties to pay their own costs throughout.

Rule discharged.

APPLICATION under the extraordinary jurisdiction (s. 622 of the Civil Procedure Code, Act XIV of 1882) against an order of A. Steward, District Judge of Khandesh, in an execution proceeding.

In June, 1889, Nathubhai Mulchand (a firm at Jalgaon) obtained a decree against Vithoba Babu as heir and legal representative of his deceased brother Nana Babu. The plaintiffs applied for execution of the decree, and their application was opposed by Bapu Nana on the ground that Vithoba Babu was not the legal representative of the deceased Nana, but that he (the opponent) being the adopted son of the said Nana Babu was his legal heir and representative.

The Subordinate Judge rejected the plaintiffs' application for execution on the ground that the opponent had been adopted prior to the institution of the plaintiffs' suit; the decree could not, therefore, be enforced.

On appeal by the plaintiffs the Judge confirmed the decree. Pending appeal Bapu Nana (the opponent) having died, the name of his mother Lakshmibai was substituted as his heir.

Plaintiffs applied to the High Court under its extraordinary jurisdiction and obtained a rule nisi to set aside the order of the lower Courts.

Ghanasham N. Nadkarni appeared for the applicants (plaintiffs) in support of the rule.—We merely presented an application for the execution of the decree, and before any order for attachment or sale was passed on the application, the opponent intervened and resisted an application. He had no locus standi to do so. We are entitled to have execution issued, and if the opponent thinks that his rights are affected by the execution proceedings, he may then come in, and make his claim.

[546] Narayan V. Gokhale appeared for the opponent to show cause.—The plaintiff applied for execution against the wrong person and we intervened in order to save further litigation.

Even if the present order is wrong, still as the Court had jurisdiction to pass it, it cannot be interfered with by the High Court in its extraordinary jurisdiction under s. 622 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882)—Amir Hassan Khan v. Sheo Baksh Singh (1); Krishna Mohini Dossee v. Kedarnath Chuckerbutty (2).

JUDGMENT.

BAYLEY, C. J. (Acting).—Without prejudice to the rights of Laxmibai (if any) to apply to raise any attachment which may be obtained by the judgment-creditor, we think that the deceased Bapu not being a party to suit No. 507 of 1888 was not entitled to object to the issue of an order for execution of the decree, and that in omitting to make such order the Subordinate Court failed to exercise a jurisdiction vested in it by law.

We, therefore, discharge the orders of the Courts below dismissing the application for execution, and direct that the Subordinate Court do proceed with execution according to law. The opponent must pay all costs throughout.

HARI RAGHUNATH JOSHI AND OTHERS (Original Plaintiffs), Appellants v. KRISHNAJI ANANT JOSHI (Original Defendants), *Respondents. [9th July, 1894.]

Decree—Compromise of decree—Effect of compromise—Mode of enforcing agreement of compromise—Contract—Reciprocal promises—Right to sue—Decree for performance of whole contract—Contract Act (IX of 1872), s. 51.

A decree for partition having been compromised by an agreement, made by the parties, and communicated to the Court which passed the decree.

[547] Held, that the effect of the decree was extinguished by the agreement, which could only be enforced by a fresh suit, and not by an application for execution of the former decree.

An agreement consisting of reciprocal promises to be performed by the plaintiffs and the defendant can be sued upon by the plaintiffs when they have not refused to carry out their promises, though they may not have put an allegation in the plaint saying that they are ready and willing to do so, s. 51 of the Indian Contract Act being no bar to such a suit.

When the plaintiffs are entitled to ask for the performance of the part of the contract in which they are interested and the defendant claims execution of the whole to which the plaintiffs do not object, the Court ought to pass a decree directing execution of the whole contract, instead of rejecting the claim.

THIS was a second appeal from the decision of T. Hamilton, District Judge of Thana, confirming the decree of Rao Saheb Moreshvar N. Ovalekar, Subordinate Judge of Pen.

The plaintiff obtained a decree in suit No. 787 of 1883 for partition of certain family property. The defendants applied for execution, but the decree was subsequently compromised by an agreement which provided that a certain quantity of the land should be given to each of the parties. The Court was duly informed of this agreement by the parties, who by a joint petition applied to the Court to strike off the execution proceedings.

The plaintiff subsequently brought this suit to recover so much of certain specified land as would make up the quantity allotted to them by the agreement.

The defendants pleaded that the agreement contained promises on the part of the plaintiffs to perform certain acts, and that not having performed them they were not entitled to sue for the land.

The Subordinate Judge rejected the claim, holding that the compromise contained reciprocal promises, that under s. 51 of the Contract Act (IX of 1872) unless the plaintiffs were ready and willing to perform their promises they could not ask the defendant to perform his promises, and that there being no allegation in the plaint that they were ready and willing to give effect to their promises, they were not entitled to institute the suit.

[548] On appeal by the plaintiffs the Judge held that the plaintiffs ought to have sought relief in the execution of the decree in the terms of the agreement, and that no separate suit would lie. He, therefore, confirmed the decree. The following is an extract from his judgment :—

(After stating the facts of the case). " Now there is no provision in the Code of Civil Procedure for striking off a darkhast in this way. Such an order appears to be no bar to a revival of execution-proceedings. There is no endorsement of satisfaction—11 Cal. L. R. 17 ; I. L. R., 10 Calc. 416.

"The proper course for plaintiffs to pursue in the event of the agreement not being carried into effect would be to apply to the Court to execute the decree in terms of that agreement. I am of opinion that no separate suit will lie.

"However in the present case the plaintiff has not stated how much land, if any, is required by him to make up his 6½ pands ; he does not specifically state how much he lost by erasion. The agreement was not absolutely that defendant should give up 3½ pands, but so much, not exceeding 3½ pands, as was required to compensate plaintiff for the loss by erasion, so as to give each party 6½ pands. Again, there are clear acts as stated in cl. 7 of the notice, Ex. 18, which plaintiff was to perform on his part."

The plaintiffs preferred a second appeal.

Vasudeo G. Bhandarkar, for the appellants (plaintiffs):—The objection that we ought to have taken steps to execute the decree and that our present suit cannot lie was not taken in the written statement nor in the first Court. It was urged for the first time by way of cross-objection in appeal in the District Court. Admitting for the sake of argument that we could have got relief by executing the former decree, still the execution proceeding would have been taken cognisance of by the same Subordinate Judge who tried the present suit. The filing of the present suit was, therefore, merely an irregularity which did not affect the jurisdiction of the Court, and an objection to such an irregularity, which is merely a mistake in procedure, cannot be taken for the first time in appeal.

Further, our present suit is based upon the agreement. The agreement gave a distinct cause of action, and the relief which we claim in this suit could not have been obtained in the execution of the former decree, because the present suit relates to land which was not included in the former suit— Debi Rai v. [549] Gokal Prasad (1), Ramlakhan Rai v. Bakhtaur Rai (2). In this suit we really seek for specific performance of a part of the agreement; and if it be held that such a suit cannot lie, we should be allowed to amend the plaint and to sue for specific performance of the whole agreement, or we should be allowed to withdraw the suit with liberty to bring a fresh one, so that the bar of s. 43 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882) may not arise. The agreement contains reciprocal promises, and unless the defendant was ready and willing to give effect to his promises, we could not do anything to carry out our promises. Even the written statement does not allege that the defendant was ready and willing to act up to the agreement.

Ghanasham N. Nadkarni, for the respondent (defendant).—The suit is barred under s. 244 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882). The plaintiffs' remedy lay in the execution of the former decree. Further, the plaintiffs are not entitled to bring the present suit, because they have not performed nor offered to perform their part of the agreement. If the suit be considered as one for specific performance of the agreement, then it is barred under art. 113, sch. II of the Limitation Act (XV of 1877). The suit ought to have been filed within three years of the date of the agreement which must be considered to be the date on which we refused to give effect to the agreement, as according to the plaintiffs' allegation we were never ready and willing to carry out our agreement.

(1) 3 A. 585. (2) 6 A. 623.

JUDGMENT.

FULTON, J.—We are unable to concur with the District Judge in thinking that the plaintiffs should have proceeded by application for execution of the former decree instead of by separate suit. The effect of the decree in the former suit was extinguished by the compromise contained in Exs. 15, 18 and 19, which was communicated to the Court by the joint petition of the parties embodied in Ex. 15. This compromise formed a fresh agreement which could only be enforced by a fresh suit.

We are also unable to concur with the Courts below that the plaintiffs are precluded from recovering possession of the land secured to them by the 7th clause of Ex. 18, because they [550] have not put an allegation in the plaint that they are willing and ready to give effect to their promises. The agreement to measure the rest of the village and to divide equally certain other lands imposed no special obligation on the plaintiffs for its execution. Both parties were equally bound to give effect to it, and without the defendant's concurrence the plaintiffs could not act upon it. It is not suggested in the written statement that the defendant had ever asked the plaintiffs to carry out the partition and had been refused, and in the examination of the plaintiff Hari Raghunath Joshi (Ex. 24) he distinctly states that he is ready to abide by the statements contained in Exs. 15, 18 and 19. Under these circumstances s. 51 of the Contract Act is no bar to this suit which has been brought in the proper form. The plaintiffs were entitled to ask for the performance of the part of the contract in which they were interested, and on the defendant claiming execution of the whole, and the plaintiffs raising no objection, the Courts below ought to have passed a decree directing execution of the whole contract, instead of rejecting the claim.

In argument reference was made to art. 113 of sch. II of the Limitation Act, but as it is not suggested that three years had elapsed between the first refusal of the defendant to perform his part of the agreement and the institution of the suit, it is clear that no question of limitation arises.

We now reverse the decrees of the Courts below, and remand the case to the Court of first instance, which, after examining the parties or their pleaders and any witnesses they may wish to produce, and ascertaining in detail which of the terms of the agreement embodied in Exs. 15, 18 and 19 have not yet been carried out, will pass a decree directing the performance of all such terms (which should be clearly specified in the decree) and providing that on the application of either party execution of the whole decree shall be granted by the Court. The defendants must pay all costs in both Courts of appeal. The costs of the Court of first instance will be awarded by that Court when passing its final decree.

Decree reversed and case remanded.

SECOND APPEAL from the decision of C.E.G. Crawford, District Judge of Ratnagiri.

The plaintiffs obtained a decree against two brothers, Govind and Narayan, for possession of certain land. Govind's son, Ramchandra (defendant No. 1), obstructed them in taking possession, and they accordingly applied, under s. 328 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), for removal of the obstruction, and after the necessary investigation the Court numbered and registered the plaintiffs' application as a suit between the plaintiffs and Ramchandra as defendant under s. 331 of the Civil Procedure Code.

Ramchandra contended that his father Govind had given the land to him for his separate enjoyment; that he knew nothing of the decree, and that the plaintiffs must sue for partition.

The Subordinate Judge (Rao Saheb S. M. Kale) found that the defendant was bound by the decree, and awarded the plaintiffs' claim.

On appeal by the defendant the Judge (Rao Bahadur Kashinath Balkrishna Marathe, First Class-Subordinate Judge with appellate powers) confirmed the decree.

The defendant preferred a second appeal and the High Court sent back certain issues to be tried (see Printed Judgments for [552] 1893, pp. 479-80) on which the Subordinate Judge took further evidence and found in favour of the plaintiffs.

The District Judge on receipt of the findings from the Subordinate Judge confirmed them on the 6th March, 1894, for the following reasons:—

"Messrs. Damle and Bhate, who appeared for Ramchandra at the original hearing of the appeal, state that they have received no instructions to contest these findings of the lower Court. They were received by this Court on the 29th January, so that there has been ample time for them to be instructed.

"In the absence of argument, my findings upon the issues sent down are the same as those of the lower Court."

The defendant contended that the District Judge ought to have considered the evidence himself.

Mahadu v. Rajaram (1) considered.
Maloji v. Vithu (2) referred to.

THIS was a second appeal from the decision of Rao Bahadur C. N. Bhat, First Class Subordinate Judge of Poona, with appellate powers.

The plaintiff sued to redeem and recover possession of certain lands mortgaged to the defendant by two deeds, viz., one for Rs. 1,995, dated the 24th October, 1866, and a second for Rs. 1,300, dated the 16th July, 1869. He alleged that the loans actually received were only Rs. 25 and that the rest was accumulated interest. He prayed that an account of the rents and profits received by the defendant should be taken, and after deducting them from the mortgage-debt due by the plaintiff, the balance of the debt, if any, should be made payable by instalments.

The defendant denied the plaintiffs' allegations and stated that he was willing to restore the land on payment of Rs. 3,295.

The Subordinate Judge relying on Mahadu v. Rajaram (1) treated the amounts mentioned in the mortgage-bonds as principal, and ordered that the same be paid with costs by yearly instalments of rupees two hundred with interest at rupees six per cent. per annum on the amount of the debt due, or at once, and in case of [555] default in the payment of the amount of any instalment and that the plaintiff should be put in possession of the mortgaged property after the then standing crops were reaped.

On appeal by the plaintiff the Judge confirmed the decree.

The plaintiff preferred a second appeal.

Manekshah J. Taleyarkhan, for the appellant (plaintiff) :—The Judge ought to have gone into the history of the transaction and ascertained the real sum due as directed by the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act. The Courts have assumed that the amounts mentioned in the two bonds constituted the principal debt. This is a very wrong mode of dealing with the case under the provisions of the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act.

There was no appearance for the respondent (defendant).

(b) in the account of principal there shall be debited to the debtor such money as may from time to time have been actually received by him or on his account from the creditor, and the price of goods, if any, sold to him by the creditor as part of the transactions :

(c) . . . .

(d) in the account of principal there shall not be debited to the debtor any accumulated interest which has been converted into principal at any statement or settlement of account or by any contract made in the course of the transactions, unless the Court, for reasons to be recorded by it in writing, deems such debit to be reasonable.

15. Instead of inquiring into the history and merits of a case under section twelve, or if upon so inquiring the Court is unable to satisfy itself as to the amount which should be allowed on account of principal or interest, or both, the Court may, of its own motion, direct that such amount be ascertained by arbitration.

If the parties are willing to nominate arbitrators, the arbitrators shall be nominated by them in such manner as may be agreed upon between them : if the parties are unwilling to nominate arbitrators, or cannot agree in respect of such nomination, the Court shall appoint any three persons it thinks fit.

Provided that if all the parties reside in the same village, town or city, and, in the opinion of the Court, three fit persons can be found among the residents of such village, town or city, it shall appoint residents of such village, town or city.

JUDGMENT.

FULTON, J.—In this case the plaintiff, who is an agriculturist, sued to redeem two mortgages created by bonds, dated respectively the 24th October, 1866, and the 16th July, 1869. On enquiring into the history from the commencement of the transactions and taking an account the Court of first instance wrote as follows:—

"The first deed was passed by plaintiff's deceased father to defendant's grand-uncle for Rs. 1,995. The recital made in the deed itself goes to show that the deed was passed for old debts, including probably a considerable amount of accumulated interest. The second bond seems to have been passed for a cash consideration.....Defendant informed the Court that he or she had no accounts or other means to show how the consideration was made up and was not aware whether Krishnaji Govindrav Jadhav, a near relation of defendant, possessed any accounts. Krishnaji Govindrav was one of the witnesses cited by plaintiff, but he did not put in his appearance, and a warrant was ordered to be issued for his arrest. Plaintiff, however, failed to give the requisite process fees, and no warrant was issued. The Court has, therefore, to determine the point on what materials it has before it in the shape of mortgage-deeds... ...Defendant's grand-uncle was not a money-lender by profession, and there was hardly any necessity for him to keep regular accounts. Plaintiff has [356] put in a few old bonds, the oldest being for Rs. 25; but his pleader is unable to explain the several links which are undoubtedly wanting to give a fair idea as to how the accounts were made from time to time. In fact, several of the connecting links have long perished. A Court inquiring into the history of a case under s. 12 of the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act is not intended to eke out by mere guesses a history which is defective. The proper course is to start from the point where reasonable certainty begins—P. J., 1887, p. 216. On the authority of the above ruling, as I find nothing to rely on behind the mortgage transaction of 1866, I decide that Rs. 1,995 and Rs. 1,300 must be taken as the principal."

In dealing with the question the appellate Court, after pointing out that the evidence was insufficient to connect certain old bonds with the transactions in dispute, proceeded as follows:—"There is nothing to show that the defendant has withheld account books. The plaintiff himself looked up to one Krishnaji Govind Jadhav to produce accounts, but the plaintiff himself did not persevere in getting him or the accounts alleged to be with him into the Court. The lower Court has, therefore, properly held that the sums mentioned in the mortgage-bonds, Exs. 28 and 29, were to be treated as the principal (1)."

From these extracts it appears that both Courts seem to have considered that they were bound by some rule of law to come to the conclusion at which they arrived. In holding that the item of Rs. 1,955 was all principal, the Second Class Subordinate Judge does not appear to have acted on his own opinion of what was probable, as he thought the deed was passed for old debts, including probably a considerable amount of accumulated interest. The appellate Court's judgment was not equally explicit; but from the reference to the case reported in the printed judgment, it seems that the Judge considered that it laid down a general principle by which Courts were bound when taking accounts under the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act. An examination of that case, however,

(1) P.J. (1887), 216.

JULY 9.
APPELLATE CIVIL.

does not show that any general principle was prescribed, excepting that the Act did not intend a defective [557] history to be supplemented by mere guesses. Nothing is said about the "proper course" to follow. Their Lordships merely dealt with the facts before them which were held to justify the finding of the District Judge in appeal. No rule was laid down as to the conclusions which other Judges of fact might draw from the evidence before them in cases with which they might have to deal. The words "proper course" quoted by the Second Class Subordinate Judge seem taken from the summary in the Index to the Judgments for 1887, and are not to be found in the judgment itself.

In a case like the present a serious difficulty undoubtedly arises in determining the amount of principal, but the Court must nevertheless endeavour to form its own opinion on the subject. As the law stands, mere guesses as to the sum of money actually advanced cannot be made in favour either of one side or the other. If there are no materials from which the Court can satisfy itself as to the amount which should be allowed on account of principal, whether under cl. (b) or cl. (d) of s. 13 of the Act, it is open to it, as pointed out in Moloji v. Vithu (1), to have recourse to arbitration under the provisions of s. 15.

Under these circumstances, as the account has not been taken in accordance with the Act, we must reverse the decree of the lower appellate Court and remand the appeal for a fresh decision in reference to the above remarks.

Decree reversed.

MACMILLAN AND OTHERS (Plaintiffs) v. KHAN BAHADUR SHAMSUL ULAMA M. ZAKA (Defendant).* [25th February, 1895.]

Copyright—Infringement—Translations—Jurisdiction—Statute 5 and 6 Vict., cap. 45 —Order for books sent from Bombay to Delhi—Value payable post—Registration of copyright—Notice of disputed proprietorship—Act XX of 1847, s. 8—Practice—Procedure.

The plaintiffs were publishers in London. The defendant carried on a printing and publishing business at Delhi. Between the years 1869 and 1891 the defendant translated [558] certain English works (e. g. Todhunter's Mensuration, Barnard Smith's Algebra, &c.) into the Urdu language for the use of native students, and sold and distributed copies of such translations in various parts of India. The plaintiffs alleged that they were the proprietors of the copyright in the said books, and they sued in Bombay for a declaration of their ownership, and that the said books printed and sold by the defendant were an infringement of the said copyright, and for an injunction, &c. It appeared that in June, 1894, the plaintiffs' agent, who was then in India, instructed the Bombay firm of Sunder Pandurang to order copies of the said translations from the defendant. A letter was accordingly sent by Sunder Pandurang to the defendant at Delhi requesting him to send the books to Bombay by value payable post, which the defendant did, and he received payment for them from the Post Office at Delhi. The defendant pleaded (inter alia) that the High Court of Bombay had no jurisdiction, and he denied that he infringed the plaintiffs' copyright.

* Suit No. 607 of 1894.

(1) 9 B. 520.

1895
FEB. 25.
ORIGINAL CIVIL.
19 B. 557.

Held, that no part of plaintiffs' cause of action arose in Bombay, and that the Hight Court of Bombay had no jurisdiction. The act of Sunder Pandurang in paying for and receiving the goods formed no part of the defendant's offence, which was completed when he posted the books at Delhi.

The English Copyright Act (Stat. 5 and 6 Vict., cap. 45) extends to all parts of India. Having regard to s. 15 of that Act it is clear that a person who infringes copyright must be sued, if he offends in India, not only within the limits of that country, but also in that part of India in which the offence has been committed. See also s. 13 of the Indian Act XX of 1847.

Held, also, that translations are not copies, and that the defendant by translating the books had not infringed the plaintiffs' copyright.

The plaintiffs had registered themselves as the proprietors of the copyright of the books in question both in London and in India. The defendant had not given notice of his intention to dispute the plaintiffs' copyright as required by s. 8 of Act XX of 1847.

Held, that the plaintiffs' copyright in the book had been established.

SUIT to restrain the infringement of copyright.

The plaintiffs, who carried on the business of publishers in London under the name of Macmillan and Company, sued (through their attorney, R. Gilbert) the defendant, who resided at Delhi, to restrain him from printing and selling certain school books, of the copyright of which they were the registered proprietors in England and in India.

The plaint alleged that the plaintiffs were the proprietors of the copyright in the books in question, viz., (1) "Mensuration and Surveying for Beginners" by J. Todhunter; (2) "Algebra" by Barnard Smith; (3) "Arithmetic for schools" by Barnard Smith; (4) "Elementary Lessons in Physical Geography" by [559] Geikie; (5) "Rudiments of Physical Geography" by Blandford, and that the defendant had printed or caused to be printed copies of the said books in the Urdu language, which he sold and distributed in different parts of India including the town and island of Bombay. In particular it was alleged that in the month of June, 1894, the defendant sold and delivered to one Sunder Pandurang, in Bombay, copies of the said books, which were piracies.

The plaint further stated that it was the intention of the plaintiffs themselves to publish the aforesaid books in the Urdu language.

The plaintiffs prayed for a declaration that they were the owners of the copyright in the said books, and that the books printed and sold by the defendant as aforesaid were an infringement of the plaintiffs' copyright; for an injunction and an account, &c.

The defendant filed a written statement as follows:—

"2. The defendant denies that he has printed or caused to be printed copies of the said books as in the 2nd paragraph of the plaint alleged; but with respect to the first three of the said books (viz. Mensuration and Surveying for Beginners by J. Todhunter, Algebra by Barnard Smith, and Arithmetic for Schools by Barnard Smith) the defendant admits that he has with the expenditure of much labour and skill translated the same into Urdu language, and has from time to time printed and published and sold copies of such translations in Delhi outside the jurisdiction of this Honourable Court. With respect to the fourth book in the said paragraph referred to (viz. Elementary Lessons in Physical Geography by Giekie), the defendant admits that he has composed and printed and published in Delhi aforesaid and there sold copies of a treatise in the Urdu language entitled 'Jugrophia Tobai' for the purpose of which he has borrowed and adapted certain information from the said book in common with other books of a kindred nature. The defendant denies that he has either translated or printed or published translations of the fifth book in the said paragraph referred to (viz., Rudiments of Physical Geography by Blandford). The defendant also denies that he has sold or distributed in the town or island of Bombay any copies, translations or adaptations of the said books whatsoever.

"3. With reference to the 4th paragraph of the plaint, the defendant says that on or about the 25th day of June, 1894, he received in Delhi an order for (inter alia) certain of his Urdu works from one Sunder Pandurang of Bombay, and that he on the same day executed the said order in Delhi by forwarding to the said Sunder Pandurang, by value payable post, in the ordinary course of business, such of the said works or translations as he was then able to supply. Translations of two only of [560] the books referred to in the plaint, viz., the two works by Barnard Smith, were among the works he sent.

"4. The defendant submits that under the circumstances hereinbefore set out, no cause of action has accrued to the plaintiffs within the jurisdiction of this Honourable Court.

"5. Without waiving the contentions in the last preceding paragraph hereof raised, the defendant says, with reference to the book entitled Mensuration and Surveying for Beginners by J. Todhunter in the first paragraph of the plaint referred to, that in or about the year 1870 the defendant wrote to the said J. Todhunter asking permission to translate his works into the Urdu language, and that the same was then accorded to the defendant with the knowledge and consent of the plaintiffs, and that the plaintiffs have no right now to raise any question with respect thereto. A copy of a letter received by the defendant from the said J. Todhunter, dated the 18th October, 1870, is hereto annexed.

"6. The defendant further says that on the 4th day of January, 1891, he sold and assigned all his rights in the treatise entitled, 'Jugrophia Tobai' in the second paragraph hereof mentioned, to one Lala Gulab Sing, Curator and Superintendent of the Punjab Book Depot at Lahore, and that since that date he has neither printed, nor caused to be printed, nor had in his possession for sale or hire any copies or copy of the same.

"7. With reference to the 4th paragraph of the plaint, the defendant submits that, if and so far as the copyright of the books in the first paragraph of the plaint referred to is the property of the plaintiffs, the same has been in no way infringed by the defendant.

"9. With reference to the 6th paragraph of the plaint, the defendant submits that he has valuable and subsisting rights and interests in his aforesaid Urdu works or translations, and that the same can in no way be affected by any future intentions of the plaintiffs with respect to the said books.

"10. The defendant does not admit that the plaintiffs only became aware in the beginning of 1894, that the defendant had printed and sold or was printing and selling his said Urdu works or translations as in the first paragraph of the plaint alleged. The defendant says that he printed and published his translation of Mensuration and Surveying for Beginners by J. Todhunter, in fourteen editions, between the years 1870 and 1891, and his translation of Algebra by Barnard Smith, in three editions, between the years 1871 and 1884, and his translation of the Arithmetic for Schools by Barnard Smith, in twenty-one editions, between the years 1871 and 1893 without objection or claim on behalf of the plaintiffs, and that it would be inequitable now to restrain him from selling the same.

"11. The defendant submits that the claim of the plaintiffs is barred by limitation."

The following issues were raised at the hearing :—

1. Whether the Court has jurisdiction in respect of any and which of the matter complained of in plaint ?

[561] 2. Whether plaintiffs are proprietors of copyright in any and which of the five books referred to in the first paragraph of the plaint ?

3. Whether defendant has infringed the plaintiffs' copyright in any and which of the said books ?

4. Whether plaintiffs' claim is not barred by limitation?

5. Whether plaintiffs are not precluded by delay from obtaining relief in the suit ?

6. Whether with regard to the works of Todhunter, the defendant has not translated same with consent of Todhunter and plaintiffs ?

JUDGMENT.

FARRAN, J.—This suit, which was heard on the 25th February last, raises questions of some interest as to jurisdiction in copyright actions, and as to whether unauthorised translations constitute an infringement of copyright.

The facts are these : The plaintiffs are publishers in London. They have brought out the following among other educational works :—(1) Mensuration and Surveying for Beginners, by Todhunter; (2) Arithmetic for Schools, by Barnard Smith ; (3) Arithmetic and Algebra, by Barnard Smith. The plaint complains of the infringement, by the defendant, of the plaintiffs' copyright in two other works, but as admittedly the plaintiffs did not prove, at the hearing, any cause of action as to them [562] cognisable by this Court, no further reference need be made to them in this judgment.

The defendant (who was formerly Professor of Vernacular Science and Literature in the Muir Central College at Allahabad, but now enjoys a pension from Government) resides at Delhi, and carries on a printing and publishing business there. In 1851 he began, for profit and in order to assist native students, to translate English Mathematical works into the Urdu language. In 1869 he so translated Todhunter's Mensuration and Surveying. Of this he printed and published fourteen editions between that time and 1891. In or about the year 1871, he translated Barnard Smith's Arithmetic and Algebra, of which he printed and published three editions between 1871 and 1884, and in or about the year 1871 he translated Barnard Smith's Arithmetic for Schools, of which he printed and published twenty-one editions between 1871 and 1893.

Soon after publishing the translations of Todhunter's works in 1869, the defendant wrote to Dr. Todhunter at Cambridge, asking for his permission to publish it, and received a reply purporting to come from Dr. Todhunter, and to be written and signed by him. In it the writer states that he had consulted his publishers, and continues:—"They of course agree with me in the natural regret that the translation of books into a foreign language should bring no remuneration to those who have expended their time and capital in the original production of them. But of course, as we have no control over the circumstances, we cannot refuse the permission which you seek." He then went on to ask the defendant to send his (Dr. Todhunter's) publishers two copies of any translation of his works which the defendant might issue. The defendant says that he sent the copies asked for. This letter has been objected to by the plaintiffs on the ground that it has not been proved to have been written by Dr. Todhunter, but I have no doubt as to his having written it, and that it is admissible in evidence: Taylor on Evidence, para. 1864.

No objection was ever taken to the defendant's translations until that which I am about to refer to. In October, 1892, [563] Mr. John A. Stagg came out to India as plaintiffs' agent; and in December, 1893, when at Lahore, he learned that the defendant had been publishing the translations into Urdu, of which the plaintiffs complain. He saw the defendant on the subject at Delhi. The defendant admitted that he had published the translations, but contended that he had a right to do so. After this, a correspondence took place between the defendant and the plaintiffs in London, in which the defendant, with extreme courtesy, upheld his right to publish the translations in question, but the plaintiffs expressed their inability to accept his views, and their determination to enforce their legal rights. On the 22nd June, 1894, the plaintiffs' agent, Mr. Stagg, instructed the Bombay firm of Sunder Pandurang to order the translations published by the defendant. Sunder Pandurang accordingly wrote the following letter to the defendant at Delhi:—"Dear Sir,—Please send me the undermentioned books per value-payable post, allowing the usual trade discount, and oblige." The list comprised, among others, the defendant's translations of the three works which I have named. The defendant, in reply, wrote: "I have despatched to your address a book-packet by value-payable post containing the following books." The list comprised translations of the two works by Barnard Smith, but of a different work by Todhunter. Sunder Pandurang received, and paid through the post office for, the books, which the defendant sent to Bombay by value-payable post, and the defendant received the amount from the post office at Delhi.

The first question which arises on these facts is, "whether this Court has jurisdiction in respect of any, and which of the matters complained of in the plaint." The English Copyright Act, 5th and 6th Vict., cap. 45, extends (s. 29) to the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, and to every part of the British dominions; and (by s. 2), British dominions include all parts of the East and West Indies. The Act, therefore, extends to all parts of India, which must, I think, be taken, for the purposes of the statute, not as a homogeneous whole, but as divided into parts. Section 15 deals with jurisdiction, and enacts "that if any person shall in any part of the British dominions after the passing of the Act print or cause to be printed either for sale or [564] exportation any book in which there shall be subsisting copyright without the consent of the proprietor thereof * * * or shall sell, publish or expose to sale or hire * * * or cause to be sold, published or exposed to sale or hire or shall have in his possession for sale or hire any such book so unlawfully printed * * * without such consent, such offender shall be liable to a special action on the case at the suit of the proprietor of such copyright to be brought in any Court of record in that part of the British dominions in which the offence shall be committed." It is to my mind clear that the offender must be sued, if he offends in India, not only within the limits of that country, but in that part of India in which the offence is committed. If, therefore, he offends in Delhi, he cannot, by virtue of the provisions of this statute, be sued in Bombay. He must, I think, if sued in a Court of record, be sued in that Court of record which has jurisdiction in that part of India where the offence is committed. If the aid of the Indian Act XX of 1847, s. 13, can be used to explain the English statute, the case is clear beyond all doubt; but I think that even without such aid there can be no reasonable doubt as to construction of the statute. So far, therefore, as the suit relates to the translations of Todhunter's work, which are complained of in it, and which were not sent to Bombay, I am of opinion that the Court has no jurisdiction to hear it.

I now proceed to consider whether the sending, by the defendant, of the translations of Barnard Smith's works, by value-payable post, to Sunder Pandurang in Bombay, gives rise to a cause of action here, assuming for this purpose that publication of such translations constitutes a breach of the plaintiffs' copyright. The unauthorised sale is the cause of action. The statute makes such unauthorised sale an offence. The question for solution, is where was that offence committed?

Now, in the case of a sale of unascertained goods, the property in the goods does not pass: the sale is not completed until the goods are finally appropriated to the contract, but where they are so appropriated, the sale is complete, and the property passes: the obligation of the purchaser to pay the price, being the consideration for the [565] sale.(1) Where, from the terms of an executory agreement to sell unspecified goods, the vendor is to despatch the goods he. . . has the right to choose what the goods shall be; and the property is transferred the moment the despatch has commenced (2). So far the law is, I think, clear. Cotton, L. J., in Mirabita v. Imperial Ottoman Bank (3), states it in the following words (p. 172) :—"Under a contract for sale of chattels not specified, the property does not pass to the purchaser unless there is afterwards an appropriation of the specific chattels to pass under the contract, that is, unless both parties agree as to the specific chattels in which the property is to pass and nothing remains to be done in order to pass it. In the case of such a contract the delivery by the vendor to a common carrier * * is an appropriation sufficient to pass the property."

In the case, however, of a vendor shipping goods he may, by taking the bill of lading in his own name, reserve to himself what is commonly called a jus disponendi, in which case he shows his intention that the property shall not pass until the price is paid or some other condition is fulfilled by the purchaser—Wait v. Baker(4); Ogg v. Shuter(5); Mirabita v. Imperial Ottoman Bank(3). Up to that time he can deal with the goods so as to defeat the purchaser's rights under his contract, leaving the latter to his action for damages for breach of contract. I think, however, that it must also be that, when delivering the goods to a common carrier, he could similarly, by sufficiently declaring his intention, prevent the property in the goods from passing. The question in each case is a question of intention. In the case of goods ordered to be sent by value payable post, I think that the intention must be that the property vests in the purchaser from the time the goods are posted. The vendor by posting them parts absolutely with the goods. He cannot reclaim them, nor does he, I think, retain any jus disponendi over them, and on the purchaser paying for the goods when the post office tenders them to him, the purchaser becomes absolutely entitled to receive them, a title which the vendor cannot, I think, defeat. The fact that [566] the vendor retains through the post office a quasi lien over the goods or right to refuse delivery until payment, is not, in my opinion, sufficient to prevent the property in the goods vesting in the purchaser from the time of their appropriation.

If this be the correct way of regarding the transaction, as I think it is, it follows that the sale of the books in question took place at Delhi when the books were posted, and that the offence was complete there. Delivery to the purchaser and payment of the price in Bombay does not constitute the sale. Sale and delivery are two distinct acts, though the latter is the completion of the former. The common count for goods bargained and sold, as distinguished from the common count for goods sold and delivered, marks the distinction.

From this I think it also follows that no part of the plaintiffs' cause of action arose in Bombay so as to give them a right to sue under cl. 12 of the Letters Patent. The act of Sunder Pandurang in paying for and receiving the goods forms no part of the defendant's offence, which, as I have showed, was, in my opinion, completed when he posted the books at Delhi. I have, therefore, come to the conclusion that the Court has no jurisdiction over the defendant in this matter.

The question is, however, such a doubtful one that I think that I ought to consider the other issues in the case in order to avoid a remand in case a higher Court should come to a different conclusion upon it. The defendant has raised an issue as to the plaintiffs' copyright in the books complained of. The plaintiffs have, however, registered themselves as the proprietors of the copyright in both London and India ; and s. 16 of the statute 5 and 6 Vict., cap. 45, and s. 8 of Act XX of 1847 prevent the defendant from raising this question at the hearing without previous notice. The defendant in this case has given no such notice, but has, on the contrary, virtually admitted the plaintiffs' title previous to the suit. I must hold that the plaintiffs' copyright in the books in question has been established.

The important question still to be considered in this case is whether the defendant's translations into Urdu of Barnard Smith's two works are an infringement of the plaintiffs' copyright [567] therein. It is strange that the question has not been long since authoritatively decided. The cases of Stowe v. Thomas in the United States in 1853 and of Munshi Shaik Abdurruhman v. Mirza (1) decided by Mr. Justice Parsons in this Court in 1890, are the only actual decisions upon the subject which have been cited to me : the only ones that, I believe, have been passed. They both determine the question in the negative. The text-book writers take the opposite view. Under these circumstances, and as the decision of Mr. Justice Parsons was upon the Indian Act and not under the English statute, I ought, I think, to come to an independent conclusion upon the subject.

Whether copyright existed at common law before the statute of Anne (8 Anne, cap. 19) has long been a question much debated by lawyers ; but since the decision of the House of Lords in Jeffreys v. Boosey (1), it must, I think, be assumed by Courts of law dealing with questions of copyright that no such right existed before that statute. The question must, therefore, depend upon the construction of the statutes for the time being relating to copyright, and by considering what rights they confer upon its proprietor without taking into consideration what benefits the author of a work ought or ought not to derive from the creation of his brain and pen. After publication, the works of a writer are publici juris, but the statutes confer upon him or his assignee certain exclusive privileges, the boundaries and extent of which are defined and limited by the statutes which confer them. The statute at present in force is 5 and 6 Vict., cap. 45, of which the Indian Act XX of 1847 is a reproduction with certain necessary alterations. It will be sufficient to consider the terms of the English statute. Copyright is defined by it to mean "the sole and exclusive liberty of printing or otherwise multiplying copies of any subject to which the said word is therein applied"—copies for the purpose of this suit of any "book,"—and "book" includes every volume, part or division of a volume separately published. Section 15 makes it an offence giving rise to an action for any person to print or cause to be printed for sale or exportation, &c., any book in which there shall be subsisting copyright without the consent in writing of the proprietor thereof. [568] Section 23 enacts that all copies of any book wherein there shall be copyright, unlawfully printed or imported, shall become the property of the proprietor of the copyright. Translations of copyrighted books are not referred to in the Act. It is difficult to understand why they should not be mentioned in the Act if they were intended to be prohibited by it.

Two years subsequently, an International Copyright Act was passed, 7 and 8 Vict., cap. 12. Its 18th section provided that nothing in the Act should be construed to prevent the printing, publication, or sale of any translation of any book, the author whereof and his assigns might be entitled to the benefit of the Act. This rather tends to show that, in the opinion of the Legislature of that time, different considerations applied to translations from those which applied to the making of mere copies. Judicial opinion certainly tended in the same direction. Before the passing of the statute, and when the Act of Anne was in force, Lord Macclesfield, in 1720, entertained a strong opinion that a translation might not be the same as the reprinting of the original on account of the translator having bestowed care and pains upon it, and so not within the prohibition of the Act—Barnett v. Chetwood (2). In 1769, Lord Mansfield, in the case of Millar v. Taylor (3), said: "If any man should turn the Psalms or the writings of Solomon or Job into verse, the king could not stop the printing or sale of such a work. It is the author's work." Mr. J. Willis said: "Certainly bona-fide imitations, translations and abridgments are different, and in respect of the property, may be considered as new works;" and Aston, J., added: "The right of the copy (after publication) still remains in the author . . . . He (the purchaser) may improve upon it, imitate it, transalate it, oppose its statements, but he buys no right to publish the identical works." In 1814, Lord Eldon treated translations as original works, but these were translations from foreign works not protected by the Copyright Act—Wyatt v. Barnard (1).

At the date of the Act of 1842 (Stat. 5 and 6 Vict., cap. 45), therefore, there had been a current of judicial opinions to the effect [569] that translations were not copies, and that a person, by translating a work, did not infringe the author's copyright. It would be strange, then, if the Legislature in that year intended to prohibit translations, that they should not have used some apt words to effect their purpose. Soon after the passing of the Act, Vice-Chancellor Knight Bruce, in 1849, used similar language. A published work, he said, "may be liable to be translated, abridged, analysed, exhibited in morsels, complimented and otherwise treated in a manner that an unpublished manuscript is not"—Prince Albert v. Strange (2). In 1853, this was actually decided in the United States in the case of Stowe v. Thomas, already referred to.

In Murray v. Bogue (3) Vice-Chancellor Kindersley assumed that, if an English work protected by copyright had been translated into German and such German work had been retranslated into English, the latter translation would be an infringement of the original work. That is manifestly so, for it would still be a copy of it though made through the medium of a German translation. This assumption offers no assistance in coming to a decision in the present case. The case of Nicols v. Pitman (4) also does not touch the present question. There the defendant printed in short-hand characters a lecture which had not been "published" by the author. It was held that he had no right to print it at all. It would have made no difference, I think, if he had published it in German or Chinese. The lecture had not been given to the world. It was still the private property of the author.

The case of Warne v. Seebohm (5) is more nearly in point. There the defendant dramatised "Little Lord Fauntleroy." This, it was admitted, he was entitled to do. In doing this, he copied passages from the original work, and published a few of such copies. He was ordered to expunge the copied matter from his drama. The decision was in accordance with the earlier cases on the same subject. All were based upon the same ground, namely, that substantial parts of the plaintiff's book had been copied into [570] the new drama—Timsby v. Lacy (6) and Reade v. Lacy (7). It has always been held that the publication of an extract from a book, if used for an unauthorized purpose, is within the prohibition of the statute—Rooney v. Kelly (8). I have also considered the judgment in the case of Hanfstaengl v. The Empire Palace (9), but have not derived much assistance from it. No other cases have been cited to me. The current of judicial dicta since the passing of Act 5 and 6 Vict., cap. 45, has not, I think, changed from its previous direction. If we read the words of the statute in their ordinary natural meaning, they do not, I think, cover translations. It would be a strained and unnatural use of language to say that translations are "copies." To my understanding they are essentially different productions—one is intellectual, the other mechanical. It may be—doubtless is—desirable to afford to authors protection in respect of translations of their works if they desire it; but, I think, that it must be conceded that such translations stand on a different footing from copies. They are rarely, if ever, made by the author of the original work: they circulate, as a rule, among a different class of readers, a class to which the original works are as completely sealed as if they had not been written. There is here a conflict of rights and interests; a conflict between the intellectual interests of the persons for whom the translations are intended, and the caprice or possible pecuniary interest of the proprietor of the copyright, if he shall not, or shall, intend to translate the work himself, or cause it to be translated. There is no hardship on him; he can always protect himself by being first in the field with a translation. In matters of copyright, the Legislature has always kept the interest of the public before it. Section 5 of the Original Act, ch. 5 and 6 Victoria, shows this; and when the Legislature provided in the later International Copyright Acts 15 and 16 Vict., cap. 12, for translations, it took care (s. 2) that the public should not be neglected by being left without them; and translations in this Act are dealt with in an entirely different manner from copies.

CURSANDAS NATHA AND OTHERS (Plaintiffs) v. LADKAVAHU AND OTHERS (Defendants.)* [28th February, 1895.]

Minor—Infant—Decree against minor—Review—Right of minor to impeach decree—Practice—Procedure.

One Kessowji Jadowji in his will directed his daughter-in-law Ladkavahu (defendant No. 1) to adopt his nephew Karamsi Madhowji (defendant No. 2), and he devised the residue of his estate to him. The executors of Kessowji's will subsequently brought this suit to have the will construed and the rights of Karamsi Madhowji in the testator's estate ascertained and declared. A decree was made on the 1st October, 1887, by which it was declared that Karamsi's adoption was a condition precedent to his inheritance, and that, unless he was adopted, he was not entitled to any part of the testator's property. On 22nd October, 1894, Karamsi Madhowji (defendant No. 2) filed a petition of review, stating that at the date of the decree he was a minor and had only recently, viz., on the 14th December, 1894, attained the age of eighteen years. He contended that there was error apparent on the face of the decree, inasmuch as it did not provide that he should have an opportunity of showing cause against it in so far as it affected his interests after he attained his majority.

Held, that the review could not be granted. The Courts in India after deciding an issue in which an infant, party to a suit, is interested, have no power to reserve to the infant the right of questioning such decision. At all events a decree is not erroneous for not containing such a provision when the issue in which the infant is interested has been fully gone into and argued before the Court. A decree passed against an infant properly represented is binding [572] RULE nisi for review.

The judgment and decree, of which the review in this case was sought, were passed by Farran, J., on the 1st October, 1887. A report of the case will be found in I. L. R., 12 Bom. 185.

The rule nisi for review was obtained on the 22nd December, 1894, by the second defendant Karamsi Madhowji, who was the adopted son of the first defendant Ladkavabu. She was the widow of one Liladhar Kessowji, the son of Kessowji Jadhowji, a wealthy Hindu inhabitant of Bombay, who died in 1886 leaving a will, of which he appointed the plaintiffs his executors.

In his will the testator had directed that his daughter-in-law, the first defendant (the widow of his son Liladhar), should adopt the second defendant Karamsi (who was the testator's nephew), and he devised the residue of his estate to him.

In April, 1887, the executors brought this suit to have the will construed. The plaint (inter alia) prayed that the rights and interest of the second defendant Karamsi Madhowji in the testator's estate might be ascertained and declared.

Farran, J., held that upon the second defendant's adoption by Ladkavahu he would become entitled to the residue of the testator's estate to be made over to him on his attaining the age of twenty-one. No decision, however, was given as to the quantum of the estate taken by Karamsi in the residue. The learned Judge also found that until his adoption Karamsi Madhowji was not entitled to the whole or any part of the residue of the said estate. (See I. L. R., 12 Bom., at pp. 201-2.)

On the 22nd December, 1894, the second defendant Karamsi Madhowji filed a petition of review in which he set forth the portions of the decree to which he objected, and stated that at the date of the decree he was a minor and had only recently, viz., on the 14th December, 1894, attained the age of eighteen years. The following are the material clauses of the petition :—

"That the said Karamsi Madhowji is advised and believes that the said decree should in accordance with the practice of Courts of equity have provided that he should be given an opportunity, after attaining his age of majority, of showing cause against the said decree in so far as it affected his interests, and that according to the said practice of the Court of equity the said Karamsi Madhowji should have been [573] allowed a period of six months at least from the date of his attaining his majority for the purpose of showing cause as aforesaid.

"5. That the said Karamsi Madhowji is advised that by reason of the omission of the said provision from the said decree there is an error apparent upon the face of the record entitling him to a review of the said decree and judgment upon which it was founded.

"6. That the father of the said Karamsi Madhowji is a poor and illiterate man and has no means sufficient to enable him to obtain proper legal advice, and that the said Karamsi Madhowji was, when he attained his majority, wholly dependent upon his said father, and had not the means of obtaining legal advice as to his rights in respect of the said decree, and has only obtained funds for the purpose of making this application and the further prosecution of legal proceedings through the assistance of a friend who declined to advance any money for the purpose aforesaid until the opinion had been obtained as to the chances of success from a barrister of his own selection whose opinion was received in Bombay on or about the 16th of December, 1894.

"7. That by reason of the circumstances in the last preceding paragraph set forth, the said Karamsi Madhowji is advised and submits that he has sufficient cause for not making this application at any earlier date.

"8. That the said Karamsi Madhowji is aggrieved by the said decree for the following amongst other reasons:—(a) That the said learned Judge held that the adoption of the said Karamsi Madhowji by the said Ladkavahu was a condition precedent to the accrual of his rights under the said will of the said Kessowji Jadhowji, whereas the said learned Judge ought to have held that the said Karamsi Madhowji was entitled to the residue of the estate of the said Kessowji Jadhowji, irrespective of his adoption or non-adoption by the said Ladkavahu, on the ground that he was named as heir in the said will and took as a personal designation; (b) that the said learned Judge erred in holding that the case was undistinguishable from that of Shamavahoo v. Dwarkadas, I. L. R., 12 Bom., 202; (c) that by reason of the magnitude of the property at stake and in the interests of the said Karamsi Madhowji an appeal should have been preferred against the said decree of the said learned Judge, and the case should, if necessary, have been carried to Her Majesty's Council for final decision, but no step was taken by any of the adult parties to the suit to test the correctness of the decision of the said learned Judge; (d) that the said Ladkavahu was, in fact, ready to adopt the said Karamsi Madhowji as directed by the said will of the said Kessowji Jadhowji, and the parents of the said Karamsi Madhowji were ready to give him in adoption, when the said Ladkavahu being on a pilgrimage suddenly died, and the said Karamsi Madhowji was deprived of all chance of taking as heir of the said Kessowji Jadhowji according to the provisions of the said will, unless the said decree of the said learned Judge were varied or reversed in appeal.

"The said Karamsi Madhowji, therefore, prays that a review of the said decree may be granted, and that the said decree may be rectified, and that he may be afforded an opportunity of showing cause against the said decree."

On the presentation of the above petition a rule nisi was granted calling on the plaintiffs to show cause why a review of [574] judgment should not be granted. The rule now came on for hearing.

Mapherson and Inverarity, for the plaintiffs, showed cause. They relied on the affidavits and cited the following authorities:—Limitation Act (XV of 1877), s. 5 and sch. II, art. 162; Seton on Decrees, Vol. II, p. 830; Simpson on Infants, p. 511; Mayne's Hindu Law (5th Ed.), para. 197; Mungniram v. Mohunt Gursahai (1); Mirali v. Rehmubhoy (2).

JUDGMENT.

FARRAN, J. :—In this suit, which was a suit for the construction of the will of the late Kessowji Jadhowji, a decree was passed on the 1st October, 1887, declaring (inter alia) that the defendant Karamsi Madhowji was not entitled to the residue of the estate of the testator, or to any sum for his maintenance, or education, until his adoption. The defendant Karamsi Madhowji was a minor at the date of that decree, but was represented by his guardian ad litem, his father Madhowji Katchra, who put in a written statement and instructed counsel at the hearing on the minor's behalf.

On the 22nd of December last, Karamsi Madhowji, having then attained his majority, presented a petition for review of the above decree and obtained a rule nisi, against which cause was shown by the plaintiffs on Thursday last.

The petition states that Karamsi Madhowji attained the age of eighteen years on or about the 14th of December, 1894. As originally drawn, it stated that he had recently attained that age, and its sixth paragraph shows that when the petition was drafted it was intended to excuse the delay between his coming of age and the presentation of the petition by the poverty of his father, the [575] necessity of obtaining assistance from a friend, and the need which the friend felt of obtaining an opinion from counsel of his own, situate out of Bombay. The plaintiffs have produced a birth certificate which shows that a son was born to Madhowji Katchra on the 27th May, 1876. This, coupled with the entry in the books of the testator under date the 5th June, 1876, which shows that a customary present was then made to Madhowji Katchra on the birth of a son, with the fact that the petition as originally drawn is only consistent with the boy having attained his majority some months before the 14th of December, 1894, and with the circumstance that no certificate of the boy's birth in December, 1876, is produced on his behalf, leaves no doubt on my mind, notwithstanding the affidavits of Madhowji, Katchra and Manakbai, that the boy was born on or about the 27th of May, 1876, and that consequently he attained his majority on or about the 27th of May, 1894.

The main ground upon which the petition of review is based is that the decree does not provide that the defendant Karamsi Madhowji should have an opportunity of showing cause against it, in so far as it affects his interest, after his attaining majority. This, it is contended, is a mistake or error apparent on the face of the decree. I an unable to accept that contention. The Code of Civil Procedure neither in its chapter relating to minors (ch. XXXI) nor elsewhere contains any provision for the giving of such an opportunity to a minor, nor has it been the practice of this Court to insert such a reservation in favour of minors in its decrees. I have never in the course of my experience known it to be done, and I much doubt whether it is in the power of the Court so to reserve a minor's rights. In the judgment of the Privy Council in Watson v. Collector of Rajshahye (4), it was pointed out that the Courts in India had not the power which Courts of equity in England occasionally exercise of dismissing a suit with liberty to the plaintiff to bring a fresh suit for the same matter. That was a mofussil case under the old Code; but the new Code, which has been made applicable to the High Courts, is similar in this respect, and I apprehend that the observation of [576] the Privy Council would now be applicable to all Indian Courts. Similarly I think that the Courts in India after deciding an issue in which an infant, party to a suit, is interested, have no power to reserve to the infant the right of questioning such decision. The Code makes elaborate provisions for having infants' interests duly protected, but does not, in my judgment, extend this particular form of protection to them. At all events I am clear that a decree is not erroneous for not containing such a provision when the issue in which the infant is interested has been fully gone into and argued before the Court.

I have not been able to satisfy myself under what circumstances the reservation of infants' rights is inserted in decrees in Courts of equity in England. In the two cases referred to in Simpson on Infants—Elsey v. Lutyens (1) and Lane v. Hardwich (2)—the infant's common answer only was put in and the infant's case was treated as not having been gone into. It may be that it is under such circumstances only that this reservation is inserted. In foreclosure suits it appears to be the practice to pass only a decree nisi against an infant defendant, giving him time after he comes of age to show cause against the decree: Seton on Decrees, Vol. II, p. 711, (Ed. 1879).

It has been contended that without such a reservation an infant may show cause against a decree of the High Court or put in a new defence after attaining his majority. It was the practice in Courts of equity in England to allow an infant within six months after attaining majority to show cause against a decree passed against him. Whether this rule prevailed down to 1879 (the date of the edition of his work above referred to) Mr. Seton says was open to some question. Simpson in his Work on Infants does not notice this as a privilege of infants still subsisting; but whether it exists in English Courts or not, I feel quite clear that it is not one which is preserved to infants by the Code of Civil Procedure. In truth, a decree passed against an infant properly represented is binding upon him like a decree passed against an adult, but it is open to the infant to impeach such decree by a separate suit in cases where his guardian has been guilty of fraud or negligence [577] in allowing the decree to be passed against him. For the former part of this proposition I refer to Mungniram v. Muhunt Gursahi (3) and Eshan Chundra v. Nundamoni(4), and for the latter portion of it to Mirali v. Rehmoobhoy (5) and Lalla Sheo v. Ramnandan (6).

The present application must, therefore, be treated like all other applications for view, save that the Court might perhaps scan with a more indulgent eye the grounds for review made by a defendant seeking to set right a decree passed against him in his infancy, than it would do in the case of an adult litigant.

The first objection made to the application is that it is barred by limitation under art. 162 of the Limitation Act (XV of 1877). Having regard to the date at which the applicant attained his majority, which I have found to be the 27th May, 1894, there is no doubt but that the application is out of time. On the other side I am asked to say under s. 5 of the Act that there has been sufficient cause shown for the application not being made in time. This will be more conveniently dealt with after I have considered the grounds for the application on its merits. Independently, however, of the objection to the decree in form which I have already dealt with, the petition of review does not disclose any ground, other than a puerile one, for supposing that there has been a mistake made in the decree; nor has it been contended before me that any fresh argument can be adduced or new cause shown for altering my decision. The same counsel supports this application who originally argued for the infant. That being so, it is clear that the review is sought, not in the expectation that the decree will or ought to be varied at the rehearing, but in order that the defendant Karamsi may have an opportunity afforded to him of appealing from the decree when it is re-affirmed. I ought not, I think, under these circumstances to extend the time for allowing the application to be made under the provisions of s. 5. To do so would be to arrogate to myself the functions of an appellate Court and in effect to extend the time for appealing. Without, therefore, expressing an opinion whether I should [578] deem the grounds put forward in the petition sufficient to warrant me under the peculiar circumstances of the case in holding that the applicant had sufficient cause for not making the application in time I must refuse it. I presume that the executors will not ask for costs.

[10th July, 1894.]

Decree—Execution — Stay of execution on giving security — Subsequent execution—Default of judgment-debtor—Surety—Liability of surety in execution.

The execution of a decree for partition was stayed pending appeal on the defendant giving security that he would satisfy such decree as might ultimately be passed against him by the appellate Court. That Court confirmed the decree of the lower Court. In obedience of the decree the judgment-debtor deposited in Court certain property in his possession consisting of bonds, decrees and other articles. But as he did not produce the whole of the property as ordered by the decree, the Court directed execution to proceed against his surety. The surety paid into Court the full sum stipulated in the surety bond. Thereupon the judgment-debtor applied that the property deposited by him in Court should be valued and made over to the decree-holder in part satisfaction of the decree pro tanto, and that only the balance then remaining due should be paid out of the money paid in by the surety. The Court refused, holding that the decree-holder was entitled to be paid over the whole sum paid in by the surety. On appeal,

* Appeal No. 43 of 1894.

Held (reversing the order of the lower Court) that the property already produced in Court by the judgment-debtor should be first applied towards the satisfaction of the partition decree, and that if the decree-holder did not obtain complete satisfaction in this way, the money paid in by the surety should then be made available.

APPELLATE CIVIL.

19 B. 578.

APPEAL from the decision of Rao Bahadur G. V. Bhanap, First Class Subordinate Judge of Nasik, in dharkast No. 166 of 1890.

[579] In suit No. 340 of 1880 a decree for the plaintiff was passed ordering partition of certain property belonging to a joint Hindu family. The defendant appealed and, pending the appeal, obtained a stay of execution upon giving security that he would satisfy such decree as might be passed against him by the appellate Court. That Court confirmed the decree of the lower Court.

In execution of the decree the defendant deposited in Court certain bonds, decrees and other articles, which were in his possession. He did not, however, produce the whole of the property for which he was liable under the decree, and the Court, therefore, ordered execution to proceed against his surety. The surety paid into Court Rs. 4,080-11-9, being the total amount of the surety bond.

The defendant (the judgment-debtor) contended that the whole sum so paid in by the surety should not be applied in satisfaction of the decree, but only so much as was necessary to make up the balance due after giving credit for the total value of the property which he (the judgment-debtor) had himself produced in execution. The Subordinate Judge, however, decided that the whole sum should be applied in satisfaction of the decree. His judgment was as follows :—

"The surety Shankar Nana having paid the money into Court and not having raised any sort of objection to its payment by the Court to the opponent (who is the assignee of the decree-holder), nor having claimed a credit for the articles alleged to be in deposit with the Court, the opponent is entitled to receive the money in question.....The petitioner (Gopal) not having produced the property as required by the Court, the Court ordered execution against his surety, and the latter has paid the money into Court, and the petitioner has no right to produce any more property or to claim a deduction of the value of the property already produced by him against the amount produced and paid by his surety."

Against this order the defendant Gopal appealed to the High Court.

Shivram V. Bhandarkar for appellant :—The defendant (judgment-debtor) has deposited property in Court in pursuance of the decree. That should be applied in satisfaction of the decree pro tanto, and the surety can only be required to pay any balance that may be left unsatisfied. The decree-holder has no right to [580] take the money paid in by the surety until he has exhausted all his remedies against the principal debtor, especially when the principal debtor is ready and willing to satisfy the decree in full.

Daji Abaji Khare for respondent (decree-holder) :—The judgment-debtor has no right to interfere after the Court has ordered execution to proceed against the surety. So long as that order stands unreversed, the money paid in by the surety must be applied towards satisfaction of the decree.

JUDGMENT.

JARDINE, J.—Certain decrees, bonds and articles, which had been included in the partition decree, happened to be in the custody of the Court below during the litigation. Default being made by the defendant (now appellant) in satisfying the decree, the decree-holder took proceedings against the surety, who thereon, in satisfaction of the order made against him by the Court, paid the amount of cash stipulated in the surety-bond. After this payment into Court the defendant applied to have the property in Court valued and made over to the decree-holder to satisfy the decree so far as the property would go. The Court refused, holding that the decree-holder was entitled to be paid over the cash paid in by the surety without deduction of the value of the property.

It is argued for the defendant-appellant by Mr. Shivram that so long as the money paid by the surety into Court had not been paid over, he was entitled to apply to get the property mentioned in the partition decree made available to the extent of its value. No authorities have been cited on either side. It is the rule of the English law embodied in s. 137 of the Contract Act, (IX of 1872) that, in the absence of express stipulation to that effect, a creditor who holds securities from the principal debtor for his debt need not first resort to them before suing the surety. But the bond under our civil procedure makes the surety directly liable to the Court and not merely to the judgment-creditor—Venkapa v. Baslingapa (1). Nor is the surety a party to the present appeal which is preferred by the defendant against the decree-holder. Treating the matter as one solely [581] arising between them, we are of opinion, in the absence of authorities, that the Court below ought to treat the amount paid in by the surety as an asset available in execution of the partition decree. But as the guiding principle of an executing Court's procedure is to see that the decree is executed according to its terms, we are of opinion that the decrees, bonds and other property now in the custody of the Court should be brought into partition and the respondent be satisfied out of them as far as can be according to the terms of the partition decree. If the respondent does not obtain complete satisfaction in this way, the money paid into Court by the surety can then be made available. This procedure is, in our opinion, the one most consistent with equity.

For these reasons we reverse the order of the Court below and direct it to pass a new order in accordance with this judgment; but as the point now decided is new, and not without difficulty, we direct each party to pay his own costs in both Courts.

Order reversed.

ANANTACHARYA (Original Plaintiff), Appellant v. THE SECRETARY OF STATE FOR INDIA IN COUNCIL AND OTHERS (Original Defendants), *Respondents. [12th July, 1894.]

Watan—Bombay Act III of 1874, s. 17—Collector's power to determine the amount of payments of a fluctuating character—Act X of 1876, s. 4, cl. (c)—Jurisdiction.

The payments referred to in s. 17 of Bombay Act III of 1874 are those mentioned in s. 4, namely, "customary fees or perquisites in money or in kind whether at fixed times or otherwise." It is the commutation of these customary and fluctuating payments that is provided for by ss. 17—21. But the Collector has no power under s. 17 to impose new burdens on the landowner in cases where the payment being constant already there is nothing to determine.

Plaintiff was the inamdar of a certain village. Defendant No. 3 was the watandar kulkarni of the village. He enjoyed for the performance of his duties some inam lands and a cash allowance of Rs. 5 paid annually by the inamdar. In 1884 defendant [582] No. 3 having failed to perform the service in person or by deputy, the Collector appointed defendant No. 2 to act as kulkarni. Defendant No. 2 officiated from 20th November, 1884, to 4th December, 1886. On the application of defendant No. 2 the Collector increased his remuneration according to the scale fixed for Government villages, known as the Wingate scale, and ordered plaintiff to pay the increased remuneration, so as to make up the amount due under that scale. On 26th September, 1890, the Collector recovered the sum of Rs. 171 from the plaintiff by attachment of his property. The plaintiff thereupon sued the Secretary of State for India in Council to recover this amount as being illegally levied. The defendant pleaded that the Collector, having determined the amount of defendant No. 2's remuneration under s. 17 of Bombay Act III of 1874 (1), the plaintiff had no cause of action against him, and that the suit was barred under s. 4, cl. 3 of Act X of 1876.

Held, that as the cash payment made by the plaintiff to the watandar was certain, and not of a fluctuating or indeterminate character, the Collector had no power to increase the remuneration of the officiator under s. 17 of Bombay Act III of 1874.

Held, also that the suit was not barred by s. 4 (c) of Act X of 1876.

APPEAL from the decision of Venkatrao R. Inamdar, Assistant Judge at Bijapur, in suit No. 1 of 1891.

The plaintiff sued to recover back Rs. 171 as money illegally levied from him by the Collector by attachment of his property under the following circumstances :—

Plaintiff was the inamdar of the village of Ankalgi in the Bijapur district.

Defendant No. 3 was the watandar kulkarni of the village. An annual allowance of Rs. 5 payable by the inamdar and certain inam lands were attached to his office as remuneration for his services.

In 1884 defendant No. 3 having failed to perform the services of his watan either in person or by deputy, defendant No. 2 was appointed by

(1) Bombay Act III of 1874, s. 17 :—

When all or any of the property of a watan consists of payments of whatever description, whether in money or kind, made by Jagirdars, Inamdars, Mewasi chiefs, or others owning or occupying immoveable property wholly or partially free from assessment, the Collector may from time to time determine the amount of such payments recoverable ; provided that no larger demand shall be made than one equivalent to the amount that would be payable under the scale in force for the time being in the case of Government villages.

Government to officiate as kulkarni of the village. Defendant No. 2 acted as kulkarni from 20th November, 1884, to 4th December, 1896.

[583] When defendant No. 2 was appointed to the office of kulkarni, the Collector found that the watan property was not sufficient to provide adequate remuneration. He, therefore, proceeded under s. 17 of Bombay Act III of 1874 and increased the amount of his remuneration according to the scale fixed for Government villages, known as the "Wingate scale."

On 2nd December, 1887, the Collector ordered the plaintiff to pay the increased remuneration so as to make up the amount due under the Wingate scale.

On 26th September, 1890, a sum of Rs. 171 was levied from the plaintiff by attachment of his property.

Thereupon the plaintiff filed the present suit to recover back the sum of Rs. 171 with interest, on the ground that it had been illegally and wrongfully levied from him.

Defendant No. 1 (the Secretary of State for India, contended (inter alia) that the Collector had authority under s. 17 of Bombay Act III of 1874 to increase the amount of remuneration payable to defendant No. 2, and levy the same from the plaintiff under s. 81 of the Act, and also that the suit was barred under para. 3 of s. 4 of Act X of 1876.

Defendant No. 2 pleaded that the plaintiff had no cause of action against him. Defendant No. 3 did not appear to contest the claim.

The Assistant Judge dismissed the suit, holding that the plaintiff was bound to pay the increased remuneration as ordered by the Collector.

The plaintiff appealed from this decision to the High Court.

Shamrao Vithal for appellant :—The question in this case is whether the Collector can levy from the inamdar any sum over and above that which he has hitherto paid as remuneration to the kulkarni. Section 17 of Bombay Act III of 1874 does not apply to a case like this, where the inamdar pays a fixed sum of money to the village kulkarni. It is only where the watan property consists of customary fees or perquisites, which are fluctuating in their character, that the Collector can substitute in their place a fixed determinate amount under [584] s. 17 of the Act. The kulkarni watan in this village is a kadim or old watan, older than the grant of the village to the plaintiff's ancestors. The watandar enjoys the profits of certain inam lands and an annual cash payment of Rs. 5 made by the inamdar. The plaintiff as inamdar is liable to make this payment only and nothing more. The Collector has no power to place any additional burden on him. Even assuming that the Collector could interfere under s. 17, he ought to have determined the amount after holding the inquiry contemplated by s. 73, and after obtaining the sanction of Government under ss. 21 and 23 of the Act. No such inquiry was held, and no sanction obtained. The Collector's order was, therefore, illegal and ultra vires.

Rao Saheb Vasudev J. Kirtikar, Government Pleader, for the respondent No. 1 :—Defendant No. 3 is a watani kulkarni who failed to appoint a deputy when called on to do so. The Collector, therefore, appointed defendant No. 2 under Part VIII of Bombay Act III of 1874. The remuneration was fixed according to what is known as Wingate's scale quoted in Nairne's Hand-book, pp. 551-556. This remuneration was in the first instance payable from the watan property to which defendant No. 3 was entitled, and if this was insufficient, the plaintiff was liable to make good the deficiency. Section 17 of the Watan Act applies to this case.

[JARDINE, J.—Defendant No. 3 is a kadim kulkarni. Plaintiff gets nothing out of the lands held by him.]

"watan property" within the meaning of s. 4 of the Watan Act just as the fees and perquisites which the kulkarni gets on watan property. They are the emoluments of his office. His enjoyment of the lands in plaintiff's village by virtue, and in consideration of his office, is a payment to him of an equivalent in kind within the meaning of s. 17.

[JARDINE, J.—What power has the Collector to deal with the cash payment of Rs. 5 made by the plaintiff to defendant No. 3?]

The Collector has the power to "determine" the amount of the officiator's emoluments "from time to time," which implies the power to increase or decrease the amount according to the [585] exigencies of the case. This is a matter entirely within the discretion of the Collector. If the officiator was not paid his remuneration by the person liable to pay, he was entitled to the assistance of the revenue authorities to enforce the payment. The amount is recoverable under s. 81 of the Watan Act as arrears of land revenue. Such assistance was given to defendant No. 2 in the present case. Moreover, the suit is barred under s. 4 (c) of Act X of 1876.

JUDGMENT.

RANADE, J.—In this case the appellant (original plaintiff) is the inamdar of Ankalgi in Bijapur Taluka. Respondent (defendant No. 3) is the watandar kulkarni of the village, the watan being described as Kadim Watan. The watan property, held for the performance of the duties of a kulkarni, consists of a cash payment of Rs. 5, and inam lands assessed at Rs. 60. Defendant No. 3 failed to perform the service himself, or to appoint a deputy. The Secretary of State (defendant No. 1), represented by the Collector of Bijapur, thereupon appointed defendant No. 2 as deputy, and defendant No. 2 officiated from 20th November, 1884, to 4th December, 1886. Defendant No. 2 applied for suitable remuneration, and defendant No. 3 agreed to pay him Rs. 80 a year, which sum was accordingly paid in part by, and levied in part from, defendant No. 3. Subsequently defendant No. 2 applied to the Collector for an increased remuneration according to the scale fixed for Government villages, and the Collector on 2nd December, 1887, ordered the plaintiff to pay the increased remuneration so as to make up the full amount due under the Wingate scale, and on 26th September, 1890, a sum of Rs. 171 was recovered from the inamdar plaintiff. Plaintiff claims that this sum was illegally levied from him, and he seeks in this suit to recover the same with interest.

Defendant No. 1 pleaded that, on the application of defendant No. 2, the Collector, acting under s. 17 of Bombay Act III of 1874, determined the amount payable by plaintiff as remuneration to defendant No. 2, and under s. 81 levied that amount. The amount awarded was Rs. 158-15-8, and the sum levied was Rs. 171. Defendant No. 1 gave notice to the plaintiff to take back the excess (Rs. 21-6-4), but he refused to do so at [586] the time, though the sum was, since the institution of the suit, received by the plaintiff. Defendant No. 1 contended that he was not liable to the plaintiff, who had no cause of action as against him. At a late stage, it was also urged that the suit could not be maintained under para. 3, s. 4 of Act X of 1876.

Defendant No. 2 urged that plaintiff had no cause of action against him, as he was entitled to receive the remuneration fixed according to the scale.

Defendant No. 3 did not appear to defend the suit.

JULY 12.
APPEL-
LATE CIVIL.
19 B. 581.

The Assistant Judge held (1) that the suit was not barred under s. 4 of Act X of 1876; (2) that plaintiff, and not defendant No. 3, was liable to make good the remuneration as fixed by the Collector; and (3) that plaintiff's claim could not be awarded.

Plaintiff appealed from this decree on several grounds, which it is not necessary here to state in full, as his pleader chiefly relied upon the contentions raised in the 3rd and 5th objections in the memorandum of appeal—namely, that the Collector had no power to raise the scale of payment, and that the Assistant Judge erred in not finding expressly whether the Collector could, under s. 17 of the Watandars' Act, order plaintiff to pay the enhanced amount. Mr. Shamrao, the appellant's pleader, urged that the plaintiff, as inamdar, could not be saddled with any payment not included in the sanad, and that the Collector's procedure was defective in that he held no inquiry under s. 73 before he passed his order, and further that the Collector was bound to obtain the sanction of Government under s. 21 of the Watandars' Act. He also urged that s. 17 of the Act applied only to old customary payments in kind or money, and at the most under s. 23 the Collector could grant increased remuneration from the watan property only, and he had no power to levy the same from the revenues of the village.

The Collector professedly passed his order under s. 17 of the Watandars' Act, and the chief question we have to consider is, whether that section, or any other section, gave authority to the Collector to require plaintiff to make up the deficient [587] amount of defendant No. 2's remuneration according to the scale in Government villages.

On a careful consideration of the several provisions of Bombay Act III of 1874, we feel satisfied that appellant's contention is well-sustained, and that neither s. 17, nor any of the other provisions of the Act, authorized the procedure followed, and the order issued by the Collector. Section 17 must be read along with the other sections which together form Part 3—headed the Commutation of Watans, as opposed to Part 4, which relates to the creation or lapse of a watan. This heading of commutation is itself suggestive of a strict restriction on the exercise of the powers conferred on the Collector. Section 15 empowers the Collector to relieve a watandar of his liability to perform service, but this relief is under s. 16 not to affect the rights of individuals or village communities to exact customary services from village servants, the relief extending only to the service due to the State. Next comes s. 17 with its complementary ss. 18 and 19, the former applying to payments in kind or money made to watandars by jaghirdars, inamdars, Mevasi chiefs, or others, owning or occupying immoveable property wholly or partially free from assessment, while the latter sections relate to the inferior watans, where the payments in money or kind are due to the watandar from individuals generally, without any particular specification. In the case of the holders of alienated lands, the Collector is himself to determine the amount of the payments due to the watandars. In the case of cultivators generally, the inquiry is to be entrusted to a panchayat, and if the panchayat fixes the profits, which are of a fluctuating nature, the Collector is empowered to determine the amount payable. The words used both in ss. 17 and 19 are exactly the same, and they must be construed alike. These amounts so determined under ss. 17—19 are, moreover, to hold good for such periods as the Governor in Council may from time to time direct.

It is thus plain that s. 17 clearly relates to the power of the Collector to determine payments of a fluctuating character. The word watan property, as defined in s. 4, expressly [588] includes not only property assigned or held for service, but also a right to levy customary fees or perquisites in money or kind, whether at fixed times or otherwise. It is the commutation of these customary and fluctuating demands which is provided for in ss. 17—21. Unless the payments claimed already formed part of the watan property by force of custom, there is no foundation for the exercise of the authority to determine their amount conferred by these sections. The payments and the right must exist beforehand, and then, if the payments or the right are of a fluctuating or indeterminate character, the Collector in the one case, and the panchayat in the other, can determine the amounts of such payments (s. 17), and such rights and duties (s. 18). In the present case, it is admitted that the inamdar has only been paying Rs. 5 in cash to the watandar. The Collector had, therefore, no occasion to determine the amount, as it was not of a fluctuating nature. It does not follow from the fact of this payment of Rs. 5 in cash, that the Collector had authority under s. 17, while professing to determine the amount, to raise the cash payment from Rs. 5 to Rs. 80. The Collector can only determine the amounts of such payments as were already payable, and it is not open to him under this section to increase the amounts as he has done in this case.

This view of the scope of the section is strengthened by the fact that in the first draft of the Bill, the words used were that "it shall be lawful for the Collector to assess the amount of such payments recoverable upon an average of the ten years next preceding." This limit of ten years' average was subsequently given up, and in its place the proviso was added that the amount to be determined was to be equivalent to the amount payable under the scale in force for the time being in the case of Government villages. These words were not intended to refer to the scale of remuneration fixed by Government, known as the Wingate scale, for this latter scale has no reference to uncertain customary payments of the kind contemplated in ss. 17—21. Under s. 216 of the Land Revenue Code the holder of an alienated village is not bound by the provisions of Chap. VIII relating to survey settlement, not introduced with his consent, which was the case in plaintiff's village.

[589] A number of opinions of the Legal Remembrancer to Government have been filed in this case on defendant No. 1's behalf. Such opinions cannot well be admitted in evidence, as they are opinions given in a one-sided inquiry. Such as they are, they do not go far enough to support defendant's contention. In one, Ex. 22, however, it is stated that there can be no objection to the Collector proceeding under s. 17, and if the inamdar objects, he is required to report for further orders. In another, Ex. 20, it is stated that there can be no injustice in prima facie holding that s. 17 applies, and the inamdar may be left to show cause to the contrary. In a third it is directed that the defect in the law should be noted when the Act is next amended. No value can attach to opinions so obviously one-sided and halting.

We feel satisfied accordingly that s. 17 cannot be regarded as authorizing the interference of the Collector in this case. We have next to see if any other section can be held to support it. The Collector had no doubt power under s. 46 to appoint a deputy, and such a deputy would be an officiator under s. 3. Under s. 23, the Collector had power to fix the annual emoluments of the deputy, and to direct the payment thereof to the officiator. These words are large enough to cover the order issued by the Collector in this case, but the second para. of this same section provides a limitation on this power, in that it directs the Collector to assign watan property or the profits thereof towards the emoluments of officiators. The emolument is to come from the profits of the watan. This was in fact the procedure followed by the Collector in this case in the first instance, when he directed defendant No. 3 to increase the amount of the remuneration payable to defendant No. 2. Section 23 did not authorize the subsequent procedure of the Collector when he ordered plaintiff to make good the deficiency. The scale in British territory was not obligatory on the plaintiff. It was, moreover, only a maximum limit. Defendant No. 3's inam land was assessed at Rs. 60. Plaintiff, however, was not bound by this limit, as he did not accept the survey settlement. Plaintiff in fact asserted that the land yielded a profit of Rs 105, and his assertion was not challenged by defendant No. 3. This [590] resource was open to the Collector to make good the deficiency. Anyhow neither s. 23 nor s. 17 authorized the Collector's procedure so far as plaintiff was concerned. Section 16 of the Land Revenue Code also does not provide for the present case, because it does not extend to alienated villages. We accordingly hold that the levy of Rs. 171 made by the Collector was one not authorized by law, and that, under the circumstances, plaintiff had a right to recover the amount minus the sum of Rs. 21-6-8 already received by plaintiff. Defendants Nos. 2 and 3 need not have been made parties to this suit.

1894

APPELLATE CIVIL.

At a late stage of the suit, as also in the argument before us, it was urged that the present suit was not maintainable under para. 3, s. 4, of Act X of 1876. If the Collector had prima facie jurisdiction to pass the order he did, plaintiff would certainly have no right to sue to set aside or avoid the order. As it is, the Collector had no power to levy the money from plaintiff as ordered by him. The order was not passed by Government, and the Collector cannot be regarded as having been duly authorized to act illegally and without jurisdiction.

We accordingly reverse the decree and direct defendant No. 1 to pay Rs. 149-9-4 with costs to plaintiff. We disallow interest. Defendant No. 1 should bear his own costs, and plaintiff should pay the costs of other defendants Nos. 2—3.

JARDINE, J.—This appears to be the first case in which the construction of s. 17 of Bombay Act III of 1874 has come before this Court. I concur with Mr. Justice Ranade in holding that the order made by the Collector is not one that can be made under Bombay Act III of 1874, and that it is ultra vires of s. 17, which is pleaded for the Collector as giving warrant of law. I am of opinion that the payments to which s. 17 refers are those mentioned in s. 4, where it is said that the term watan property "includes a right to levy customary fees or perquisites, in money or in kind, whether at fixed times or otherwise." What the Collector did is analogous to what may be done under s. 22; but while that section places the cost of creating new watan on the Government, the Collector has placed that of the additional watan property his order seeks to [591] create, upon the inamdar. The words of the two ss. 17 and 22 differ much; and we may, therefore, infer a different meaning in each, especially as s. 23 limits the Collector to the existing watan and its profits in assigning emoluments to the officiator. Under s. 17 "the Collector may from time to time determine the amount of such payments recoverable" from the inamdar. As the scope of the section appears to be misunderstood, perhaps because the old order of things be changed, I may refer to the earlier printed records of Government where the nature of these payments is described. In Mountstuart Elphinstone's Report on the Deccan, the following statements are made:—that the patels are entitled to lands and fees, and have various little privileges and distinctions, of which they are as tenacious as of their land; that the kulkarni has lands but oftener fees; that the deshmukh, besides percentages on the revenues collected, has various claims in kind, as a pair of shoes every year from each shoe-maker, a portion of ghee from those who make that preparation, &c., &c., that the watchman was paid by a small share of the grain and similar property belonging to each house, which kept him always on the watch to ascertain his fees, whereby he knew all that took place. In the appendix to Mr. Elphinstone's report is one from Captain Grant, Political Agent at Satara, which refers to payments in grain or money to patels and kulkarnis, called Mushaira and Sirpao. The knowledge of these customary payments was present in 1874 to the framers of the Watan Act; and in such a matter I can hardly refer to a higher authority than the Hon'ble A. Rogers, then Revenue Member of Council, who gave his reason for proposing the inclusion of customary fees in s. 4 by making an historical statement as follows on the 24th August, 1874, when s. 17 was finally settled by the Bombay Legislative Council. "In different parts of the country it was the custom to levy fees and perquisites for service in various ways, sometimes in money and sometimes in kind." I notice too that on the 15th October, 1874, when the Bill passed, the Hon. F. S. Chapman, then Chief Secretary to Government, spoke of it as intended to build up from their foundations the ancient village forms of Government: and one means of doing this was by making the Collector's [592] kacheri a tribunal where the village servants of inferior status, like the Mhars, could enforce their rights to their customary fees from the rayats.

This look into the past revenue history enables us to find appropriate meaning for s. 17; and fortifies the conclusion we arrive at through the rules for interpreting statutes. The function of the Collector does not extend to the whole watan property but only to what is meant by the words "such payments." It is merely one of commutation of payments of uncertain amount by ascertaining a fixed equivalent therefor, which apparently he may express either in money or kind. There is no warrant whatever, in the language of s. 17, for supposing that he could thereby impose new burdens on the landowner in a case like this where the payment being constant already there was nothing to determine. He resembles the Land Commissioners in England under the Tithe Commutation Act or the Copyhold Acts where provision is made for ascertaining the value of such rights as heriots. But though it is not necessary for our decision to interpret the word minutely, I think the addition of the word "recoverable" in s. 17 has reference to s. 81 (though possibly it may be argued that it bars civil suit, a matter on which I express no opinion); and that what the Collector fixes is the amount which may be recovered by revenue process; he is not to recover more from the inamdar than is payable in Government villages for the same thing or on the same occasion. Thus the coercive action of the Collector is limited by the customary scale of the country as in some other revenue matters. The Collector's award of commutation appears not to be so final a judgment, as a decision under s. 18. But for the addition of the word " recoverable " I would interpret the word " determine " as was done in Queen v. Land Commissioners of England (1), where that word in the Copyhold Act 50 and 51 Vict., c. 73, was held to give finality.

We agree that the plaintiff has no cause of action against the defendants Nos. 2 and 3 ; and in the decree to be made by this Court.

[593] APPELLATE CIVIL.

Before Mr. Justice Bayley, Acting Chief Justice, and Mr. Justice Fulton.

CHANVIRAPA (Original Plaintiff), Appellant v. DANAVA AND OTHERS *(Original Defendants) Respondents. [19th July, 1894.]

Hindu law—Partition—Minor—Partition made during minority—Partition by minor's mother as guardian—Fraud—Pleadings—Suit to set aside a partition deed—Limitation Act (XV of 1877), sch. II, arts. 91 and 95.

A partition made by a mother as the guardian of her minor son, a member of an undivided Hindu family, is valid, and if just and legal, will bind the minor. When the minor arrives at full age, he may apply to have the division set aside if it can be shown to be illegal or fraudulent, or even if it was made in such an informal manner that there are no means of testing its validity.

Where fraud is charged against the defendant, the plaintiff must set forth the particulars of the fraud which he alleges.

A suit to set aside a deed of partition on the ground of fraud is governed by art. 91 or 95, sch. II of the Limitation Act (XV of 1877), and must be brought within three years after the minor plaintiff has attained majority according to s. 7 of the Act.

FIRST APPEAL from the decision of Rao Bahadur Kashinath Balkrishna Marathe, First Class Subordinate Judge of Dharwar.

Suit for a declaration that the plaintiff, as the sole surviving male member of his family, was entitled to the whole of the family property, and that a partition, which was alleged to have been effected by his mother during his minority, was invalid and not binding upon him.

The plaintiff was the son of one Malsiddapa, who died eighteen years before suit, leaving the plaintiff, his minor son, him surviving. Malsiddapa had two brothers, viz., Dodmallapa and Revansidapa, but Revansidapa separated and took his share of the property in 1872, leaving the other two still joint and undivided.

Dodmallapa, having no son, adopted one Baslingapa and died in 1887. Baslingapa (his adopted son) died childless in 1889, leaving his widow, Danava (the first defendant), him surviving.

On the 24th August, 1889, the plaintiff brought this suit claiming to be the sole surviving male member of his family and, as such, to be entitled to all the family property. He alleged that he was twenty years of age.

[594] The first defendant, Danava, alleged that in 1877 a partition had taken place between Dodmallapa and the mother of the plaintiff who was the plaintiff's guardian, and she contended that the partition had been made in good faith and was valid and binding on the plaintiff. She further pleaded, that on the death of her husband Baslingapa she had adopted Malapa, who was entitled to her husband's share. She also alleged that the plaintiff was twenty-six years of age, and contended that his claim was now barred by limitation.

The Subordinate Judge held that the plaintiff was twenty-six years of age and that the suit was not barred by limitation, and that the adoption of Malapa by Danava (defendant No. 1) was illegal, as he was the only son of his parents. He, however, also held that the alleged partition between the plaintiff's mother and Dodmallapa was proved and was valid and binding on the plaintiff, who, by his conduct, had ratified it. He, therefore, dismissed the suit.

The plaintiff appealed.

Inverarity (with Shamrav Vithal), for the appellant (plaintiff) :—We say that there was no partition, but if there was, the question is whether it is binding upon us. We contend that it was fraudulent and improper. Having been effected during our minority, the defendants must show that the partition was a fair one. But no attempt has been made to prove that it was fair and legal. The burden of proof lay heavily upon the defendant by reason of our minority, and also because the partition was effected with an illiterate woman. The mere production of the partition-deed would not assist the defendants and would not be an answer to our case—Dharmaji v. Gurrav (1). The defendants have not produced books of account. If they had done so, we would have been in a position to show that the partition was not fair. Unless the partition is proved beyond doubt to be fair and legal we are not bound by it—Kalee Sunkur v. Denendro (2).

Lang (Advocate General with Manekshah J. Taleyarkhan), for respondent No. 1 (defendant No. 1, Danava) :—This suit is to recover certain specified property and not for the rectification or [595] setting aside of the partition. The plaintiff being a minor at the time of the partition, his mother acted as his guardian. A partition by an infant's guardian has the same effect as a partition by an adult member of the family. In the plaint there are vague allegations of fraud, but such vague allegations cannot entitle the plaintiff to relief. Fraud must be distinctly and specifically stated and proved. There is no allegation in the plaint that the plaintiff did not get a fair share of the property. The partition is binding on the plaintiff until he proves that it was fraudulent and unequal. The fact that the plaintiff was a minor at the time of the partition is by itself not sufficient to set aside the partition—Mayne's Hindu Law (5th Ed.), para. 435 ; Deowanti v. Dwarkanath(3) ; Nallapa Reddi v. Balammal(4) ; Lakshmibai v. Ganpat Moroba(5); Hassan Ali v. Nazo (6) ; Rao Bahadur Singh v. Jowahir Kuar (7). As to limitation, the Judge found that the suit was not time-barred. We contend that it is time-barred. The Judge found that the plaintiff was, at the time of the institution of the suit in 1889, twenty-six years old. Plaintiff then attained majority in 1881, and he ought to have brought the suit within three years from that time—S. 7 of the Limitation Act (XIV of 1877).

Balaji A. Bhagvat, for respondents Nos. 3 and 4 (original defendants Nos. 3 and 4, Mallapa and Kotrapa).

Inverarity, in reply :—We do not recognize the alleged partition and, therefore, the suit is not one to set it aside. In fact, we claim the property as the sole surviving male member of the family. Such a suit is governed by twelve years' limitation, and as we attained majority in 1881, the suit is in time. Further, we say in our deposition that we came to know of the partition deed in 1889, and that being so, the suit is within time even if it be held to be one for setting aside the partition, and governed by three years' limitation under art. 91, sch. II of the Limitation Act.

JUDGMENT.

BAYLEY, C. J. (Acting) :—By the plaint presented on the 24th August, 1889, to the Court of the First Class Subordinate Judge [596] of Dharwar, the plaintiff, describing himself as by caste Lingayat, his age at about twenty years, and his occupation money-lending, sues as the sole owner of all undivided family property, which formerly belonged to three brothers, Dodmallapa, Revansiddapa and Malsiddapa (the plaintiff's father), Revansiddapa having divided the family property with Dodmallapa in 1872; and after alleging that his father Malsiddapa died about eighteen years ago when the plaintiff was a minor; that the family estate had not been divided amongst Dodmallapa (the father-in-law of the minor defendant) Basalingapa, who was the adopted son of Dodmallapa (the husband of the first defendant), and the plaintiff, and that Dodmallapa died about two years ago, and Basalingapa in April, 1889, each of such two last mentioned persons having left no issue; he prayed:

(1) that the Court would declare that he had full right and ownership over all the moveable and immoveable property of the family of the plaintiff that had been in the wahiwat of Dodmallapa and Baslingapa;

(2) that if the defendant should contend that Dodmallapa or Basalingapa had obtained a farkat from the mother of the plaintiff, the Court would declare that the plaintiff having been a minor at that time, that that transaction was improper and fraudulent, that it did not bind the plaintiff and did not affect his right, claiming to obtain a declaration of the plaintiff's ownership over all the property thereinafter mentioned.

The particulars of the property claimed not having been given in the plaint, and it not having been therein mentioned whether or not the property had been in the plaintiff's possession, the Court, on the 24th August, 1889, ordered that his pleader should state whether or not the possession of the property had been with the plaintiff. On a subsequent day the plaintiff's pleader gave the particulars of the property, and on presenting an application praying that the suit should be treated as one for possession, the plaint was ordered to be registered. The property claimed was finally valued in the plaint at Rs. 60,000.

The first defendant in her written statement said that the plaintiff's claim was false, and was barred by limitation. That in [597] 1877 a partition was made between Chanawirapa, mother of the plaintiff, and Dodmallapa, and the document made in respect of it had been registered. That in accordance therewith the plaintiff and his mother had been in possession of the property allotted to their respective shares and had been carrying on the wahiwat separately. That the plaintiff was fully aware that the transaction of the partition and the farkhat made in respect thereof were made in good faith, openly, and without any fraud, and that since such partition the plaintiff had no right to bring this suit, and she asked that the plaintiff's claim might be rejected, and costs awarded to her.

JULY 19.
APPELLATE CIVIL.
19 B. 593.

Upon issues framed, the Subordinate Judge found that the claim was not barred by limitation; that the plaintiff was twenty-six years old at the institution of the suit; that there was a valid partition between the plaintiff's mother acting on behalf of the plaintiff and Dodmallapa; that the plaintiff ratified it by his conduct or acquiescence, and that it should be held binding as against him; that the plaintiff could not recover the property claimed or obtain the declaration or order he sought, and he rejected the claim with costs.

The plaintiff appealed to the High Court, and among other grounds of objection to the decision of the Subordinate Judge, alleged that the same was contrary to law and against the weight of evidence; that there was no evidence to show that the plaintiff's mother signed the deed with full knowledge of its contents and that she had independent advice at the time she executed it; that the onus ought to have been thrown on defendants to show that the partition was a legal and proper one; and that the Court erred in holding the plaintiff bound by the partition without determining whether such partition was legally and properly made; and that the lower Court had held without any evidence whatever that plaintiff had ratified the alleged partition after he attained his majority.

At the hearing before us it was argued by Mr. Inverarity on behalf of the appellant that the plaintiff did not admit that the partition deed was executed; that he treated it as a nullity; that the onus lay on those who set up the partition; and that defendant must produce materials sufficient to test the validity [598] of the partition; that it was not alleged that there was any examination of accounts on behalf of plaintiff's mother, and that the partition was made between a woman of small intelligence, and Dodmallapa, then the manager of the family, and who was described by the Subordinate Judge as an adventurous trader who made a large addition to the family property.

First as to the plaintiff's age. The defendants having alleged that the plaintiff was considerably older than in his plaint he represented himself to be, the Subordinate Judge, when the case first came before him in June, 1890, framed an issue "Is the plaintiff twenty or twenty-eight years old at present?" and when he decided the case in June, 1891, found that the plaintiff was twenty-six at the institution of the suit, i.e., that he was born in 1863, so that at the date of the partition in 1877 he was fourteen years old. I see no reason to dissent from that finding, based as it was upon a deposition of the plaintiff taken down by the Mamlatdar of Ranebennur in August, 1887, (Ex. 71) when the plaintiff stated that he was then twenty-four. He, therefore, completed his eighteenth year and attained his majority in 1881.

I will next consider the frame of the suit. The execution of the deed of partition of the 28th August, 1877, (Ex. 114), having, in my opinion, been duly proved, one of the attesting witnesses thereof was a brother of the plaintiff's mother, can the plaintiff be allowed for the purposes of this suit to treat that instrument as a nullity, and throw the burden of proving that the partition was a just and fair one upon those who set it up? As stated in Mayne's Treatise on Hindu Law (5th Ed.), s. 435: "It is now quite settled that a partition made during the minority of one of the members will be valid, and if just and legal, will bind him, and when he arrives at full age he may apply to have the division set aside as regards himself, if it can be shown to have been illegal or fraudulent, or even if it was made in such an informal manner that there are no means of testing its validity." The evidence shows that the partition was acted on from the time that it was effected, not only by the defendants, but by the plaintiff's mother, and afterwards by him, his mother stating before the Registrar when she admitted execution of the deed that as guardian of the plaintiff, she had received the share allotted [599] to him of the value of Rs. 25,700. No issue was raised or asked for in the lower Court as to whether the partition was illegal as regards the plaintiff, and I agree with the Subordinate Judge that there was no proof that it was unfair or unjust as regards him.

The argument on behalf of the plaintiff is that it is not necessary to set aside the partition, as he seeks to recover possession of the family property on his title as the last surviving male member of the family,—an argument, no doubt, of much dexterity, but in my opinion clearly an unsound one. A similar contention was put forward in Jagadamba Chowdhrani v. Dakhina Mohun (1) where an adoption was relied on in answer to a claim made by the plaintiffs as heirs. The Judicial Committee of the Privy Council say (p. 92): "It is ingeniously argued for the plaintiffs that they are suing, not to set aside any adoption, but to recover possession on their prima facie title as heirs, that it is the defendants who have to allege and prove adoption, and that on their failure to do so, it will not be set aside, but taken as never having existed. But the answer is that the defendants are in possession in the character of adopted sons; the prima facie title is with them, and until that is displaced they ought to retain possession.....But whatever the mode of pleading, there is but one issue on the merits of the case, namely, the validity or invalidity of the adoptions, by virtue of which alone the defendants hold their property. If the validity is proved, the plaintiffs cannot succeed in their claim." Their Lordships state (p. 93) that in the earliest case cited at the bar from the Sadar Divani Adalat Reports for 1850, it was held that the plaintiffs had a cause of action when possession was taken under colour of an adoption, Mr. Justice Colvin saying "The plain remedy for the plaintiff was to sue to set aside the succession by adoption as declared and perfected. The present plaint is a mere attempt to evade the consequences of that neglect, and to bring the adoption to an issue under colour of a statement of continued possession of the adopting widow." Their Lordships, therefore, held that the suit by the reversionary heirs, of the husband brought more than twelve years after the adoption [600] was barred by art. 129 of Act IX of 1871, the article dealing with suits to establish or set aside an adoption.

The same point came again before the Privy Council in 1892—Mohesh Narain Munshi v. Taruck Nath Moitra (2). Their Lordships say (p. 35): "The present is not a suit in which the plaintiff expressly asks for a decree to 'set aside' the defendant's adoption, or to obtain a declaration that the 'adoption was invalid,'" which would probably be a more apt expression to use. The plaintiff merely asks for a declaration of his right, and that possession may be given to him of the properties in dispute. But this, in the circumstances, obviously involves the setting aside of the defendant's adoption, or in effect a judgment or finding by the Court that the adoption is invalid, for the defence of possession founded on the adoption directly involves the decision of the question—was the adoption invalid? In the case of Jagadamba Chowdhrani v. Dakhina Mohun (1), which was very fully argued and carefully considered, it was settled that a suit to set aside an adoption within the meaning of these words in the Limitation Act need not be a suit having declaratory conclusions, but that any suit in which the decree prayed for involves the decision of the question of validity of an adoption set up in defence, is a suit to set aside an adoption.

In a case decided by the High Court at Allahabad in 1889, Hasan Ali v. Nazo (1), a Mahomedan, who in October, 1875, executed a deed of gift of his property to his two daughters, the defendants, under which possession was taken by them, died in 1885, never having taken any steps to have the deed of gift set aside. In 1886 a suit was brought by his nephew, claiming a share in the donor's estate by right of inheritance, and by having it declared that the deed was procured from the donor by fraud and undue influence. It was held that as a suit by the donor to set aside the deed would at the time of his death be barred by art. 91 of the Limitation Act (XV of 1877), such a suit was also barred against the plaintiff, who claimed through him, the cancelment of the deed being a substantial and necessary incident of the claim, and the necessity which rested on the plaintiff for [601] obtaining such cancelment before he could dislodge the donees not being obviated by his choosing to call the suit one for possession of immoveable property. The Court relied upon the case I have already referred to—Jagadamba Chowdhrani v. Dakdina Mohun (2).

The present suit must, in my opinion, be regarded as one to set aside the deed of partition executed by the plaintiff's mother on his behalf on the 28th August, 1877, on the ground that it was unfair and fraudulent as against him. In the 2nd para. of his prayer, as already pointed out, the plaintiff asks that if the defendant should contend that a farkhat, i.e., the deed of partition, had been obtained from his mother, the Court will declare that the plaintiff having been a minor at that time, such transaction was improper and fraudulent, and that it does not bind the plaintiff or affect his right. The plaint, however, until the 2nd para. of the prayer is reached, does not charge any fraud, or allude in any manner to the partition effected in 1877. It was, however, held by the Privy Council in Gunga Narain Gupta v. Tiluckram Chowdhry (3), that where fraud is the ground of action, the particulars thereof must be set forth in the plaint, which otherwise should be ordered under s. 53 of the Civil Procedure Code to be amended or rejected. Their Lordships say (p. 121): "When fraud is charged against the defendants it is an acknowledged rule of pleading that the plaintiff must set forth the particulars of the fraud which he alleges. Lord Selborne said in Wallingford v. Mutual Society (4): 'With regard to fraud, if there be any principle, which is perfectly well settled, it is that general allegations, however strong may be the words in which they are stated, are insufficient even to amount to an averment of fraud of which any Court ought to take notice.'" The suit in that case had been brought in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of the zilla Goalpara, in the Bengal Presidency, where efficient legal advice would doubtless be more difficult to procure than it would be in Calcutta. See also a recent decision on the same point in this Court—Krishnaji v. Wamanji (5). The present suit, having regard to its real nature, appears to be defective, disclosing no [602] cause of action, as no particulars of the fraud, which form the ground of the suit, are set forth in the plaint.

APPELLATE CIVIL.

Assuming, however, that the suit is well framed, I am of opinion that it is barred by the law of limitation. The suit being substantially one to set aside the deed of partition of August, 1877, art. 95 or 91 of Act XV of 1877 would apply, as it is either a suit for relief on the ground of fraud, or to cancel or set aside an instrument not provided for, which must be brought within three years from the time when the fraud becomes known to the party wronged, or when the facts entitling the plaintiff to have the instrument cancelled or set aside become known to him. Under s. 7 of that Act the plaintiff could institute his suit within the same period after his disability as a minor had ceased as would otherwise have been allowed from the time prescribed therefor, viz., three years. Having attained his majority in 1881, he should, assuming that he had full knowledge of the facts, have brought his suit in or before 1884. Not having brought it until the 24th August, 1889, and having been fully aware of the circumstances entitling him (if at all) to have the instrument cancelled or set aside, and of the fraud and unfairness which he alleges were practised on his mother from the time of his attaining his majority if not before, although he professed his ignorance thereof until shortly before he instituted his suit, his suit was brought five years too late, and is consequently barred by limitation.

Upon the merits of the case I concur in the view taken by the Subordinate Judge.

The plaintiff in his evidence (Ex. 72) admitted that his mother belonged to a rich family, so that she could doubtless have procured competent advice if she wished for it. He said that she was idiotic. Her evidence in the witness-box created a very unfavourable impression on the Subordinate Judge, who states that she began to dissemble at the very commencement of her examination, denying knowledge even of the most familiar circumstances which it is impossible for women to pass unnoticed. There is nothing to show that the plaintiff's mother was so ignorant as to be unable to secure her son's interests by a partition between Dodmallapa and the plaintiff. She was in all [603] probability assisted by her brother, who attested the deed of partition, which he is not likely to have done, if he had thought that in the partition the interest of his nephew, the plaintiff, had not been duly cared for and protected. In Nallappa Reddi v. Balammal (1), it was held that there being no proof of fraud, or that undue advantage was taken of the plaintiff's minority, and in the absence of proof of gross inequality in the distribution of the property, the division was valid and binding upon the plaintiff.

On the 14th October, 1873, when Revansiddapa separated and divided the family property with Dodmallapa (Ex. 116), the whole property was then valued at Rs. 36,225, of which Revansidda took his one-third share of the value of Rs. 12,075. Dodmallapa, by his successful trading and as manager of the remaining undivided family property, made large additions to it, so that when the partition, which the plaintiff now complains of, was made in 1877, its value had increased to Rs. 51,400, of which the plaintiff's mother acting on his behalf and as his natural guardian took one-half, viz., Rs. 25,700, and she and the plaintiff have had the exclusive use thereof ever since. I think that the evidence clearly shows that from the time that the plaintiff completed his eighteenth year in 1881 until he instituted this suit in 1889 he adopted and ratified many transactions entered into by his mother, and that by his conduct and acquiescence during that period he must be taken to have ratified the partition made on his behalf by his mother in 1877. It is noteworthy, too, that the plaintiff did not bring his suit until two years after the death of Dodmallapa, and until four months after that of Balsingapa, the adopted son of Dodmallapa, although he had for many years known all circumstances on which he now relies in his attempt to get rid of the partition made in 1877. He and his advisers were doubtless aware of the hopeless nature of such a suit had it been brought while those two persons were alive.

For the above reasons, I am of opinion that the plaintiff's claim is an unfounded one, besides being barred by the law of limitation, and that we should, therefore, confirm the decree of the [604] First Class Subordinate Judge at Dharwar, and dismiss the appeal with costs.

FULTON, J.—I concur with the learned Chief Justice in thinking that the decree must be confirmed. The principal argument put forward on behalf of the appellant was that a partition with a minor was not binding unless a fair share were allotted to him, and that in the present case it was impossible to determine that a fair share had been allotted because there were no materials from which to form an opinion. A good deal was said about the burden of proof in a case of this kind, but I think Mr. Inverarity successfully established the proposition that in the first instance it is for the person who alleges a partition with a minor to prove that it was a fair one. Mr. Mayne in dealing with the subject says, para. 435: "It is now quite settled that a partition made during the minority of one of the members will be valid and, if just and legal, will bind him. Of course his interests ought to be represented by his guardian or some one acting on his behalf though I imagine the fact of his not being so represented would be no ground for opening up the partition if a proper one in other respects." Reference may also be made to West and Bühler's Digest, p. 672, and Dr. Jolly's History of the Hindu law, pp. 99, 100, 128 and 129. The test of the validity of the partition appears to be its fairness.

Accepting, however, this criterion it seems to me that "fairness of partition" can be established not only by direct evidence of the amount of the family property and the method of its division, but also by proof of circumstances from which it can properly be inferred. In the present case I think such circumstances exist, in the fact that the partition deed was signed by the plaintiff's mother and attested by her brother; that the families have lived and traded apart just as if they were divided; and that the plaintiff, who must have attained the age of eighteen, about eight years before the institution of this suit, and who was about fourteen at the time of the alleged partition, never complained of its unfairness, until after the death of Baslingapa it became his interest to do so in order to obtain the property of the deceased. Our attention was called to the case of Kalee Sunkur v. [605] Denendro (1), which is referred to by Mr. Mayne in support of the proposition that a minor, when he arrives at full age, may apply to have a division set aside if it was made in such an informal manner that there are no means of testing its validity. An examination, however, of that case shows that the circumstances were different from those now under consideration, inasmuch as the minor's proper guardian was not a party to the partition, no partition deed was drawn up, and the minor complained as soon as he came of age. On the other hand, reference may be made to the case of Nallappa Reddi v. Ballammal (2), in which it seems that the fact of the mother of a minor being a party to the partition was accepted as prima facie proof of the fairness of the division. In the case of Deowanti v. Dwarka Nath (1) no question as to the fairness of the partition appears to have arisen, but the Calcutta High Court held that a partition could undoubtedly be effected between one adult coparcener and a minor duly represented by his guardian. I refer to these decisions, but at the same time it must be remembered that the question of fairness of partition is probably one of fact to be determined by the circumstances of each case in regard to which not much assistance can be got from precedents. In the present case the fact that a partition deed was executed in 1877 between Dodmallapa and the plaintiff's mother is clearly proved. So far as the document goes, it seems a fair division which takes into account a substantial increase in the family property since the partition with Revansiddapa in 1873. It was urged, however, that further proof of the fairness of a transaction between an astute man of business and an illiterate woman under his control who now professes to know nothing whatever about it, is required. This may doubtless be conceded. But to my mind the fairness of the division is proved partly by the fact that the brother of the lady was a witness to the document and more conclusively by the conduct of the plaintiff himself, who, though he apparently has been of age since 1881, does not seem ever to have questioned its propriety till after the death of Baslingapa in 1889. The first of these facts appears to be of considerable importance, for though an attesting witness very often knows [606] nothing of the contents of the document to which he attaches his signature, the circumstance that in a family arrangement of this kind the mother's brothers should be called in to attest, indicates that there was no secrecy about it. Such an attestation under the circumstances would probably have some weight in any country, and is, I think, entitled to special consideration in the Mofussil in India, where, as pointed out in West and Bühler's Digest, p. 233, witnesses are usually intended to attest not merely the signature but also the transaction. Unfortunately this brother is dead, so that it is impossible to ascertain with greater certainty what part he took in the matter, but as he was a man of some education—vide witness 74—it seems probable that he would ascertain the contents of the deed which his sister was signing. The strongest circumstance, however, against the plaintiff is his own conduct in doing nothing until 1889. It was contended that there was no proof that he knew of the partition deed, and there is certainly no direct proof, but it is highly improbable that he should have been ignorant of it, considering that even when it was executed he was not a very young child, and that it was signed by his mother, and attested by his uncle and four other witnesses who are not shown to have been in league with Dodmallapa or to have had any object at the time in keeping the matter secret. That the plaintiff is really a great deal older than he alleges, seems clear, having regard to Ex. 71. There is no reason for supposing that in 1887 he misrepresented his age to the Mamlatdar or that the latter did not correctly record what he said. Even supposing it to be possible that he was ignorant of the partition deed, he must have known that he was ostensibly living and trading as a separate member of the family and have also been aware of his uncle's reputed wealth, and on his death he would not have acquiesced in its all being kept by Baslingapa if he thought he had not got his proper share. But in Ex. 71 we find him going to the Mamlatdar to signify his assent to Baslinga's name being substituted for Dodmallapa's in the revenue accounts. Of course, if the members of the family were living in union, such an assent might be given ; but the fact seems that they were not, and if the plaintiff supposed that there had been no partition, and that he was merely trading [607] with small sums advanced to him by his uncle out of the common stock, I should have expected that on his uncle's death he would at least have ascertained what that common stock was, even if he did not think it necessary to demand his share. But he did nothing at that time in assertion of his rights.

The above circumstances seem to me to afford prima facie grounds for the belief that a fair partition was made in 1877. To rebut this presumption the plaintiff has made no serious attempt to show that as a fact he got less than his share. He would, it is true, have a difficulty in showing the real amount of the moveable property, but there was some immoveable property about which evidence might have been given. Mr. Inverarity laid much stress on the non-production of Dodmallapa's accounts, but making due allowance for this circumstance I think it is insufficient to support an inference that the partition was unfair. The plaintiff himself has not produced any books, though as he has had separate transactions it might have been expected that he would have kept some from which to show the capital at his disposal. It is impossible to say what accounts Dodmallapa kept. Exhibit 108 refers to a bot khata or ledger which he kept in 1883 containing accounts with individual debtors, but though it is probable that he kept other accounts it is not proved that he did so. Exhibit 104 shows that Baslinga produced no books when his income-tax was being assessed. Mr. Inverarity urged that whereas according to the partition deed Dodmallapa's capital was only Rs. 25,700 in 1877, the widow of Baslinga had in 1889 to pay duty on Rs. 60,000 : but this increase may be due to Dodmallapa's success in business like the increase between 1873 and 1877. He also pointed out that the bonds shown to have been transferred to the plaintiff or his mother were for a very small amount, about Rs. 2,500, but we have no means of knowing how many bonds were really handed over.

Looking to all the circumstances I think, considering the apparent absence of any attempt at secrecy in the partition, the fact that the deed was signed by the mother and attested by her brother and other witnesses, and that for years the plaintiff seems to have acquiesced in the position in which he was placed, [608] the only reasonable conclusion to come to is that it was a fair partition and, therefore, binding on the plaintiff.

Under these circumstances there is no necessity to go into the question arising as to the validity of the alleged adoption by Danava.

ALOO NATHU AND OTHERS (Original Defendants), Applicants v. GAGUBHA DIPSANGJI, A MINOR, BY THE ADMINISTRATOR OF HIS ESTATE, THE COLLECTOR OF AHMEDABAD (Original Plaintiff), *Opponent. [6th July and 28th August, 1894.]

Judge—Bias—Possessory suit in a Mamlatdar's Court—Mamlatdars acting in the management of the property under the orders of the Talukdari Settlement Officer—Disqualification of the Mamlatdar as a Judge.

No Judge can act in any matter in which he has any pecuniary interest, nor where he has any interest, though not a pecuniary one, sufficient to create a real bias.

A Mamlatdar who under the orders of the Talukdari Settlement Officer had acted in the management of the property in dispute in a possessory suit before him, was held to have such an interest as to disqualify him from trying the case.

Where an officer of Government has in the course of his executive duties formed an opinion upon a matter and has acted upon that opinion, or sought to give effect to it as an agent on behalf of a public body which has become a litigant in a cause, the law will presume an interest creating a bias sufficient to disqualify him as a Judge.

[R., 2 L.B.R. 281.]

APPLICATION under the extraordinary jurisdiction (s. 622 of the Civil Procedure Code, Act XIV of 1882) against the decision of Rao Saheb G. G. Desai, Mamlatdar of Dhandhuka in the Ahmedabad District, passed in a possessory suit.

The Collector of Ahmedabad as the administrator of the estate of one Gagubha Dipsangji, a minor, instituted a suit against the defendants in the Court of the Mamlatdar of Dhandhuka to recover possession of certain fields under the Mamlatdars Act (Bombay Act III of 1876). The defendants claimed to be permanent tenants.

[609] The estate of the plaintiff was managed by the Collector of Ahmedabad, and the Mamlatdar had taken part in the management under the orders of the Talukdari Settlement Officer.

During the progress of the suit the defendants applied to the Mamlatdar for the transfer of the case from his Court to some other Court on the ground that he was interested in the subject-matter of the suit, but the application was rejected.

The Mamlatdar awarded the claim.

The defendants then presented an application to the High Court under its extraordinary jurisdiction and obtained a rule nisi calling upon the plaintiff to show cause why the decision of the Mamlatdar should not be set aside on the ground (inter alia) that as the Collector carried on the management of the minor's estate through the Talukdari Settlement Officer and the Mamlatdar, the Mamlatdar was wrong in hearing and deciding the suit.

Nagindas Tulsidas Marphatia, for the applicants (defendants).—The Mamlatdar of Dhandhuka was not competent to decide the suit. He manages the estate under the orders of the Collector and Talukdari Settlement Officer. As a Judge he would uphold the action of his superior officers.

Rao Saheb Vasudeo J. Kirtikar, Government Pleader, for the opponent (plaintiff).—The Mamlatdar simply acts as an executive and ministerial officer under the orders of the Collector and the Talukdari Settlement Officer in connection with the subject-matter of the suit, and that being so he cannot have any bias as a judicial officer—Queen v. Rand (1). It has been held that a Magistrate who is a witness in a case is not disqualified from disposing of it—Queen v. Farrant (2). These authorities show that even supposing that the Mamlatdar may have held a consultation with the Collector and the Talukdari Settlement Officer with respect to the lands in suit, and may have expressed his opinion to those officers, still these circumstances would not disqualify him from disposing of the case. The question to be considered is, whether the Mamlatdar has shown any bias in recording and appreciating the evidence, and we submit that he has not shown any such bias.

[610] The Mamlatdar rejected the application for the transfer of the case because it was made at the last stage.

JUDGMENT.

FULTON, J.—The plaintiff is a minor under the guardianship of the Collector of Ahmedabad, who manages the estate through the Talukdari Settlement Officer, and the question which we have to determine is, whether the Mamlatdar, who acts in the management of the property under the orders of the Talukdari Settlement Officer, has such an interest in the plaintiff's affairs as to disqualify him from trying this case.

The subject is fully discussed in the case of Loburi Domini v. The Assam Railway and Trading Company, Ld. (3), which shows that where an officer of Government has in the course of his executive duties "formed an opinion upon a matter and has acted upon that opinion, or sought to give effect to it as an agent on behalf of a public body which has become a litigant part in a cause," the law will presume an interest creating a bias sufficient to disqualify him as a Judge. This principle, as remarked by Mr. Justice Field, does not rightly reflect any unworthy suspicion upon an individual Judge, while it secures and upholds one of the great pillars of judicial purity. No Judge can act in any matter in which he has any pecuniary interest—Dimes v. The Proprietors of the Grand Junction Canal (4), nor where he has an interest, though not a pecuniary one, sufficient to create a real bias. "Whenever there is a real likelihood that the Judge would, from kindred or any other cause, have a bias in favour of one of the parties, it would be very wrong in him to act"—Queen v. Rand (1).

The circumstances constituting an interest from which a bias may be presumed, vary in each case. In the present case the Collector in his affidavit has stated that the Mamlatdar was simply a ministerial officer carrying out the orders of the Talukdari Settlement Officer who has been managing the minor's estate on behalf of the Collector, and that he was not connected with the management otherwise than as acting under the orders of the Talukdari Settlement Officer. But this affidavit is not sufficiently full to enable us to determine whether or not the [611] Mamlatdar was interested in the management of this estate in such a way as to render it probable that he would have a bias in favour of the plaintiff; and before deciding this question we should like to know whether in his correspondence with the Talukdari Settlement Officer he was in the habit of expressing his opinion and advising generally on the management of the estate, and whether in this particular case he had made any recommendation as to the desirability or otherwise of taking proceedings against the defendants or against other tenants similarly situated. From the affidavit it appears that the suit was suggested by the mother of the minor and the talati of Rojka, but we desire to be informed whether or not the Mamlatdar was consulted on the subject, and must call on the Government Pleader to obtain a further affidavit on this point from the Collector or Talukdari Settlement Officer.

It was urged that this suit must be brought in this Mamlatdar's Court, as there was none other competent to entertain it. But the Subordinate Judge's Court had concurrent jurisdiction, and the mere fact that its procedure may not be so expeditious as the Mamlatdars,' does not justify any argument founded on necessity.

With these remarks we must now adjourn the further hearing of this application for a month, in order to enable the Government Pleader to procure the necessary affidavit.

JUDGMENT CONTINUED.

1894, August 28. FULTON, J.—The Government Pleader states that the Collector is unable to make the affidavit called for, as he is not prepared to state that the Mamlatdar was on no occasion consulted about the management of this estate, and that it is quite possible and likely that he was consulted previous to the institution of the proceedings. The rule must, therefore, be made absolute and the decree must be set aside with costs in this Court.

Rule made absolute.

Under Bombay Act VIII of 1867, the police patel has to do much more than merely in form the district police. He has himself to investigate the matter of a crime and obtain all procurable evidence. Under s. 11 of the Act, if an unnatural or sudden death occur, or any corpse be found, he must forthwith hold an inquest and investigate with the panch the causes of death and all the circumstances of the case, and make a written report of the same. APPEAL from the conviction and sentence recorded by A. S. Moriarty, Acting Sessions Judge of Ratnagiri.

The accused pleaded guilty to the charge of murder, and was sentenced to death under s. 302 of the Indian Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860).

The sentence was passed subject to confirmation by the High Court.

The accused appealed from the conviction and sentence to the High Court, urging that he was prompted to commit the offence of murder by evil destiny.

JUDGMENT.

JARDINE, J.—The prisoner, who confessed to the murder both before the committing Magistrate and the Court of Sessions, fully admits his guilt in his appeal to this Court. His petition merely [613] urges that he was predestined to kill the old woman and she to be killed by him. We confirm the conviction and sentence.

In several recent cases we have noticed a laxity on the part of police patels, which the Government Pleader is unable to explain by referring us to any directions of the Government or of the district authorities. The ancient village system of police, regulated formerly by Reg. IV of 1818 and Reg. XII of 1827 and now by Bombay Act VIII of 1867, remains unaffected by the Code of Criminal Procedure, except where the Code contains a specific provision. Under the local law the police patel has to do much more than merely inform the District Police under s. 10 thereof, or under s. 45 of the Code. Under s. 10 he has himself to investigate the matter of a crime and obtain all procurable evidence. Under s. 11, if any unnatural or sudden death occur, or any corpse be found, the police patel shall forthwith assemble an inquest and investigate with the panch the causes of death and all the circumstances of the case, and make written report of the same. If from the inquest it appears that the death was unlawfully caused, he must give immediate notice to the police station and, if the state of the corpse permits, he shall at once forward it to the Civil Surgeon or other appointed medical officer. Under s. 12 the police patel can make arrests, and under s. 13 can take evidence on solemn affirmation, and hold searches.

When he has held an inquest the village headman is required by s. 174 of the Code to report the result to the nearest Magistrate authorized to hold inquests.

In the case before us the patel does not appear to have held the inquest. Neither did he at once send on the body. We have to remark that the command of the law that certain things be done by the police patel, or be done at once or forthwith, is likely to be defeated if this officer refrains from the proper action until such time as the district police officers have come to the village. In cases of crimes it is obvious that the inquiries and searches that often lead to a knowledge of the perpetrators and are followed by arrests should be at least as prompt as the plain words of the law require. The public order is preserved by each [614] public officer doing such things as belong to his duty, and there is danger if a practice grows up whereby any officer shifts his peculiar duty on to some other officer. We will send a copy of this judgment to the District Magistrate.

RAMABAI AND ANOTHER (Original Defendants), Appellants v. RANGRAV AND OTHERS (Original Plaintiffs), *Respondents.
RANGRAV AND OTHERS (Original Plaintiffs), Appellants v. RAMABAI AND ANOTHER.† [3rd August, 1894.]

Adoption—Reversioner, suit by, to set aside an adoption by a Hindu widow—Right of suit—Remote reversioners—Watan property—Bombay Act V of 1886, s. 2 (1).

The right to sue to set aside an adoption by a Hindu widow is, as a general rule, limited to the nearest reversionary heir, and if he without sufficient cause refuses to institute proceedings, or if he has precluded himself by his own act and conduct from so doing, or has colluded with the widow, or concurred in the alleged wrongful act, the next presumable reversioner will be entitled to sue. In such a case, upon a plaint stating the circumstances under which the more distant reversioner claims to sue, the Court must exercise a judicial discretion in determining whether the remote reversioner is entitled to sue, and should require the nearer reversioner to be made a party to the suit.

Raghunath, a separated Hindu, died possessed of certain property, a portion of which was watan land, and left him surviving a widow Ramabai, a daughter Manubai and the plaintiffs, who were his brother's sons. Subsequently Ramabai adopted Vishvanath as a son. Manubai (the daughter), who lived with Ramabai and Vishvanath, did not take any steps to dispute the alleged adoption. The plaintiffs now sued for a declaration that the adoption, if made in fact, was invalid, and that they were entitled to succeed to the property of Raghunath on the death of his widow Ramabai.

Held, that as the plaintiffs were entitled under s. 2 of Bombay Act V of 1886 to succeed to the watan property in preference to Manubai after the death of Ramabai, [615] and were the presumptive reversionary heirs after Ramabai to the watan property and the only persons interested in disputing the adoption so far as the watan property was concerned, the lower Court exercised a proper discretion in allowing the suit to be maintained by the plaintiffs.

Rani Anund v. The Court of Wards (2) and Kooer Gulab Sing v. Rav Kurun Sing (3), referred to and followed.

THESE were cross-appeals from the decision of Rao Bahadur Chunilal Maneklal, First Class Subordinate Judge of Poona.

One Raghunath Shripat Chandrachud died on the 11th January, 1888, leaving him surviving his widow Ramabai and a daughter Manubai. On the 16th May, 1890, Ramabai adopted a son called Vishvanath.

APPELLATE CIVIL.
19 B. 614.

In 1892 the plaintiffs Rangrav Krishna Chandrachud and four others, who were the nephews (brother's sons) of the deceased Raghunath, brought the present suit against Ramabai and Vishvanath to set aside the adoption and to establish their right to succeed to Raghunath's property, a portion of which was service watan. The plaintiffs contended that Ramabai had only a life-interest in the property of her deceased husband; that the adoption of Vishvanath had not, as a matter of fact, taken place; but that, even supposing that it had taken place, it was invalid, inasmuch as (1) Vishvanath was not a sagotra and had been married before the date of the alleged adoption and (2) the deceased Raghunath had prohibited Ramabai from adopting a son. They claimed to be entitled to succeed to the property on the death of Ramabai.

The defendants denied the alleged prohibition, and contended that Vishvanath had been validly adopted.

The Judge found that the adoption of Vishvanath would not have been invalid on the grounds alleged in the plaint if it had been proved to have taken place, but that the fact of the adoption had not been proved; that the deceased being admittedly a separated Hindu, his daughter was entitled to succeed to his property except the watan property which could not be inherited by a female other than the widow of the deceased; that the plaintiffs being divided members of the family of the deceased were entitled to bring the suit to set aside Vishvanath's adoption only as to the watan property, and that a certain will which the plaintiffs [616] had produced at the trial in support of their allegation that Ramabai was prohibited from adopting, was not proved. He, therefore, held that the adoption of Vishvanath was invalid so far as the watan property was concerned, but rejected the rest of the plaintiffs' claim.

The parties preferred cross-appeals.

Mahadev Chimnaji Apte, for the appellants (original defendants) in appeal No. 105.—The Judge was wrong in allowing the plaintiffs' claim with respect to the watan property. His decree has the effect of partially setting aside Vishvanath's adoption. An adoption cannot be partially held to be good and partially set aside. If the adoption is good with respect to one kind of property, it is good with respect to the other property also. Next, we contend that the plaintiffs are not reversioners, because Manubai, the daughter of the deceased, is alive and she will succeed as the heiress of her father Raghunath after the death of his widow Ramabai. Manubai ought to have been joined as a party to the suit. It is true that she being a female cannot succeed to the watan property. The plaintiffs, as reversioners, are entitled to succeed to that property if the adoption of Vishvanath be held not proved. If, however, the adoption be held proved, then the plaintiffs would neither be presumptive nor contingent reversioners, and the suit must fail (Evidence in support of the adoption was referred to and the case was argued on the facts.)

Balkrishna N. Bhajekar, for the respondents (original plaintiffs) in appeal No. 105.—We are the nearest reversioners after the daughter, and are, therefore, entitled to bring the present suit. The daughter has a right to bring a suit to set aside Vishvanath's adoption, but as she does not choose to do so, we are entitled to sue in order to preserve our interest in the property—Bhikaji Apaji v. Jagannath Vital (1); Rani Anund v. The Court of Wards (2): Kooer Gclab Sing v. Rao Kurun Sing (3).

JUDGMENT.

FARREN, J.—The first question which presents itself for determination is as to the right of the plaintiffs to maintain this suit, for a declaration that the defendant Vishvanath was not adopted [617] in fact by Ramabai to her husband Raghunath, and that, if adopted in fact, he was not validly adopted.

Raghunath died on the 11th January, 1888, without male issue, but leaving his widow Ramabai and his daughter Manubai. He was a separated Hindu. The plaintiffs, his brother's sons, in the absence of Manubai, would be Raghunath's nearest heirs after Raghunath's widow. The allegation of the defendants is that Vishvanath was adopted by Ramabai on the 16th May, 1890. This adoption the plaintiffs contest in fact and in law.

Manubai, it is admitted, lives with the defendant Ramabai and the alleged adopted son. She has taken no steps to dispute the alleged adoption, and presumably does not intend to take any. Portion of the property left by the deceased is watan land, and under s. 2 of Bombay Act V of 1886 every female member of a watan family other than the widow of the last male owner shall be postponed to the male members of the family.

The law upon this subject is laid down in Rani Anund v. The Court of Wards (1) in the following terms:—"Their Lordships are of opinion that although a suit of this nature may be brought by a contingent reversionary heir, yet that, as a general rule, it must be brought by the presumptive reversionary heir, that is to say, by the person who would succeed if the widow were to die at that moment. They are also of opinion that such a suit may be brought by a more distant reversioner if those nearer in succession are in collusion with the widow, or have precluded themselves from interfering. They consider that the rule laid down in Bhikaji Apaji v. Jagannath Vithal (2) is correct. It cannot be the law that any one who may have a possibility of succeeding on the death of the widow can maintain a suit of the present nature; for, if so, the right to sue would belong to every one in the line of succession, however remote. The right to sue must, in their Lordships' opinion, be limited. If the nearest reversionary heir refuses, without sufficient cause, to institute proceedings, or if he has precluded himself by his own act or conduct from suing, or has colluded with the widow, or concurred in the act alleged to be wrongful, the next presumable reversioner would be [618] entitled to sue: see Kooer Golab Sing v. Rao Kurun Sing (3). In such a case, upon a plaint stating the circumstances under which the more distant reversionary heir claims to sue, the Court must exercise a judicial discretion in determining whether the remote reversioner is entitled to sue, and would probably require the nearer reversioner to be made a party to the suit."

Adopting, as we are bound to do, the principles thus pointed out, we think that the lower Court has exercised a proper discretion in allowing the plaintiffs, the presumptive reversionary heirs after the widow to the watan property, and the only persons at present interested, in so far as the watan is concerned, in disputing the adoption, to maintain this suit. We think, however, that that Court would have exercised a still more full discretion if it had directed the plaintiffs to add a paragraph to their plaint as to the facts stated in the proceding paragraph of this judgment and caused Manubai to be added as a defendant to the suit. We shall not, however, at this stage direct these amendments.

Reluctant though we are to differ from the Court below on a question of fact, we feel unable to accept the conclusion that the adoption of Vishvanath by Ramabai did not take place. Exhibit 48 (as well as other evidence) proves that she before the date of the alleged adoption was anxious, even eager, to adopt the defendant Vishvanath as her son, and that she went on or about the 15th May, 1890, to Poona in order to adopt him. While there she undoubtedly had an adoption paper drawn out, which in the most careful language recites the fact of the adoption having taken place. She went to the trouble of having this witnessed by some twelve persons, some of them well-known residents of Poona. This deed she subsequently got registered. Under these circumstances it would require very slight evidence to prove that she actually performed the simple act or ceremony of adoption which she had taken such pains to authenticate. Why she should not have performed it, seems inexplicable, if she did not do so. She affirms that she did. She can have no motive for saying that she did adopt the defendant Vishvanath if she did not, for she [619] can do so now if so minded. She has called three witnesses to the factum of the adoption, viz., the priest, the writer of the adoption paper, and another man who says that he was present on the occasion. No effort is made to shake the testimony of these witnesses by cross-examination. No evidence is called to refute it. The reason why none of the bhaubands were present, is explained by the ill-feeling between them and the lady, and their dislike to have a stranger introduced into the family while boys born in it were available for adoption. We cannot disbelieve this probable and apparently true story merely because there is a seeming contradiction between the evidence of Ramabai given in another matter before suit and that of the witnesses now called on her behalf as to the exact place where the ceremony took place. We say seeming contradiction, because it is open to many possible explanations, and the lady was not asked to account for it. If asked, she might have shown that it was no real contradiction at all. It was the duty of the plaintiffs' pleader if he intended to rely upon this contradiction to have called the lady's attention to it and given her the opportunity of explanation. We feel confident, in the above state of the evidence, that the adoption in fact took place, and consider that the issue should have been found in that sense. [Upon the evidence their Lordships held (agreeing with the Subordinate Judge) that the will set up by the plaintiffs to prove that the adoption was prohibited, was not proved. In the result the appeal by the defendants (No. 105) was allowed, and the plaintiffs' claim dismissed. The appeal by the plaintiffs (No. 118) was dismissed with costs.]

Claim dismissed.

[620] APPELLATE CIVIL.

Before Mr. Justice Jardine and Mr. Justice Ranade.

HARJIVAN (Original Plaintiff), Appellant, v. SHIVRAM AND OTHERS (Original Defendants). *Respondents. [7th August, 1894.]

Limitation Act (XV of 1877), art. 144—Adverse possession—Symbolical possession—Effect of symbolical possession against third parties—Auction-purchaser—His right to tack on his own possession to that of judgment-debtor.

The property in dispute belonged to one Dhondi. He sold it to Arjun on 25th April, 1873, but did not put the vendee into possession. On 18th April, 1883, Arjun sold the property to the plaintiff.

On 4th June, 1883, in execution of a money-decree against Dhondi the property was put up to sale as his, and was purchased by the defendants, who were put into possession by the Court on 26th March, 1885.

On 28th March, 1885, the plaintiff sued Arjun and Dhondi's wife (Dhondi being then in prison) to recover possession of the property. A decree was passed, in execution of which he obtained symbolical possession through the Court on 8th February, 1886. When he sought to take actual possession, he was resisted by the defendants.

Thereupon the plaintiff filed the present suit on 19th December, 1889, to obtain actual possession of the property from the defendants.

Held, that the suit was barred under art. 144 of the Limitation Act (XV of 1877). The defendants had a right to tack on the period of their own adverse possession as against the plaintiff to that of Dhondi's adverse possession as against Arjun. The symbolical possession obtained by the plaintiff did not break up the continuity of the adverse possession of the defendants and the person through whom they derived their title.

[D., 19 A. 499 ; 25 B. 358.]

SECOND APPEAL from the decision of R. S. Tipnis, Acting Judge of Thana, in appeal No. 458 of 1890.

The property in dispute originally belonged to one Dhondi.

On 25th April, 1873, Dhondi conveyed it to one Arjun by a deed of sale of that date. The lower Courts held that this was a colourable transaction intended to defeat Dhondi's creditors. Dhondi remained in possession.

On the 18th April, 1883, Arjun sold the property to the plaintiff.

On the 4th June, 1883, the property was put up to sale in execution of a money decree against Dhondi and purchased by the defendants Nos. 1 and 2.

On the 26th March, 1885, defendants Nos. 1 and 2 obtained possession of the property through the Court.

[621] On the 28th March, 1885, the plaintiff sued his vendor Arjun and Dhondi's wife Girji (Dhondi being then in prison) for possession. He obtained a decree, in execution of which he obtained symbolical possession on 8th February, 1886. When he sought to take actual possession, he was resisted by the defendants.

On the 19th December, 1889, the plaintiff filed the present suit to recover the property from the defendants.

Both the lower Courts rejected the plaintiff's claim as barred by limitation. They held that defendants, who got possession in 1885 under a decree against Dhondi, were entitled to add the period of his possession to their own, and that this possession was adverse to the plaintiff for more than twelve years, and that the plaintiff's suit was, therefore, barred.

Against this decision the plaintiff preferred a second appeal to the High Court.

Shivram V. Bhandarkar, for appellant (plaintiff).—The defendants came into possession on 26th March, 1885, as purchasers at the sale held in execution of the decree against Dhondi. Their adverse possession commenced only from the time when they actually took possession. They have no right to tack on their own possession to Dhondi's. His possession was never adverse to Arjun. Assuming that it was adverse, it did not cover a period of twelve years so as to bar Arjun's title. Moreover, when plaintiff in 1886 obtained symbolical possession in execution of his decree against Arjun and Dhondi's wife, such symbolical possession was effectual against Dhondi and all persons claiming through him as if it was actual possession—Juggobundhu v. Ram Chunder (1); Lokessur Koer v. Purgun Roy (2); Joggobundhu Mitter v. Purnanund Gossami (3). Such symbolical possession gives a fresh starting point. We could sue for possession within twelve years from the date we obtained formal possession —Umbicka Churn Goopta v. Madhub Ghosal (4). The case of Ali Saheb v. Kaji Ahmad (5) does not apply.

Mahadev C. Apte, the respondents (defendants).—The receipt given by the plaintiff to the officer of the Court who gave him [622] possession states that he obtained actual possession of the property in dispute. If that be so, s. 263 of the Code applies, and not s. 264. If s. 263 applies, then the principle contended for, that symbolical possession is equivalent to actual possession as against the judgment-debtor, has no application to the present case—Lakshuman v. Moru (6). Assuming that the plaintiff obtained symbolical possession under s. 264 of the Code, even then it is of no avail either as against Dhondi or as against the defendants who were in actual possession of the property in dispute, for they were not parties to the plaintiff's suit against Arjun and Girji. They cannot, therefore, be bound by the decree passed in that suit. The formal possession given to the plaintiff in execution of that decree is, therefore, ineffectual as against the defendants and their predecessor in title, Dhondi. Dhondi's possession was adverse to Arjun, and the defendants, who have succeeded to him, are entitled to tack on their own possession to Dhondi's in bar of the plaintiff's claim. The suit is, therefore, barred under art. 144 of the Limitation Act—Ali Saheb v. Kaji Ahmad (5); Dinendro Nath v. Ramkumar (7); Syed Nyamtul v. Nana (8).

JUDGMENT.

RANADE, J.—The cheif point argued before us in this appeal relates to the question of limitation. The property in dispute admittedly belonged to one Dhondi, who executed a deed of sale in favour of Arjun on 25th April, 1873. Both the lower Courts have held that this deed of sale was a collusive transaction, and that Dhondi, and not Arjun, continued to be in possession of the property.

The appellant traces his title through Arjun, who first mortgaged, and then sold, the property on 18th April, 1883, to the appellant. As appellant did not obtain possession of the property, he brought a suit on his deed of sale against Arjun and Dhondi's wife Girji (Dhondi himself being in prison), and obtained a decree, in the execution of which appellant obtained on 8th February, 1886, what he now states was a symbolical possession of the property. In his plaint, appellant stated that he had passed a receipt on that day to the bailiff, admitting that [623] he had obtained possession of the property. As a matter of fact, the possession was with Dhondi, and after he went to jail, with his wife Girji.

Respondents Nos. 1—2 claim through Dhondi, having purchased Dhondi's interest at an auction sale in execution of their own decree on 4th June, 1883, and subsequently obtained actual possession through Court on 26th March, 1885. On 28th March, 1885, the appellant brought his suit against Arjun and Dhondi's wife Girji, as stated above, and as he did not obtain actual possession in execution of his decree in that suit, he brought his present suit against the respondents in December, 1889. Both the lower Courts held that appellant's suit was time-barred by reason of Dhondi's adverse possession against Arjun being tacked on to respondents' possession since 1885.

Appellant's contention before us was that the lower Courts were in error in joining Dhondi's possession to that of the respondents Nos. 1—2. He contended (1) that on the day that respondents obtained possession (26th March, 1885), Dhondi's possession, dating from 25th April, 1873, had not become adverse, as it did not cover a period of twelve years; (2) that appellant's symbolical possession of 8th February, 1886, broke up the continuity of the two periods; and (3) that as his claim under the decree and the execution proceedings was good against Arjun and Dhondi, it was equally good as against respondents Nos. 1—2, whose adverse possession only commenced since March, 1885.

On a careful consideration of the authorities cited on behalf of the appellant, we feel satisfied that his contention is not valid, and that it must be disallowed. Mr. Shivram Vithal, the appellant's pleader, chiefly relied on the fact that the purchase from Arjun, which the lower appellate Court has found to be a valid purchase, was dated 18th April, 1883, and preceded the auction purchase dated 4th June, 1883, of Dhondi's rights on which respondents based their claim. The lower appellate Court adjudicated the question of title in appellant's favour. It, however, rejected appellant's claim on the ground of respondents' adverse possession for more than twelve years, and this period was made up by tacking on respondents' own possession against appellant [624] to that of Dhondi's against Arjun. It is true Dhondi's possession by itself had not covered the full period of twelve years necessary to constitute adverse possession, but respondents had full right to fall back upon Dhondi's possession, and plead this joint possession in bar of plaintiff's claim. It has no doubt been ruled in Juggobundhu v. Ram Chunder (1) and Joggobundhu v. Purnanund (2) that a formal possession, such as the appellant obtained on 8th February, 1886, was, as against the judgment-debtor, equivalent to actual possession, but there is nothing in these rulings to warrant the extension of their scope so as to embrace third parties, who, though they derived their title from the judgment-debtor, had an adverse interest to that of the judgment-debtor's. In Juggobundhu v. Ram Chunder, it was expressly ruled that such symbolical possession was of no avail as against third parties. In the present case, Dhondi's possession was admittedly adverse to that of Arjun. Appellant no doubt obtained a decree both against Arjun and Girji, who, in the absence of her husband

Dhondi, was made a party to that suit. But neither Arjun or Girji nor Dhondi were in possession of the property at the time when the appellant brought his suit of 1885. Two days before that suit was commenced, respondents had obtained actual possession of the property, and appellant ought to have joined respondents' names as co-defendants in that suit. Appellant failed to take this precaution, and by the time that he obtained symbolical possession on 8th February, 1886, Dhondi's and respondents' adverse possession covered a period of more than twelve years, and the appellant's claim was very properly held to be time-barred under art. 144 of the Limitation Act. We are led to this conclusion even if we accept appellant's line of argument as correct.

We do not wish, however, to be understood in any way as affirming the correctness of that line of argument. In Lakshman v. Moru (1) the matter was discussed, and it was held that the doctrine of symbolical possession only held good in cases where execution under s. 264 was alone possible, and that it had no application when the creditor could only execute his decree [625] under s. 263 by obtaining actual possession. The execution proceedings, in which the appellant passed the receipt dated 8th February, 1866, do not show that the execution was carried out under s. 264; and it is clear that even if Dhondi had himself continued to be in possession till 8th February, 1886, yet, as he was not a party to appellant's suit, appellant would not have succeeded, under the authority of Lakshman v. Moru, in ousting him in execution of his decree against Arjun and Girji. The case of Lakshman Vinayak v. Bisansing (2) was distinguished by Mr. Justice Telang from Lakshman v. Moru solely on the ground that, in the one case, the period of actual possession of the defendant exceeded, while in the other it fell short of, twelve years. Mr. Justice Telang expressed an opinion in the case decided by him that the defendant in the suit would be entitled to tack on his own possession to that of his father, the judgment-debtor. In the present case, the respondents Nos. 1—2 are auction-purchasers of Dhondi's rights, and they have obviously a better right to fall back upon Dhondi's possession to supplement their own. If a vendor remains in possession of property sold by him, his possession is adverse to that of the purchaser—Anand Coomari v. Ali Jamin (3). Dhondi's possession was, therefore, adverse to Arjun, and respondents' possession through Dhondi is adverse to that of the appellant through Arjun. In Gossain Dalmar Puri v. Bepin Behary Mitter (4) it was held that symbolical possession, as against the judgment-debtors, grantors of a lease in that case, would not avail as against a permanent lessee from those grantors, if such lessee was more than twelve years in possession.

On the strength of these authorities, we hold in this case that the appellant's symbolical possession of 8th February, 1886, did not break up the continuity of the adverse possession of the respondents, and the person through whom they derived their title, and that appellant's claim was very properly held to be time-barred by reason of the adverse enjoyment of Dhondi and respondents as against appellant and his vendor Arjun.

We accordingly confirm the decree and reject the appeal with cost.

[627] The plaintiff who held the farm of the right to retail opium at certain shops in a district, and whose lease contained a clause prohibiting sub-letting without the Collector's permission, entered into an agreement with the defendant to sub-let to him, on certain conditions, the management of certain shops in the district for one year without the Collector's permission. After the expiration of the year the plaintiff brought a suit against the defendant to recover the balance due to him under the agreement and obtained a decree.

Held, reversing the decree, that the agreement not being permitted by the rules framed under the Opium Act (I of 1878) was forbidden by s. 4 of the Act, and was void as having in view an object forbidden by law.

Held, further, that the plaintiff could not recover the price of the opium supplied to the defendant, inasmuch as advances made for an illegal purpose subsequently carried out cannot be recovered.

† Section 4 of the Opium Act (I of 1871):—

4. Except as permitted by this Act, or by any other enactment relating to opium for the time being in force, or by rules framed under this Act or under any such enactment, no one shall—

(a) cultivate the poppy; (b) manufacture opium; (c) possess opium; (d) transport opium; (e) import or export opium; or (f) sell opium.

‡ Rules 43, 44, 45 and 52 of the Rules framed under the Opium Act (I of 1878):—

43. With the general or special sanction of the Commissioner, the Collector may let in farm the right to retail opium, or to manufacture and retail all or any intoxicating drugs prepared from the poppy, in any local area under his control, for a term not exceeding five years. The Commissioner may prescribe rules:

(a) for the invitation and acceptance of tenders for such farms;

(b) for the requisition of security for the due fulfilment of the engagements entered into by the farmers; and

(c) as to the form and conditions of such leases.

Any breach of such engagement shall render the lease liable to annulment by the authority by whom the farm was sanctioned.

44. When any such farm is given, the farmer may make his own arrangements for the appointment of subordinate vendors, and for the manufacture of intoxicating drugs, within the limits of his farm and subject to the conditions of his lease: provided that no opium except that supplied from a Government depot and opium lawfully imported under cl. (c), Rule 12, and opium otherwise lawfully obtained, shall be retailed or used in the manufacture of such drugs.

45. Licenses for the retail of opium or of intoxicating drugs prepared from the poppy, by persons appointed by the farmer to retail on his behalf, shall be granted by the Collector in such form and on such conditions, consistent with the conditions of the farm, as the Commissioner from time to time prescribes.

52. Subject to the prohibitions, conditions and regulations imposed and prescribed by the foregoing rules, the manufacture, possession, import, export, transport and sale of opium are permitted.

19 B. 626.

SECOND appeal from the decision of G. C. Whitworth, District Judge of Nasik, confirming the decree of Rao Saheb V. G. Kaduskar, Joint Subordinate Judge of Nasik.

The plaintiff farmed from the Collector of Nasik the right to retail opium at certain shops in the Nasik district from the 1st August, 1887, to the 31st July, 1890. On the 5th June, 1889, he agreed to sub-let to the defendant the management of five shops in the Satana Taluka in the said district for one year from the 1st August, 1889.

After the expiration of the year, the plaintiff brought the present suit against the defendant to recover the sum of Rs. 567-5-3, being the balance alleged to be due to him on account of the price of the opium supplied to the defendant under this agreement.

The defendant contended (inter alia) that under the terms of the plaintiff's contract with the Collector he was forbidden to sub-let the opium farm without the permission of the Collector; that the sub-letting was, therefore, illegal, and that he was not liable to the claim.

The Subordinate Judge allowed the claim, holding the contract between the parties to be legal.

On appeal by the defendant the Judge confirmed the decree, remarking that the contract between the parties was not illegal even if it were granted that the lease to the plaintiff forbade any sub-letting of the farm without the Collector's sanction.

The defendant preferred a second appeal.

[628] Daji Abaji Khare, for the appellant (defendant).—The sub-lease was illegal, being granted without the Collector's permission, and, therefore, it cannot be enforced. The object of the Opium Act (I of 1878) and the rules framed under it is to regulate the sale of opium according to certain prescribed conditions and rules. The license to retail opium is framed in accordance with the rules, and a breach of the license is the breach of the rules. The sub-lease is void, being opposed to public policy —s. 23 of the Contract Act (IX of 1872). The defendant had only a license for one shop: therefore giving and selling opium at other shops was clearly illegal—Hormasji v. Pestonji (1).

Narayan Ganesh Chandavarkar, for the respondent (plaintiff).—Our agreement with the defendant is not opposed to the terms of the license granted to us, and it is not illegal. The rules do not prohibit sub-letting. We had appointed the defendant as our agent, and he could not act as our agent without a sub-lease. The defendant already held a license for one of the shops under the order of the Collector, and with respect to the other shops he acted under the agreement. Rule 44 of the rules framed under the Opium Act contemplates an arrangement for the appointment of sub-vendors.

Even supposing that the object of the agreement was unlawful, still we are entitled to recover from the defendant the price of opium which we supplied to him and which he sold.

Daji Abaji Khare, in reply.

JUDGMENT.

FULTON, J.—The plaintiff in this case held a farm of the right to retail opium at certain shops in the Nasik district from the 1st August, 1887, to the 31st July, 1890, and on the 5th June, 1889, entered into an agreement with the defendant to sub-let to the latter on certain conditions the management of five shops in the Satana Taluka for one year from the 1st August, 1889. He now seeks to recover the balance due to him under this agreement, and has obtained a decree in his favour in both the lower Courts. For the defendant it has been argued that the agreement is void under s. 23 of the Contract Act (IX of 1872). We have, [629] therefore, to consider the provisions of the Opium Act and the rules framed thereunder.

Section 4 of the Opium Act forbids the sale of opium except as permitted by the Act or rules. The rules in force when this agreement was made were published on pp. 704—715 of Part I of the Government Gazette for 1885. The permission to sell is contained in the 52nd rule, which only permits sales subject to the prohibitions, conditions and regulations imposed and prescribed by the preceding rules. The 43rd rule authorizes the Collector to let in farm the right to retail opium subject to conditions prescribed by the Commissioner. The 44th rule enables the farmer to appoint subordinate vendors within the limits of his farm and subject to the conditions of his lease. The 45th rule provides for the issue of selling licenses to the persons appointed by the farmer to sell on his behalf.

The lease granted to the plaintiff was in form E annexed to the rules, the 10th clause * of which prohibits sub-letting without the permission of the Collector, while the 14th clause * forbids his selling more than ten tolas weight of opium to any person at one time except to a medical practitioner or other person holding a special license from the Collector.

The defendant, it is admitted, was a licensed sub-vendor at one of the five shops; there being other licensed sub-vendors for the other four. The agreement between him and the plaintiff bound him to sell at least 24 lbs. of opium every month or pay compensation to the farmer at the rate of Rs. 5 per lb. on [630] account of any deficiency in the quantity sold, and also required him to purchase from the plaintiff the opium required for sale in the shops.

Now it seems to us that in thus sub-letting part of his farm without the sanction of the Collector, which the District Judge has found was not obtained, the plaintiff was entering into an agreement for the sale of opium contrary to law. The law prohibited his selling it at all except as permitted by the rules. The rules only permitted sales subject to the conditions of the lease. The lease prescribed numerous conditions for the regulation of the shops, and forbade the interposition of a sub-lessee (without the Collector's sanction). The agreement, it is true, bound the sub-lessee to observe all the requirements of the law and rules; but in entering into it, and thereby alienating his immediate control over the shops and sub-vendors, the plaintiff was arranging for the sale of opium in a manner not authorized by his lease and, therefore, not within the permission accorded by rule 52. The mere fact that a breach of the conditions of the lease prescribed by the Commissioner, and not embodied in rules framed by Government with the sanction of the Governor-General in Council, may not be punishable under s. 9 of the Act (as determined in Criminal Ruling 23 of 1887), does not seem to affect the question. The method of selling

* Clauses 10 and 14 of form E of the rules framed under the Opium Act :—

10 That he will not sub-let any of his opium shops without permission of the Collector or employ for the retail sale of opium any person for whose employment in that behalf he may not have previously received written sanction and a separate license signed by the Collector authorizing such person to sell opium on bahalf of the licensee.

14. That except to a medical practitioner or other person holding a special license from the Collector, he will not sell more than ten tolas weight of opium to any person at one time.

opium arranged for in the agreement was not permitted by the rules, and was, therefore, forbidden by s. 4 of the Act. Consequently the agreement must, we think, be considered void as having in view an object forbidden by law. This view may press hard on the plaintiff; but when he made the agreement he must have been aware that it was contrary to the provisions of his lease, and, therefore, he cannot enforce it, as held in the cases of Debi Prasad v. Rup Ram (1) and Hormasji v. Pestanji (2). As pointed out in the Allahabad case, it would be defeating the policy of the law (which evidently intends to give the executive authorities the most complete control over the sale of opium as well as liquor) if such contracts were to be allowed.

[631] Mr. Chandavarkar urged that, even if the agreement were void, the plaintiff could at least recover the price of the opium supplied to the defendant, but since the case of Collins v. Blantern (3) it seems to have been settled law that advances made for in illegal purpose subsequently carried out cannot be recovered (vide Begbie v. The Phosphate Sewage Co., Limited (4); Herman v. Jeuchner (5); Scott v. Brown, Doering, McNab and Co. (6)). In the present case the plaintiff admits that the object of the agreement was carried out, and his claim is based on that assumption.

Under these circumstances, much as it is to be regretted that a dishonest defence of this sort should succeed, we must reverse the decrees of the Courts below and reject the claim, but at the same time direct that the parties do bear their own costs throughout.

Decree reversed.

APPELLATE CIVIL.

Before Mr. Justice Bayley, Acting Chief Justice, and Mr. Justice Fulton.

PAROT BAPALAL SEVAKRAM (Original Defendant), Appellant v. MEHTA HARILAL SURAJRAM (Original Plaintiff), *Respondent.

[14th August, 1894.]

Hindu law—Inheritance—Succession—Father's sister's daughter's son*—Bandhu—Bhinna gotra sapinda.

Harisukhrai, a Hindu, died leaving a widow and a son of a first cousin, viz., the son of his father's sister's daughter.

Held, that on the death of the widow the latter, viz., the son of his father's sister's daughter being a bandhu or bhinna gotra sapinda of Harisukhrai, was entitled to succeed to his property.

In regard to the succession of cognates, there seems to be no difference in the rules laid down in the Mayukha and the Mitakshara, and under the Mitakshara law succession depends upon propinquity and not upon religious efficacy.

LATE CIVIL.
19 B. 631.

This action was instituted by plaintiff Mehta Harilal Surjaram to recover possession of certain houses as the reversioner of one [632] Harisukhrai Dalsukhram who died leaving him surviving a childless widow named Bai Ulas. The following table shows the relationship of the parties :—

The plaintiff was the great-grandson,—that is, the son of a daughter's daughter—of Mugatram, the grandfather of Harisukhrai, and as such asserted his right to the houses, there being no other nearer heir of the deceased. The plaint alleged that after the death of Harisukhrai his widow Bai Ulas alienated the houses to the defendant and that the alienation was not warranted by law.

Defendant admitted that he had bought from Bai Ulas, and resisted the claim on the ground that the plaintiff was not the heir of either Harisukhrai or Bai Ulas, and that necessary parties were not joined in the suit.

The Subordinate Judge allowed the claim. In his judgment he observed as follows :—

"The plaintiff is the grandson of the paternal aunt of Ulas' husband Harisukhrai by her daughter Suraj, and as such is a bandhu within the sixth degree in the line of descent from Harisukhrai's grandfather Mugatram. He reckons only third in descent from Mugatram, and is entitled to succeed to the property of Harisukhrai on the death of his widow Ulas as a reversioner (West and Bühler, 3rd Ed., pp. 133 and 487, et seq.; Umaid Bahadur v. Udoi Chand alias Manman, I. L. R., 6 Cal., p. 119). There is no nearer relation than plaintiff * * and the plea of non-joinder, therefore, fails."

On appeal by the defendant the Judge confirmed the decree.

The defendant preferred a second appeal.

Branson with Sitanath G. Ajinkya, for the appellant (defendant).—The plaintiff's claim has been allowed on the ground that he is a bandhu of Harisukhrai We contend that according to the Mitakshara and the rulings commencing with [633] Vijiarangam's case (1), the property in dispute would devolve on the heirs of Harisukhrai's widow as if she were a male. The correctness of the decision of the Calcutta Full Bench in Umaid Bahadur v. Udoi Chand (2), on the strength of which the plaintiff's claim is allowed, is questioned : West and Bühler, p. 498. Two females having intervened between Mugatram and the plaintiff, the latter cannot succeed even as a bandhu : West and Bühler, pp. 133, 134. No authority can be found in this Presidency to support the plaintiff's claim. The plaintiff's family is totally different from that of Harisukhrai, and, therefore, he cannot claim Harisukhrai's property as his heir. He may be a relation of Harisukhrai, but he cannot come in as a bandhu.

Chimanlal H. Setalvad, for the respondent (plaintiff).—The property belonged to Harisukhrai. His widow had only a life-interest in it, and, therefore, any alienation by her beyond her lifetime is illegal. That being so, the property must devolve on the heir of the last male holder, that is, Harisukhrai. There is no other nearer heir of Harisukhrai than ourselves, and, therefore, we are entitled to claim the property—Umaid Bahadur v. Udoi Chand (1) ; Lallubhai v. Mankuvarbai (2). It was contended that because two females had intervened, we cannot succeed. But in Umaid Bahadur v. Udoi Chand (1) two females had intervened, and yet the contention of the reversioner was allowed. That decision is, therefore, on all fours with the present case. Further, the intervention of two females cannot deprive a man of his sapind relationship—West and Bühler, p. 488 ; Mayne's Hindu Law, para. 472. The defendant is a total stranger, and is in no way related either to Harisukhrai or to his family. He cannot, therefore, defeat our claim.

JUDGMENT.

FULTON, J.—The houses in dispute belonged to Harisukhrai, the husband of the deceased Ulas, who succeeded to them on his death. They are now claimed by the plaintiff, who is the nearest relative, being the son of the daughter of Harisukhrai's father's sister.

[634] For the defendant it is contended that the plaintiff is not included in the list of persons entitled to inherit, but we think we must follow the principle laid down in Umaid Bahadur v. Udoi Chand (1) and hold that the plaintiff is a bandhu or bhinna gotra sapinda of Harisukhrai, and as such entitled to succeed on the death of Harisukhrai's widow.

The decision above referred to was, it is true, based only on the Mitakshara, but in regard to the succession of cognates there seems no difference in the rules laid down in the Mayukha (vide Mayukha, ch. IV, s. 8, pl. 22, and Mitakshara, ch. II, s. 6, pl. 1), which, as pointed out in Lallubhai v. Mankuvarbai (2), has on most questions of inheritance adopted the doctrines of the Mitakshara. At pp. 425 and 445 of the case just referred to, the learned Judges point out how Nilkantha has accepted Vijnyaneswara's theory of sapinda relationship as arising from blood or bodily connection rather than from sharing in common oblations.

The remarks at p. 498 of West and Bühler's Digest of the Hindu Law appear to question the correctness of the decision in Umaid Bahadur v. Udoi Chand that the intervention of two females in the line of descent is no bar to inheritance, but it seems that this doubt cannot now be entertained ; for, as stated by Mr. Mayne in his note to s. 472 of the 4th edition of his Treatise on Hindu Law and Usage, the principle that succession under the Mitakshara law depends upon propinquity, and not upon religious efficacy, has been settled by distinct rulings—Lallubhai v. Mankuvarbai (2) ; Lullubhoy v. Cassibai (3) ; Nallanna v. Ponnal (4) ; Ramappa v. Arumugath (5). Accepting this principle we can see no ground for rejecting the claim of the plaintiff who is within four degrees of the common ancestor who was the maternal grandfather of the plaintiff's mother (6).

Mr. Branson for the appellant drew our attention to the case of Vijiarangam v. Lakshman (7) to show that the property [635] inherited Stamp—Stamp Act I of 1879, ss. 11 and 16—Hundi—Execution—Time of execution—Stamp affixed and subsequently cancelled—Evidence—Practice.

Where a hundi was written by the defendant and stamped by him with a one-anna stamp which was left uncancelled and the hundi was subsequently taken by him to the plaintiff's son who received it from him and at the time of receiving it cancelled the stamp by writing the date across it.

Held that the hundi was duly stamped under ss. 10 and 16 of the Stamp Act (I of 1879) and was admissible in evidence. If at the time of delivery, which completed its legal character, the hundi was stamped, and if the cancellation took place at that time as part of the same transaction, it was sufficient.

A deed is duly stamped if the stamp is affixed and cancelled at the time of execution, or if having been at any time previously affixed, it is cancelled at the time of execution.

When applied to a document the term 'execution' means the last act or series of acts which completes it. It might be defined as formal completion. The contract on a negotiable instrument until delivery is complete and revocable. Until delivery a hundi is not clothed with the essential characteristics of a negotiable instrument.

[R., 3 O.C. 195 (198); U.B.R. (1907) (4th. Qr. Execution), Signing 5.]

CASE stated for the opinion of the High Court under s. 69 of the Presidency Small Cause Courts Act (XV of 1882) by C. W. Chitty, Chief Judge:—

"1. This was a suit brought by the plaintiff to recover from the defendant a sum of Rs. 914-2-9, the amount of principal and interest due on a hundi passed by the defendant to the plaintiff.

"The suit was filed as a summary suit, but on the defendant's application he was granted leave to defend.

"2. At the hearing the defendant admitted passing the hundi to the plaintiff, but pleaded no consideration, and denied liability [636] on other grounds. He also put the plaintiff to the proof of the hundi, which he maintained was inadmissible in evidence as being not duly stamped. The hundi was made payable on demand, and, therefore, chargeable with duty of one anna.

"3. The hundi was wholly written by the defendant. It was admittedly written by him at his place of business on the 23rd April, 1894, and at the time of writing, a one-anna adhesive stamp was affixed, but not cancelled by him. The hundi was taken by him the same day (but how long after the execution does not appear) to the plaintiff's son, who received it. The plaintiff's son subsequently wrote the English date in Gujarati character across the stamp. The plaintiff's son stated in evidence that he did so in the defendant's presence when the hundi was brought. I was not, however, satisfied that this was so, and on the evidence should be disposed to hold that the cancellation by the plaintiff's son was made at a subsequent date, probably for the purpose of this case. It was argued for the plaintiff that the time of execution of this hundi was not when the defendant wrote it, but when it was handed to the plaintiff's son, but I was of opinion that the hundi must be taken as having been executed when defendant wrote it.

"4. Under these circumstances I was of opinion that the provisions of ss. 11 and 16 of the Stamp Act (I of 1879) had not been complied with; that the document, therefore, must be deemed to be unstamped; that under s. 34 the document was inadmissible in evidence; and that the plaintiff's suit must fail.

"5. I accordingly gave judgment, dismissed the suit and certified Rs. 51 as the cost of the defendant's counsel. As the plaintiff's counsel had requested me to state the case for the opinion of their Lordships, I gave judgment contingent on such opinion.

"6. The sole question will be whether, on the facts as stated, the hundi is admissible in evidence.

"7. The plaintiff has deposited in Court Rs. 51 certified costs and Rs. 50 to meet the costs of reference."

[637] The following is a translation of the hundi, which was in Gujarati :—

"23rd April, 1894.

"Peace and prosperity, at the good place the seaport town of Bombay. to Sha the most illustrious Dewji, son of Punjam, written from the seaport town of Bombay by Sha Dewji, son of Punjam, his (salutations of) Johur do you be pleased to read; to wit, from this place from the Rokhia Thakur Bhawanji Harbhum Rs. 900, namely, nine hundred, have been received in full; do you pay the same immediately on arrival of the hundi; do you pay the same in the name of (or) to Sha (a respectable person) on seeing his house, place of residence and abode; the mark (is) this that I will write in the letter. Chaitra Vadya 3rd of Samvat 1950, the day of the week Monday, own handwriting."

On the back was written :—

"The half being Rs. 450, do you pay the double thereof; do you pay in all Rs. 900, namely, nine hundred in full.

Rs. 900.

"Sha Shri Dewji, son of Punjam.

Rivett-Carnac, for the plaintiff.—The hundi was duly stamped and should have been admitted in evidence. The time of its execution was the time at which it was delivered to the plaintiff by the defendant, and the plaintiff at that time cancelled the stamp which no doubt had been previously affixed. The plaintiff was the payee. It has never been decided whether a payee is entitled to affix and cancel a stamp, or to cancel a stamp already affixed if it has been left uncancelled. Further, I contend that the hundi is payable after sight and not on demand, and was, therefore,

Inverarity, for the defendant.—"Executed" means "signed." Counsel referred to the English Stamp Act, 33 and 34 Vict., c. 97, s. 54, cl. 2; s. 53, cl. 2; Indian Stamp Act I of 1879, ss. 30, 31, 44 and 61; Ralli v. Caramalli (1).

OPINION.

FARRAN, J.—The facts in this case are not found with sufficient precision to enable us to give a categorical answer to the question submitted to us. Although paragraph I of s. 11 of the Stamp Act provides that "whoever affixes any adhesive stamp to any instrument chargeable with duty and which has been executed [638] shall when affixing such stamp, cancel the same;" we think that reading that paragraph in connection with paragraph 2 of the same section and with s. 16, it is a fulfilment of the requirements of the law if the stamp is affixed and cancelled at the time of execution, or if having been at any time previously affixed it is cancelled at the time of execution.

The terms "executed" and "execution" are defined in the English Stamp Act (33 and 34 Vict., c. 97, s. 2) to mean, with reference to instruments not under seal, "signed" and "signature." In the case of instruments under seal the terms are left to their ordinary signification.

The Indian Stamp Act does not define them, probably because the practice of authenticating a document by signature is not so common in India as in England, and instruments are often (as in this case) completed without a formal signature at the end. The somewhat elastic term "execution" without definition is, therefore, employed. Now "executed" means completed (Wharton's Law Lexicon, Title "Executed"). "Execution" is when applied to a document the last act or series of acts which completes it. It might be defined as formal completion. Thus execution of deeds is the signing, sealing and delivery of them in the presence of witnesses. Execution of a will includes attestation. In each class of instruments we have to consider when the instrument is formally complete.

Now the contract on a negotiable instrument is until delivery incomplete and revocable—Chapman v. Cottrell (2); Negotiable Instruments Act (XXVI of 1881), s. 46; Bills of Exchange Act, 1882, s. 21 (45 and 46 Vict., c. 61). Until delivery a hundi is not clothed with the essential characteristics of a negotiable instrument. Accordingly we think that, if the instrument in question at the time of delivery (which formally completed its legal character) was stamped, and if the cancellation of the stamp took place at that time as part of the same transaction, it will be sufficient. The cancellation of the stamp apparently should be done by the person affixing it; but as it is a mere mechanical operation to prevent the stamp being used again, we think that it will be sufficient [639] if done by his directions, express or implied. Accordingly we do not consider that the cancellation of the stamp would be invalidated if done at the time of execution by the payee of the hundi with the authority of the drawer. The circumstances stated by the learned Judge do not bring the case within the provisions of s. 44, to which we have been referred. That section simply provides that the person to whom a bill of exchange or promissory note chargeable with one-anna duty is presented unstamped for payment, need not refuse payment on that account, but may affix a one-anna stamp thereto and cancel it and then make payment. The word "payee" in the marginal note is manifestly a clerical error for "payer." It is a curious anomaly (if it be so) that the promisor in the case of an unstamped promissory note, who is the person who ought originally to have stamped it, should be at liberty to deduct the value of the stamp from the amount which he pays in discharge of his note.

VITHULDAS GOBER AND OTHERS (Plaintiffs) v. THE BOMBAY AND PERSIA STEAM NAVIGATION COMPANY (Defendants).*

[9th March, 1895.]

Shipping—Seaworthiness—Damage to goods by leakage while ship in dock—Bill of lading—Exception.

The plaintiff's goods were loaded in the defendants' steamer then lying in dock to be carried from Bombay to certain ports in East Africa. At the time of loading, the ship was apparently in a sound and seaworthy condition. Two days after the goods had been put on board, and when the ship was still in dock, it sprung a leak, and the water came into the hold and damaged the plaintiffs' goods. The ship was taken to the dry dock, the cargo was shifted, and the leak repaired. It appeared that the leak had arisen from the fact that one of the plates of the ship had been worn thin in one particular spot, so that when the cargo was put on board and the [640] ship lay deeper in the water, the pressure became so great that a hole was made and the water rushed in. The plaintiffs sued the defendants for damages. The defendants pleaded (1) that the ship was in a seaworthy condition when the goods were put on board; (2) that they were protected by the bill of lading which contained the following exception, viz., "Accident, loss and damage from vermin, barratry, jettison, collision, fire, machinery, boilers, steam and all the perils, dangers and accidents of the sea, rivers, land carriage and steam navigation of whatever nature and kind and accident, loss or damage from any act, neglect or default whatsoever of the pilot, master or mariners or other servants of the Company or from any deviation excepted."

Held, that the defendants were liable. While the ship was in dock it was not seaworthy, and the exception in the bill of lading did not limit the implied warranty of seaworthiness.

SUIT for damages. The plaint stated that the defendants in March, 1893, contracted with the plaintiffs to convey on board their steamship Mobile 632 packages of goods from Bombay to Inbambane, Quilimane, and Delagoa Bay; that the plaintiffs accordingly shipped the said goods and obtained bills of lading for some and mate's receipts for others.

The plaint continued as follows:—

"3. The said goods were loaded on board the S. S. Mobile at the Prince's Dock, and on the 18th day of March, 1893, it was found that the said vessel was so unfit for the voyage and so unseaworthy as to have sprung a leak and to have five feet of water in her hold, and it was discovered there was a large hole in the bottom of the said steamer. She was surveyed by the surveyors to the Port Trust, and the plaintiffs will rely on the report of the surveyors, copy whereof is annexed and marked C.

"4. The plaintiffs say that the defendants did not supply a seaworthy vessel or a vessel reasonably fit for the voyage, and by reason thereof the plaintiffs' goods were landed in a very damaged condition, and the defendants committed a breach of the contract they had made with the plaintiffs in respect of the said six hundred and thirty-two packages of goods.

"5. The defendants thereafter declined to give the plaintiffs bills of lading for the goods. for which the plaintiffs held mate's receipt, without prepayment of frieght, although the defendants admitted that some of the plaintiffs' goods had been destroyed and the rest had been so damaged as to necessitate their sale by public auction by or at the instance of the defendants."

The plaintiffs alleged that they had sustained damages to the amount of Rs. 2,684-1-6 and loss of interest on that amount to the extent of Rs. 1,000 which they claimed to recover from the defendants as well as the profits which they would have made if the goods had been safely carried to their destination.

[641] The defendants denied their liability. They denied that they had broken the contract or that they had not supplied a reasonably seaworthy vessel. Their written statement contained the following paragraphs :—

"3. The defendants say that at the time the plaintiffs loaded their goods upon the said vessel she had no leak and was quite seaworthy. The defendants will rely upon the certificate of survey granted under Act VII of 1884 on the 29th October, 1892, in respect of the said vessel and upon the reports of the survey held upon the said vessel after the leak therein was discovered.

"4. The defendants say that under the condition contained in the bills of lading, subject to which the plaintiffs' goods were received on board the said vessel, the defendants are in no way responsible for the damage caused to the goods of the plaintiffs."

At the hearing the following issues were raised :—

1. Whether the S. S. Mobile was unseaworthy as in the plaint alleged?

2. Whether, having regard to the conditions on which the plaintiffs' goods were received on board the said steamship, the defendants are responsible for the damage to the said goods?

3. Whether the plaintiffs have suffered damages as in the plaint alleged, and if so to what amount?

JUDGMENT.

CANDY, J.—The main facts are admitted. About 16th March, 1893, plaintiff shipped certain goods on board the defendant company's S. S. Mobile then lying in Prince's Dock. At that time the Mobile was apparently in a sound, seaworthy condition. On the 18th March, 1893, after plaintiff's packages had been loaded, the ship sprung a leak and a considerable amount of [642] water came into the hold. 108 of the plaintiff's packages were damaged by the water. The ship was at once taken into the Merewhether Dry Dock, the cargo was shifted, and the spot where the leak had occurred localised, and repaired. On 20th March, 1893, the ship was taken back to Prince's Dock, and the damaged cargo taken out of her. Plaintiff refused to have anything to do with his damaged packages, which, he says, the defendant company had contracted to safely convey to the ports to which they had been consigned. Eventually the saleable packages were sold by Ledbetter & Co., who paid plaintiff the sale proceeds, and now plaintiff seeks to recover the balance of the cost price of the packages, with Rs. 1,000 as loss of profits. The figures in the particulars of the claim attached to the plaint are not disputed; and if the defendant company are liable at all, then the amount claimed can fairly be awarded. The item of Rs. 1,000 would represent about 20 per cent. profit on the cost price of the goods,—not an excessive amount, all things being considered.

The defendant company deny their liability on two grounds. First, they say that the ship was in a seaworthy condition when the goods were put on board. Secondly, they say that they are protected by the conditions in the bills of lading, the mate's receipt also being subject to all conditions of company's bill of lading.

As to the cause of the accident, both sides rely on the evidence of Captain Clark, the Marine Surveyor. He examined the ship directly after she sprung the leak on 18th March, 1893, and found "a small hole, 4"×2".....on examination. I found the leak to have been caused by the wearing away of the plate by some hard substance, probably a small metal bolt. The cause appears to be from chemical action. The wearing of the plate was quite local. After the whole of the cement had been cut out from between three floors, and the plates well tested, they were found to be perfectly sound." I express no opinion myself as to the soundness of this theory. I am not competent to do so. As it is the only theory put forward in the case, and is apparently accepted by both sides, it must be accepted by the Court. It comes to this that, when the ship was built in 1879, some bolt or other [643] hard substance must have been left loose between the cement and plates of the ship, and that in the course of years, from this substance rolling and shifting backwards and forwards by every movement of the ship in a seaway, the plate of the ship had been gradually worn thin in one particular spot, so that when on 16th to 18th March, 1893, cargo was loaded, and the ship became deeper in the water, the pressure became so strong that a hole was made and the water rushed in. The defendant company point to the fact that in August, 1892, the ship was examined by the plaintiff's surveyors and the usual certificate granted to last for twelve months, and that just before the cargo was put on board the ship was overhauled by the superintending engineer of the company in the P. and O. Company's dry dock, and everything was then all right. But in reality the ship was not sound. For there was one small spot in which the plate had become so thin, that when the pressure of the water

MARCH 9.

ORIGINAL CIVIL.

19 B. 639.

increased, a hole was made in the side of the ship and the water rushed in. Even if the defect be termed latent, none the less there was such a defect as to make the ship unseaworthy. It would be absurd to call a ship seaworthy, when, though she appears seaworthy, one of her plates is at a particular spot so worn that the mere loading of cargo on board while in dock, thus sinking the ship deeper in the water, causes the water to force a hole and rush into the hold.

It only remains then to consider whether the defendant company are protected by the conditions in their bill of lading. In my opinion they are not. The conditions are thus expressed :—

"Accident, loss and damage from vermin, barratry, jettison, collision, fire, machinery, boilers, steam and all the perils, dangers and accidents of the sea, rivers, land carriage and steam navigation of whatever nature and kind and accident, loss or damage from any act, neglect or default whatsoever of the pilot, master or mariners, or other servants of the company, or from any diviation, excepted."

I cannot in these words find anything which excepts loss caused by an initial unseaworthiness of the ship. The words "all the perils, dangers and accident of the sea . . . . of whatsoever nature and kind" will not suffice for that purpose. In Steel [644] v. State Line Steamship Company (1) the words were " peril of the seas.....of whatever nature or kind soever, and however caused, excepted," and it was held that there was nothing in these words qualifying the engagement in the bill of lading that the ship should be reasonably fit to perform the service for which she undertakes. Of course, as Lord Blackburn pointed out (p. 89), "the shipowners might have stipulated, if they had so pleased (I known no law that would hinder them), we will take the goods on board, but we shall not be responsible at all, though our ship is ever so unseaworthy; look out for yourselves ; if we put them on board a rotten ship, that is your look out; you shall not have any remedy against us if we do. I say they might have so contracted, and perhaps in some cases they may actually so contract. I do not know." And then Lord Blackburn went on to show that by the words in the bill of lading before him the shipowners had not so contracted. As was naturally to be expected, shipowners naturally took advantage of the hint thrown out by Lord Blackburn. The case of The Cargo ex Laertes (2) was a case in which special words were used in the bill of lading limiting liability on account of unseaworthiness. Butt, J., said (p. 190): " No doubt the ordinary rule is, that at the commencement of the voyage, there is an implied warranty that the ship is seaworthy, not that the owner will use his best endeavours to make her so, but that she is in fact seaworthy. The Laertes broke down from a latent defect, which I find as a fact could not have been discovered by the exercise of any reasonable care on the part of the owners ; but the flaw in the shafting, which led to the breakdown, existed when the ship started, and, therefore, she was not seaworthy for the voyage. If the implied warranty existed, or was not limited by the contract in the bills of lading, then the owners of the 'Laertes' would be liable." Then the learned Judge went on to show that the words in the bills of lading applied, and were intended to apply, as a limitation of the original implied warranty, and that they did in fact abrogate the warranty which would otherwise be implied. Had it not been for the express stipulation in the bills of lading, the ruling in Steel v. State Line Steam Ship Company (1) would have applied.

(1) 3 Ap. Ca. 72.

(2) 12 P. D. 187.

[645] In the case of the Glenfruin (2) there were express conditions intended as a limitation of the original implied warranty. Evidence was given which proved that the shaft of the Glenfruin broke in consequence of a latent flaw, and which also explained the character of the manner of welding crank shafts, and showed that it was impossible to discover a latent flaw in a shaft such as was the cause of the accident in this case. The Judge Butt, J., laid down three questions for decision :—(1) Was the break-down of the Glenfruin's shaft caused by unseaworthiness ? (1) Does the implied warranty of seaworthiness in the bill of lading amount to a contract by the shipowner that the ship (including her machinery) shall be, in fact, reasonably fit for the voyage, or only that due care shall be taken to make her so fit? (3) Was the warranty qualified, or were the shipowners otherwise exempted from liability, for the breaking of the shaft by the exceptions in the bill of lading? (which were almost identical with the exceptions in the present case). The learned Judge found that (1) the shaft in question had been made by one of the best firms, and after its completion it was impossible for that firm, or for the owners of the ship, to discover the flaw until it was laid bare by the breaking of the shaft. As a fact when the Glenfruin started, the shaft was not reasonably fit for the voyage; in other words, the ship was unseaworthy. The Judge said (2) "On the second question.....I am, I think, concluded by authority. I have always understood the result of the cases from Lyon v. Mells (3) to Kopitoff v. Wilson (4) to be that under his implied warranty of seaworthiness the shipowner contracts, not merely that he will do his best to make the ship reasonably fit, but that she shall really be reasonably fit for the voyage. Had those cases left any doubt in my mind it would have been set at rest by the observations of some of the peers in the opinions they delivered in the case of Steel v. State Line Steamship Company (1)." The learned Judge was doubtless referring more particularly to the remarks of Lord Blackburn at pages 86 and 87 of the report. (3) On the third point the learned Judge held that the exception has no application to the case of [646] a ship which was unseaworthy at the time of sailing and the unseaworthiness of which was the efficient cause of the loss or damage.

In the face of the above rulings, which clearly indicate the law on the subject, it is unnecessary to quote other cases. The learned Advocate-General for the defendant company referred to The Carron Park (5) as showing that the term "voyage" (which, by the way, does not occur in the bill of lading in the present case) included the period of time during which the vessel was being loaded; and he quoted The Southgate (6) as showing that damages resulting from the incursion of water into the ship whilst she had cargo in her, though she was still at her moorings and not in motion, was an "accident of navigation." The equitableness of those decisions may well be admitted; and if the goods are covered by the bill of lading from the time they are put on board, and the reasonable mode of construing the contract evidenced by a bill of lading is to hold the exceptions to be co-extensive with the liability (Hassanbhoy Visram v. The British India Steam Navigation Company (7) following Hongkong and Shanghai Banking Corporation v. T. Baker (8)), then it is clear that in the present case the defendant company by inviting plaintiff to ship his goods on board their ship, and by giving him bills of lading, on the exceptions in which they rely, cannot plead that the implied warranty of seaworthiness which they gave does not extend to the period during which the ship was being loaded in the Prince's Dock after the plaintiff's goods had been put on board. But I find as a fact that while the ship was in the Prince's Dock it was not seaworthy, and that the exceptions in the bills of lading do not limit the implied warranty of seaworthiness. Therefore, the findings on the issue must be in the affirmative for the plaintiff. A judgment will be entered for the plaintiff for the amount claimed, with all costs.

BAI MOTIVAHU (Original Defendant), Appellant v. BAI MAMUBAI (Original Plaintiff) AND KHIMJI LAKHMIDAS (Original Defendant), *Respondents. [15th March, 1895.]

Will—Construction—Gift of residue of income of property "to be used for the purposes of A and B as trustees think proper"—Gift to future children of testator's daughter—Appointment—Power of appointment by will given to daughter in case no children born—Donee's power to appoint limited to persons in existence at death of testator.

One Jetha Ludhani, a Hindu inhabitant of Bombay, by his will directed that his immoveable property in Bombay should be formed into a trust of which he appointed certain trustees. Out of the net income of the trust, the trustees were to pay Rs. 50 to his wife Moti and his daughter Mamu for their personal expenses, and the residue was "to be used for the purposes of my wife Moti and my daughter Mamu and her children in such manner as my trustees think proper." Mamu was thirty years of age at the hearing of the suit and had no children.

Held, that this was a gift of the residue of the net rents in equal shares to Moti and Mamu, and that the survivor of them would be entitled during her life to the entirety of the said rents.

The testator further directed that after Mamu's death the trust was to stand valid during the lifetime of her children (if any), and that afterwards the heirs of such children should divide and receive the property. But if Mamu had no children, then after the death of Mamu and Moti the trust should become void, and the property was to be delivered to such person as Mamu might by will appoint.

Held (1) that the provision for the future children (if any) of Mamu failed under the ruling in the Tagore case. If any children should be born, the question would arise as to what would become of the property;

(2) that the direction that the property should be delivered to such person as Mamu should by will appoint, was a valid direction, subject, however, to the limitation that the person to whom Mamu appointed should be a person in existence at the death of the testator.

SUIT for administration and construction of a will. The plaintiff (Mamubai) was the daughter of one Jetha Ludhani, a Hindu merchant of Bombay, who died in November, 1869, leaving a large amount of moveable and immoveable property. He left a widow (the defendant Motivahu) and the plaintiff Mamubai who was his only child, being the daughter of a predeceased wife. At the time of Jetha Ludhani's death, the plaintiff was fourteen years [648] of age and had been married for two years to one Bhimji Bhanji. Up to the date of the hearing of this suit she had had no children, and she was then about thirty years of age. She brought this suit for the construction of the will and for the administration of her father's estate.

By his will dated 18th October, 1869, Jetha Ludhani appointed the defendants (Dossa Morarji and Khimji Lakhmidas and his widow Motivahu) his vakils and vakilatan (i.e., his executors and executrix), and (inter alia) he directed that his immoveable properties should be formed into a trust, of which he appointed certain trustees who were to collect the income, and after defraying expenses were out of the net income to pay a certain sum for the personal expenses of his wife Moti and his daughter Mamu. In case Mamu should have children, the trust should stand valid during their lifetime and "afterwards" the property was to be distributed among their heirs. If, however, Mamu should have no children, then the trust was to become void, and the property was to go as Mamu should by her will appoint.

A later clause (the 18th) of the will specified the manner in which the property should be divided among Mamu's children, and provided that, if she had no children, the property should be expended in the dharam in the testator's name, or if the law would permit, that the property should go as Mamu should by her will appoint.

The following are the material clauses of the will:—

"The vakils and vakilatan therein appointed by me and mentioned below are unanimously to carry on, in the event of my death which may God forbid, the management of the whole of my ready cash (landed) 'estate' and property agreeably to the particulars mentioned below. The particulars thereof are (as follows):—

"1. Should my death may take place, which may God forbid, I have appointed Thakar Khimji Lakhmidas and Thakar Dossa Morarji my vakils and my wife Vow Motivahu vakilatan, three persons jointly. They are to carry on the whole management as 'executors' and 'executrix' agreeably to what I have written."

"7. Agreeably to what is written above the whole of the money which I have resolved to be paid or expended on account of the 'legacies' and for the expenses of my funeral ceremonies for twelve months and on account of the sadavarat and for other dharam (religious or charitable purposes) according tc the above particulars is to be paid out of my funds in ready cash, but whatever my (landed) 'estate,' that is, immoveable property, there is not to be touched by my vakils or vakilatan for these purposes, but after my death shall have taken place a 'trust deed' is to be made as [649] soon as practicable of my garden dwelling-house, rope-walk warehouses (or gardens), houses, stables, lands and whatever other immoveable property that is (landed) 'estate' there is belonging to me in the island of Bombay, and the whole is to be invested in a 'trust.' As to the trustees thereof, my two vakils and vakilatan and in conjunction with them my friend Seth Thakar Khatao Makanji, (4) four persons, jointly are duly to become 'trustees' four in number, are to collect the income of the whole property, and, after deducting therefrom the expenses connected therewith, money is to be paid out of the net income, whatever it may amount to, for the personal expenses of my wife Motivahu and my daughter Mamu and for the children of my daughter Mamu after her death agreeably to the fourteenth and fifteenth clauses of this 'will,' and after paying the same whatever income may remain is to be used for the purposes of my wife Motivahu and my daughter Mamu and her children in such manner as my 'trustees' think proper.

"8. In the 7th clause mentioned above it is resolved to invest the whole of my immoveable property in 'trust' and to collect the income thereof; but the trustees are not to demand any rent for the place out of my property which may be used as a residence for my family, and should any of the 'trustees' depart this life, the surviving 'trustees' are to appoint another 'trustee,' and after the death of my daughter Mamu should there be any children born of the womb of my daughter this 'trust' is to stand valid during the lifetime of such children. Afterwards the heirs of the said children are duly to apportion and receive this property. But should there be no children born of the womb of my daughter Mamu, then after the death of Mamu and my wife Motivahu this 'trust' is to become void, and this property is to be delivered to such persons as my daughter Mamu may direct it to be delivered to by making her will.

"13. For the purpose of defraying the expenses of my house and of the worship of the Thakur (God) in my house, Rs. 750, namely seven hundred and fifty, are to be paid every month to my wife Motivahu out of my fund in ready cash, and they are to be caused to be defrayed (by her), and should Motivahu be not fit to defray the expenses in a decent and respectable manner and with economy, then my abovenamed other vakils are to defray them with their own hands.

"14. To my wife Vow Motivahu Rs. 50, namely fifty, are to be paid every month for (her) personal expenses out of my trust fund mentioned in the 7th clause written above, and should my wife not conduct herself in conformity with my credit and respectability and according to the directions of my above-mentioned other vakils, not even a single cent is to be paid (to her) for her personal expenses.

"15. To my daughter Bai Mamu Rs. 50, namely fifty, are to be paid every month for (her) personal expenses out of my 'trust' fund mentioned in the 7th clause written above, and besides that should any expenses have to be defrayed on account of my daughter Mamu or her children, or should any expense be required to be defrayed on any special occasion, my vakils and vakilatan are duly to pay for the same according to my respectability at the request of my daughter Mamu out of the income of my fund in ready cash.

"16. After receiving (and) paying my claims and debts and 'legacies' nothing is to be expended and paid out of my principal amount that may remain in ready cash. [650] Out of the amount that may remain in ready cash out of the interest (and) out of the profits of the trade and makadam's business after deducting the loss as therefrom (i.e.) out of the net surplus that may remain every year the abovementioned house expense and the expenses connected with my daughter Mamu and her children and the expenses of the worship of the Thakur (God) in my house are to be defrayed. After defraying these expenses, as to the surplus that may remain in addition to the principal, my vakils and vakilatan are authorised to make such religious charities out of the same in my name as they may deem proper.

"17. No person connected with the parents of my wife Motivahu or with their party is to be employed in my house for service or trade, and should any be employed, the amount of the personal expenses of my wife Motivahu and the house expense and the payment of a single cent out of my income whatever are to be stopped. The authority respecting the same appertains to my abovementioned remaining vakils.

"18. After receiving my claims and paying (my) debts and after paying the 'legacies' and making the expenses whatever funds in ready cash belonging to me may remain are to be apportioned and distributed in the manner stated below among the children born of the womb of my daughter Bai Mamubai after the lifetime of my daughter Mamu and my wife Motivahu. The particulars thereof are as follows :—

"(1) Should any son or daughter be born of the womb of Mamu, Rs. 2,000, namely two thousand, are to be paid to each of the daughters on their attaining the age of (18) eighteen.

"(2) To as many sons as there may be, my remaining property is to be apportioned and distributed in equal shares after their attaining the age of twenty-one years.

"(3) Should there be no son or sons or should there be no childern born of the loins of the son, the daughter or daughters or their children are to apportion and receive the same in equal shares. According to these particulars and agreeably to what is written above my property is to be apportioned and distributed, and should no child be born of the womb of my daughter Mamu, which may God forbid, in that event on the death of my wife Motivahu and of my daughter Bai Mamu taking place my immoveable property is to be expended on such good dharam (religious or charitable works) in my name as may continue as long as the moon last, and should it appear that any one would prevent this property from being given away for dharam (religious or charitable purposes) by reason of the rules of the Sirkar, the same is to be given to such person as my daughter Mamu may direct it to be given to by making her will.

"19. There are my own and my wife Vow Motivahu's ornaments, jewels set with stones and of pearls, gold and silver. Nothing is to be given out of them to any one, and these ornaments also are to be apportioned and distributed in equal shares to the sons of my daughter Bai Mamu, if any be born of her womb, agreeably to what is stated in the 18th clause on (their) attaining the age of twenty-one years, and should no child be born of the womb of my daughter Bai Mamubai, which may God forbid, in that event after the decease of my wife Motivahu and of my daughter Bai Mamu shall have taken place, these ornaments and jewels or the money realized therefrom are to be expended in the same manner as my ready cash or moveable property for some good dharam (religious or charitable purpose) in my name that may continue as long as the moon lasts, or should (any one) prevent the money from being given away in this [651] manner for dharam (religious or charitable purposes) by reason of any rule of the Sirkar, the same is to be given to such persons as my daughter Mamu may direct it to be given to by making her will.

"20. My above-mentioned vakils and vakilatan are to consult and take advice on every occasion of my friend Seth Thakar Khatao Makanji and Seth Muncherji Framji Camaji and Seth Sorabji Shapurji Bengali, making (3) three persons, respecting the management of my will, and my vakils and vakilatan are to act agreeably to the advice which they may obtain; and should my vakils and vakilatan not act agreeably to the terms of my will, my three friends can compel my vakils and vakilatan to act agreeably thereto.

The case was referred to the Commissioner to take accounts. He made his report on 7th October, 1890. No objection was taken to it, and by consent it was confirmed. The testator's property amounted in all to about seven lakhs of rupees.

The case now came before the Court for further directions and for the construction of the will.

Latham (Advocate-General) and B. Tyabji, for the plaintiff (Mamubai).—As to cls. 7 and 8, they cited Theobald on Wills (3rd Ed.)., p. 352. A gift to be at the disposal of A by will or otherwise is a gift to A—Robinson v. Dusgate (1); Hixon v. Oliver (2). There is no gift over—Bradly v. Westcott(3). The plaintiff takes even if she does not exercise the power of appointment. If the plaintiff has a child, the alternative gift would be bad—Theobald, p. 406; Miles v. Harford (4); Moneypenny v. Dering(5); Evers v. Challis (6); Crompe v. Barrow(7); Re Thatcher's Trusts(8); Kumar Tarakeswar v. Kumar Shoshi Shikhareswar (9).

A general power is really a gift to the donee. The subject of the power becomes the property of the donee if he exercises the [652] power—Theobald, p. 410; Raus v. Jackson (10); Williams' Personal Property, p. 443.

Macpherson and Lang, for the defendant Motivahu.—English law does not apply. We can only have regard to the words of the will and the power of the testator as limited by authority and by the general Hindu law. The last provision in paragraph 7 is bad—Manjamma v. Padmanabhayya (11); Mayne's Hindu Law, s. 354. As to cl. 8, the power given to plaintiff Mamu is bad by Hindu law. If not it is void as depending on a void gift. English rulings do not apply. The law of Hindu wills is the Hindu law of gifts. Mamu had no such control over the property as to enable her to give it: Mayne's Hindu Law, s. 380. The testator meant to give Mamu a power to give it by her will. A Hindu cannot give that in which in his lifetime he had no interest. There is an absence of authority on the point, and that fact is in our favour. Such a power has never been known to Hindu Law. The testator certainly never contemplated doing that which he can only be allowed to do by applying technical English rulings to the case. The rules on the Succession Act (X of 1865) do not apply to Hindus. Next, if the power was given, it is void—Kumar Tarakeswar v. Kumar Shoshi Shikhareswar (9).

JUDGMENT.

FARRAN, J.—This was an administration suit to administer the estate left by the testator Thacker Jetha Ludhani and for the construction of his will. A decretal order was made, referring it to the Commissioner to take certain administration accounts. The Commissioner made his report on the 4th October, 1890. No objections were taken to it and it was confirmed by consent on the 25th November, 1890. It only remained to construe the will and to give directions to the executors as to the future mode of dealing with the residue of the estate. This matter was argued before me on the same day, and I took time to consider my decision.

By the 7th clause of his will the testator directed that all his immoveable property in Bombay should be formed into a trust, of which the defendant and one Thacker Khatao Makanji were to [653] be the trustees. "And these trustees are to collect the income of the whole property, and after deducting therefrom the expenses connected therewith, money is to be paid out of the net income, whatever it may amount to, for the personal expenses of my wife Motivahu and my daughter Mamu after her death agreeably to the 14th and 15th clauses of this will, and after paying the same whatever income may remain is to be used for the purposes of my wife Motivahu and my daughter Mamu and her children in such manner as my trustees think proper."

The 8th clause directed that, if Mamu should have children, the trust should stand valid during their lifetime, and the trust property should then be apportioned amongst their heirs. It then proceeded: "But should there be no children born of the womb of my daughter Mamu, then after the death of Mamu and my wife Motivahu this trust is to become void, and the property is to be delivered to such persons as my daughter Mamu may direct it to be delivered to by making her will."

I first deal with the income in the lifetime of the ladies. The net income of the "trust" to be created during the joint lives of Motivahu and Mamu is to be applied first in paying Rs. 50, referred to in cls. 14 and 15, to Motivahu and Mamu each for their personal expenses, and then the residue thereof is to be used for the purposes of Motivahu and Mamu and her children in such manner as the trustees think proper. This seems to me to amount in effect to a gift of the residue for the use of Motivahu and Mamu, and I think that they are entitled to it in equal proportions. The testator no doubt contemplated that the trustees should control the manner of the expenditure, but that is one of those directions which cannot be given effect to, when the income of the fund is absolutely given: Succession Act (X of 1865), s. 125. There is, therefore, no practical distinction between the Rs. 50 and the rest of the income of this fund. Motivahu and Mamu will be entitled to the income of the fund in equal shares during their joint lives, and the survivor will take the whole for her lifetime.

The plaintiff has no children and she is said to be about thirty. It is admitted that the provision for the future children of [654] Mamu (if any) must fail under the ruling in the Tagore case. If any should be born, this admission would not be binding on them. I cannot decide what would become of the property in that event.

In the event of no children being born of Mamu, the testator has directed that the property is to be delivered to such persons as his daughter may direct it to be delivered to, by making her will. The question arises, whether that is a valid direction having regard to the ruling in the Tagore case.

I endeavour to put myself in the position of the testator, a Hindu, to ascertain what he meant. He manifestly desired to make adequate provision for his wife Motivahu for her life while keeping a watchful control over her. See cls. 13, 14, 17, and 7. He manifestly desired that she

MARCH 15.
ORIGINAL CIVIL.
19 B. 647.

should not be his heiress. Mamu, subject to the provision for Motivahu and Mamu's children, he wished to inherit after him. He contemplates Mamu surviving Motivahu, and then the trust being kept up for her and her children. Failing children of Mamu he wished that Mamu should do what she pleased with the property, and it is to emphasise that intention I think that he says she is to direct to whom it is to be given by making her will. Subject to Motivahu's interest she is to enjoy it in her lifetime and after her death she is to will it away. This is to all intents and purposes an absolute gift to her. The intention of the testator is, I think, sufficiently plain, though it may fail if Mamu should not give the requisite directions by her will. He has not contemplated her not doing so.

If I am correct in this view, the gift does not offend against the rule in the Tagore case. The persons to whom the property is given take it from Mamu and not from the testator. Mamu became the owner. Courts in England have viewed similar wills in this light. The cases are collected in Theobald on Wills (3rd Ed.), p. 352. Robinson v. Dusgate (1); Hixon v. Oliver (2) are cases very like the present. If I am in error in ascertaining the wishes of the testator from the words which he has used, I err in good company. When there is, as here, no gift over on failure to [655] exercise the power, it is difficult to interpret the will in any other sense than this,—that the testator when penning his intention expressed the incidents of an absolute gift instead of making an absolute gift in the more simple form and omitted to specify some of them.

The next clause to be considered is the 13th. The meaning of this clause is that Motivahu is to receive Rs. 750 per month to keep the house and to defray the worship of the Thakur. Mamu, no doubt the testator expected, would live with her, but, if she withdraws herself, the testator has made no provision for that I should be making a new will for the testator and altering his expressed intention if I were to allocate any part of this sum to Mamu. If Mamu returns to the house, and Motivahu does not properly expend the money on the household expenses, the executors have the power themselves to expend them with their own hands.

As to cl. 15, it is sufficient to say that only Rs. 50 per mensem are payable out of the income of the trust created by cls. 7 and 8. The other expenditure there directed is to be made out of the general fund. This general fund is that specified in cl. 16. The capital is not to be trenched upon. Out of the balance of the income the executor can make payments for religious charity. The bequest is allowable as the translation runs, and even if the word dharam only is used in the original, the parties will hardly dispute it, as it is only the surplus income out of which the expenditure can be made.

For the reason already given I cannot positively decide on the invalidity of the provisions in cl. 18. If children should be born, my decision would not bind them.

The 18th clause contains an alternative gift of the property there described to dharam or failing that to such person as Mamu may direct by making her will. The whole gift, however, would fail on both branches if Mamu should have a child. Failing such child the alternative gift comes into play. The alternative gift to dharam fails for vagueness, but effect will be given to the valid one. See the cases collected in Theobald, p. 406 (3rd Ed.). [656] My decision on cl. 8 governs the gift to Mamu expressed in the same words in cl. 18.

I do not think that cl. 19 raises a question of election. Motivahu's stridhan ornament would not, I think, be properly treated as falling within the clause if there were other ornaments which she wore and of which the testator had power to dispose. If the point is insisted on by the plaintiff, I must have some evidence before me.

I may probably have overlooked some minor points. If so, the case had better be set down again, or they can be dealt with when the minutes of the decree, which will have to be spoken to, are being settled. Costs of all parties will come out of the estate.

The defendant Motivahu appealed.

Lang (Advocate General) and Macpherson appeared for the appellant.

Inverarity and Macleod for the respondent.

The authorities cited in the lower Court were relied on, and reference was made to ss. 103, 125 of the Succession Act (X of 1865); Mayne's Hindu Law, ss. 364, 354; Javerbai v. Kablibai(1); Krishnanath v. Atmaram(2).

The appeal Court (Sargent, C. J., and Bayley, J.) confirmed the decree of Farran, J., with a slight variation. The following was the material part of the decree. The words in italics were added by the appeal Court, thus limiting the class to which Mamu might appoint the property to persons in existence at the death of the testator:—

"And this Court doth further declare that according to the true construction of the said will subject to the payment of the sum of Rs. 50 per month to the defendant Motivahu directed by the 14th para. of the said will and of the sum of Rs. 50 per month to the plaintiff Mamubai directed by the 15th para. of the said will to be paid respectively, the plaintiff Mamubai and the defendant Motivahu are during their joint lives entitled in equal shares to the net rents of the said immoveable properties, and that the survivor of them will be entitled during her life to the entirety of the said net rents. And this Court doth further order that the said trustees do divide and pay the said net rents accordingly, and in case of dispute this Court doth order that it be referred to Charles Edward Fox, Esquire, the Commissioner of the Honourable Court [657] for taking accounts, to ascertain what amount is now payable to the plaintiff Mamubai and to the defendant Motivahu respectively in respect of such net rents having regard to the sums (if any) already paid to them respectively on account of such net rents. And this Court doth further declare that the gift contained in para. 8 of the said will to such person in existence at death of testator as the plaintiff Mamubai may direct by her will is valid, but this Court cannot and doth not determine upon whom the property referred to in the said 8th clause will devolve in case the plaintiff Mamubai shall die without making or leaving a will. And this Court doth further declare that this order shall not prejudice the issue, if any, of the plaintiff Mamubai who may be born hereafter. And this Court doth further declare that according to the true construction of the said will the plaintiff Mamubai is entitled to reside with the defendant Motivahu and to have her household expenses conjointly with those of the defendant Motivahu paid out of the Rs. 750 per month by the 13th para. of the said will directed to be paid, but this Court doth further declare that the testator has made no provision in his will, so far as the said payment of Rs. 750 is concerned, for the plaintiff in the event of her withdrawing herself from the testator's family house. And this Court doth further declare that according to the true construction of para. 15 of the said will the sums by that para. directed to be paid other than Rs. 50 per month to the plaintiff Mamubai are properly payable out of the income of the said testator's general estate after payment thereout of the said sum of Rs. 750 per month to the defendant Motivabu as directed by the 13th para. of the said will. And this Court doth further declare that Government promissory loan notes of the nominal value of Rs. 36,300 and the house mentioned in the 2nd schedule hereto have been set apart by the executors and executrix of the testator out of his estate for maintaining the sadavarats mentioned in paras.3, 4 and 5 of the said will. And this Court doth further declare that the alternative gift to charity in the 18th para. of the said will purported to be made is void for uncertainty, but that the gift in the same para. to such person in existence at death of testator as the plaintiff Mamubai may direct by her will is valid. And this Court doth further declare that para. 19 of the said will raises no question of election on the part of the defendant Motivahu. And this Court doth further order that the costs of all parties to the suit when taxed as between attorney and client and noted in the margin hereof be paid out of the testator's estate. And this Court doth reserve further consideration and liberty to parties to apply as there may be occasion."

[21st August, 1894.]

Hindu law—Adoption—Only son.

The adoption of a person who at the time of his adoption is an only son, is invalid. The fact the other sons are afterwards born to his parents, does not validate his adoption.

FIRST appeal from the decision of Rao Bahadur Lalshankar Umiah Shankar, First Class Subordinate Judge of Ahmedabad.

The plaintiff Bai Mathura was the mother of one Jadav Sobharam, who died on the 16th June, 1879. He left a widow Lalita, who was then pregnant. She subsequently gave birth to a son, who died the day after his birth.

On the 7th April, 1890, Lalita adopted the first defendant Raiji, a minor, who was then the only son of one Nahalchand Mohanlal and whose mother was then pregnant.

Lalita died on the 8th April, 1890, and on her death Bai Mathura brought the present suit to establish her right to, and recover possession of, the property left by her deceased son Jadav Sobharam and for a declaration that the adoption of Raiji and a will alleged to have been made by Lalita were invalid.

* Appeal No. 154 of 1892.

AUG. 21.
APPELLATE CIVIL.
19 B. 658.

The defendant Raiji pleaded that the adoption was legal; that his mother, who was pregnant at the time of adoption, had afterwards given birth to a son who was still alive, and that the will and a deed of adoption executed by Lalita were valid, &c.

The Subordinate Judge found that the adoption of Raiji, who was the only son at the time of adoption, was invalid; that the will relied on by the defendants was genuine, but that it gave no property to the minor defendant, and that the plaintiff was entitled to the property.

The defendants appealed. Pending appeal, the plaintiff Bai Mathura having died, her daughters were joined as respondents.

[659] Branson with Nagindas T. Marphatia, for the appellants (defendants).—The Judge was wrong in holding that the adoption of Raiji was the adoption of an only son. Raiji's mother was pregnant at the time of the adoption and she gave birth to a son who is living. Therefore, Raiji was not the only son of his parents, and his adoption cannot be impeached on that ground. Various adoptions of this kind have taken place, and they have not been set aside. The adoption of an only son has been upheld by the Allahabad High Court—Beni Prasad v. Hardai Bibi (1).

Inverarity with Gokuldas K. Parekh, for the respondent (plaintiff).—Raiji had no brother in existence at the time of his adoption. The fact that his mother subsequently gave birth to a son cannot make the adoption valid, which was invalid when it was made. It was an accident that Raiji's mother subsequently gave birth to a son and not to a daughter. Though Raiji's mother was pregnant at the time of the adoption, and afterwards gave birth to a son, still Raiji was none the less an only son at the time of the adoption. The adoption of an only son is invalid—Waman Raghupati v. Krishnaji (2); Lakshmappa v. Ramava (3); Hanmanta v. Bhimacharya (4); Nagabhushanam v. Sheshammaguru (5).

JUDGMENT.

FARRAN, J.—Although we may be permitted to doubt whether the judgment in Lakshmappa v. Ramava (3), which most probably formed the basis of the Full Bench decision in Appeal No. 1 of 1879, followed by the Full Bench in Waman Ragupati v. Krishnaji (2), took sufficiently into account the altered sense of the Hindu community evinced by the frequency of the adoption of only sons, we are bound to follow the Full Bench decision (unless the Privy Council has other wise decided) to its logical conclusion. It decides that the adoption of an only son is invalid, inasmuch as such an adoption contravenes the directions in the ancient text against the giving or accepting an only son in adoption. Having regard to the decisions in Nagabhushanam v. Seshammaguru (5) and Hanmanta Ramchandra v. Bhimacharya (4), we must hold that the defendant Raiji was an [660] only son at the time of his adoption, which adoption was, therefore, (if it took place, as to which the Subordinate Court has recorded no finding) invalid. To hold otherwise would be without warrant derived from the texts to graft an anomalous exception upon an established general rule. We must, therefore, confirm the finding of the Subordinate Judge on the first issue. (The rest of the judgment is not material to this report).

Receiver—Duties and liability of—Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), s. 503.

A receiver appointed under s. 503 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882) to collect the rents of an estate, is bound to make good a loss caused to it by a breach of his duties.

A receiver is not justified in delegating or entrusting to another a duty entrusted to him by the Court. He should in all important matters apply for and obtain the direction of the Judge who appoints him.

A receiver is entitled to his costs, charges and expenses properly incurred in the discharge of his duties.

APPEAL from the decision of Rao Bahadur Chunilal Maneklal, First Class Subordinate Judge of Poona, in suit No. 442 of 1891.

The defendant, a karkun in the First Class Subordinate Judge's Court at Poona, was appointed a receiver under s. 503 of the Code of Civil Procedure (Act XIV of 1882) in suit No. 315 of 1887, to collect the rents of an estate consisting of moveable and immoveable property. He employed three successive karkuns and left to each of them the absolute and uncontrolled management of the estate and the custody of its funds without obtaining any security from them. One of the karkuns made use of the whole [661] of the collected funds for his own purposes and destroyed or manipulated the accounts, and after nearly four years' management the receiver handed over the immoveable property and four pies to the plaintiff, who had been appointed administrator, on the termination of the suit, under s. 9 of Reg. VIII of 1827. He produced no accounts.

The District Judge, on the report of the administrator, sanctioned the institution of the present suit. Plaintiff thereupon sued for an account from 8th September, 1887, to 30th September, 1891, and to recover what might be found due to the estate upon taking such account, with interest at 9 per cent. from date of suit, alleging that he found that owing to mismanagement a great deal of damage had been done to the estate. There was no dispute as to the immoveable property, the whole of it having been safely delivered over to the plaintiff.

The defendant pleaded (inter alia) that full powers had been conferred on him by his appointment as receiver; that he acted bona fide in the selection of his karkuns; that it was impossible to manage the estate, which was situate in three districts, without the assistance of karkuns, and that he was not responsible for the karkuns' negligence or fraud.

The Subordinate Judge found that the defendant had no power to delegate his authority as a receiver, and that he was liable for the property misappropriated by his clerks. He, therefore, appointed a commissioner for taking accounts and ordered local investigation according to certain directions. The defendant failed to render an account to the commissioner. The Judge, therefore, accepted the accounts produced by the plaintiff as correct, and passed a decree according to those accounts, awarding to the plaintiff Rs. 5,894-8-9 with costs.

* First Appeal No. 165 of 1892.

The defendant preferred an appeal.

Mahadeo C. Apte, for the respondent (plaintiff).

JUDGMENT.

FARRAN, J.—The defendant in this case, who is a receiver appointed under s. 503 of the Code to collect the rents of an estate consisting of house property and land, has entirely [662] misapprehended his position and duties, and the estate entrusted to his care has thereby suffered considerable loss. His duty, whether he employed a karkun or not, was himself to receive the rents as they were from time to time collected on his behalf, if he did not himself recover them, and keep them under his own control in a bank to a separate account or in some other secure place of deposit, and to pay out such sums as from time to time might be required for current expenses and repairs, and personally or by a karkun to keep correct and accurate accounts of the receipts from and expenditure upon the estate, obtaining vouchers for all, other than petty, sums paid. That duty entrusted to him by the Court as its selected and trusted officer, he was not justified in delegating or entrusting to another. Having done so, and thereby caused loss to the estate, he is bound to make it good.

In all important matters, the receiver should apply for and obtain the direction of the Judge who appoints him. On the other hand, a receiver is entitled to his costs, charges and expenses properly incurred in the discharge of his duties. The question whether these include the assistance of a karkun depends (if the terms of the order appointing him are silent upon the subject) upon the nature of the estate, and must be determined in each case with reference to its own circumstances. No general rule can be laid down; but whether he be allowed a karkun or not, the receiver must himself perform the proper duties appertaining to his office. These, we repeat, he cannot delegate.

In the case before us the receiver, it appears, employed three successive karkuns, and left to each of them the absolute and uncontrolled management of the estate and the custody of its funds. He did not even for his own protection or that of the estate obtain any security from them. The consequence is that one of them, Marathe, made use of the whole of the collected funds for his own purposes, and destroyed or manipulated the accounts, and after nearly four years' management, the receiver has handed over only 4 pies to the administrator. His liability to account for the balance is undoubted.

[663] As, however, the accounts have not been investigated by the local commissioner, as directed by the Judge, we must now direct the accounts to be taken, and as the pleaders for the parties are agreed that in this case the services of a karkun at Rs. 12 per mensem were necessary owing to the nature of the estate, we will direct the commissioner in taking the accounts to allow that item.

We accordingly refer it to Mr. Bhicaji Gopal Robade to take the accounts of the defendant's receivership, charging him with all sums actually received by him, or which, but for his wilful default, he ought to have received, on the best basis which under the circumstances he can adopt. In taking such accounts, let him allow the defendant Rs. 12 per month for the services of a karkun. The terms of this order of reference will supersede the directions given by the Subordinate Judge. The report to be made within six weeks. Costs to be dealt with on receipt of the report as well as the question whether the defendant is to be charged with any and what interest.

Limitation—Limitation Act (XV of 1877), s. 20—Interest—Payment of interest as such—Mortgage—Payment of rents to mortgagee, in lieu of interest on debt—Mortgage-deed not registered—Deed not admissible to prove rents paid as interest—Evidence—Practice—Registration Act (III of 1877), ss. 3 and 17.

By a bond dated 15th July, 1872, A assigned to B the "vahivat of assessment" of certain lands belonging to him as security for a loan of Rs. 10,000. The bond provided that B should receive the assessment, and after making certain payments should retain the balance in lieu of interest until the principal debt should be repaid. The bond was not registered. The assessment was duly received by B until April, 1887. In February, 1890, B filed this suit to recover the principal sum from A personally, relinquishing his claim against the land, as the bond was not [664] registered. A pleaded limitation. B contended that the receipt of the assessment in lieu of interest was a payment of "interest as such" within the meaning of s. 20 of the Limitation Act (XV of 1877) and that the last of such payments having been made within three years before suit his claim was not barred.

Held, that the suit was barred by limitation. The assignment of the "vahivat of assessment" contained in the bond was an assignment of a benefit arising out of immoveable property within the meaning of ss. 17 and 3 of the Registration Act (III of 1877) or else a mortgage; and in either case the bond could not be admitted in evidence, as it was not registered. But it was only by reading the terms of the bond that the Court could gather that the assessment was to be received in lieu of interest. This would be to admit indirectly the provisions of the bond in evidence. Apart from the bond there was no evidence that the plaintiff (B) had been paid "interest as such" within three years of the filing of the suit by the duly authorised agents of the defendants, and the claim was, therefore, barred.

FIRST appeal from the decision of Rao Bahadur G. V. Bhanap, First Class Subordinate Judge of Belgaum. Plaintiff sued to recover Rs. 7,000 alleged to be due on a mortgage-bond dated 15th July, 1872.

The bond had been executed by the defendant's father, who died in 1882, to the plaintiff's father for a sum of Rs. 10,000. Under it the mortgagee was to receive the annual income of the mortgaged land amounting to Rs. 536-12-0, out of which he was to pay Rs. 206-9-0 to Government as naiki judi assessment and to retain the balance in lieu of interest until the principal sum was repaid. The following is a translation of the bond :—

"To Rajeshri Baba Naik Valvekar, residing at Gokak.

"This bond is executed in Suru San 1281 Fasli by Shidramapa Balapa Desai Nadgavda of pargana Gokak to the following effect :—

"The sum of Rs. 13,000 is fixed to-day as the sum which we have borrowed from you, including the amount of the decree in original suit No. 560 of 1867, namely, Rs. 2,958. Out of this sum, deducting the amount of Rs. 3,000 of the bond executed in favour of Sheshgir Naik Valvekar, I owe you Rs. 10,000. For the interest due thereon I have given you the vahivat (management) of assessment of my kamat chavrat (private lands) to the extent of Rs. 536-12-0 out of which Rs. 192-12-0 on account of naiki judi and Rs. 13-13-0 on account of assessment for waste lands are to be paid by you to Government, and the balance, namely Rs. 330-3-0, should be enjoyed by you in lieu of interest annually till the principal debt of Rs. 10,000 is paid by me. When the principal is paid off by me I shall take back the (vahivat of) collections. I have taken back all the old documents as well as the decree which is satisfied. No dispute exists. There will be no intermediate disturbance. Dated 15th July 1872."

[665] The plaintiff alleged that the income of the land had been duly received in lieu of interest until April, 1887, but that he had been prevented from recovering it since 1888. He now sued to recover the sum of Rs. 7,000, relinquishing Rs. 3,000 of the principal and the interest for 1888, and 1889. He sued to recover the amount from the defendants personally, as the bond was not registered. The suit was filed on the 10th February, 1890.

The defendants denied the bond, and pleaded (inter alia) that the plaintiff's claim was barred by limitation.

The Subordinate Judge rejected the claim, holding that execution of the bond was not proved, and that the claim was barred by limitation.

The plaintiff appealed.

Setlur, with Mahadeo V. Bhat, appeared for the appellant (plaintiff).—The evidence proves the existence of the bond. The claim is not time-barred. It is shown that the tenants paid the rents to us till April, 1887, and we recovered them for 1888 with the assistance of the Mamlatdar. The present suit was filed on the 10th February, 1890, and is within time. The Judge refused to regard the payment of rent to us as equivalent to the payment of interest within the meaning of s. 20 of the Limitation Act (XV of 1877), because that was provided for by the bond, which he could not look at as it was not registered. We contend that for this purpose the bond does not need registration. We have abandoned our claim to the land. The bond then merely gives us the right to recover certain money annually from the tenants. What is given is "the vahivat of assessment" and not the vahivat of land. Arrears of money due by a permanent tenant to an inamdar are not immoveable property—Morbhat v. Gangadhar(1); Bajirav Waman v. Krishnarav Ramrav (2).

[FARRAN, J.—Does not the bond assign rents and are not rents benefits arising out of land ?]

The bond does not give us any remedy against the lands of the tenants in case they refuse to pay rents. The assignment [666] was not an assignment of rents as representing the product of land, but simply of moneys becoming periodically due

1894
AUG. 22
APPELLATE CIVIL.
19 B. 663.

Even admitting that rents are transferred to us under the bond, we submit that rents do not come within the definition of immoveable property under the Registration Act. The term 'benefit' must be considered to mean benefit ejusdem generis. The right to take juice from date trees is not a benefit arising out of land—Jalu Namdar v. Baicha Namdar(1). The fact that it is not registered does not prevent the Court from recognizing the existence of the bond, and looking at it for the purpose of connecting the payment of rents with the payment of interest.

Branson with Vasudeo G. Bhandarkar appeared for the respondents (defendants).—The execution of the bond is not proved. If, however, it is held to be proved, then we say it should be registered. It assigns rents, and it has been held that rents fall within the definition of immoveable property—Madhavrao Keshav v. Jagannath Mahadeo (2); ss. 3 and 17 of the Registration Act.

The suit is time-barred, because there is no evidence of payment of interest either by us or by our duly authorized agent within three years before the date of the suit.

JUDGMENT.

FARRAN, J.—We are not inclined to agree with the Subordinate Judge in his finding that execution of the bond sued upon is not proved. It is, in our opinion, clearly established that the plaintiff and his father did pay the judi on account of the Desai's chavrat lands in Melvanki and did receive the assessment from the tenants. These facts, being in accordance with the provisions of the bond, which, though unregistered, may be read as a whole in order to determine the question of its genuineness as a money-bond, tend strongly to outweigh the considerations which arise owing to the non-registration of the document and the other circumstances to which the Subordinate Judge has called attention.

But whether due execution of the bond is proved or not, we think that the claim to recover the principal is barred by limitation. The suit was filed on the 10th February, 1890. The [667] plaintiff received the assessment from the tenants, without the assistance of the Mamlatdar, for Fasli, 1296, the last instalment of which would be payable in April. We, therefore, assume that the plaintiff received assessment from the tenants in April, 1887, as he and his father had done for many years previously.

Now the bond confers upon the obligee the vahivat of assessment Rs. 536-12-0 and (subject to the payment of judi) the right to retain such assessment in lieu of interest each year until the Desai pays the principal. That is, in our opinion, an assignment of a benefit to arise out of immoveable property within the meaning of ss. 17 and 3 of the Registration Act, or else it is a mortgage. It is not the assignment of the rent to be paid by any particular tenant, or tenants, which might possibly bring the case within the rulings in Morbhat v. Gangadhar (3) and Bajirav v. Krishnarav (4), as to which we express no opinion. It is an assignment of the assessment of the land and of its vahivat generally, and so (if it is not a mortgage) falls within the ruling in Madhavrao v. Jagannath (2) and, in our opinion, within the wording and spirit of the definition of immoveable property contained in s. 3 of the Registration Act. The bond being unregistered must, therefore, be treated as a mere money bond, as though the assignment of the rents of the land in lieu of interest had not been contained in it. This assignment under s. 49 of the Registration Act does not affect the assessment, nor can it be received in evidence of the transaction relating to the assessment. In other words, it cannot for that purpose be read at all. As we cannot read this part of the bond, there is no evidence before us to show why the plaintiff received the rent of the Desai's chavrat lands.

It is, however, contended that we ought to infer that the tenants paid these rents to Baba Naik and the plaintiff as interest on the bond with the authority of the Desai. There is some evidence that Baba Naik began to collect the rents contemporaneously with the execution of the bond; he had paid the judi even before then, and it is proved that he and the plaintiff have [668] been collecting these rents for very many years without objection on the part of the Desai and his representatives. These, and the existence of the bond, are the facts before us. We think that if from them we were to draw the inference which we are asked to draw, we could only do so because we have read the terms of the bond. This would be indirectly admitting the provisions as to assessment in the bond in evidence. The inference, leaving the terms of the bond out of consideration, is not the necessary or only inference to be drawn from the established facts. The difficulty of drawing it is also enhanced by the death of the Desai in 1882 leaving minor sons. We must, therefore, hold that the plaintiff has not established that he has been paid "interest as such" on his bond within three years of the filing of his suit by the duly authorized agents of the defendants, and that his suit is, therefore, time-barred.

The result would be the same if the bond were treated as a mortgage of the chavrat lands—Pichandi v. Kandasami (1). This is probably its true character. The vahivat of the assessment is assigned, and the plaintiff always treated himself as being in possession as a mortgagee.

The case is one of hardship, but the hardship has arisen from the neglect of Baba Naik to comply with the provision of a salutary law which we should be straining and not giving effect to if we allowed this appeal. It must, therefore, be dismissed, with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Held, reversing the decree of the lower Court, that, in the absence of any evidence to prove the Talukdar's right to treasure trove either by a grant or prescription, the property belonged to Government, the Indian Treasure Trove Act (VI of 1878) being inapplicable, as no notice was given by the finder, nor were any proceedings taken under it.

APPEAL from the decree of T. Hart-Davies, Joint Judge of Ahmedabad, in suit No. 27 of 1890.

This was an action brought against the Secretary of State for India in Council under the following circumstances.

The plaintiff was the Talukdar of the village of Kamlej in the Ahmedabad District. A bag containing Rs. 1,525, which was stolen property, was found buried under ground in that village. After this bag had been unearthed, another bag containing Rs. 248-2-0 and a gold ring was also found in the ground close by on the same occasion. This bag was found by a pagi in the plaintiff's service.

The police seized both bags, and produced them before the District Magistrate.

The Magistrate directed the first bag to be restored to the owner after the conviction of the thief.

As regards the second bag, the Magistrate called for claimants to come forward under s. 523 of the Code of Criminal Procedure (Act X of 1882).

Thereupon the plaintiff laid claim to the property contained in the second bag, but his claim was disallowed, and an order was passed under s. 524 of the Criminal Procedure Code, directing the property to be placed at the disposal of Government.

The plaintiff then filed the present suit against the Secretary of State for India in Council, alleging that as owner and Talukdar of the village in which the property was found he was entitled to it.

[670] The defendant disputed the plaintiff's title, and contended that the District Magistrate had properly disposed of the property in question under s. 524 of the Code of Criminal Procedure.

The Joint Judge awarded the plaintiff's claim.

Against this decision the defendant appealed to the High Court.

Rao Saheb Vasudev J. Kirtikar, Government Pleader, for the appellant.—The lower Court is wrong in holding that the present case is governed by the ruling in Queen-Empress v. Tribhovan (1). That was a case under s. 523 and not under 524 of the Code of Criminal Procedure (X of 1882). Peile's work on the Talukdars of Gujarat has no bearing on the question at issue. It does not touch the question of treasure trove. The question is one to be decided by common law. In England the Crown is the owner of property found under circumstances like the present. The Hindu law is also to the same effect. Hidden treasure goes to the sovereign—Manu, ch. 8, pl. 37—39; Yajnayavalkya in Mandlik's Vyavahar Mayukh, 204; Stoke's Hindu Law, 131; Sacred Books of the East, Vol. 14, ch. 3, s. 13; Vishnu, s. 3, pl. 55—63, Apastambha, pl. 43—45; In re Uma Charan Banerji (2); Rani Kattama Natchiar v. Mahammad Mira (3). These authorities show that the plaintiff has no right to the property in dispute merely because he is Talukdar and owner of the soil in which the property was found buried. The Treasure Trove Act (VI of 1878) has no application to the present case, as no proceedings were taken under it, no notice under it was given by the finder, and the finder himself is not a party to this suit. Even if it applied, the Act creates a special tribunal to determine a claim of this kind, and the Civil Court would have no jurisdiction to entertain this suit—Khando Narayan v. Apaji Sadashiv (1).

(1) 9 B. 131. (2) 7 B. L. R. Appx. 3. (3) 7 M.H.C.R. 150.

Inverarity (with him G. M. Tripathi).—The sovereign is no doubt entitled to hidden treasure at common law. It is said that "treasure trove is when any money is found hid in the earth, but not lying upon the ground, and no man knows to whom [671] it belongs; then the property thereof belongs to the king or the lord of the manor by special grant or prescription.....the law of England gives it to the king by his prerogative or some other claiming under him" (2). But the common law rights of the Crown are vested in Talukdars: see Objects and Reasons for Bill No. 6 of 1885. They are proprietors of Crown rights by inheritance. Act VI of 1878 settles the rights of the finder as well as of the owner of the place in which the treasure is found. Both of them are entitled to divide it under s. 10 of the Act. The common law rights of the sovereign no longer exist. Under s. 20 of Act VI of 1878 the finder's share in treasure trove vests in the Crown if the finder does not give notice as required under s. 4. And it is only after such notice is given by the finder that the Collector's jurisdiction to hold an inquiry arises. In the absence of such notice, the Civil Court can entertain a suit like the present. The suit is not barred by s. 524 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. The order placing the property at the disposal of Government is not final. See also Kathiawar Directory, Part II, p. 927.

JUDGMENT.

JARDINE, J.—The facts are that after a person accused of theft had pointed out a place where he had concealed the stolen property, Rs. 1,525, by burying them in the ground, and after these rupees had been unearthed, another bag containing Rs. 248-2-0 and a golden ring was found in the ground close by and in the same pit at a greater depth on the same occasion. The property in this second bag is the subject of the present suit. In the absence of any contention to the contrary, we concur with the Joint Judge in holding that the District Magistrate, who called for claimants to come forward under s 523 of the Code of Criminal Procedure (X of 1882), had jurisdiction so to do, the property having been "found under circumstances which create suspicion of the commission of an offence." The plaintiff, who is Talukdar, of Kamlej, and owner of the field where the property was found, put in a claim, which the District Magistrate disallowed. Under s. 524 the Magistrate placed the property "at the disposal of Government," which he could do where the following words [672] of the section apply: "If no person within such period establishes his claim to such property, and if the person in whose possession such property was found is unable to show that it was legally acquired by him." The person who found the property is not a party to the present suit; and his interest in it need not be considered.

The Talukhdar sued the Secretary of State for India in Council, alleging that as Talukdar and owner of the soil wherein the property was found, he is entitled. The Joint Judge has awarded the claim.

The Joint Judge held that the decision in Queen-Empress v. Tribhovan(1) is authority for holding that this suit will lie. He omitted to notice that the decision relates to s. 523, and not to an order properly made under s. 524. As s. 524 allowed an appeal, it is doubtful whether the law contemplates a remedy by suit. In the unreported case of Sheikh Gholam Abid, cited in Prinsep's Code of Criminal Procedure, 7th Ed., under s. 89, the words in that section "shall be at the disposal of the Government" were held by the High Court at Fort William to confer an absolute right on the Government. In The Government of Bengal v. Meer Surwar Jan(2), it was held that the property of an absconding criminal placed at the disposal of the Government could only be restored by the Government and not by the High Court. In Bukhooree Singh v. The Government (3), it was held that no suit would lie for such property against the Government or the purchaser. These cases have not been cited at the hearing, and we refrain from deciding the point, as we can dispose of the plaintiff's claim on its merits.

The Indian Treasure Trove Act (VI of 1878) is irrelevant to the present matter, as no notice was given under it by the finder, nor any proceedings taken. Mr. Inverarity has, however, argued for the plaintiff that it contains legislative recognition of the right of the owner of the soil to share with the finder of the treasure trove. Section 6 contemplates persons having rights as owners of the place where the property is found. But [673] there is no declaration of substantive law that the owner of the soil is entitled to treasure trove; although, as stated by the Honourable Sir Edward Bayley at the meeting of the Viceroy's Council on the 13th February, 1878, when the Bill was passed, "as a matter of fact such right was very largely asserted by persons who were owners of the soil, and the assertion of vague and antagonistic rights had given rise to many disputes, and had also frequently led to the concealment of property found." See Uma Charan's case (4) and Rani Kattama v. Muhammad Mira (5) which interpret local regulations unfavourably to the owner of the soil.

It is the common ground of the plaintiff and defendant that at Hindu law, hidden treasure goes, under limitations about Brahmins and others, which need not be here considered, to the sovereign, as protector of the people and lord of the soil, as is said in Manu, ch. 8, pl, 37 to 39. See, too, the Vyavahara Mayukha, ch. 7, ss. 8 to 10, on the king's rights in waifs, strays and treasure trove; also West and Buhler, 833. The learned Government Pleader has also drawn the Court's attention to similar rules in Gautama, Vasishta, Vishnu and Apastamba. The plaintiff claims that, as Talukdar and absolute owner of the soil, he enjoys the franchise of treasure trove as a seignorial appendage to his high territorial lordship. In England, as Coke tells us, treasure trove doth belong to the king or to some lord or other by the king's grant or prescription. The plaintiff claims by right acquired before the village of Kamlej became part of British India. The Joint Judge affirms his right in the following passage of his judgment:—"There is no doubt, looking to the consensus of authorities, and as every revenue officer who has served in Gujarath is aware, that a Talukdar is the absolute owner of the land. He is not, like an inamdar, an alienee merely of Government revenue. I may quote Sir J. Peile's report (passim) on this subject and the statement of objects and reasons to Act VI of 1888

(1) 9 B. 131. (2) 18 W. R. Cr. R. 33. (3) 8 W. R. 207.
(4) 7 B.L.R. Appx. 3. (5) 7 M. H. C. R. 150.

where this fact is enunciated. So, as actual and absolute owner of the land, the Talukdar is owner of property found in it in the same way as the Kathiawar States (vide statement of objects and reasons quoted above)." With respect to the above remarks we have to [674] notice that Sir James Peile does not, in the papers referred to, make any mention of treasure trove or any franchises belonging to the Talukdars of Gujarat. He appears to be engaged in discussing the more familiar question of the right to land revenue. He says the Talukdars are not grantees. "Over their landed estates," he says, "they exercise the proprietary right of the Crown by inheritance, just as the Native Chiefs and their kinsmen do in Kathiawar. The Government revenue paid by Talukdars was originally a tribute, and the rights of Government are limited to that payment. Government is not the owner of any of the land in these estates, waste or other." These statements may well be true, as matter of history. The plaintiff may to some extent be a lord of regalia; but there is no evidence that he owns all the rights of the Crown which in England flow from the prerogative of the sovereign as universal occupant. They do not touch the present claim to treasure trove which we think must be based on documents or instances of the exercise of the right by the plaintiff, or by neighbouring Talukdars, to prove a grant or prescription. Of such evidence there is none on the record; and we have not been moved to remand the suit in order to enable evidence to be given.

1894 AUG. 23. APPELLATE CIVIL. 19 B. 668.

We, therefore, reverse the decree and dismiss the suit, with all costs on the plaintiff.

not set aside the execution if otherwise valid. Section 17 of the Mamlatdars Act (III of 1876) is imperative, and leaves to the Mamlatdar no discretion as to the duty of enforcing the decree. The Act does not purport to provide detailed rules as to applications for execution, and a Mamlatdar's Court is not governed as to execution of decrees by the ordinary rules of procedure; and provided the procedure followed gives effect in the end to the intention of s. 17, the Court will not interfere.

Held also that under s. 17 of the Mamlatdars' Act (III of 1876) a Mamlatdar was not precluded from himself supervising the execution of a decree in a case in which the village officers were from interest or other cause unlikely to give proper effect to it.

APPLICATION under the extraordinary jurisdiction of the High Court (s. 622 of the Civil Procedure Code, Act XIV of 1882) against the order of Rao Saheb N. V. Bhat, Mamlatdar of Sinnar, in the Nasik District, passed in the execution of a decree in a possessory suit.

The applicants built a dam across the river Mahalungi in the Nasik District and obstructed the flow of water, whereupon the [676] opponents sued them in the Court of the Mamlatdar at Sinnar, and on the 24th June, 1885, obtained a decree directing that an opening should be made in the dam so as to give the opponents (plaintiffs) the same amount of water as they had previously enjoyed.

The applicants then filed a suit in the Subordinate Judge's Court of Sinnar to set aside the Mamlatdar's decree, but this suit failed, and the order was confirmed.

On the 15th June, 1891, the opponents applied to the Mamlatdar to execute his decree of 24th June, 1885, and to have the dam opened. The Mamlatdar referred them to the Civil Court for an order to that effect, whereupon they (opponents) applied to the Collector of the District on the 5th April, 1892, requesting him to direct the Mamlatdar to make an opening in the dam and allow the water to flow in accordance with the Mamlatdar's decree. The Collector on the 15th April made the following endorsement on the application, and forwarded it to the Assistant Collector:—

"It appears from the reply received by the applicant from the Court on his application, and placed with the proceedings, that the prohibitory order passed by the Civil Court enjoining the Mamlatdar not to execute the order passed by him came to an end when the suit pending in the Civil Court was disposed of. Therefore there appears to be no objection to the execution of the order of the Mamlatdar's Court from the taluka (office). May this be known."

On the 27th May, 1892, the Mamlatdar instead of issuing orders to the village officers under s. 17 of the Mamlatdars' Act (III of 1876) to execute the decree, went himself to the place and had a portion of the dam removed under his own surpervision.

The applicants now applied to the High Court under its extraordinary jurisdiction, contending that the Collector and the Assistant Collector had no jurisdiction to move in the matter; that the Mamlatdar acted with material irregularity in acting upon orders, and that the execution had been illegal and had caused them serious loss and damage. They obtained a rule nisi calling upon the plaintiffs to show cause why the portion of the dam removed by the Mamlatdar should not be restored.

[677] Branson with Mahadev B. Chavbal, appeared for the applicants (defendants) in support of the rule:—The Collector had no authority to interfere in the matter. When the Mamlatdar refused to execute the decree, the proper remedy of the plaintiffs was to apply to the High Court and not to the Collector. The Mamlatdar's powers are limited entirely by the Mamlatdars' Act. The Mamlatdar having refused to execute the decree, he was functus officio and had no power either to review his order or to do any thing in the matter under the Collector's order. Further, the action of the Mamlatdar was in obedience of the order of his superior officer, the Collector. It was not a judicial act. The Collector had no authority to issue an order to the Mamlatdar in a matter arising under the Mamlatdars' Act—Ravlojirao v. Satu(1). Moreover, the Collector ought to have issued notice to us and to have heard us before acting. His order was ex parte and illegal. Section 17 of the Mamlatdars' Act lays down certain procedure in execution of a decree. It provides that the execution of the Mamlatdar's decree should be entrusted to the village officers. Here the Mamlatdar himself executed his decree. He had no authority to do this under the Act.

Lang (Advocate-General) with Daji Abaji Khare, appeared for the opponents (plaintiffs) to show cause.—The Collector appears to have advised the Mamlatdar to execute his decree, the Mamlatdar having been under an erroneous impression that the decree in the civil suit prevented him from doing so. No harm or injustice of any kind has been done. It was not necessary for the Collector to give to the defendants notice of our petition to him. The Collector did not himself take any action in the matter. What the Mamlatdar did was justifiable, and the fact that he did it under the advice of the Collector cannot make any difference. It is urged that the Mamlatdar ought to have ordered the village officers to execute the decree. It appears, however, from our petition to the Collector that the village officers were interested in maintaining the dam and would put obstacles in our way. Owing to this circumstance the Mamlatdar himself supervised the execution of the decree. Even [678] supposing that the Mamlatdar has committed an error in law, still that would not be a sufficient ground for interference under s. 622 of the Civil Procedure Code—Hari Bhikaji v. Naro Vishvanath(2). If the defendants are aggrieved by the execution of the decree, they can seek redress by an independent proceeding, but not by an application under the extraordinary jurisdiction—Motilal Kashibhai v. Nana(3).

JUDGMENT.

FULTON, J.—We do not think we should interfere in this case. The Collector doubtless was not legally justified in giving directions in a case under the Mamlatdars' Act, but we agree with the learned Advocate General that as his intervention merely resulted in the Mamlatdar's taking steps to give effect to the decree, it furnishes no ground for action on our part. Section 17 is imperative, and left the Mamlatdar no discretion as to the duty of enforcing the decree. The Collector's memorandum at most merely directed him to obey the law; and though it may have been improper for the Collector to issue such a direction, which legally could only issue from this Court, we cannot on account of the impropriety set aside the execution if otherwise valid. The argument that because the Mamlatdar had, owing to a misapprehension, at first refused to execute the decree he was precluded from enforcing it afterwards when the misapprehension had been removed, will not, we think, hold good. The Act does not purport to provide detailed rules as to applications for execution.

19 B. 675.

It does not even prescribe any application at all. It simply requires the Mamlatdar to issue orders to give effect to his decree, and the fact of his failing at first to do so does not seem to render the obligation any less binding. Cases such as Manjunath v. Venkatesh(1), Mungul Pershad v. Grija Kant(2), Ram Kirpal v. Mussumat Rup Kuar(3) and Bani Ram v. Nanhu Mal(4) do not appear applicable to Courts, like the Mamlatdar's, which are not governed as to execution of decrees by the ordinary rules of procedure; and provided the procedure followed gives effect, in the end, to the intention of s. 17, we ought not, we think, to interfere.

[679] Next it was urged that the Mamlatdar's action was at variance with the provisions of s. 17, inasmuch as instead of issuing orders to the village officers to give effect to the decree he went himself to the spot and got the dam cut under his own supervision. This procedure may perhaps have been unusual, but the allegation contained in the 11th paragraph of the opponents' petition of 5th April, 1892, that the village officers of Thangaon were interested in the proceeding, has not been contradicted by affidavit or in argument, and if true, would probably justify the execution of the decree otherwise than through their agency. Section 17 prescribes the ordinary method to be adopted, but ought not, we think, to be read so literally as to compel the Mamlatdar to employ interested parties to give effect to the decree. In all cases the law must be construed in a reasonable manner, but it would defeat the intention of the Act to hold that a Mamlatdar was precluded from himself supervising the execution of a decree in a case in which he thought the village officers were from interest or other cause unlikely to give proper effect to it. Under the circumstances, then, we do not think that we are in a position to hold that in going to the spot to enforce the decree the Mamlatdar acted erroneously.

Lastly, it was said that in cutting the masonry dam the Mamlatdar had exceeded the limits of the decree, but as the existence of this dam had been adjudged to be incompatible with the customary supply of water to the opponents it is difficult to see how else he could give effect to the decree. Whether the applicants may now restore their old kutcha dams in such a way as not to interfere with the due supply of water to the opponents, is a point on which we can offer no opinion, and in respect of which, so far as we are aware, no orders have been issued by the Mamlatdar. But the applicants must take care that, if they take any such steps, they must not deprive the opponents of the supply of water awarded to them by the decree which the Civil Courts have refused to set aside. Under the circumstances we discharge the rule with costs.

Before Mr. Justice Farran and Mr. Justice Candy.

JALBHAI ARDESHIR SHET (Original Defendant), Appellant v. LOUIS MANOEL *(Original Plaintiff), Respondent. [22nd August, 1894.]

Christian—Native Christian—Conversion from Hinduism to Christianity, effect of—Hindu convert—Salsette, law applicable to Christian inhabitants of—Hindu law, how far applicable—Succession—Inheritance—Co-parcenary—Primogeniture—Manager of family—Mortgage by manager when binding on family property—Mortgage—Redemption—Decree against manager alone on the mortgage, how far binding on the property—Parties—Practice—Will—Joint family—Ancestral property—Right of Christian of Salsette to deal by will with his share in ancestral property.

The law of a conquered territory continues in force until altered by the Crown or the Legislature. The island of Salsette was conquered from the Marathas by the British in 1774 and the law of succession for the Christian inhabitants of the island remained unaltered until the passing of the Indian Succession Act (X of 1865). Until that Act was passed, the law of primogeniture was not in force among the Christian inhabitants of Salsette. In the absence of a widow and daughter the sons took the property of their father in equal shares.

Quære whether they did so under the Hindu law or the Portuguese law or by force of usage existing among them.

A mortgage of certain property was made in 1875 by the eldest of three brothers (Pedro, Minguel and Enos), who were Christian inhabitants of the island of Salsette. They had inherited the property from their father, who died in 1840. The family had originally been a Hindu family, but had been converted to Christianity. Enos died in 1876, and Minguel died in 1883, bequeathing his interest in the property to his nephew the plaintiff, who was Pedro's son. In that year (1883) the mortgagee sued Pedro alone upon the mortgage and obtained a decree which he afterwards assigned to the defendant who sold the mortgaged property in execution of the decree, and at the sale purchased the property himself. The plaintiff (son of Pedro the mortgagor) now sued to redeem the property, and the questions arose (1) whether under the law applicable to the Christian inhabitants of Salsette the eldest brother Pedro had succeeded on the father's death to the whole of the family property, and (2) if not, then to what extent the mortgage in question bound the property of the family.

Held, (1) that the law of primogeniture prior to the passing of the Indian Succession Act (X of 1865) did not exist among the Christian inhabitants of Salsette, and that Pedro, although eldest son, had not succeeded to the whole of the family property. He and his brothers took equal shares in the property of their father.

(2) That the mortgage by Pedro had been authorised by the family and was for family purposes and was binding upon the family property. Although Pedro and his brothers could not be regarded as co-parceners under Hindu law, yet having regard to the fact that they were descendants of converts from Hinduism, among whom [681] Hindu usages largely prevailed, the question should be treated in much the same way as if the family was still a Hindu family, and the Court would not require the same direct proof of the manager's authority to mortgage as it would in the case of an English manager under similar circumstances.

(3) That the plaintiff was not entitled to redeem. What was intended to be sold at the sale held in execution of the decree upon the mortgage was the whole interest in the mortgaged property. The defendant purchased that interest subject to the right of the plaintiff to show that his share derived from Minguel was not bound by the mortgage, and he had failed to do so. Minguel's share as well as Pedro's had passed by the sale.

(4) A member of the Christian community of the island of Salsette is entitled to deal with his share in ancestral property by will.

THIS was a first appeal from the decision of Rao Bahadur G. V. Limaye, First Class Subordinate Judge of Thana.

One Antonio Louis Manoel, a Christian inhabitant of Salsette in theThana District, died in the year 1846 leaving considerable immoveable property and three sons, viz., Pedro, Minguel and Enos. The family had been originally a Hindu family.

On the 9th January, 1875, the eldest son, Pedro, mortgaged the family property in dispute in the present suit to the executors of one Domingos Aga de Penha for Rs. 8,000. The mortgage-deed was attested by Enos, who died in the year 1876.

Disputes subsequently arose between Pedro and Minguel, which were referred to arbitration, and an award was made under which the family property was given to Minguel. The award was presented to the Subordinate Judges's Court at Nasik, and an order that it should be filed was made by consent on 10th February, 1882, and it was duly filed under s. 526 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882).

Minguel died on the 27th May, 1883, having made a will by which he left the property to Pedro's son, Louis Manoel, the present plaintiff, who subsequently obtained possession of the property including the property in suit.

The mortgage-debt contracted by Pedro not having been paid, the mortgagees in April, 1883, filed a suit on the mortgage against Pedro (to which the present plaintiff was not a party) and obtained a decree on the 11th May, 1885, which he assigned to the present defendant, Jalbhai Ardeshir Shet. In execution of the [682] decree the defendant sold the property now in dispute at a Court sale on the 27th September, 1886, and purchased it himself. In 1887 he sought to dispossess the plaintiff.

The plaintiff thereupon brought a suit (No. 308 of 1888) against him in the Court of the First Class Subordinate Judge of Thana to establish his right to the mortgaged property as devisee of his uncle Minguel and for an injunction restraining the defendant from interfering with his possession. In that suit the plaintiff treated the defendant as a trespasser, and did not admit his title as mortgagee. The Court found that the defendant was a mortgagee of plaintiff's father Pedro and dismissed the suit.

On appeal by the plaintiff to the High Court the decree was confirmed on the ground that defendant not having been a party to the consent order of the Nasik Court, it could not affect his right under the mortgage which was prior in date (see Printed Judgments of 1890, p. 215).

While these proceedings were going on, the defendant took possession of the property. The plaintiff now sued to recover it. He contended that the property which had been mortgaged by his father Pedro was ancestral property and that the mortgage not being for the benefit of the family, only affected Pedro's share. He prayed for possession of Minguel's moiety and for a declaration that it was not affected by the mortgage, and as heir of Pedro he prayed for redemption of Pedro's moiety on payment of what might be due. In the alternative, he prayed for redemption of the whole property in case Minguel's share should be held subject to the mortgage.

The defendant contended that English law and not Hindu law applied to the plaintiff and his family, who were Christians, and that, consequently, Pedro, as eldest son had succeeded to the whole property and was competent to mortgage it; that the award of the arbitrators and the consent order of the Nasik Court based on it were collusive and fraudulent, and being subsequent to the mortgage did not affect it; that the plaintiff's suit of 1888 having been dismissed, the question now raised was res judicata, and that the plaintiff being one of the sons and heirs of Pedro was [683] bound by the mortgage effected by his father, by the decree on the mortgage, and the subsequent execution sale.

The Subordinate Judge was of opinion that up to the date of the passing of the Indian Succession Act (X of 1865) the plaintiff's family had been subject to Hindu law, and that, consequently, Minguel had at that time a half-share in the property which he retained till his death. He held, however, that the mortgage of 1875, had been effected by Pedro with Minguel's consent, and that Minguel's share was included. As to the plaintiff's claim to his father Pedro's share, the Court held that it was res judicata by the previous suit, and that his claim to it was now barred. The arbitration proceedings and the consent decree were found to be a sham. But as to the share of Minguel, the Court held that the plaintiff was entitled to redeem, and passed a decree in the following terms:—

"I, therefore, order that the plaintiff do redeem and recover possession after partition of half of the property in dispute from the defendant on payment to him of Rs. 6,181 with interest at 9 per cent. per annum on Rs. 4,000 out of that sum from 2nd April, 1883, to date of payment, minus half of the net income, if any, derived by the defendant from the said property, the amount of which will be determined in execution. In default of payment within six months from the date of determination of the income, the plaintiff's right to redemption will for ever be foreclosed. Costs of both the parties to be borne by the plaintiff."

The defendant appealed, and the plaintiff presented cross-objections under s. 561 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882).

Inverarity (with Manekshah, J. Taleyarkhan), for the appellant (defendant).—We have bought the property at a sale in execution of a decree upon the mortgage effected by Pedro in 1875. He was the eldest son The family was Christian, and English law applied, and on his father's death in 1840 the whole property devolved on Pedro by right of primogeniture. He, therefore, could mortgage the whole of it.

If it be held that the rule of primogeniture does not apply, then we contend that there is evidence in the case to show that the mortgage was effected for family purposes. Pedro was the manager of the family, and the proceedings instituted by the mortgagee against Pedro bound his brother, though they were [684] against Pedro alone—Doulat Ram v. Mehr Chand(1); Hari Vithal v. Jayaram Vithal(2). Some of the property in dispute was the self-acquired property of Pedro, and, therefore, the plaintiff is not entitled to dispute the alienation of that property. He can only lay claim, if at all, to that portion of the property which is ancestral. But we dispute his right even with respect to the ancestral property.

It is not now open to the plaintiff to contend that the award and the consent order were not fraudulent and collusive. See Printed Judgments of 1890, p. 215. The consent order is a nullity.

Either the Hindu law of succession or the English law of primogeniture applies. If the former law applies, then Minguel had no right to make a will, because the property was ancestral. His share survived to Pedro. Prima facie the English law applies—Lopes v. Lopes (3).

The plaintiff is bound by the execution sale held against his father, and is not entitled to redeem any portion of the property. Whether the Hindu law or the English law of primogniture applies, we are entitled to retain the whole of the property.

Lang (Advocate General with Dattatraya A. Idgunji) for the respondent (plaintiff) :—The mortgage affected Pedro's share only. Minguel and Pedro were tenants-in-common. Minguel did not join in the mortgage. There is no evidence in the case to show that he was either consulted or informed by Pedro. The mortgage was not effected for the benefit of the family. The money was borrowed by Pedro to meet losses which he had suffered in his business : therefore, the debt cannot be a charge on the whole property. Neither the English law of primogeniture nor the Hindu law of succession is applicable to the present case. The English law of primogeniture is not applicable, because the family belonged to Salsette and not to Bombay, and the Hindu law of succession is not applicable, because among the Christian inhabitants outside Bombay, prevailing customs are given the binding force of law. See Reg. IV of 1827. [685] The evidence in the case distinctly shows that Pedro and Minguel were tenants-in-common. Pedro was not the manager of the family, and, therefore, the mortgage is not binding either on Minguel or his devisee the plaintiff—Ganesh Sadashiv v. Balakrishna Gopal (1) ; Vasudeo Baloji v. Narayan Krishna (2) ; Venkat v. Kannan Dhora (3) ; Bir Chunder v. Mahomed Afsaroodeen (4) ; Dullabhdas Devchand v. Lakshmandas (5).

The High Court's judgment in suit No. 308 of 1888 (Printed Judgments of 1890, p. 215) did not decide that the consent order of the Nasik Court was inoperative ; it only decided that the mortgage charge could not be affected by that order. That consent order gave the family property to Minguel. In order that it should be inoperative, it should be in fraud of some one—Abdool Hoosein v. Charles Agnew Turner (6) ; Gunga Narain Gupta v. Tiluckram Chowdhry (7). It does not affect the mortgage charge, and, therefore, it is not in fraud of the mortgagee. That order is binding as long as it is not set aside—Motiram v. Bahiru (8). Its operation was to make Minguel the assignee of Pedro. Minguel, therefore, took the whole property, Pedro's half being mortgaged. Minguel devised the whole to the plaintiff, and he is now, therefore, entitled to redeem the half that was mortgaged by Pedro and recover possession of the other half free of any charge. Even if the consent order be left out of consideration, still he would be entitled to redeem half of the property as his father's heir and to recover the other half free of any charge under his uncle's will. A third party cannot impeach a decree as fraudulent—Gulibai v. Jagannath (9).

JUDGMENT.

FARRAN, J.—In this case the lower Court has passed a decree entitling the plaintiff to redeem and recover possession from the defendant of one-half of the property in dispute on payment of half the money due under a mortgage of the 9th of January, 1875, executed by Pedro de Penha in favour of the assignor of the defendant. Both sides object to that decree,—the plaintiff, on [686] the ground that it gives him too little, the defendant, on the ground that it gives the plaintiff too much.

The plaintiff had, previously to the present suit, filed a suit (No. 308 of 1888) in the same Court against the defendant in substance to establish his right to the mortgaged property in priority to the mortgagee, basing his title upon a consent order of February 10, 1882, which we shall hereafter refer to. This suit was finally dismissed on the 13th August, 1890, by the High Court, principally on the ground that the order of February, 1882, was not binding on the mortgagee—Louis Manoel Pedro Antonio de Penha v. Jalbhi Ardeshir Shet (1). The dates there given are inaccurate.

The third ground of appeal, which raises the question whether the law of primogeniture prevailed amongst the Christian inhabitants of Salsette prior to the passing of the Indian Succession Act (X of 1865) cannot, we think, be supported. The defendant Jalbhai rested his case, in his written statement, mainly on the prevalence of that law, relying probably on the decision in Lopes v. Lopes(2) ; but the judgment in that case was based upon the ground that the Portuguese law was not preserved to the Portuguese inhabitants of the town and island of Bombay, but was by implication abrogated when Bombay was ceded to the English in A. D. 1661. Salsette is in a wholly different position. From the Portuguese it passed by conquest to the Marathas about the year A. D. 1737, and subsequently in A. D. 1774 it was conquered by the British from the Marathas. (See a full account in Bombay Gazetteer, Vol. XIII, p. 203). Under these circumstances the rule as laid down by the Privy Council in The Mayor of Lyons v. The East India Company(3), and recognised in the judgment in Lopes v. Lopes (at p. 181), is that the law of the conquered country continues until the Crown or the Legislature change it. So far, however, from changing the Law prevailing at the time of the conquest, the Bombay Legislature by Reg. IV of 1799, when providing a code for the Courts administering the law in Salsette, (inter alia) enacted in s. 14 that "in all cases of succession to landed property the Judge is, of whatever religion [687] the parties may be, to endeavour to ascertain also whether they have been regulated by any general usage of the District where the disputed land is situated or any particular usage of the family of the defendant and to consider in his decision the weight due to such evidence." That Regulation was repealed, but it is not suggested that the English law of primogeniture was introduced into Salsette by any later enactment as the lex loci of the island. Regulation IV of 1827 provides that "the law to be observed in the trial of suits shall be Acts of Parliament and Regulations of the Government applicable to the case, and in the absence of such Acts and Regulations the usage of the country in which the suit arose ; if none such appears, the law of the defendant, and in the absence of specific law and usage, justice, equity and good conscience alone."

We have, therefore, to ascertain how lands in Salsette in the case of its Christian inhabitants descended on an intestacy prior and subsequent to the year A. D. 1774 and down to the year 1866. A great mass of evidence has been taken in the case, which establishes that when a Christian inhabitant of Salsette died intestate previous to 1866, his property, both moveable and immoveable, devolved, not on his eldest son, but on his sons equally. That evidence is by no means consistent as to what the rights of the widow and daughters are considered to have been. As it was mainly directed to establish the non-existence of the law of primogeniture, and was not directed to the ascertainment of the rights of members of the family other than sons, it would be unsafe to draw any general conclusions from it. It is, however, clearly established that, as a fact, sons, in the absence of a widow and daughters and other persons entitled to share in it, share equally the property of their father.

It is argued for the appellant Jalbhai that the evidence proves that the Christian inhabitants of Salsette, being converts from Hinduism, must be taken to have retained the Hindu law in its entirety, and that the Court ought to administer in this case the Hindu law pure and simple to the parties. Counsel relied on the case of Abraham v. Abraham (1) in support of his argument. The Subordinate Judge seemingly adopted it. The difficulty in [688] acceding to it is that it is quite different from the case made by his client in the pleadings. In the first paragraph of the written statement the defendant says that "the terms ancestral property and family property employed by the plaintiff are entirely inappropriate, the plaintiff and his family being Christians. In the year 1846 the succession to property belonging to any member of the plaintiff's family was governed by English law." The evidence undoubtedly establishes that sons take an equal share in their father's estate, as the plaintiff throughout has contended; but whether they do so in consequence of the prevalence of the Hindu law, or of the Portuguese law amongst this class, or of a usage existing amongst them from their having retained or adopted these respective laws in a modified form, it is unnecessary, and under the circumstances would be improper for us to determine.

The defendant, however, also seeks to establish the validity of the mortgage on the ground that "it was executed by Pedro with the assent of his brothers Minguel and Enos, and that the money raised upon it was spent in such a way that the mortgage would still have been good if Pedro had been, as he was not, the manager of a Hindu family at the time he made it." The issue raised on that contention has been decided by the Subordinate Judge in favour of the defendant, and we think that that finding ought to be supported. We cannot, however, find on the record before us that Mr. Kher went into this question, or how the First Class Subordinate Judge, who ultimately decided the case, considered himself precluded from entering upon it.

Although we are not prepared to hold, for the above reasons, that the property of Antonio descended upon his three sons Pedro, Minguel and Enos, as co-parceners under Hindu law, rather than as tenants-in-common as alleged by the plaintiff, yet we think that having regard to the fact that the Chiristian inhabitants of Salsette are for the most part descendants of converts from Hinduism (see Bombay Gazetteer, Vol. XIII, pp. 202, 204) and that Hindu usages as shown by the evidence prevail to a large extent amongst them in the mode of the management of their paternal estate, and as the plaintiff in his plaint, though alleging that the property devolved upon Pedro, Minguel and Enos as tenants-in-common, in para. 11 speaks of the other members [689] of the family being co-parceners with Pedro, and complains that the mortgage was not for the benefit of the family, we should not be justified in requiring the same direct proof of the authority of the manager of the family to mortgage the paternal estate under his management as we should require in the case of an English manager under similar circumstances, but should treat it much in the same way as if the family were still a Hindu family. The decision in Abraham v. Abraham is, we think, an express authority for our doing so. The case is also very similar in its circumstances to Myna Boyee v. Ootaram (1).

In this case Minguel, who had become a priest in early life, left the management of the paternal estate (at all events after the death of the mother, in 1865 probably) in the hands of Pedro assisted by his lame and delicate brother Enos, he himself returning from time to time to the family house and staying there for short periods only. From 1863 to 1865 Pedro sold several plots of land, and subsequently purchased other plots, the conveyances of the plots sold being executed sometimes by him and his mother and brother Enos, and sometimes by himself alone. Pedro also took a liquor contract from Government, and carried it on for some years, and altogether acted as a general manager invested with the largest powers. That which, however, leads to the conclusion most strongly that the mortgage was executed by the authority of Minguel is that when in 1882 Pedro and the plaintiff agreed to sell part of the property to one Maneckji in order to pay off the debt due on the mortgage, the plaintiff, who then held a power of attorney from Minguel, offered to execute the conveyance in Minguel's name (Ex. 144). Minguel's also lending his name to the sham proceedings in the Nasik Court to protect the property for Pedro and the plaintiff, tends to the same conclusion. The mortgage was also attested by Enos, who was assisting Pedro in the management. It was, therefore, not a clandestine mortgage. The evidence also shows that the money was raised and employed for the most part at all events in connection with the liquor contract and for the rebuilding of the family house. For these reasons we hold that the mortgage was made by the authority of Minguel and Enos and for family purposes, and was [690] binding upon the whole family. The absence of Minguel and his priestly office account for his not having himself signed or attested the mortgage. The true theory perhaps is that he abandoned the property wholly to his brothers. Enos died in or about the year 1876, and his interest in the equity of redemption then devolved on his brothers Pedro and Minguel. This is common ground.

We also agree with the Subordinate Judge that the award of the 27th October, 1881, presented to the Nasik Court and the consent order of February 10, 1882, that it should be filed, were collusive between Minguel represented by the plaintiff and Pedro. Two different Judges have arrived at that conclusion. The additional evidence put in in the present case places the question, we think, beyond doubt. The object of the conclusive award and order and the mode in which the object was carried out were these:—The plaintiff and his father Pedro were desirous of inducing the mortgagees to accept a small sum in payment of the mortgage debt. They accordingly caused it to be represented in a document, which was drawn up in the shape of an award, that Pedro had wasted the estate to the extent of Rs. 10,000 and that Minguel had received nothing. The document then awarded that Pedro should give possession of the whole residue of the estate to Minguel. This document Pedro and the plaintiff caused some three persons to sign as though it were an award made by them. It was then presented to the Court at Nasik as an award under s 525 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and eventually on the application of the plaintiff as the attorney of Minguel and with the consent of his father Pedro it was filed as an award under s. 526.

This award and the subsequent proceedings thereon must, we consider, be discarded from consideration in this case (1) because the decision of the appellate Court in suit No. 308 of 1888 has decided that the plaintiff cannot base his title on the decree of the Nasik Court as a decree, the mortgagee not having been a party to these proceedings. We do not decide that, if that decree had operated as an assignment to Minguel, the decision of the appellate Court would have precluded the plaintiff as executor [691] of Minguel from suing upon it as an assignment to redeem the mortgage. It is unnecessary to express an opinion upon that point, because (2) the award is not in itself an assignment, but merely gave Minguel the right to an assignment from Pedro, and the order of the Nasik Court gave it no further force beyond this, that it conferred on Minguel the right to have a decree passed according to it under s. 522. No decree, which might have operated as an assignment, was ever passed. (3) The award being a sham award, and the order for its filing being a collusive order, intended to have no effect between the parties to it, but to be used as a blind to deceive the mortgagee, cannot be used against any one except possibly the parties to it and their privies—Ahmedbhoy v. Vulleebhoy (1); Evidence Act (I of 1872), s. 44.

Minguel died in 1883, leaving a will, dated 5th January, 1881, by which he bequeathed his interest in the property in question to the plaintiff. The plaintiff has duly proved it. It is contended by counsel for the defendant that Minguel had no power to deal with the property by will, as he was an undivided co-parcener governed by Hindu law, but we cannot accede to that contention. It is not the case made by either party upon the pleadings, and the evidence has not been directed to meet it. Even if we assume that the Christians of Salsette retained the Hindu law of inheritance down to 1866, it is clear that, as pointed out in Abraham v. Abraham (supra at p. 241) and Myna Boyee v. Ootaram (supra) the holding of land in co-parcenery incapable of being dealt with by will is not a branch of the law of succession proper, and that the Hindu law of succession or inheritance can well be retained by Christian converts without their at the same time being bound by its rule of strict co-parcenership. The evidence in this case is conflicting as to the power of a Salsette Christian to deal with his share in ancestral property by will, but read as a whole, is, we think, in favour of his being considered entitled to do so. The plaintiff in this view is, therefore, in the same position in regard to the equity of redemption in the mortgaged property as Minguel would have been had he survived.

[692] We have next to consider the effect of the suit on the mortgage which in April, 1883, the mortgagee filed against Pedro alone in the Nasik Court (subsequently transferred to Thana), and to which he did not make the plaintiff as executor of Minguel a party. In that suit a decree was on the 11th May, 1885, passed for the sale of the mortgaged property. The defendant became the assignee of that decree. The property was sold under it, and the defendant purchased on the 27th September, 1886, and in that capacity now claims to be the absolute owner of the property. We have already pointed out that it was unnecessary to make the plaintiff a party to these proceedings as pretended assignee of the equity of redemption under the consent order of the 10th February, 1882. Independently of that decree the plaintiff as executor of Minguel was the owner of half of the equity of redemption. The question whether the proceedings bound him, is one of difficulty. Section 85 of the Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882) does not apply to the case, as it was not then in force in Thana. The reason why the plaintiff did not apply to be made a party to these proceedings, must have been that he did not at that time desire to redeem the mortgage, inasmuch as he was then preparing to assert his title to the property free from the mortgage under his fraudulent decree, a claim which he subsequently unsuccessfully asserted in suit No. 308 of 1888 in the Thana Court and in appeal in this Court. The mortgagee did not make him a party, as Pedro was supposed to represent the family in the matter of the mortgage.

The question is, can the plaintiff now redeem on the ground that he was not made a party to those proceedings. Although the parties are not members of a joint Hindu family, yet they appear to a considerable extent to govern their dealings as though they filled that character. If they were such members, the case of Doulat Ram v. Mehr Chand(1) would be exactly in point, as well as the case of Vishnu Vithal v. Venkatrav Bhavanji(2). The mortgage purported to mortgage the whole interest in the property and was made by Pedro the manager. The suit was brought against Pedro who had executed the mortgage, and asks that the debt may be satisfied out of the mortgaged property and [693] that the property may be sold. What was intended to be sold was the whole interest in the property, and that was what the defendant purchased. The above cases are not, we think, in conflict with Shaik Abdulla v. Haji Abdulla(3), where one only of the heirs of the mortgagor was made a party to the suit on the mortgage. The Privy Council in deciding Doulat Ram v. Mehr Chand (supra) do not suggest that the plaintiffs in that case were at all events entitled to redeem the property, as they had not been made parties to the suit in which the property was sold at the instance of the mortgagee. What their Lordships appear to us to hold is that the purchaser at the Court's sale obtained a good title to the property purchased by him subject to the right of the co-parceners, who were not made parties to the suit, to dispute the sale on the ground that the original mortgage was not binding upon them. We think that the principle of these decisions governs the case before us, and that the defendant purchased the whole interest in the mortgaged property subject to the right of the plaintiff to show that his interest derived from Minguel was not bound by the mortgage. This he has failed to do. The plaintiff is not, for the reasons we have given, entitled as absolute owner to recover half the mortgaged property from the defendant who has obtained possession of it under his purchase. That portion of his claim has been correctly disallowed by the Subordinate Judge.

The Subordinate Judge has, however, allowed the plaintiff to redeem half the mortgaged property on payment of half the sum due under the mortgage. If, subject to the plaintiff's right to dispute the mortgage being binding upon his share in the mortgaged property, the decree and sale by the Thana Court affect his interest, he cannot now be entitled to redeem at all. We have held, for the reasons which we have stated, that they do. This portion of the plaintiff's claim cannot, therefore, be supported, and the suit ought to have been dismissed in toto. We disallow the plaintiff's cross objections and allow the defendant's appeal with costs throughout.

Suit dismissed.

[694] APPELLATE CIVIL.

Before Mr. Justice Bayley, Acting Chief Justice, and Mr. Justice Fulton.

MINGALE ANTONE KANE (Original Plaintiff), Applicant v. RAM CHANDRA BA'JE (Original Surety), *Opponent.

[28th August, 1894.]

Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), s. 349—Surety—Insolvency of a defendant—Surety under s. 349—Default of principal—Liability of surety—Mode of enforcing liability of surety—Practice—Procedure.

The Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882) provides no means for enforcing in execution a surety bond passed under s. 349. The proper course of the plaintiff is to obtain an assignment of the bond with a view to suing on it.

[Rel., 12 C.L.J. 419=7 Ind. Cas. 917 ; R., 31 C. 162.]

APPLICATION under the extraordinary jurisdiction of the High Court (s. 622 of the Civil Procedure Code, Act XIV of 1882) against the order passed by Rao Saheb G. V. Saraiya, Subordinate Judge of Bassein, in an execution proceeding.

The plaintiff obtained a decree against one Baba Trimbak Naik, and in execution applied for his committal to jail. On the 5th June, 1893, Baba Trimbak applied to be declared an insolvent. He was thereupon released on his furnishing security to appear when called upon, and the opponent Ramchandra became his surety (Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), s. 349).

Baba failed to appear on the appointed day, namely, the 16th September, 1893, and on the 18th September the plaintiff applied for a warrant for his re-arrest. The warrant was returned unserved, as the bailiff was unable to find him. On the 14th October, 1893, the plaintiff's execution darkhast (application) was dismissed owing to the plaintiff's absence.

On the 28th November, 1893, the plaintiff applied for an order to recover the amount due from the surety Ramchandra (the opponent). The Subordinate Judge rejected the application, holding that he had no power to grant it.

The plaintiff applied to the High Court under its extraordinary jurisdiction, and obtained a rule nisi calling upon Ramchandra to show cause why the order of the Subordinate Judge should not be set aside on the ground that in rejecting the application he committed an error in law and failed to exercise a jurisdiction vested in him.

[695] Govardhanram M. Tripathi, appeared for the plaintiff in support of the rule.—The Civil Procedure Code does not provide for proceeding against a surety appointed under s. 349. We, therefore, required authority from the Court to recover the amount of the surety bond from the surety —Poynor Bibee v. Nujjoo Khan (1); Moidin v. Chandu (2). The Court should have assigned the surety bond to us, so that we might institute a suit on it.

Mahadeo C. Apte appeared for the opponent (surety) to show cause:—The applicant must show, if he wishes to have the bond given to him,

* Application No. 41 of 1894 under the extraordinary jurisdiction.

(1) 5 C. 437. (2) 7 M. 273.

that the execution proceedings are still pending. But the execution proceedings terminated with the dismissal of the darkhast owing to the applicant's default on the 14th October, 1893. The execution proceedings having terminated, the surety is absolved from liability—Lalji Sahoy v. Odoya Sunderi(1).

JUDGMENT.

FULTON, J.—The facts of this case are explained in the plaintiff's application of the 28th November, 1893, to the Subordinate Judge as follows:—"The plaintiff presented darkhast No. 657 praying that his judgment-debtor the defendant might be committed to jail. The defendant on 5th June, 1893, applied to be declared an insolvent, and was released on his furnishing security on the same day to appear when called upon. He did not, however, subsequently appear in the course of the execution proceedings, and is said to have absconded. On the 14th October the darkhast was dismissed owing to the plaintiff's absence, and on the 28th November the plaintiff prayed the Court to give him such authority as would enable him to recover the amount due from the surety." The Subordinate Judge thereupon made the following order: "I think that I have no power to grant this application. The applicant's remedy against Ramchandra Baje, if any, will be to proceed in the manner prescribed by the Civil Procedure Code. I refuse the application."

Apparently the Subordinate Judge thought that a plaintiff might apply for execution against a surety under s. 349 of the Code as against one under s. 336. But in this view we [696] are unable to concur. The Civil Procedure Code provides no means for enforcing in execution a surety bond passed under s. 349, and the decisions in Poynor Bibee v. Nujjoo Khan (2) and Moidin v. Chandu (3) show that the proper course is for the plaintiff to obtain an assignment of it with a view to suing on it.

Mr. Apte for the opponent contended that with the dismissal of the plaintiff's darkhast the surety's liability terminated, and drew our attention to the decision in Lalji Sahoy v. Odoya Sunderi (1). But that decision referred to the enforcement of a surety bond under s. 336 and not to one given under s. 349 in insolvency proceedings which might be continued by the petitioner himself, and would not terminate owing to the absence of the judgment-creditor at whose instance the petitioner was originally arrested, and might also affect other creditors equally with such judgment-creditor.

In the present case the defendant failed to appear on the 16th September, and the plaintiff on the 18th applied for a warrant for his re-arrest. The warrant was returned unserved owing to the bailiff's being unable to find the defendant, and on the 14th October the darkhast was dismissed owing to the absence of the plaintiff, who may not unreasonably have thought it useless to prosecute it further against the judgment-debtor. The question whether the liability which the surety incurred on the 16th September, when the defendant first failed to appear, was discharged by the subsequent dismissal of the darkhast is one that must be decided between the parties concerned in any suit which may hereafter be instituted on the bond. Prima facie, however, there appears to be sufficient ground for the assignment to the applicant of the bond in question.

[697] APPELLATE CIVIL.

Before Mr. Justice Farran and Mr. Justice Candy.

KASHIBA BIN NARSAPA NIKADE (Original Plaintiff), Appellant v. SHRIPAT NARSHIV, DECEASED, BY HIS SON AND HEIR RAMCHANDRA AND ANOTHER (Original Defendants), *Respondents.

[28th August, 1894.]

Domicil—Widow's domicil—Capacity to contract—Law—Law of domicil regulates capacity to contract—Minor—Contract by a minor - Liability of minor—Contract Act (IX of 1872), ss. 11, 128—Principal and surety—Surety of a minor—Liability.

The domicil of a widow is the same as that of her husband, unless she has changed it after his death.

By the law of England the question of the capacity of a person to enter into a contract is decided by the law of his domicil. This principle of English law is adopted by s. 11 of the Contract Act (IX of 1872).

A minor cannot be sued on a bond executed by him during minority and not ratified by him after his majority.

A surety to a bond passed by a minor for moneys borrowed for purposes of litigation not found to be necessary, is liable to be sued on it whether the contract of the minor is considered to be void or voidable.

SECOND APPEAL from the decision of C. G. W. Macpherson, District Judge of Belgaum, reversing the decree of Rao Saheb R. G. Bhadbhade, Subordinate Judge of Chikodi.

The plaintiff sued to recover Rs. 1,194-12-0 due on a bond, dated 29th November, 1887, executed by the first defendant, who was a minor. The second defendant and his son, the third defendant, were sureties.

Defendant No. 1 (Lakshmibai) did not appear at the hearing of the suit. Defendant No. 2 was dead. The third defendant (Ramchandra) contended that the bond was void, as the first defendant was a minor when it was executed, and that he, therefore, was not liable as surety. He also contended that the suit was not maintainable in the Court at Chikodi, as the first defendant resided at Kolhapur (outside British territory) where the bond was executed.

The Subordinate Judge found that though the first defendant, the executant of the bond, resided at Kolhapur, the suit was maintainable in the Chikodi Court, inasmuch as the third defendant [698] resided within its jurisdiction; that as the parties resided within British territory, and the place of payment being obviously the creditor's residence, the validity of the contract must be tested by the law of British India; that the bond was voidable at the instance of the first defendant, but was not void, and that the deceased second defendant and his son, the third defendant, being sureties on the bond, they were liable to the plaintiff's claim. He, therefore, passed a decree awarding the claim with costs.

The defendants preferred separate appeals. The Judge found that the first defendant was subject to English law, and that by that law she was a minor when she executed the bond, and was, therefore, not liable upon it, as she had not ratified it after attaining majority. He held that as the first defendant was not liable, the third defendant, being a surety, was not liable, and he accordingly reversed the decree.

The plaintiff preferred a second appeal.

JUDGMENT.

FARRAN, J.—This was a suit on a bond executed by the defendant Lakshmibai to secure payment to the plaintiff of Rs. 1,000 and interest. The defendant Lakshmibai was the widow of [699] Shidojirao N. Nimbalkar, a British subject, who had his domicile in British India. At the time of execution she was staying in Kolhapur. She was then admittedly under the age of eighteen years, but would seem, though there is no express finding upon the point, to have completed her sixteenth year. The money was borrowed in connection with a suit about her desgat property. The District Judge states in his judgment that the litigation was not shown to be necessary. The defendant Ramchandra's father, since deceased, joined in the bond. Its terms, so far as they related to him, were as follows:—" Security for the recovery of this amount is myself (namely) Shripat Narsinha Diwanji, inhabitant of Chikodi. The abovenamed Shrimant Matoshri Bai Saheb will pay the amount as agreed above. Should she fail to pay, I will pay the abovementioned amount personally without pleading her excuse and take back this bond. If it is not so paid, you should get it paid off from my income." The defendant Ramchandra also executed the bond to show his consent to it and undertook to pay it if his father did not.

At the original hearing, the defendant Lakshmibai did not appear. Ramchandra appeared and pleaded that Lakshmibai was a minor when the bond was given, and that his father Shripat and he were not, therefore, liable upon it. The Subordinate Judge passed a decree against the defendants. Both appealed, and the District Judge, in appeal, dismissed the suit against both. The present is an appeal by the plaintiff against the decision of the District Judge.

The first question which arises for consideration is by what law the minority of Lakshmibai and her consequent ability to contract are to be determined. As she was a widow of a domiciled British subject, and is not shown to have changed her domicil since his death, it must be taken that her domicil, when she executed the bond, was in British India. Now it has been long a fertile source of controversy whether, according to English law, the capacity of a minor to bind himself by personal contract ought to be determined by the law of his domicil or by the lex loci contractus. It is so stated by Lords Watson and Macnaghten in Cooper v. Cooper (1) in the House of Lords. In the same [700] case Lord Halsbury after saying that there is a singular concurrence of opinion amongst jurists upon the question, says that the capacity to contract is regulated by the law of domicil, citing Story's Conflict of Laws, pl. 64. It was not necessary to decide the point in that case, as the domicil of the lady who entered into the contract and the lex loci contractus were the same. However, in Sottomayor v. De Barros (2) the Court of appeal laid it down as a well-recognised principle of law that the question of personal capacity to enter into any contract is to be decided by the law of domicil. Westlake considers the English law to be now settled on that footing: Priv. In. L. (3rd Ed.), p. 43. The framers of the Contract Act in s. 11 seem to have adopted the same view. This was also what the contracting parties themselves thought and intended, as they made their contract on paper impressed with a British stamp. We must, therefore, hold that Lakshmibai was a minor at the time when she entered into the contract in question, being governed by the provisions of Act IX of 1875.

The same reasoning also shows that the enforceability or otherwise of her contract must be determined by the provisions of the Contract Act in so far as they relate to her capacity to contract. These provisions in their relation to minors have been the subject of judicial comment and decision in several cases. In this Court it has been laid down that a minor can sue upon a bond passed in his favour—Hanmant v. Jayarao(3). That carries with it the broader proposition that where the consideration for a contract on the part of the infant is wholly executed he can sue to obtain the benefit of such contract. No reasons are given by the Court for its decision. The ruling in Sashi Bhusan v. Jadu Nath (4) was probably followed. It was there ruled that the law under the Contract Act was the same as the law in England, where a contract entered into with a minor is only voidable at the option of the minor.

On the other hand, in the latest case, we believe, on the subject, Norris, J., expressed a strong opinion that a minor in British India cannot contract at all—Fatima v. Debnauth (5). It had [701] been previously held in the Calcutta High Court that the conveyance of an infant not avoided by him in his lifetime was valid—Mohamed Arif v. Sarasvati (6). That was really a decision on s. 7 of the Transfer of Property Act, but the Judges in coming to it purported to follow Sashi Bhausan v. Jadu Nath (supra), which was a ruling on the Contract Act. In the view we take of this case it is not necessary for us to decide whether the contract of a minor under the Contract Act is void or voidable.

APPELLATE CIVIL.
19 B. 697.

In the case of Lakshmibai, who, as we have held, must be considered to have been a minor at the time she executed the bond, it has not been shown that she has ratified her contract since she has attained her majority. The suit as against her has, therefore, been properly dismissed.

Shripat was also domiciled in British India, as is the plaintiff. The contract of Shripat shortly expressed amounted to this:—If the minor lady does not satisfy the bond, I will do so without pleading her excuse. By English law it is clear that Shripat would be liable under such a contract. The proposition is thus expressed in Chitty on Contracts (12th Ed., p. 588): "But the rule that a party cannot be liable on a contract of guarantee unless the principal be also liable, is in some cases true in form or words rather than in substance. Thus, in the case of a guarantee to answer for the price of goods, not necessaries, to be sold to an infant or other person incompetent to contract, there is no doubt that the party guaranteeing, though professedly contracting only in the character of a surety, would be responsible: for either he could not urge the incapacity of the supposed principal, or he might by construction of law be himself treated as the principal." The same law is laid down in De Colyar on Guarantees, p. 85, where he cites the cases of Harris v. Huntbach (1) and Duncomb v. Tickridge (2). The judgment of Foster, J., in the former case and the reasoning of the Court in the latter fully bear out his statement of the law. The other text books are to the same effect—Addison on Contracts (9th Ed.), p. 31; Parson's Law of Contracts, Vol. II, p. 4, an American work.

[702] English law on this subject is thus applied to infants whose contracts are by that law voidable only. The Contract Act does not contain any provision which prevents the same view being taken here. Section 128, which has been relied on for that purpose, only explains the quantum of a surety's obligation when the terms of the contract do not limit it as they often do. This is clear both from the language of the section itself and from the illustration. Neither has any reference to the nature of the obligation of the principal. There is nothing unlawful, immoral or even improper in lending money to a minor, and we can see no reason, in the absence of enactment to the contrary, why a person cannot contract to guarantee the performance by a third person of a duty of imperfect obligation.

The case is perhaps still more clear if the promise of the infant to repay the money is void. In that case the contract of the so-called surety is not a collateral, but a principal, contract. It is a conditional promise founded upon valuable consideration. It is like the case of a person, who, to appease the anger of a child, requests another to lend a guinea to the child to play with, and promises, if the child loses or does not give back the coin, to make it good to the lender. The promise in such circumstances is clearly that of a principal, and not of a surety, and the situation is not altered by its being called a guarantee. That case differs from the present in degree only, and not in principle, if the promise of Lakshmibai was void. This is the principle upon which Foster, J., really decided Harris v. Huntbach (supra), and the Court gave judgment in the old case of Duncomb v. Tickridge (supra), though for the reason given by De Colyar in his treatise the latter case cannot be treated as a binding authority.

19 B. 697.

The same distinction was taken in Goodman v. Chase (1). There the defendant, in consideration that the plaintiff would discharge A B., whom he had taken under a writ of ca sa, promised to pay A. B.'s debt. The discharge of A. B. from custody operated as a release of the debt of A. B. The promise of the defendant did not come into operation until the debt of A. B. was released. The undertaking of the defendant was, therefore, held to be that of a principal, and not collateral. Butcher v. [703] Steuart (2) and Bird v. Gammon (3) are instances of the same kind. See Berkmyr v. Darnell (4). Whether, therefore, the promise of Lakshmibai contained in her bond be voidable or void, the result is the same. Shripat in either case was liable.

So far as the defendant Ramchandra, Shripat's son is concerned, we must set aside the decree of the District Court, and restore that of the Subordinate Judge, with costs throughout on the defendant Ramchandra. The decree of the District Court in so far as it dismisses the suit against the defendant Lakshmibai will be affirmed, with costs.

CRIMINAL REVISION.

Before Mr. Justice Jardine and Mr. Justice Ranade.

QUEEN-EMPRESS v. JANARDHAN DAMODHAR DIKSHIT.*

[5th December, 1894.]

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 499—Defamation—Publication—Mode of publication defamatory though the imputation be true.

Under s. 499 of the Indian Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860) the person who publishes, and the person who makes, an imputation are alike guilty of defamation.

A Court may find that an imputation is true and made for the public good, but on considering the manner of the publication, (ex. gr., in a newspaper), it may hold that the particular publication is not for the public good, and is, therefore, not privileged.

THIS was an application by the accused for the exercise of the High Court's Revisional Jurisdiction under s. 439 of the Code of Criminal Procedure (Act X of 1882).

The accused had been convicted of defamation under the following circumstances :—

The complainant, Hari Vinayak, was an inspector in the service of the Thana Municipality. The accused, who was a Municipal Commissioner, sent a letter, dated the 8th November, 1893, to the Municipal Secretary, the material portion of which was to the following effect :—

[704] " Hari Vinayak, Inspector, is a dismissed servant of the Local Board, and it is understood that he is also dismissed from the Forest Department, and that the said Inspector is also fined by the Local Board. Has this fact come to the notice of the (Municipal) Committee? If so, why is a man of such a questionable character employed by the Municipality? Are not other men available? If the fact has come to the notice of the Municipality, is anything being done about it?"

CRIMINAL REVISION.

19 B. 703.

Before the Municipality could take any action on the matter, the accused published the letter in a newspaper called the Suryodaya in its issue of the 27th November, 1893. The complainant thereupon prosecuted him for defamation both for sending the above letter to the Municipality and for publishing it in the newspaper.

The accused pleaded that the statements in the letter were true, made in good faith, and for the public good ; and were, therefore, protected by exceptions 1, 3, 8, and 9 to s. 499 of the Penal Code.

The First Class Magistrate, who tried the case, convicted the accused under s. 500 of the Penal Code.

On appeal the Sessions Judge held that the imputations, complained of, were true and made in good faith, and in so far as they were communicated to the Municipal Committee were protected by exception I to s. 499 of the Penal Code; but he was of opinion that there was no justification for publishing the letter in a newspaper, and he, therefore, confirmed the conviction.

The following extract from the Sessions Judge's judgment gives his reasons :—

"But in dealing with the publication in a newspaper a different set of considerations come in. The accused, who was himself a Municipal Commissioner, was justified in bringing to the notice of the governing body of the Municipality facts going to show that one of their employes was undeserving of their trust. Some persons indeed would hold, it was his duty to do this. But was he justified in publishing the same facts in a newspaper? What is the public good in a case of this kind? Is it merely that the Municipality, the men's employers, should know of his character? Or that the general public should know of it? I cannot see that the public good is served by spreading abroad facts harmful to a man's reputation more widely than is necessary. It is argued that his employers are the general public of Thana; but this is not so. It is the municipal body and not the general local public that engages and dismisses municipal servants. It is well that the municipal governing body should know the character of their servants, but no good purpose is served by a [705] general knowledge in the public that a municipal servant is not of good character, unless the governing body, being acquainted with that fact, has determined to retain his services when they ought not to be retained. If that be the case, and it is not the case here, it may be for the public good that the public should know. Otherwise an extension of such knowledge beyond the governing body is far more of an injury to the servant than of a benefit to the public. On this point I refer to the second edition of Odger's Digest of the Law of Libel and Slander, pp. 243 to 246. In Purcell v. Sowler it was held that the charge against the medical officer of a poor law-union ought to be confined, in the first instance, to those whose duty it is to investigate the charges. In the case of Simpson v. Downs it was held that 'a letter sent to a newspaper by members of the Town Council and published therein, charging certain contractors for the erection of the borough jail with "scamping" their work, is not privileged: although preferring the same charge at a meeting of the Town Council probably would have been.'

"The general principle appears to be that the mode and extent of a privileged communication should not be more injurious than need be. The interests of the individual are entitled to protection as well as the interests of the public. It is for the public interest that a Municipality

DEC. 5.

CRIMINAL REVISION.

19 B. 703.

should not be served by an unworthy man, but that public interest would probably be sufficiently secured by informing the Municipality of the man's character; and to go beyond that, at least until it has been tried and failed in its object, is to injure a person more seriously than the public good requires.

"It is as well to note that the article in the Suryodaya complained of was not a report of proceedings at a municipal meeting. It states that a special general meeting was called for November 11th, but was not held, as there was no quorum; that the accused had given due notice of certain questions which were not put, as no meeting was held, but which are set out in the article as being of public interest. Amongst them of course is the question relating to Hari Vinayak. The others relate to other matters. Had the article been a full and true report of the proceedings of a meeting actually held, it would perhaps be privileged, but it was not this; it was not even a publication of the notice of questions. The insertion in an article of that kind of defamatory matter about an individual is not for the public good. To hold the contrary would be to give currency to a principle that would be a license to scandal, an encouragement to prying and impertinent curiosity, and an infraction of the right that the privacy of a man's past shall not be needlessly invaded. Therefore, I hold that in publishing the article in the Suryodaya the accused was guilty of defamation."

The accused now moved the High Court under its revisional jurisdiction.

Starling (with Narayan Ganesh Chandavarkar):—The Sessions Judge has found that the imputations complained of are true, and made in good faith, and for the public good so far as they were addressed to the Municipal Committee, but that their publication in a newspaper was not for the public good. [706] The present case falls under Excep. I, which places no limitations upon the mode or manner of publication. The case of Purcell v. Sowler (1) does not apply. In that case the imputation was clearly false. Here the imputation is true. The reason why it was published in a newspaper was that the attendance at municipal meetings was generally insufficient to make a quorum. The accused, therefore, felt that it was his duty to bring the matter to the notice of the public: Odger on Libel and Slander, p. 243.

There was no appearance for the complainant.

JUDGMENT.

JARDINE, J.—Section 499 of the Indian Penal Code defines defamation. It brings under the criminal law the person who publishes as well as the person who makes the imputation. The same distinction is made in the first exception, the one pleaded for the accused by Mr. Starling. That exception exempts any imputation made or published for the public good, and concludes as follows—whether or not it is for the public good is a question of fact. The learned Sessions Judge dealing with the fact in appeal before him found that the imputations were true and made for the public good. But on consideration of the manner of the publication, i. e., in a newspaper, he held that the publication was not for the public good and cited Purcell v. Sowler (1). The reasons given show that the finding is substantially one on the facts, and, therefore, such as this Court,

(1) 2 C. P. D. 215.

sitting in revision, is not inclined to interfere with, except for grave reason. We are of opinion, on the words of the sections, that the Sessions Judge was competent, while acquitting under the first exception as regards the mere making, to uphold the conviction on the ground that the publication, namely the particular publication in the newspaper, was not for the public good. We do not differ from his reasons. This interpretation of s. 499 is in accord with the views as to the reasons of the enactment expressed in the Queen v. Sankara (1) and Thiagaraya v. Krishnaswami (2.)

SUIT by a step-mother to recover her step-son's property from his widow on the remarriage of the latter.

The parties were Kutchi Memon Mahomdans, and as such subject to Hindu law (3).

The plaintiff was the widow of one Haji Joonas Haji Abdul Sackoor. The defendant (Zoolekhabai) was the widow of Haji Jackeria Haji Joonas, the son of Haji Joonas Haji Abdul Sackoor. The plaintiff was the step-mother of the said Haji Jackeria.

Haji Jackeria died in 1876, and his widow (the defendant) came into possession of a large amount of moveable property (viz., money, ornaments, jewels, &c.) which had belonged to him. The defendant subsequently remarried, and the plaintiff filed this suit claiming the said property as the nearest heir of Haji Jackeria. She alleged in the plaint as follows:—

"5. The defendant has since remarried; and the plaintiff says that according to the custom and usage of the Kutchi Memon community to which the said Haji Jackeria belonged, the defendant has thereby forfeited all her interest in her said husband's estate, and also in the said ornaments presented to her as aforesaid; and the plaintiff as the nearest heir of the said Haji Jackeria is now entitled thereto."

The defendant filed a written statement in which she stated (inter alia) as follows:—

"5. The defendant denies that there is any custom or usage as alleged in paragraph 5 of the plaint. The defendant denies that she has forfeited her rights and interests in the property mentioned in the plaint by her remarriage as alleged. Even if such a forfeiture did take place on remarriage, the defendant submits that the plaintiff is not the person who would be entitled to such property, nor would she be entitled to any of the property claimed in this suit."

[708] It appeared that the deceased Haji Jackeria left a first cousin (a paternal uncle's son) him surviving.

At the hearing before Farran, J., the following issues were raised :—

(1) Whether the plaintiff is nearest heir of Haji Jackeria, and as such entitled to maintain this suit ?

(2) Whether the custom alleged in paragraph 5 of the plaint is a valid and subsisting custom of the Kutchi Memon community ?

(3) Whether at the date of the defendant's remarriage she had any property liable to be forfeited under the alleged custom ?

(4) Whether the plaintiff is entitled to any and what relief in this suit ?

Counsel for the parties agreed that the first issue should be tried first ; as, if it should be found in the negative, the decision would dispose of the suit.

Lang (Advocate-General) and Scott, for plaintiff.—They cited Ashabai v. Hari Tyeb (1) ; Abdul Cadur v. C. A. Turner (2) ; West and Bubler's Hindu Law (3rd Ed.), p. 471 ; Gojabai v. Shrimant Shahajirao (3).

Jardine and Russell, for defendant.—They cited Mayne's Hindu Law (5th Ed.), para. 522 ; Kesserbai v. Valab Raoji (4) ; Kumaravelu v. Virana (5) ; Muttammal v. Vengalakshmiammal (6) ; Mari v. Chinnammal (7) ; Mitakshara, ch. II, s. 5, pl. 4.

FARRAN, J.—I think the case is governed by the Mitakshara, ch. II, s. 5, pl. 4. It appears that Haji Jackeria, the defendant's former husband, whose property is in question here, had an uncle (Haji Cassum) who was his father's brother. That uncle has left a son (Ahmed Haji Cassum). He is, therefore, a named heir, and as such excludes a female as wife of a gotraja sapinda, even though nearer in relationship. It is quite clear, [709] upon the authorities, that the term " mata " does not include the step-mother. I find the first issue in the negative and dismiss the suit with costs.

The plaintiff appealed.

Badrudin Tyabji and Inverarity, for the appellant.

Lang (Advocate-General) and Macpherson, for the respondents.

In addition to those cited in the lower Court the following authorities were cited :— Rachava v. Kalingapa (8) ; Rakhmabai v. Tukaram (9) ; Vithaldas v. Jeshubai (10).

JUDGMENT.

SARGENT, C. J.—The question raised by this appeal is whether the step-mother or a paternal uncle's son has the preferable right of succession. In Kesserbai v. Valab Raoji (4), Westropp, C. J., says that although the step-mother cannot take as heir under the term " mother," it is a necessary inference from the cases of Lakshmibai v. Jayram Hari (11) and Lallubhai v. Mankuverbai (12) that she is entitled to inherit as a gotraja sapinda. The latter case as explained by the judgment in Rachava v. Kalingapa (1) must be taken as deciding that the widows of gotraja sapindas in the case of collaterals are to be preferred to the male gotrajas in a more remote line, and a fortiori the widow of a male gotraja in the ascending line, which is the case here, will have that preference over such collateral. Unless, therefore, there is an exception to that rule, the step-mother would appear to have a prior right to the paternal uncle's son, who represents a remoter line of succession. Mr. Justice Farran, however, considers that the express mention of the paternal uncle's son in Mitakshara, ch. II, s. 5, pl. 4 has that effect.

In Kesserbai v. Valab Raoji (2), where the question was between the step-mother and the half-sister, Westropp, C.J., says (p. 209): "There was not any intention on the part of the Court which decided Lallubhia v. Mankuvarbai to displace a person so specially introduced" as included in the term "brothers" who are one of the "compact series of heirs."

[710] The uncle's sons are indeed mentioned in pl. 4 of ch. II, s. 5, of the Mitakshara, which introduces them as belonging to the class described in s. 3 as "sprung from the same family with the deceased and connected by funeral oblations, i.e., the paternal grandfather and the rest," but they cannot be regarded as specially mentioned in the succession so as to exclude the operation of the above rule. Moreover, there is force in what is said in West and Buhler (3rd Ed.), p. 472, that the step-mother "ought to be placed, on account of her near relationship to the deceased, immediately after the paternal grandmother, up to whom only the succession is settled by special texts."

We must, therefore, reverse the decree of the Court below and declare that the plaintiff is the nearest heir of Haji Jackeria, and send back the case for disposal after finding on the remaining issues. Costs to abide the result.

Execution—Decree—Attachment under decree of High Court of property already attached under decree of Small Causes Court—Claim to attached property, by what Court decided—Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), s. 272—Jurisdiction—Practice—Procedure.

In execution of a decree obtained in the High Court the plaintiffs, on the 22nd of March, 1895, attached certain property of the defendant, which, however, had been already attached on the 22nd of February, 1895, by one Rajbai, who had obtained a decree against defendant in the Court of Small Causes. (Act XIV of 1882) by a notice addressed by the Prothonotary of the High Court to the Registrar of the Small Causes Court. The claimant was mortgagee in possession and the defendants were his tenants. On the 28th February he had lodged a claim in the Small Causes Court [711] to the said property as mortgagee in possession, and on the 25th March, 1895, a consent order was passed by the Chief Judge of that Court directing that Rajbai's attachment should stand subject to the claimant's claim.

On the 22nd April, 1895, the claimant applied to the Chief Judge of the Small Causes Court to issue a notice to the plaintiffs in this suit, under s. 272 of the Civil Procedure Code, to determine the question of priority of claim to the attached property between him and the plaintiffs. His application was refused, the Chief Judge being of opinion that he could not interfere in a High Court, suit. The claimant then filed his claim in the High Court, and took out this summons to remove the plaintiff's attachment.

Held, that under s. 272 of the Civil Procedure Code, the Small Causes Court was the only Court to decide the question of priority between the claimant and the plaintiffs.

IN chambers. Summons taken out by the claimant (Khetsidas Hurmookhroy) dated 15th May, 1895, calling on the plaintiffs to show cause why an attachment levied by them on certain property as belonging to the defendants should not be removed, &c.

The plaintiffs obtained a decree in this suit against the defendants for a sum of Rs. 5,839. In execution of this decree they on the 2nd March, 1895, attached certain goods as belonging to the defendants. This property had been already attached on the 28th February, 1895, in execution of a decree obtained by one Rajbai against the defendants in the Bombay Court of Small Causes (suit No. 27498 of 1894). The attachment of the plaintiffs on the 2nd March, 1895, was, therefore, effected by a notice under s. 272 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882) addressed by the Prothonotary of the High Court to the Registrar of the Small Cause Court.

The claimant was the landlord of the house in which the attached property was lying, and the defendants were his tenants. He had on the 28th February, 1895, lodged in the Court of Small Causes a claim to the said goods as mortgagee in possession under a Gujarati writing dated the 20th February, 1895. This claim came before the Chief Judge of that Court for investigation on the 25th March, 1895, and a consent order was passed directing that Rajbai's attachment should stand subject to the claimant's claim.

On the 22nd April, 1895, the claimant applied to the Chief Judge to issue a notice to the plaintiffs, under s. 272 of the [712] Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), to attend in order to determine the question of priority of claim to the said property as between the claimant and the plaintiffs, but the Chief Judge declined to grant the application, being of opinion that he had no jurisdiction to issue such a notice against the plaintiffs. In his order he said :—

"I am of opinion that applicant should commence by filing a claim in the High Cout, which may, if that Court so order, be transferred here for this Court to adjudicate under the proviso of s. 272. It would not, I think, be right for this Court to issue the notice prayed for, as that only could be done by in effect assuming a jurisdiction in the High Court suit which this Court does not possess."

The claimant thereupon filed his claim to the said property as mortgagee in possession, and on the 15th May, 1895, took out the above mentioned summons to remove the plaintiffs attachment.

JUDGMENT.

STARLING, J.—A suit (No. 27498 of 1894) having been filed in the Court of Small Causes against the defendant in this suit, a decree was passed against him, and certain moveable property was attached in execution thereof and taken into the custody of that Court. The plaintiff in this suit having obtained a decree herein applied to attach the same property in execution, and in accordance with the provisions of the first portion of s. 272 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), the Prothonotary sent a notice of attachment to the Court of Small Causes. Thereupon the present claimant applied in that Court to raise the plaintiff's attachment on the ground that the defendant had no attachable interest in the property. The Chief Judge of the Court of Small Causes refused to issue a notice on the ground that such an act would in effect be assuming a jurisdiction in a High Court suit which his Court did not possess. On this the claimant took out the present summons calling upon the plaintiff to show cause why his attachment should not be raised.

At first sight it may seem strange that the Court of Small Causes should be competent to decide upon the validity of an attachment issued by the High Court; but the whole question turns upon what course of procedure has been provided by the Legislature in the Civil Procedure Code. Now, the same section [713] which points out how the attachment of property deposited in or in the custody of any Court is to be effected also provides that in such a case "any question of title or priority arising between the decree-holder and any other person, not being the judgment-debtor, claiming to be interested in such property by virtue of any assignment, attachment, or otherwise shall be determined by such Court," i.e., the Court in whose custody the property is. The words of this section seem to me to be too clear to admit of any argument; and in my opinion the Court of the Small Causes is the only Court which under the Code can decide the question now raised before me.

The point does not seem to have come up directly before any of the Courts for decision; but in the case of Debee Pershad v. Gujadhar Ram (1) the meaning of s. 237 of the Civil Procedure Code of 1859, which is similar in effect to s. 272 of the present Code, and the latter portion of which is almost word for word the same as the latter portion of s. 272, was discussed in connection with the question whether the Court in which the attached property was, could decide a question as to the validity of an attachment in a miscellaneous proceeding, or whether it was necessary to file a suit. In delivering judgment, Couch, C.J., said: "Where money or a security is deposited in a Court of justice, any question of title or priority arising between the decree-holder and other persons than the defendant shall be determined by that Court, the reason apparently being that there may not be an unseemly conflict between the Courts."

This is in exact conformity with the opinion which I had formed before I found this case, and I must, therefore, hold that this Court is not the one in which the question which the claimant seeks to raise, can be determined. I must, therefore, dismiss the summons with costs.

IN RE NABISHAH.* [27th September, 1894.]

Criminal Procedure Code (Act X of 1882), s. 431—Appeal by accused against conviction—Death of Appellant—Abatement of appeal—Appeal—Remedy open to the deceased appellant's heirs—Practice.

Two persons, Mahomadshah and Nabishah, were convicted of criminal breach of trust and each sentenced to one year's rigorous imprisonment and a fine of Rs. 1,000. Both prisoners filed an appeal to the High Court. Nabishah died pending his appeal. On Mahomadshah's appeal the High Court passed an order acquitting him and reversing his conviction and sentence. Thereupon one of the relatives of the deceased Nabishah applied to the High Court to set aside the conviction and sentence passed in his case, and order the fine to be refunded.

Held, that on Nabishahah's death his appeal abated under s. 431 of the Code of Criminal Procedure (Act X of 1882).

As the case turned on the appreciation of evidence, the High Court declined to interfere in the exercise of its revisional jurisdiction, referring the legal representatives of the deceased to the Governor in Council for redress.

THIS was an application for the exercise of the High Court's criminal revisional jurisdiction under s. 439 of the Criminal Procedure Code (Act X of 1882).

Two persons, Mahomadshah Rahimanshah and Nabishah Rahimanshah, were convicted by the Sessions Judge of Satara of the offence of criminal breach of trust, and sentenced each to one year's rigorous imprisonment and a fine of Rs. 1,000.

Against the said convictions and sentences both the accused, Mahomadshah and Nabishah, appealed to the High Court.

On 18th August, 1894, and after the appeals had been filed in the High Court, Nabishah died.

[715] On 12th September, 1894, the High Court passed an order on Mahomedshah's appeal, acquitting him and reversing the conviction and sentence passed in his case.

Thereupon the present applicant, who was the nephew of the deceased Nabishah, applied to the High Court to reverse the conviction and sentence passed upon the deceased Nabishah, and order the fine levied from him to be refunded to his heirs.

PER CURIAM.—The Court records that the appeal of the deceased Nabishah Rahimanshah has abated under s. 431 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. Under the circumstances we do not think we should take up the case under our revisional powers, as it depends on appreciation of evidence, and the judgment appealed against is not one of the kind about which this Court uses that jurisdiction as a general rule. The representatives of the deceased appellant have their remedy by application to the Governor in Council, and will be furnished, if they so desire, with a copy of the judgment of this Court on the appeal of the co-prisoner to support any such application.

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 279—Rash riding on a public way.

The accused was convicted of rash riding on a public way under s. 279 of the Indian Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860). He contended that his conviction was bad, on the ground that there was no proof that any person was on the road in question at the time when he was alleged to have ridden in a rash or negligent manner.

Held*, that though there was no such proof, it was competent to the Court to take into its consideration the probability of persons using the public way being placed in danger by the act of the accused. The accused's act came within the mischief struck at by s. 279 of the Indian Penal Code and was included within its terms.

THIS was an application for the exercise of the High Court's Revisional Jurisdiction under s. 439 of the Code of Criminal Procedure (Act X of 1882).

[716] The applicant, Hormusji Nowroji Lord, was charged under s. 279 of the Indian Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860) with riding along the public road from Matheran to Narel in a manner so rash as to endanger human life, or to be likely to cause hurt or injury.

The accused was convicted of the offence, and sentenced to pay a fine of Rs. 15.

Against this conviction and sentence the accused appealed to the Sub-Divisional Magistrate of the District on the ground, among others, that as there were no persons on the road at the time when he was riding those lives were actually endangered, no offence had been committed.

This contention was overruled, and the conviction and sentence were confirmed on appeal.

19 B. 715.

The accused thereupon applied to the High Court under its revisional jurisdiction to set aside the conviction and sentence.

Inverarity (with him Narayan G. Chandavarkar) for accused.—To sustain a conviction under s. 279 of the Indian Penal Code, the prosecution must prove not only that the accused was riding rashly or negligently so as to endanger human life, but also that some person was actually there in a position of danger. See Starling's Criminal Law, p. 326. In the present case the evidence shows that there were no persons on the road from Matheran to Narel, at the time the accused was riding, whose lives were endangered. The conviction, therefore, is bad.

There was no appearance for the Crown.

ORDER.

JARDINE, J.—We think that although there is no proof of any person being on the part of the road between Narel and Matheran on which and at the time when the accused was riding his horse in a rash or negligent manner, it was competent to the Magistrate to take into his consideration the probability of persons using that road being placed in danger by the act of the accused. What the accused is found to have done comes within the mischief struck at by s. 279 of the Indian Penal Code, and we think is included within the words. The Court, therefore, declines to interfere.

Application rejected.

[717] APPELLATE CIVIL.

Before Mr. Justice Jardine, and Mr. Justice, Ranade.

RAGHAVENDRA (Original Defendant) Appellant, v. KASHINATHBHAT (Original Plaintiff), *Respondent. [8th October, 1894.]

Defamation—Suit for malicious prosecution—Evidence—Burden of proof—Want of reasonable and probable cause—Malice—Information given to police—Privilege—Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 182, 211, 498.

Certain property belonging to the defendant having been stolen, he informed the chief police constable entrusted with the inquiry that he suspected the stolen property to be concealed in plaintiff's house. Accordingly the plaintiff's house was searched, and its floor dug up, and the plaintiff was placed in confinement for an hour or so. No property was, however, found. Thereupon the plaintiff sued the defendant to recover damages for loss of character suffered by him in consequence. Both the lower Courts decreed the plaintiff's claim, holding that it lay on the defendant to prove reasonable and probable cause for the suspicion communicated to the police and the search of the plaintiff's house. On second appeal the High Court reversed the decrees and dismissed the suit.

Held (per JARDINE, J.) that the rule as to the burden of proof in suits for malicious prosecution should be extended to a case like the present. The onus, therefore, lay on the plaintiff not only to allege in the plaint, but also to prove against the defendant malice and absence of reasonable and probable cause for the information given by him to the police. The plaintiff, however, had given no evidence of his own innocence, nor that the suspicion of the defendant was groundless, nor that the defendant had anymali ce.

Per RANADE, J.—The present case was governed by the principles which govern suits for defamation, and under the circumstances the action of the defendant fell within the exception which protects information given to a person in authority in the discharge of a public or private duty, where no malice in fact is shown to exist. See Mohendro Chundro v. Surbo Kokhya (1).

* Second Appeal, No. 147 of 1897.

There is a distinction between the case of a false charge falling under s. 211 of the Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860) and that of false information given to the police under s. 182. A person prosecuting another for an offence under the latter section need not prove malice and want of reasonable and probable cause except so far as they are implied in the act of giving information known to the police with the knowledge or likelihood that such information would lead a public servant to use his power to the injury or annoyance of the complainant. In an inquiry under s. 211, on the other hand, the absence of just and lawful ground for making the charge is an important element.

Baboo Ganesh v. Magneeram (2) distinguished.

[R., 17 C.L.J. 105=17 C.W.N. 554=18 Ind. Cas. 737; 12 C.P.L.R. 24.]

SECOND appeal from the decision of J. L. Johnston, District Judge of Dharwar, in appeal No. 300 of 1891.

[718] The facts of this case were these: The defendant Raghavendra accused one Someshvarbhat of theft. During the course of the police investigation he gave information to the chief police constable that as Someshvarbhat often visited the house of the plaintiff, who was his son-in-law, he suspected that the stolen property was concealed in the plaintiff's house. This house was accordingly searched, and its floor dug up, and the plaintiff was placed in confinement for an hour or so. No property was, however, found.

Thereupon the plaintiff filed the present suit to recover Rs. 100 as damages for loss of character, alleging that the defendant had, without any reasonable and probable cause, and with malicious intent, caused the plaintiff's house to be searched by the police.

The defendant pleaded that he had no motive to damage the plaintiff's character; that having reasonable suspicion against the plaintiff, he had caused the house to be searched, and that the plaintiff had no cause of action.

The Court of first instance held that the burden of proving the existence of a reasonable and probable cause for the search lay on the defendant, and that he had entirely failed to discharge this burden, and that though no pecuniary damage was either alleged or proved, the plaintiff was entitled to recover Rs. 25 as damages for loss of character. The Judge accordingly passed a decree in plaintiff's favour.

This decree was confirmed, on appeal, by the District Judge. His judgment was as follows:—

"Plaintiff is a priest whose reputation must have suffered among his clients from his house being dug up on a complaint of theft or receipt of stolen property. Defendant does not deny that he suspected plaintiff, and caused his house to be searched. The burden was on defendant to show that he had reasonable and probable cause for this suspicion. * * * * * No man has a right to groundlessly accuse a respectable member of society of the degrading offence of receiving stolen property."

Against this decision defendant preferred a second appeal to the High Court, contending that it lay on the plaintiff to prove malice and want of reasonable and probable cause, and that no proof of this had been given.

[719] N. G. Chandavarkar, for appellant (defendant):—The verdict against the defendant is wrong. Both the lower Courts have laid the burden of proof on the wrong party. The onus lies on the plaintiff to allege and prove that we had no reasonable and probable cause for setting the police in motion. He has not discharged this burden. It is not proved that defendant was actuated by malice. All that he did was to inform the police that he suspected the stolen property to be in plaintiff's house. No suit can lie for merely giving information of this sort to the police, unless the criminal law is set in motion. This is really a suit for malicious prosecution, and in such suits it is for the plaintiff both to allege and to prove absence of reasonable and probable cause, and also a malicious motive for the prosecution—Hall v. Venkata Krishna(1); Fowler v. Homer (2); Abrath v. North-Eastern Railway Company (3); Ashby v. White(4). A plaint which does not allege malice and want of reasonable and probable cause does not disclose any cause of action—Chejmal v. Gambhirmal (5). In the present case the plaintiff gave no evidence to prove that our suspicions were groundless. His suit should, therefore, be dismissed.

B. A. Bhagwat, for respondent (plaintiff):—This is a suit to recover damages for loss of character, and not an action for malicious prosecution. The information given by the defendant to the police did not charge us with theft or any other offence. There was no complaint and no prosecution before a Magistrate. This, therefore, is not a suit for malicious prosecution, and the rule relating to the burden of proof in such suits does not apply. The rule in suits for defamation applies. The plaintiff has only to prove the falsity of the statement made to the police, and then the burden shifts on to the defendant. The lower Courts have, therefore, rightly placed the onus on the defendant, on whose information the police searched our house, and placed us in confinement for a time. The defendant is, therefore, justly held liable for the injury done to our reputation by his reckless act.

[720] N.G. Chandavarkar in reply:—I admit that, if this suit be treated as a suit for defamation, the onus will lie on the defendant. But, in that case, no suit will lie, and no damages can be awarded, as the alleged defamatory statement is privileged.

JUDGMENT.

JARDINE, J.—The plaintiff sued to recover Rs. 100 as damages for loss of character, alleging that the defendant spoke to the chief constable of Bankapur that he had a suspicion against the plaintiff in respect of some of the defendant's property that had been stolen, and that in order to get a search made, and without reasonable and probable cause for the suspicion, he with malicious intent to injure the plaintiff's character caused the plaintiff's house to be searched by means of the chief constable.

The defendant answered that he had no enmity or cause of enmity against the plaintiff and no motive to damage his character; that having reasonable suspicion, upon information, against the plaintiff he caused the house to be searched; that he was not acquainted with the plaintiff before; that the suit was without cause and intended to injure the defendant.

The search of the house by the police being admitted, the Subordinate Judge, although he found that no actual damage was either alleged or proved, held that the plaintiff's character could not but have been injured, and he awarded Rs. 25 as damages. The District Judge on appeal by the defendant confirmed the decree. Both Courts held that the onus lay on the defendant of showing the existence of reasonable and probable cause "for the search" as the Subordinate Judge expresses it—"for the suspicion" as the District Judge expresses it.

The defendant appeals here against this ruling and because malice was not proved. On examining the evidence, no mention of malice is found. No authorities are cited in the judgments of the Courts below, and no case of damage to fame or otherwise resulting from the action of a police officer on a complaint made has been cited from the Indian Reports. Under s. 157 of the Code of Criminal Procedure (Act X of 1882) the police officer may investigate, on the information received, if he has reason to suspect the commission of the offence. But he shall not do so [721] if it appear to him that there is no sufficient ground. He may make a search at his discretion under s. 165.

If the statement, whereof the plaintiff complains, had been made to a Magistrate, it is clear that it would have lain on the plaintiff, not only to aver in his plaint (Girdharlal v. Jagannath (1)), but also to show that there was an absence of reasonable and probable cause, and that there was malice or some indirect and illegitimate motive for the prosecution (Hall v. Venkatakrishna (2)), following the decision of the House of Lords in Abrath v. North-Eastern Railway Company (3). The Privy Council had in Baboo Ganesh v. Mugneeram (4), taken much the same view in a suit for damages for defamation of character which their Lordships dealt with as an action for malicious prosecution. See also Gunga v. Ramphul (5). If the police officer had referred the defendant to a Magistrate for a search warrant, this rule will apply, Wyatt v. White (6), so far as regards reasonable and probable cause. See also Hope v. Evered (7) where there was bona fides in moving for the search warrant. We have been referred to the Notes on Ashby v. White (8) (see also Skinner v. Gunton (9)) for the authorities in support of the general proposition there laid down as regards legal proceedings instituted for the bona fide purpose of asserting some supposed right, or prosecuting a criminal charge, which, however, in the event proves groundless. "In such cases, in order, it should seem, to facilitate the administration of justice, it is established that unless there be both malice and an absence of reasonable and probable cause, the person against whom the proceedings are taken has no legal ground of action." De Medina v. Grove (10) is one of these authorities. There a judgment-debtor was taken in execution for more than was due on the judgment. In Fowler v. Homer (11) Lord Ellenborough said about an accusation and detention: "The accusation though unfounded was not malicious. No doubt it may prove very detrimental to the object of it; but this is one of many [722] instances where there being a loss without an injury, the sufferer must consider himself not wronged, but unfortunate." A later case, Padmore v. Lawrence (12), much like the above, was, however, dealt with as depending on privilege.

The same principles have been applied by the Indian Courts as in Raj Chunder v. Shama Soondari Debi (13), a suit for damages for the injury done to reputation and honour by an improper arrest in an ex parte decree. In Mohendro v. Surbo(1), a suit for defamation in a statement to the police that he the defendant had heard that the plaintiff had been guilty of a criminal offence, the learned Judges held that the plaintiff must first start her case by proving that she was not guilty, and that it would lie on the defendant to show that the imputation was made in good faith and for the public good. In a case in the note to Mohant Gaur v. Hayagrib (2) these terms are treated as tantamount to good cause. Probably the Court meant the same thing, as the Privy Council laid down later in 1872 in Baboo Ganesh v. Mugneeram and again in 1876 in Ram Coomar v. Chunder Canto (3), where the principle stated in Cotterell v. Jones (4) is approved as to what must be alleged and proved by the plaintiff suing a third person for improperly setting the law in motion, which case had been followed by the High Court of Bengal—Chunderkant v. Ramcoomar (5).

The pleader for the respondent sought to exclude the present case from the rules of pleading and evidence in suits for malicious prosecution by arguing that the statement made by the defendant to the police officer did not accuse the plaintiff of any offence. He means probably that what was said was mere defamation and did not amount to a false charge. But this distinction was not taken in Sheikh Roshan v. Nabin (6), and no authority for it has been cited. The plaint describes it as a mere expression of suspicion. The fact that it was made to a policeman, not to a Magistrate, has not been urged ; and in Fowler v. Homer Lord Ellenborough made no such distinction. Nor is any such [723] suggested in Sheikh Roshan v. Nabin(6) or in the allusion to the same in Mohant Gaur v. Hayagrib (2).

If by labelling a suit like the present as one for defamation it is to be taken out of the rules applied to suits for malicious prosecution, then all similar suits will be so named and, as pointed out in Sheikh Roshan v. Nabin, people will not risk giving information to the police, and the ends of justice will be frustrated. The question is really, as observed by the Privy Council in Baboo Gunesh v. Mugneeram, one of substance rather than of form. In Fowler v. Homer, a suit for defamation, the rule requiring proof of malice and want of good cause was applied. So also in Sheikh Roshan's case and Mohendro v. Surbo, as well as in some, where the proceedings had been before Magistrates and suit was brought for defamation, e.g., Kazee v. Motee (7). On consideration of these authorities I see no difficulty in extending to cases like the present the rule as to burden of proof laid down in Abrath v. North-Eastern Railway Company (8).

But, whether we go the whole length or only as far as their Lordships in Baboo Ganesh v. Mugneeram went as to the burden of proof, the plaintiff cannot succeed. It has been argued that the effect will be to encourage false and malicious informations. No such inconvenience has been felt in England; and s. 182 of the Indian Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860) has a discouraging operation : see Queen-Empress v. Ganesh (9), approved in Queen-Empress v. Soshi (10). The protection against criminal prosecution and a suit for defamation in such circumstances is not absolute, as has been adjudged in favour of a witness—Baboo Ganesh v. Mugneeram(11);

Luckumsey v. Hurbun (1); Nathji v. Lalbhai (2); Queen-Empress v. Balkrishna (3). It must also be remembered that the detection of crime is made easier when people give information of their suspicions; and that under ss. 44 and 45 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, the giving of certain information in many matters of actual, intended, or suspected crime, [724] becomes an imperative duty, failure to perform which is punishable.

The plaint does not aver that the defendant was the cause of the arrest or the digging up of the premises by the police at the search, nor that after the arrest the plaintiff was discharged by a Magistrate on a report made under s. 169 of the Criminal Procedure Code (Act X of 1882) or by special order under s. 63. As no final discharge could be given by the chief constable, it is doubtful if the present suit will lie. See Venu v. Coorya (4). Moreover, the plaintiff has given no evidence of his own innocence, nor that the suspicion expressed was groundless, nor that the defendant had any malice. He did not even tender evidence of malice, or attempt even to prove the terms in which the defendant had expressed his suspicions. The mere fact that no stolen property was found, does not suggest anything against the defendant, as stolen property often passes through many hands, and is often removed from fear of search.

For the above reasons I would reverse both decrees and dismiss the suit with all costs on the respondent.

RANADE, J.—I agree with Mr. Justice Jardine in his final decision, but my reasons for so doing are somewhat different from those which have been set forth in his judgment.

Both the lower Courts have treated the original claim in this case as a suit for damages for loss of character. The appellant's pleader admitted that, if the claim be regarded as a suit for loss of character, the lower Courts were right in placing the burden of proof on the appellant (defendant). It was, however, contended that the claim was really a suit for malicious prosecution, and as such the burden of proving malice and want of probable and reasonable cause should have been placed on the respondent (plaintiff).

It appears from the record that the appellant accused one Someshwar Bhat of a theft of his property, and as this Someshwar was respondent's father-in-law, and used to visit respondent's house, appellant informed the police constable entrusted with the inquiry that he suspected that the stolen property was concealed [725] in respondent's (plaintiff's) house, and this house was accordingly searched, and its floor dug up, and respondent and his wife were placed in confinement for an hour or so. No property was found, and thereupon the respondent brought his suit for the loss of character suffered by him in consequence of this imputation. The question for consideration is, whether a claim brought under such circumstances can be regarded as a suit for malicious prosecution.

There was admittedly no prosecution in this case, and no complaint made to the Magistrate. In many of the cases cited by appellant's pleader in support of his contention, there had been either complaint, or a prosecution before a Magistrate, or both. In the case of Baboo Ganesh v. Mugneeram (5), the plaintiff had been brought before a Magistrate, who had dismissed the charge for want of proof. This element was also present in the cases of Hall v. Venkatakrishna (6) and Chejmal v. Gambhirmal(7), both which authorities were relied upon by the appellant's pleader in support of his contention. It is true that their Lordships of the Privy Council have in their judgment in Baboo Ganesh v. Mugneeram (1) stated that the evidence in that suit, which was ostensibly for loss of character, raised the same questions which would be raised in an action for malicious prosecution in England. However, for the reasons given above, that case, and the other cases cited before furnish no analogy to the present case where there has been no prosecution, and no complaint before a Magistrate, and I do not think that it will be proper to extend the protection given to an honest complainant before a Magistrate to cases of false information supplied to the police. The criminal law makes a clear distinction between a false charge which falls under s. 211 of the Penal Code, and false information given to the police, in which latter case the offence falls under s. 182 of the same Code. If plaintiff in the present case had chosen to prosecute the offender under s. 182, it would not have been necessary for him to prove malice and want of probable or reasonable cause, except so far as they were implied in the act of giving information known to be false, with the knowledge or likelihood that such information would lead a public servant to use his power to the [726] injury or annoyance of the complainant. In an inquiry under s. 211, on the other hand, proof of the absence of just and lawful ground for making the charge is an important element. There is good reason for this distinction. People in this country, as elsewhere, think twice before bringing a regular complaint before a Magistrate. No such precautions are taken or deemed necessary in the case of information given to the police. It is no doubt necessary in the public interests that people should be encouraged to give true information, but it serves no public interest to protect persons who, without thought of consequences, set the police in motion on random suspicions. If every injured person has to prove the presence of malice in fact as an operative motive in the false informer, and he is further required to prove absence of reasonable cause, the results will be certainly detrimental to the interests of the public generally.

It may indeed be urged that the criminal remedy under s. 182 is open to such injured persons. Proceedings under that section cannot, however, be taken without the sanction of the public servant, and that is not always easy to obtain. I do not see any reason why the injured party whose house is searched and the floor dug up on the strength of false information, and who with his wife are kept under confinement in the presence of a Panch for a time, should not be permitted to sue for loss of character, and why when he brings such a suit, he should be required to prove not merely the falsehood of the imputation, but also the presence of malice, and the absence of probable and reasonable cause in the complainant.

At any rate, both the lower Courts have treated the suit in the present case as a claim for damages for loss of character, and I think in second appeal the rights of the parties must be judged accordingly. The principles which govern suits for defamation must, in my opinion, govern the decision of the present case. These principles are clearly laid down in Mohendro Chunder v. Surbo Kokhya (2) where the defendant had informed the police that he had heard that plaintiff had been guilty of a criminal offence. It was laid down in that case that plaintiff must only show the falsity of the information, and it would then be for the

(1) 11 B.L.R. 321 (329).

(2) 11 W. R. 534.

[727] defendant to prove that the charge was made in good faith, and for the public good,—in other words, that his act was protected by one or other of the exceptions of privilege recognized by both civil and criminal law. Applying these rules in the present case, it has to be noted that the theft was of defendant's own property, and he accused a near relation of the plaintiff, who used to visit plaintiff's house. The information given was confined to a suspicion that the property might be concealed in plaintiff's house. The search and the digging up of the floor was the act of the police constable, apparently not taken by him at the instance of the defendant. The defendant did not inform any body else but the police, and admittedly no special damages were claimed or alleged. Under these circumstances, the action of the defendant falls under the exception which protects information given to a person in authority, and in the discharge of a public or private duty, where no malice in fact is shown to exist. "If fairly warranted by any reasonable occasion or exigency, and it is honestly made, such communications are protected for the common convenience and welfare of society (Addison on Torts, page 165, 5th Ed.). Lord Campbell in Harrison v. Bush (1) and Whitely v. Adams (2) has laid down that a communication made bona fide upon any subject-matter in which the party communicating has an interest, or in reference to which he has a duty, is privileged, if made to a person having a corresponding interest or duty, although without such privilege the communication would be actionable." The appellant had a duty and interest in communicating his suspicions to the police constable, who also had a duty in the matter. The appellant was not responsible for the subsequent annoyance caused by the search. The suspicion was not wholly without ground, seeing that there were the alleged relationship and the visits. Under these circumstances, I must hold that the defendant was protected by the privilege. It was not a case of a wanton, reckless, or inconsiderate charge.

On this ground I concur with Mr. Justice Jardine in holding that the decrees of the lower Courts must be reversed, and the claim dismissed with costs.

Evidence—Confession—Retracted confession—Necessity of corroborative evidence—Practice.

A retracted confession, if proved to be voluntarily made, can be acted upon along with the other evidence in the case.

There is no rule of law that a retracted confession must be supported by independent reliable evidence corroborating it in material particulars. The use to be made of such a confession is a matter of prudence rather than of law.

APPEAL by the Local Government from the order of acquittal passed by A. S. Moriarty, Sessions Judge of Ratnagiri.

The three accused were charged with the murder of one Sakharam Deoli, a money-lender, on the morning of the 4th March, 1894.

On the 20th of March, 1894, accused Nos. 1 and 3 confessed before the First Class Magistrate of Ratnagiri. Their confessions were recorded under s. 164 of the Code of Criminal Procedure (Act X of 1882).

On the 27th of March, 1894, these confessions were retracted during the course of the preliminary inquiry, the accused stating that they had been made owing to ill-treatment by the police.

The confessions were also retracted and the same allegations of ill-treatment made at the trial before the Court of Sessions.

The assessors were of opinion that the confessions were false and induced by fear of the police. The Sessions Judge, however, was of opinion that the confessions had been voluntarily made by the accused, but as they were not corroborated by any independent reliable evidence, he held that it would be unsafe to convict upon them. He, therefore, passed an order acquitting all the accused.

[729] Against this order of acquittal the Government of Bombay appealed to the High Court.

Rao Saheb Vasudev J. Kirtikar, Government Pleader, for the Crown: —The Sessions Judge has found that the confessions were not made under the influence of any threats or ill-treatment offered by the police. He finds that they were truly and voluntarily made by the accused Nos. 1 and 3. That being the case, they can be accepted as conclusive proof of guilt, without material corroboration. In the present case the confessions are supported by ample corroborative evidence. The weapon produced by accused No. 1 was blood-stained. There was a strong motive for the crime, as the property of the accused was to be sold in a few days in execution of decrees obtained by the deceased. The accused were identified soon after the murder, and there is no reason whatever why the evidence on this point should be disbelieved. The Sessions Judge was, moreover, wrong in holding that the confession of accused No. 1 could not be used against accused No. 2, because it was not made while the two were being jointly tried. This is an erroneous view of s. 30 of the Evidence Act.

M. V. Bhat, for the accused:—Both Judge and assessors disbelieve the witnesses who speak to the identification of the accused. Their story is inherently improbable. Their evidence is, moreover, in direct conflict with the medical evidence, which clearly shows that the deceased did not die of wounds inflicted with a stick like that produced in Court. There is thus no reliable independent evidence to corroborate the confessions of the accused. Those confessions were recorded by the Magistrate under s. 164 of the Criminal Procedure Code (Act X of 1882). But the Magistrate does not certify, as required by the section, that at the time the confessions

JUDGMENT.

JARDINE, J.—In a judgment in which the Sessions Judge discusses the evidence with his usual carefulness he acquitted the three prisoners whom he tried for the murder on Sunday, the [730] 4th March, 1894, before day-dawn, of Sakharam Deoli, a money-lender at Kinjawade, in the Devgad Taluka. The two assessors also held that the charge was not brought home. The learned Judge found the fact of murder proved; and, differing from the assessors, who said the confessions made by the prisoners Gharya and Ratnak to the Magistrate of the First Class at Ratnagiri, on the 20th March, were, in their opinion, false and made through fear of the police, he found that they were truly and voluntarily made. These prisoners retracted their confessions on the 27th March; and for reasons chiefly based on the want of corroboration of these confessions, the Sessions Judge held that it was unsafe to act upon them. Against these acquittals, an appeal was preferred by the Governor in Council, and admitted by this Court as regards Gharya and Ratnak, who have been re-arrested.

It is urged for the Crown that the Court below has not given proper weight to the confessions. As regards the acquitted prisoner Bhornak, we draw the attention of the Judge to the ruling on s. 30 of the Indian Evidence Act in Imperatrix v. Tanya, Criminal Ruling 30 of the 24th July, 1890. The learned Judge, following as it seems the rule laid down by Mr. Justice Kernan in Queen-Empress v. Rangi (1) and followed in Queen-Empress v. Bharmappa (2), has acquitted the two confessing prisoners. The rule followed in Madras is that "a retracted confession must be supported by independent reliable evidence corroborating it in material particulars." These cases have often been cited to us, but, so far as we are aware, this Court while fully conscious of the need of caution in dealing with retracted confessions, has refrained from laying down any binding rule, but treated the value of a retracted confession as a matter of prudence rather than of law. We have often in dealing with such cases declined to treat the Madras practice as based on a rule of law. The view hitherto taken by this High Court is stated in the case relied upon by the committing Magistrate, Reg. v. Balvant (3) and in Imperatrix v. Sangappa (4). We have had further evidence taken on the point, where the assessors differ from the Judge, [731] as to whether the confessions were made under terror of the police. We have also taken the evidence of the Magistrate, and are now satisfied that there is no reason to suppose that the prisoners were induced by threat or ill-treatment to make these confessions. They appear to have been quite voluntary: and as the prisoners were in a different custody at Ratnagiri on the 20th March, it is probable that if the ill-treatment they allege as given at Kinjawade on the 12th and 13th March did really occur, they would have complained about it to the Magistrate at Ratnagiri.

We, therefore, agree with the Judge that the two confessions were voluntarily made; and we have next to consider them along with the other evidence in the manner pointed out in the earlier decisions of this High Court, as has been urged for the Crown. Viewed in that light, the corroborating evidence becomes more weighty. It is proved that the prisoners had motive of ill-will. It is possible that the eye-witnesses may have spoken incautiously or falsely about their recognition of the prisoners; but even if the recognition is untrue, the rest of their story may be true. The police patel says they denied all knowledge on the 4th March, and they appear not to have spoken till the 7th, and the finding of the stick, bill-hook, shoes, &c., was two or three days after the murder. As the patel did not hold the inquest as required by Bombay Act VIII of 1867, it is possible that no prompt or searching inquiry was made until the arrival of the district police. The omission of the patel ought to have been pointed out by the Courts below on the principle stated in Kendillon v. Maltby (1), as otherwise it may not come to the notice of the District Magistrate. The Court refrains from passing capital sentences, as all the facts of the case are not clear, and as the prisoners have once been acquitted. The Court reverses the order of acquittal and discharge, and convicts Gharya Suryaji and Ratnag bin Mahadnak of murder, and under s. 302 of the Indian Penal Code sentences them to transportation for life.

Order of acquittal quashed.

[732] CRIMINAL REVISION.

Before Mr. Justice Jardine and Mr. Justice Ranade.

QUEEN-EMPRESS v. BHIMAPPA BIN RAMANNA.*

[3rd December, 1894.]

Criminal Procedure—Practice—Procedure—Appeal by accused—Order rejecting appeal as barred by limitation—Review of such order—Finality of judgments in criminal matters—Criminal Procedure Code (Act X of 1882), ss. 421, 430.

A Sessions Judge dismissed an appeal on the ground that it was barred by limitation. On a subsequent application by the accused, the Judge admitted the appeal and at the hearing acquitted him. The High Court sent for the record in the exercise of its revisional jurisdiction.

Held, that the order of acquittal was ultra vires under s. 430 of the Code of Criminal Procedure (Act X of 1882). The order dismissing the appeal was final and not open to review.

It was argued that s. 421 of the Criminal Procedure Code (Act X of 1882) only applies to orders passed on the merits, and that as the order rejecting the appeal was not of that class, it was not an order "upon appeal" and was not final under s. 430.

Held, that s. 421 was not limited to orders passed on the merits, and that the order in question was an order upon appeal and final under s. 30.

The Criminal Procedure Code (Act X of 1882) makes no provision for review of judgments in criminal matters by subordinate appellate Courts. The jurisdiction of revision is vested in the High Court, which has ample powers under chap. 32 to rectify any inadvertent failure of justice.

sentenced to pay a fine of Rs. 60, or in default to suffer one month's rigorous imprisonment.

On the 9th May, 1894, the accused appealed to the Sessions Court, and on the 30th May, 1894, the appeal was dismissed on the ground that it was barred by limitation.

On the 1st August, 1894, the appeal was re-admitted, the Sessions Judge being satisfied that it was owing to the negligence of the accused's pleader, that it had not been presented in time.

On 4th September, 1894, the appeal was finally heard, and the accused was acquitted.

On examining the monthly return of criminal cases the High Court sent for the record of this case in the exercise of its revisional jurisdiction.

[733] Rao Saheb Vasudev J. Kirtikar, Government Pleader, as amicus curiæ.—The Sessions Judge had a right to re-consider his order of rejection and to re-admit the appeal. No doubt it may be suggested that the order of rejection was an order under s. 421 of the Criminal Procedure Code (Act X of 1882), and was, therefore, final under s. 430. But the order of rejection was not really an order under s. 421. That section only applies where an appeal has been dismissed on the merits. It has no application to a case like the present where the appeal is rejected on the ground of limitation. Even if the order was an order under s. 421, and was an order on the merits, the Sessions Judge had power to rehear the case : see 7 Mad. H. C. R., (Appendix) 29. An appellate Court can re-hear the appeal on the merits, if it is satisfied that the delay in presenting the appeal is sufficiently accounted for. See also The Government of Bengal v. Meir Surwar Jan (1) where the High Court of Calcutta cancelled a previous order made by it under an error in law. There are, no doubt, cases in which it has been held that neither the High Court nor any subordinate Court has the power to review its own judgment in criminal cases: see Queen v. Godai Kaout (2); Reg. v. Mehtarji Gopalji (3) ; Queen-Empress v. Durga Charan (4) ; Queen-Empress v. C. P. Fox (5) ; Empress v. Mahomed Yashin (6). But in these cases the orders of which review was sought, appear to have been passed on the merits. They are, therefore, distinguishable from the present case. The question is whether the Sessions Judge's order rejecting the appeal as time-barred was an order passed "upon appeal" within the meaning of ss. 430 and 421 of the Code of Criminal Procedure (Act X of 1882). I submit it was not. It was an order of dismissal under s. 4 of the Limitation Act (XV of 1877), and as such open to revision under s. 5 of that Act. The Judge, therefore, had power to re-admit the appeal and to acquit the prisoner.

There was no appearance for the accused.

JUDGMENT.

JARDINE, J.—The Sessions Judge, after receiving the criminal appeal, recorded a written order of rejection on the ground that [734] it was barred by limitation. On a later representation by the prisoner, he admitted the appeal, and at the hearing acquitted him. The High Court called for the record, and has had the advantage of the argument of the learned Government Pleader.

corresponding to s. 421 of the present Code, that a District Magistrate, who had rejected an appeal, might hear it on the merits, it being proved to his satisfaction that the appellant's pleader had been absent with an adequate excuse. In Empress v. Mahomed (1), this Court, after referring to s. 285 (corresponding to s. 430), held its own order of rejection under s. 278 to be final. The learned Government Pleader points out that the petition of appeal in that case had been duly presented by a pleader, and that it had been apparently rejected on the merits. He suggests that the words in s. 421, " no sufficient ground for interfering," imply an order passed on the merits ; and that the order of the Sessions Judge rejecting an appeal is not an order passed " upon appeal" within the meaning of s. 430, but to be distinguished as a dismissal under s. 4 of the Limitation Act (XV of 1877) and open to review by the Sessions Judge. On this point we are aware of no reported authority ; but after consideration, we decline to import into the Code a refinement which would seriously impair the finality of criminal judgments. In civil matters, review may sometimes be obtained, but only after a careful procedure. The Criminal Procedure Code, however, makes no such provision. The jurisdiction of revision is vested in the High Court, which has ample powers under Chap. 32 to rectify any inadvertent failure of justice.

We are of opinion, therefore, that the order of acquittal was made without jurisdiction ; but as no reason appears for holding it wrong on the merits, and no motion has been made by the Government, we return the record and proceedings.

Order of acquittal quashed.

[735] APPELLATE CRIMINAL.

Before Mr. Justice Jardine and Mr. Justice Ranade.

QUEEN-EMPRESS v. MADHAVRAO.* [12th December, 1894.]

Criminal Procedure Code (Act X of 1882), Ss. 298 and 302—Jury—Verdict—Special verdict—Duty of Judge—Practice—Procedure.

The accused was tried for rape. The jury, after considering their verdict, announced through their foreman that the accused " did the act with consent." The Sessions Judge thereupon, without requiring them to reconsider their verdict or giving them any fresh directions, asked them whether they found the accused guilty or not guilty. The jury again retired and brought in a verdict of guilty, upon which the Sessions Judge sentenced the prisoner to three years' rigorous imprisonment.

Held, reversing the conviction and sentence, that the first verdict of the jury being a special verdict, and there being no real ambiguity about it, the Sessions Judge was bound under s. 302 of the Code of Criminal Procedure (Act X of 1882) to record the verdict and apply the law thereto.

Held, also, that the second verdict could not be sustained, as there was nothing to show that the Sessions Judge gave the jury any fresh directions, or explained to them that a finding that the woman had consented was tantamount to an acquittal.

APPEAL by the accused from the conviction and sentence recorded by W. H. Crowe, Sessions Judge of Poona.

The accused was tried by the Court of Sessions on a charge of rape. At the close of the trial the jury having considered their verdict, stated through their foreman that the accused "did the act with consent." The Judge without desiring them to reconsider their verdict, or giving them fresh directions, required them to say whether they found the accused guilty or not guilty.

The jury again retired and subsequently brought in a verdict of guilty, with a recommendation to mercy. Whereupon the Judge sentenced the prisoner to three years' rigorous imprisonment.

The accused appealed to the High Court.

Macpherson (with him N. G. Chandavarkar), for the accused.—The first finding of the jury amounted to a verdict of not guilty. That verdict ought to have been recorded and the prisoner discharged. It was the duty of the Judge to apply the law to the facts as found by the jury. He was wrong in asking the jury [736] to return a second verdict without explaining to them the law on the subject. The second verdict, therefore, cannot stand.

Rao Saheb Vasudev J. Kirtikar, Government Pleader, for the Crown.—The second verdict being the final expression of the opinion of the jury ought to prevail. If not, the Sessions Judge should be called upon to report under what circumstances they returned their second verdict, apparently inconsistent with the first, and what they really meant by it. There is no evidence of consent, and possibly, on second thoughts, they abandoned that theory and returned a verdict of guilty without any qualifying words.

JUDGMENT.

JARDINE, J.—The prisoner Madhavrao was on trial for rape. The jury having retired to consider their verdict returned to Court and announced through their foreman that the prisoner "did the act with consent." This is what is called a special verdict: it is at the option of the jury to return a verdict in that form— Queen-Empress v. Dada Ana (1). There is no real ambiguity about it, as the question whether the consent was induced by fear or fraud seems not to have come in: and the Sessions Judge might have, and according to the rulings of the High Court at Calcutta—Queen v. Joy Kisto Gossamy (2); The Government of Bengal v. Mahaddi (3); Empress v. Dhunum Kazi (4)—was bound under s. 302 of the Code of Criminal Procedure to record the verdict, and apply the law thereto. As said by Vaughan, C. J., in Bushell's case (5), "in special verdicts, the jury inform the naked fact, and the Court deliver the law."

The question whether, when the complainant, an adult woman, had consented to the act, the offence of rape within the meaning of the Indian Penal Code had been committed, was a question of law which it was the duty of the Sessions Judge to decide under s. 298 of the Procedure Code, and not one for the jury. See Plowden's R. 114 that the function of the Judge is not merged in the jury. The learned Judge for some reason, not apparent on the record, then required the jury to say whether Madhavrao was guilty or not guilty. It does not appear that [737] he required them to re-consider their first verdict, as has been held to be a legal course in England—Reg. v. Meany (1), or that he gave them any fresh directions or explained to them that a finding that the woman consented was tantamount to acquittal. The jury again retired and brought in a verdict of guilty with a recommendation to mercy; whereupon the Sessions Judge convicted and sentenced the prisoner. There are no express words on the record, nor anything except the formal verdict implying that the jury had changed their mind, nor any suggestion that the consent being induced by fear or fraud, the special verdict was incomplete.

We are of opinion under these circumstances, and especially the absence of any fresh directions to the jury, that the second verdict cannot be allowed to stand. The statements made by the woman to the Magistrate have in two important particulars been abandoned by her as a witness at the trial: and we are not disposed to infer on the evidence that the first verdict to the jury was wrong. The Government Pleader does not press for a new trial. The Court, therefore, acquits and discharges the prisoner.

Conviction quashed.

THIS was an application for the exercise of the High Court's Revisional jurisdiction under s. 439 of the Code of Criminal Procedure (Act X of 1882).

The accused was prosecuted for disobedience of an order issued by the District Superintendent of Police under s. 48, cl. (b), of the Bombay District Police Act (IV of 1890).

On the 26th January, 1893, a proclamation was issued by the District Superintendent of Police with the sanction of the District Magistrate to the effect that no person should beat or sound noisy instruments within the municipal limits of the town of Broach between 10 P. M. and 6 A. M., without a permit from the city police inspector, and that, if anybody disobeyed the order, he would be liable to a fine of Rs. 200 under s. 68 of Bombay Act IV of 1890.

On the night of the 28th July, 1894, the accused had a bhajan (or religious service) at his house, which was situated in a street near a public road. A number of persons assembled in a room on the upper story of his house, who kept up singing hymns and beating noisy instruments till 2 A. M.

As the accused had not obtained a permit from the police inspector to play music in his house on this occasion, the second class police constable prosecuted him under s. 62 of Bombay Act IV of 1890 for disobeying the proclamation issued by the District Superintendent of Police.

The accused contended, on the authority of Regina v. Lakhma Chango (1), that the police had no power to stop music in a private house.

The First Class Magistrate who tried the case convicted the accused and sentenced him to pay fine of Rs. 5, or in default to suffer one day's simple imprisonment.

The following extract from his judgment gives his reasons for the conviction :—

"It is contended by the accused's pleader that the law is not applicable to the beating of such instruments in a house, and my attention has been drawn to the [739] Bombay High Court ruling in Reg. v. Lakhma Chango printed at p. 153, Vol. IX, 1872. This ruling is laid down on s. 27 of Bombay Act VII of 1867, and does not empower the police to prohibit the use of music in a private house.

"The question then for consideration is whether this ruling would be applicable to the present offence under s. 48 of Bombay Act IV of 1890. Section 27 of Bombay Act VII of 1867 runs to the effect that the District Superintendent and Assistant District Superintendent of Police may also regulate the use of music in the streets of towns on occasion of festivals and ceremonies. While s. 48, cl. (b) of Act IV of 1890, which is substituted for the above section, runs to the effect that the District Superintendent or an Assistant Superintendent may regulate and control, by the grant of licenses or otherwise, the playing of music, the beating of drums, tom-toms and other instruments and the blowing or sounding of horns and other noisy instruments in or near a street.

"This clause is framed subsequent to the above quoted ruling of the High Court, and I think the phrase 'near a street' embodied in the clause is intended by the Legislature to include all places and even a house in or near a street. Had that not been the intention of the Legislature, the phrase 'near a street' would not have been inserted, because the phrase 'in a street' can safely be contemplated to include roadways and open space in a street.

"I am fortified in the above conclusion by the wording of the proclamation dated 26th January, 1893, issued by the District Superintendent of Police under the sanction of the District Magistrate. The proclamation is to the effect that no person should beat or sound noisy instruments within municipal limits at night from 10 o'clock to 6 in morning without a permit from the city police inspector, and that if any one would disobey the order he would be liable to a fine of Rs. 200 under s. 68.

DEC. 13.

CRIMINAL REVISION.

19 B. 737.

"This proclamation includes and contemplates all places within municipal limits; it does not distinguish houses from roadways or open space.

"The accused's house is situate within municipal limits; and under the above circumstances I think that the above ruling of the High Court cannot be applied in accused's favour.

"The Court, therefore, finds that accused Jamnadas Bhukhandas is guilty under s. 68, cl. (b) of Bombay Act IV of 1890, and directs that he do pay a fine of Rs. 5. In default to suffer simple imprisonment for one day. Fine should be levied according to law."

Against this conviction and sentence the accused applied to the High Court under its Revisional jurisdiction.

Nagindas Tulsidas for accused.—The place where the music was played was a room on the upper story of a private house belonging to the accused. No permit was necessary under s. 48 (b) of Bombay Act IV of 1890. That section empowers the police to regulate music "in or near a street." These words do not apply to a private house in or near a public street. The [740] words "near a street" would include by-ways, lanes, or open spaces near a street, but not private houses. In a large town most houses are situate in or near a street, and if the Magistrate's construction of the Act were adopted, the police would have intolerable powers of interference with the right of every subject to enjoy music in his private dwelling-house. The Magistrate relies on the proclamation issued by the District Superintendent of Police on 26th January, 1893. That proclamation forbids music within municipal limits. Municipal limits mean streets and other public places, but not private houses. The proclamation is, moreover, issued under s. 48 of the District Police Act. So far as it goes beyond the scope of the Act, it is ultra vires. If the Act does not stop music in private houses, neither does the proclamation, which is based on the Act.

The case of Reg. v. Lakhma Chango is in point (1).

There was no appearance for the Crown,

JUDGMENT.

JARDINE, J.—The words about music "in the streets of towns on the occasion of festivals and ceremonies" in Bombay Act VII of 1867, s. 27, were interpreted by this Court as not including a private house. The trying Magistrate is of opinion that the change of language enacted in Bombay Act IV of 1890, s. 48 (b), indicates an intention on the part of the Legislature, by the words "in or near a street," to enable a District Superintendent or Assistant Superintendent of Police to regulate the playing of music in private houses. The District Superintendent had by written orders prohibited noisy music within municipal limits between 10 P. M. and 6 A. M., unless a permit had been obtained. The accused had music one night in an upstair room. The orders make no mention of houses. The constable prosecuted and the Magistrate convicted as if houses were included both in s. 48 (b) and the orders.

The real and important question is whether, to use the words of Lord Blackburn in Skinner v. Usher (2), the Legislature meant by a side wind to stop music in houses. Such great domiciliary interference is not suggested by the context in s. 48, or by the use of similar words in s. 53 and s. 61. The [741] words "near a street" are no doubt large, but not larger than the words "in any street or place" in the Act of Parliament interpreted in Case v. Storey (1), where "place" was taken to mean only a place ejusdem generis with a street. The words "near a street" can be construed as meaning open spaces by the sides or at the ends of streets, and thus a plain and sufficient meaning can be given to the section we have to interpret, without the Court resorting to the supposition that while knowing that the older law had been held not to include houses, the Legislature meant to include them here by inference from the word "near." The only possible view is that, if it had meant to interfere to such an enormous extent, it would have used the word house. We reverse the conviction and sentence for the above reasons.

(1) 9 B.H.C.R. 153.

(2) L. R. 7 Q. B. 423

Conviction and sentence reversed.

Zanzibar—Jurisdiction—Local allegiance—English Consular Court—Greek residents at Zanzibar—Jurisdiction of the British Consular Court at Zanzibar over foreign subjects enjoying British protection—Order in Council dated 29th November, 1884, s. 6.

The Greek residents at Zanzibar having been by international action placed under British protection are liable to the British criminal law in force at Zanzibar.

The accused, who was a Greek under British protection at Zanzibar, was convicted by the British Consular Court at Zanzibar of culpable homicide not amounting to murder and sentenced to ten years' rigorous imprisonment under s. 304 of the Indian Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860). He appealed to the High Court of Bombay, contending (inter alia) that he was a Greek subject, and as such not liable to be tried by the Consular Court.

Held, that it was competent to Her Majesty to exercise jurisdiction in one foreign State over the subjects of another foreign State; that under s. 6, cl. (b) of Her Majesty's Order in Council dated 29th November, 1884 (2), the provisions referring to British subjects were applicable to foreigners enjoying British protection in so far as by treaty, capitulation, grant, usage, sufferance, or other lawful means, Her Majesty had jurisdiction at Zanzibar in relation to such persons; and that the prisoner, being a British protected person within the meaning of s. 4, cl. (b) of the Order, was amenable to the jurisdiction of the Consular Court.

[R., 22 B. 54 (86).]

[742] THE accused was a Greek under British protection at Zanzibar. He was tried in the Consular Court at Zanzibar on a charge of murder. He was found guilty of culpable homicide not amounting to murder, and sentenced under s. 304 of the Indian Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860) to ten years' rigorous imprisonment.

Against this conviction and sentence the accused appealed to the High Court. He contended (inter alia) that he was a Greek subject and as such not amenable to the jurisdiction of the Consular Court at Zanzibar.

Manekshah Jehangirshah, for the accused.—The British Consular Court has no jurisdiction over a Greek subject residing at Zanzibar. There is no evidence to show that the Greek Government made over its own jurisdiction to the British Government. It is doubtful if the Greek Government could do so without renouncing the allegiance of the subject. But supposing it could, such a transfer of jurisdiction must be distinctly proved, and cannot be spelt out of vague diplomatic correspondence, as is attempted by the committing Magistrate. As regards the merits of the case, the Consular Judge has misdirected the jury in material particulars. He told the jury that self-defence was out of the question. This was a question of fact to be left to the jury.

There was no appearance for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.

JARDINE, J.—The prisoner was tried in the Consular Court at Zanzibar. The jury returned a verdict finding him guilty of culpable homicide not amounting to murder, whereon the Consular Judge, Mr. De Sausmarez, sentenced him, under s. 304 of the Indian Penal Code, to ten years' rigorous imprisonment. His appeal here has been fully argued by Mr. Manekshah.

Mr. Manekshah contended that the heads of the charge to the jury showed that the Judge did not merely content himself with an expression of opinion, but used such positive language, e.g., where he describes the defence of self-defence as "impossible," as was calculated to leave the jury no loophole for coming to an opinion of their own as the judges of all matters of fact.

The Code of Criminal Procedure (Act X of 1882) in ss. 298 and 299 very plainly distinguishes the duties of the Judge and the [743] jury; and s. 297 shows clearly how the Judge is to charge them, namely, by summing up the evidence for the prosecution and defence and laying down the law. The offence of murder being one of the most serious with which a prisoner can be charged, it was highly important that the Judge should discuss the evidence fully; and it does not appear that anything more was said to the jury than is contained in the record of the heads of charge, or that this was supplemented by reading the depositions of the most important witnesses, "a practice universally adopted by English Judges in serious cases, and which precludes the possibility of the jury coming to a decision without having all the facts fresh in their memory." Per Sargent, J., in Reg. v. Fattechand (1).

We are of opinion that the Judge, while giving, as he certainly may, his opinion on questions of fact, might well have dealt more fully with the evidence, the material on which the jury had to deliver their verdict. But we do not think the prisoner has been prejudiced. He was defended by a pleader who was entitled, under s. 290, to sum up his case after it closed on the third or fourth day of the trial. The record does not show whether he used this opportunity. Moreover, it appears that the jury as judges of the facts rejected the conclusions expressed by the Judge and found the prisoner guilty of culpable homicide only, not murder.

It has been several times ruled by this Court that as s. 304 of the Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860) deals with two kinds of culpable homicide, the jury ought to be asked to say under which part they find him guilty.

(1) 5 B.H.C.R.Cr. C. 85 (95).

We point this out to the Court below for future guidance. The sentence passed is a legal one under both parts of s. 304; and the learned pleader for the appellant has not argued that on the evidence the jury might have held that there was no intention to cause death, and that on such a formal verdict, bringing the case under the second part of s. 304, the learned Judge might have refrained from passing the maximum sentence. The pleader here has not dealt with this particular defect in the charge. He has, however, urged that this Court should reduce the sentence as excessive, giving further weight to the provocation [744] which was probably the reason why the jury declined to convict of murder. This Court is of opinion that no sufficient reason appears for judicial interference with the sentence on the merits. It is open to the prisoner to petition the Crown.

We have next to deal with the objection taken in the Consular Court to its exercising jurisdiction over the prisoner and faintly urged by Mr. Manekshah in the appeal. He admits that the prisoner is a Greek under British protection at Zanzibar. It is clear from a letter of the 14th June, 1892, from our Consul-General at Zanzibar to the Consul of France there, that the protection of the Greeks was assumed by the Consul-General with the knowledge of the Sultan of Zanzibar. The record also contains the views of Mr. Berkeley, the Consular Officer who committed the prisoner for trial. It appears therefrom that the Greek Government was a party to this placing of the Greeks under British protection.

The question raised below was whether, under the circumstances of this international action, a Greek coming under the British protection became also liable to the British criminal law in force in Zanzibar. This law is to be ascertained from Her Majesty's Orders in Council, the chief being that of 1884 passed under the Foreign Jurisdiction Acts, 1843 to 1878. It applies several Acts of the Government of India, among them being the Indian Penal Code, the Codes of Civil and Criminal Procedure, and the Indian Evidence Act. It creates a Consular Court with the Consul-General as Sessions Judge under the High Court of Bombay. Later Orders in Council have modified some of the judicial arrangements, but it is only necessary to refer to the Jurisdiction Order of 1893, which makes ch. 33 of the Criminal Procedure Code inapplicable to Zanzibar.

A substantive law of crimes, a procedure and a forum being thus created, we have next to see what persons are made subject thereto. Section 6, cl. (b), applies such provisions of the Order as refer to British subjects to British-protected persons, in so far as by treaty, capitulation, grant, usage, sufferance or other lawful means Her Majesty has jurisdiction in Zanzibar in relation to such persons. Mr. Manekshah concedes, and it does not seem [745] open to doubt, that the prisoner comes within the definition in s. 4, cl. 6, of British-protected person, which means "a person enjoying Her Majesty's protection in Zanzibar."

The question of the Consular Court's jurisdiction over him thus becomes narrowed to the issue whether the lawful effect of the protection arrangements made in 1892 at the transfer, taken along with the treaties made with His Highness the Sultan of Zanzibar, as s. 8 requires, was to place the prisoner under the criminal laws and jurisdiction specified in Her Majesty's Order in Council, like the subjects of Indian Princes and States, or the persons brought under by the Order of 1893, natives of any protectorate of Her Majesty outside Zanzibar when within Zanzibar, and certain Zanzibar subjects. As regards these last, see art. 17 of the Treaty signed on the 30th April, 1886, and the declaration between Great Britain and Zanzibar of the 16th December, 1892 (cited at p. 211 of a Treatise

JAN. 21.
APPELLATE CRIMINAL.

on Foreign Jurisdiction by W. E. Hall). In art. 16 of the Treaty occurs the following provision :—"The authorities of His Highness the Sultan have no right to interfere in disputes between subjects of Her Britannic Majesty amongst themselves, or between them and members of other Christian nations; such questions, whether of a civil or criminal nature, shall be decided by the competent Consular authorities." This makes it clear that the jurisdiction over the prisoner's act is not with the Sultan's Government; and there is nothing on the record to show any claim by that Government, although the First Minister of the Sultan appeared as a witness to the facts; and the record shows that in the Court of Mr. Berkeley, where objection was first taken to the jurisdiction, there was an appearance for the Government of Zanzibar. The case has been argued on the understanding that the Government of Greece has no Consul at Zanzibar. There is no suggestion of any arrangement empowering the British Consul-General to deport the prisoner to Greece for trial. It would appear, therefore, that, unless the Consular Courts assumed jurisdiction in such a case, the foreigner under the British protection might slay British subjects with impunity. We have no information whether the Courts in Greece would punish the offence. Forsyth in his Constitutional Law, p. 233, cites Wheaton and Dana for the [746] statement that as a general rule a State will not try its own subjects for offences committed abroad against foreigners.

The record contains a declaration by Her Majesty's Diplomatic Agent and Consul-General, that the two Courts below overruled the objection to the jurisdiction after reference to him and with his full approval and authority. The reasons are to be gathered from the minute recorded by Mr. Berkeley; that officer considers that "British Consul protection in Zanzibar connotes British jurisdiction." As a principle this seems in accord or analogy with that on which local allegiance is based by Coke in Calvin's case (1). "Concerning the local obedience it is observable that as there is a local protection on the King's part, so there is a local ligeance of the subject's part," as when a Frenchman comes into England. The principle seems also in accord with that on which Lord Stowell decided The Indian Chief (2), where other cases of older time were mentioned. In the East," he said, "from the oldest times an immiscible character has been kept up; foreigners are not admitted into the general body and mass of the society of the nation; they continue strangers and foreigners as all their fathers were. Doris amara suam non intermiscuit undam: not acquiring any national character under the general sovereignty of the country and not trading under any recognized authority of their own original country, they have been held to derive their present character from that of the association or factory under whose protection they live and carry on their trade."

In considering what power and jurisdiction is conceded to Great Britain within the territories of a foreign State, it must be borne in mind, as pointed out in Forsyth's Constitutional Law, 13, 231, that the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, when their Lordships referred with approval to Lord Stowell's judgment, have noticed that in transactions, whether political or mercantile, a difference subsists between Oriental and Christian States. In Papayanni v. Russian Steam Navigation and Trading Co., The Laconia (3), it was held that any mode of proof by which it was shown that a privilege is conceded, would be sufficient for [747] the purpose. The consent may be expressed in various ways: by constant usage permitted and acquiesced in by the authorities of the State; active assent or silent acquiescence where there is full knowledge. Thus the Ottoman Government had acquiesced in allowing to the British Government within the Ottoman dominions jurisdiction between British subjects and the subjects of other Christian States. This case shows beyond all doubt that it is competent for Her Majesty to exercise jurisdiction in one foreign State over the subject of another foreign State. One peculiarity of that case was, however, that the part of the Order then interpreted was a proviso similar to that in s. 33 of the Zanzibar Order in Council of 1884, restraining the Consular Court from assuming that jurisdiction where the consent of the territorial Sovereign or of the Consul of the state to which the foreigner belonged had not been obtained. No such restriction appears in the Zanzibar orders in Council as regards criminal matters.

There remain to be considered the objections taken for the prisoner by Mr. Lascari in Mr. Borkeley's Court, and apparently also in the Consular Court at the trial. He urged that it was the duty of the Consul-General to forward the prisoner for trial to Athens, as it would have been the duty of the French Consul before 1892. But Mr. Berkeley points out that the deportation could not be made in the absence of any arrangements for extradition. No convention about deportation has been suggested to us, nor has it been argued that the law of Greece extends to a homicidal offence at Zanzibar. Mr. Berkeley makes mention of the only stipulation made by the Greek Government in the arrangement of 1892, viz., that Greek subjects should not be submitted to any measure not equally applicable to the subjects of other European powers established in the island and who have no treaty with the Sultan. Mr. Berkeley says that the subjects of non-treaty nations would necessarily fall under the territorial jurisdiction of the Sultan, a result avoided only by their coming under the protection of a treaty power. On this, however, we would remark that the Sultan had, by art. 16 of the Treaty, ceded the jurisdiction over cases like the present to the different Consular authorities. The Government of Greece cannot in the [748] year 1892 be presumed ignorant of our treaty of 1886 or of our Consular order of 1884, and its provision about British protected persons. It would be mere surmise to suppose, in the complete absence of any stipulation or any arrangement to that effect, that it is intended that in a case like the present the prisoner should be sent to Athens. The presumption that the Court below has acted rightly, is not to be weakened by mere suggestion or surmise. The Act of Parliament, the Foreign Jurisdiction Act, 1890, 53 and 54 Vict., c. 37, provides a means of obtaining a conclusive determination of questions of jurisdiction. On the application of the Court in the manner provided, a Secretary of State shall within a reasonable time send it his decision. This Court has not been moved to use this means and as it is of high importance that the decision of questions of criminal law should not be delayed, and as we see no sufficient reason to doubt that the Court below had jurisdiction, we do not avail ourselves of the procedure. Mr. Manekshah was instructed that the Greek community at Zanzibar intended to bring the subject to the notice of the King of the Hellenes. If His Majesty's Government consider that the jurisdiction lay with the Courts of Greece, that view will probably be stated to Her Majesty's Government by the usual diplomatic means, and if Her Majesty's

The accused was charged with abetting the offence of criminal breach of trust committed by the nazir of the Small Causes Court at Poona. The accused was a karkun in the nazir's office and it was his duty to keep the accounts of moneys received in the office from judgment-debtors and of moneys paid out to decree-holders. He was charged with abetting the misappropriation of three sums, viz. Rs. 20 on the 19th November, 1885, Rs. 45 on the 23rd November, 1885, and Rs. 10 on the 26th June, 1886. As to the first sum, it was alleged that an instalment of Rs. 25 due under a decree had been paid into the nazir's office by a judgment-debtor on the 19th November, 1885, but the accused had entered in the office day book only Rs. 5, thereby enabling the balance of Rs. 20 to be misappropriated. It appeared, however, that a sum of Rs. 25, being the instalment due to the decree-holder under the above decree, had been in due course paid out to him on the 4th December, 1885. As to the second sum of Rs. 45, it was alleged that a sum of Rs. 50 had been paid in, but only Rs. 5 had been entered by the accused, the balance being misappropriated. It appeared, however, in this case also that the full amount of the instalment, viz. Rs. 50, had been duly paid out to the decree-holder a few days after its receipt. As to the third sum, it was alleged that the total receipts entered in the book on the 26th June, 1886, were Rs. 55, but the figure entered as the total was only Rs. 45 and that the balance of Rs. 10 had been misappropriated. The jury found the accused guilty on all three charges. On appeal by him it was contended that there was no evidence of the misappropriation of the specific sums in respect of which he was charged. There was evidence of a general deficiency, but there was no evidence that these specific sums formed part of that deficiency. On the contrary the evidence showed that the instalments paid into the office had been duly paid out to the persons to whom they were payable.

Held, that the jury having had the facts brought to their notice, their verdict was final, and the High Court would not interfere with the verdict.

Depositions taken on commission in criminal cases although inadmissible under Chap. 40 of the Criminal Procedure Code (Act X of 1882) may be admitted under s. 33 of the Evidence Act (I of 1872), if the requirements of the proviso to that section have been complied with.

The words "opportunity to cross-examine" in the proviso to s. 33 do not imply that the actual presence of the cross-examining party or his agent before the tribunal taking the evidence is necessary.

[750] To make evidence admissible against an accused person under s. 33 of the Evidence Act, the fact that he had full opportunity of cross-examination, if not admitted, must be proved.

Quære—Whether the opportunity to administer cross-interrogatories under a commission is an "opportunity to cross-examine" within the meaning of the proviso to s. 33 of the Evidence Act so as to render the evidence taken on interrogatories admissible.

The provisions of s. 167 of the Evidence Act (I of 1872) apply to criminal trials by jury.

Held, that when part of the evidence, which has been allowed to go to the jury, is found to be irrelevent and inadmissible, it is open to the High Court in appeal either to uphold the verdict upon the remaining evidence on the record under s. 167 of the Indian Evidence Act (I of 1872), or to quash the verdict and order a retrial.

The law as settled in England by the Queen v. Gibson (1) and as stated by the Privy Council in Makin v. Attorney-General of New South Wales (2) with reference to the granting of new trials where evidence has been improperly admitted, does not apply to India. Wafadar Khan v. Queen-Empress (3), not followed.

APPEAL from the conviction and sentence recorded by G. Jacob, Sessions Judge at Poona.

The accused had been employed as a karkun from 1872 to 1889 under the nazir of the Small Causes Court at Poona. It was his duty (inter alia) to keep the account of moneys received in the nazir's office from judgment-debtors and of moneys paid out to decree-holders. In 1890 large defalcations amounting to several thousands of rupees were discovered in the nazir's accounts, and the nazir was tried and convicted of criminal breach of trust.

In 1894 the accused was arrested and tried upon charges framed against him in connection with the same defalcations. The charges were with respect to three sums of money alleged to have been misappropriated, viz., Rs. 20 on the 19th November, 1885, Rs. 45 on the 23rd November, 1885, and Rs. 10 on the 26th June, 1886, and they were framed under ss. 409, 109 and 218 of the Indian Penal Code. The accused was convicted by the jury of abetting the misappropriation of each of the above sums of money, and for each offence he was sentenced to eighteen months' rigorous imprisonment.

The first set of charges related, as above mentioned, to a sum of Rs. 20, as to which it was alleged that an instalment of Rs. 25 [751] due under a decree had been paid into the nazir's office by a judgment-debtor on the 19th November, 1885. But the accused entered in the office day-book only Rs. 5, thereby enabling the balance of Rs. 20 to be misappropriated either by himself or by the nazir. It appeared, however, that a sum of Rs. 25, being the instalment due to the decree-holder, had been in due course paid out to him on the 4th December, 1885.

The second set of charges related to a sum of Rs. 45. On the 23rd November, 1885, a judgment-debtor under another decree had paid in an instalment of Rs. 50, but the entry made by the accused was Rs. 5, thereby (it was alleged) enabling the balance of Rs. 45 to be misappropriated either by himself or by the nazir. It appeared, however, in this case also, that the full amount of the instalment, viz., Rs. 50, was duly paid out to the judgment-creditor on the 27th November, 1885.

The third set of charges related to a sum of Rs. 10. As to this it appeared that the total receipts entered in the books for the 26th June, 1886, amounted to Rs. 55, but the total entered was only Rs. 45, and it was alleged that the difference, viz., Rs. 10, had been misappropriated, and that the total had been wrongly entered by the accused in order to render misappropriation possible.

APPELLATE CRIMINAL.

19 B. 749.

The case for the prosecution was that the accused either himself misappropriated the difference on each of these occasions, or aided and abetted the nazir in misappropriating the money by wilfully making false entries in the books.

The case for the defence was that the entries in question were made through mistake under pressure of work, and not with any guilty knowledge or dishonest intention.

During the course of the preliminary inquiry, the committing Magistrate issued a commission under s. 503 of the Criminal Procedure Code (Act X of 1882) to the Agent to the Governor-General at Indore for the examination of Rao Bahadur K. C. Bedarkar, Divan of Indore, who had been Judge of the Court of Small Causes at Poona at the time when the offences were alleged to have been committed. The witness was examined by means of interrogatories and cross-interrogatories. At the trial before the Sessions Court, the deposition of this witness was [752] tendered in evidence by the prosecution. The accused's pleader objected to its admissibility. But the Sessions Judge overruled the objection, holding that the deposition was admissible under s. 33 of the Indian Evidence Act (I of 1872), as the attendance of the witness could not be procured without unreasonable delay and expense.

The jury unanimously acquitted the prisoner of the principal offence of criminal breach of trust under s. 409 of the Indian Penal Code, but by a majority of four to one found him guilty of abetment of criminal breach of trust in respect of each of the items under s. 109 of the Code. The jury were of opinion that the moneys had been misappropriated by the nazir with the knowledge of the accused, and that the accused deliberately made the false entries with the intention of enabling the nazir to misappropriate the moneys.

The Sessions Judge, concurring with the verdict of the jury, convicted the prisoner under ss. 409 and 109 of the Indian Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860) of abetment of criminal breach of trust, and sentenced him to eighteen months' rigorous imprisonment for each of the said offences. He also convicted the prisoner under s. 218 of the Code, but did not pass any separate sentence for the offence charged under that section.

Against this conviction and sentence the accused appealed to the High Court.

Kirkpatrick (with N. C. Chandavarkar), for the appellant.—The Judge has misdirected the jury. The charge was inadequate in not pointing out that there was no evidence given that the principal offence had been committed. That being so, the charge of abetment cannot be sustained. Further, the prosecution is bound to prove the misappropriation of the specific sums in respect of which the accused is charged. This is not proved, nor is there any evidence of it. There is evidence of a general deficiency, but no evidence that these sums formed part of that deficiency. On the contrary the instalment of Rs. 25, which is the subject of the first charge, and which was paid in by the judgment-debtor on the 19th November, was paid out in full on the 4th December to the judgment-creditor. So also the sum of [753] Rs. 50 which was paid in by the judgment-debtor on the 23rd November was paid out to the judgment-creditor on the 27th November—Russell on Crimes (5th Ed.), Vol. 2, pp. 377-378; Reg v. Wolstenholme (1); Rex v. Grove (2); Reg v. Lloyd Jones (3).

(1) 11 Cox. C. C. 313. (2) 7 C. and P. 635. (3) 8 C. and P. 288.

As to the third charge, nothing is proved except that the addition of the day's receipts is wrong, and the total is less by Rs. 10 than it ought to be. There is no evidence but the mere fact of the discrepant figures—s. 34 of the Indian Evidence Act (I of 1872). There is no evidence that the wrong figures are fraudulently and intentionally entered.

Next we contend that the evidence taken on commission was wrongly admitted by the Sessions Court. The commission had not been issued by that Court, but by the Police Court—Queen-Empress v. Jacob (1); Empress v. Dabee Pershad (2). It was rightly held inadmissible under the Criminal Procedure Code (Act X of 1882), ss. 503—507. It ought not, then, to have been admitted under the Evidence Act. The former Code gave the right to a commission and laid down the limits within which the right could be exercised. It was not intended that although the terms of the Code were not complied with, the evidence could be admitted under some other Act. If so, the limitations laid down by the Code would be futile. But even under s. 33 of the Evidence Act (I of 1872) the evidence was not admissible—Queen-Empress v. Burke (3); Queen-Empress v. Jacob (1); Empress v. Dabee Pershad (2).

[JARDINE, J.—Had the accused the right and opportunity to cross-examine? See Reg v. Day (4).]

No. Mere cross-interrogatories could not be cross-examination under s. 33.

If the evidence taken on commission was improperly admitted and allowed to go to the jury, the verdict is bad. We say there should be a new trial notwithstanding s. 167 of the Evidence [754] Act—Queen v. Gibson (5); Makin v. Attorney-General of New South Wales (6). This last is a Privy Council case which this Court is bound to follow, although it is contrary to previous decisions of this Court. See per Melvill, J., in Manjunath v. Venkatesh (7).

JARDINE, J.—We do not think it necessary to call on the prosecution as to the first point raised in argument; for we think that as to that point the jury were sufficiently directed by the Sessions Judge, and their decision is final. The facts were brought to their notice, and they appear to have considered them and to have given their verdict accordingly. We do not think that we should be justified in interfering with that verdict. But we desire to hear the pleader for the Crown upon the other two points, viz., (1) was the evidence taken on commission admissible? (2) If not, if that evidence was improperly admitted, what course should this Court adopt in dealing with the case, having regard to the principles laid down in Makin v. Attorney-General of New South Wales (6) and to s. 167 of the Evidence Act (I of 1872) and the series of decisions upon this section?

Rao Saheb Vasudev J. Kirtikar, Government Pleader, for the Crown.—The commission to examine Mr. Bedarkar was issued by the committing Magistrate under s. 503 of the Code of Criminal Procedure (Act X of 1882). Reading ss. 503 and 507 of the Code together, the evidence taken on commission becomes part of the record of the case. I adopt the argument of the Advocate General in Queen-Empress v. Jacob (1). A commitment is only a preliminary stage of the trial, and the trial continues until it ends in verdict. The evidence taken on commission is, therefore, admissible under s. 507 of the Code of Criminal Procedure.

But it is also admissible under s. 33 of the Indian Evidence Act (I of 1872). The accused had the opportunity of cross-examining the witness, and he availed himself of that opportunity by putting cross-interrogatories. The cross-interrogatories take the place of cross-examination within the meaning of s. 33 of the Evidence Act. The provisions of this section are not [755] affected in any way by s. 507 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. The deposition of Mr. Bedarkar taken on commission is, therefore, admissible in evidence.

Even if it were inadmissible, the remaining evidence on the record is sufficient to sustain the conviction. Section 167 of the Evidence Act would then apply. This section applies to criminal as well as to civil Courts. This Court has often held that the improper admission of evidence would not be a ground for interference with a verdict if the remaining evidence on the record be sufficient to warrant a conviction—Reg. v. Amrita (1); Imp. v. Pitamber (2); Imp. v. Pandharinath (3); Reg. v. Futa Adaji (4); see also Queen v. Hurribole (5).

JUDGMENT.

JARDINE, J.—The prisoner was convicted, on the verdict of the jury, on three heads of charge relating to different sums of money, of abetment of criminal breach of trust under ss. 109 and 409 of the Indian Penal Code, and upon this verdict sentences were passed by the Sessions Judge. At the same trial the Judge after taking the opinion of the members of the jury as assessors convicted the prisoner on three heads of charge under s. 218 of making incorrect entries of the above three sums of money, by stating the sum received at each payment as less than it was. No sentence was passed under s. 218.

At the hearing of the appeal Mr. Kirkpatrick argued several questions of law on behalf of the prisoner. The first point taken was misdirection. He argued that the Judge ought to have directed the jury that there was no evidence of the substantive misappropriation, nor of the abetment. He cited some of the cases in 2 Russell on Crimes, Book IV, Chap. 19, s. 4, such as Reg. v. Lloyd Jones (6), Reg. v. Wolstenhome (7), to show that there must be proof to satisfy the jury of receipt of the particular sum and misappropriation of the same as distinguished from evidence of a general deficiency. The charge delivered by the Judge shows sufficiently that he required the jury to find separately as to each specific misappropriation charged, [756] and the verdict delivered is specific as to each. It was, however, contended that the absence of evidence should have been pointed out. But we are of opinion that there was evidence on which the jury might judge, not merely conjecture—Queen-Empress v. Vajeram (8). The present is distinguished from all the cases cited by evidence that the sums in each case accounted for by the written entries were less than the sums received. Not one of the three transactions is merely one of non-entry or general deficiency. It was for the jury as judges of the facts to form an opinion whether the evidence disclosed fraud or mere negligence, and in so doing the jury might draw such presumption about facts from the course of business and the conduct of persons as s. 114 of the Indian Evidence Act allows a Court to do. Being satisfied that there was no misdirection, we did not call on the learned Government Pleader to reply on this point.

(4) 11 B.H.C.R. 247. (5) 1 C. 207. (6) 8 C. & P. 228.
(7) 11 Cox. C. C. 313. (8) 16 B. 414 (423).

The second question raised by Mr. Kirkpatrick was as to the admissibility as evidence at the trial of the deposition of a witness obtained by a commission issued by the committing Magistrate and forming part of the record of his inquiry. When tendered for the Crown, and objected to for the prisoner, the learned Judge held that s. 33 of the Indian Evidence Act applied to the deposition; and in the exercise of the judicial discretion allowed by that section admitted it on the ground that the attendance of the witness who was at Indore, in a Native State, could not be obtained without unreasonable delay and expense. It has been only faintly argued by the Government Pleader that the deposition may be held admissible under chap. 40 of the Code of Criminal Procedure (Act X of 1882); and so far we see no reason to differ from the contrary view expressed by Wilson, J., in Queen Empress v. Jacob (1), or from the reasons given in the report. The argument of Mr. Kirkpatrick does not contest the exercise of the discretion by the Judge as wrong; and, therefore, the particular question arising on s. 33 in the last mentioned case and before Oldfield, J., in Queen-Empress v. Burke (2) is not before us, at least not in the same form. It does not appear to have been urged at the trial that there was something very special in the case [757] which rendered personal presence necessary—Empress v. Bal Gangadhar (3). We must, therefore, hold, in the absence of objections, that the first part of s. 33 applied to the deposition. So does the explanation. We mean that there is nothing in the language used showing that a deposition like the present was meant to be excluded. No authority has been cited on the construction. Mr. Kirkpatrick's argument was that as special provision is made in chap. 40 of the Code of Criminal Procedure for commissions in criminal cases, that chapter must be treated as exhaustive. We think, however, that no sufficient reason exists for making that concession, or limiting the force of general words in s. 33. This view is not against the principle of s. 390 of the Code of Civil Procedure (Act XIV of 1882) and the use made of depositions taken in Zanzibar in Empress v. Dossajee (4). The same judicial discretion used as to depositions of witnesses examined by the committing Court or in another Court in a case between the same parties under s. 33 of the Indian Evidence Act, has to be used and was used about this commission evidence, and the cases show that the use of this discretion may be challenged in appeal. Thus safeguards exist against abuse.

In the argument on s. 33, the question was discussed whether the proviso had, as is necessary, been satisfied. As we are of opinion that much of the matter of the deposition was inadmissible for reasons we will give, it is perhaps not necessary for our decision to construe the proviso: and as my brother Fulton refrains, therefore, from giving an opinion on that point, I state my own views with some diffidence. The only point in doubt was, whether at the taking of the evidence by the Commissioner at Indore, the prisoner had "the opportunity to cross-examine," the right to cross-examine being expressly given by s. 505 of the Code of Criminal Procedure (Act X of 1882). As to the opportunity, the record shows that the prisoner had questions, headed "cross-examination" questions and "supplemental cross-examination" questions, put as counter interrogatories, and also got notice of the day appointed for taking the evidence. Neither he nor his pleader attended. There may be circumstances where, although a prisoner has the right, he has not the opportunity, [758] e.g., where the witness is at a great distance and the prisoner cannot go to the place and is too poor to employ a pleader or too unfamiliar with the ways of the place to get legal help there. When the want of opportunity is pleaded, the trying Court makes inquiry before admitting the evidence—Queen v. Mowjan (1); Reg. v. Day (2); Reg v. Williams (3).

At the Court's suggestion the Government Pleader called on the committing Magistrate for information; and that officer's statement, which is accepted here on behalf of the prisoner, shows that no desire to be present at Mr. Bedarkar's examination was expressed. No objection on the ground of want of opportunity was apparently made to the Magistrate, nor to the Sessions Judge, nor is it set forth in the appeals, nor after the invitation of this Court has this want been shown to exist. The ruling in Hitchins v. Hitchins (4) is under the circumstances an authority for declining to hold that the deposition is inadmissible on the ground suggested. To hold that the proviso in s. 33 of the Evidence Act requires proof of the presence before the Commissioner of the cross-examining party or his agent, would be to put a strain on the words and lead to inconvenience. If presence were necessary, the word would have been used as in 11 and 12 Vic., c. 42, s. 17. In 30 and 31 Vic., c. 35, a statute enabling the depositions of sick witnesses in criminal cases to be taken before trial, we find provision in s. 6 that on proof of death of the witness the deposition may be read on proof "that reasonable notice of the intention to take such statement has been served upon the person (whether prosecutor or accused) against whom it is proposed to be read in evidence, and that such person or his counsel or attorney had, or might have had, if he had chosen to be present, full opportunity of cross-examining the deceased person who made the same." In s. 7 follows a power to convey the prisoner in actual custody to the place where the statement is to be taken. The Indian law has made no provision of that sort: a prisoner under sentence cannot insist on being brought before the Court to support his appeal, as is ruled in this Court's Resolution in Chambers, in Re Antoine Jose, dated 4th September, 1869. If, then, we were to hold that presence or opportunity of presence is required to [759] satisfy the proviso, much difficulty would be found in getting evidence under the enabling s. 33 of the Evidence Act where a party is in custody.

These considerations favour the construction of the words "opportunity to cross examine" as including the method of cross-interrogatories which for many years was the chief mode of cross-examination in the Courts of Equity and the Admiralty Courts in England, and for which provision is made in the Common Law Procedure Acts. Where the whole examination was in writing—epistolary as Jeremy Bentham calls it—as distinguished from viva voce examination at the trial, the cross-examination was in writing too, and is so treated in the reports—Pole v. Rodgers(5); Williamson v. Page(6). The whole system is described in Gresley's Evidence in the Court of Equity, Part III, c. 5, s. 1: and its ineffectual character discussed as compared with the viva voce method, the opinions of the Chancery Commission and of eminent Judges being cited. Though the point was not taken by Mr. Kirkpatrick, we paused in order to consider whether counter-interrogatories, though described in these books as a form of cross-examination, were to be treated as such in interpreting our codes. With reference to my brother Fulton's doubt, I may recall the remark of Bentham—in his work on judicial evidence if my memory is right—that the method of cross-examination viva voce, that which the term first suggests and the only effective method, is peculiarly English, and the word has no exact equivalent in the civil law or any continental jurisprudence. It is of high importance that no security for truth, especially in criminal cases, should be weakened. On our rules of evidence, said Lord Abinger, the property, the liberty and the lives of men depend: and, therefore, while I give my opinion, I agree with Fulton, J., that this point ought to be more solemnly argued before it is decided solemnly.

In the present case the Court, having noticed that there was no evidence nor admission on the record to support the statement of the Sessions Judge that the accused had full opportunity of cross-examining, had to make its own inquiries. We are of opinion that this fact, if not admitted, must be proved, as was ruled [760] in Queen v. Mowjan(1), and as may be inferred from s. 136 of the Evidence Act. Commissions ought not to be issued without good and sufficient reasons: the discretion is judicial, as shown by the Indian cases and the practice of the Courts of England—In Re Boyse, Crofton v. Crofton (2); Cock v. Allcock & Co. (3). The exercise of the discretion in the present case by the Sessions Judge, is open to re-consideration in appeal as shown by Queen v. Mowjan (1) and Cleave v. Jones (4) and 1 Taylor on Evidence, s. 22.

This brings us to two objections taken by Mr. Kirkpatrick, though not taken at the trial, viz., that certain questions and certain answers in the evidence of Mr. Bedarkar are inadmissible, and that the general tenor of the statements is to prejudice the prisoner in the eyes of the jury. We are of opinion that some of the questions are unfairly framed and some of the answers stating mere opinions and suspicions are inadmissible as evidence—to which in a Court of Equity just objections would have been taken—to which under s. 507 of the Criminal Procedure Code (Act X of 1882) just exception might and ought to have been taken before the Magistrate, which also the Sessions Judge ought in his discretion under s. 298 of that Code to have prevented being read in the trial. To avoid imperilling the verdict, the admission of such evidence ought not to be pressed by the prosecution—Reg. v. Russell (5). See also Reg. v. Kasinath Dinkar (6). It is probable that the jury were much influenced by Mr. Bedarkar's opinions on the chief issue they had to try. The facts occurred when Mr. Bedarkar was a Judge and the prisoner was a clerk in his Court. Juries usually give weight to the opinion of Judges. They know that Judges are used to deal with conflicting evidence, to question, to sift, to weigh it impartially; to test it by the presumptions based on general experience which are now settled rules of law. I remember a reported case in England where the learned Judge says: "If two Judges came and swore to the fact I would believe it," as if that would be equal to a confirmatory oath in which it would be impossible to lie. So also the poet Browning, who is fond of these legal questions, makes "Sludge the Medium" or [761] spirit-rapper explain that his imposture gained the common belief as soon as it was made to appear that a Judge believed in it. The jury must have known that the issue in this case, whether the prisoner's conduct showed fraud or negligence, is one with which Judges are dealing so constantly as to acquire great experience. As the Sessions Judge drew their attention to Mr. Bedarkar's evidence in general terms, the jury probably were influenced by his opinions and suspicions that frauds had been committed in which the prisoner took part, the very issue on which they had to pronounce a verdict as judges of the facts, but on the evidence before them, not on the opinions of other persons.

The result of my consideration is to hold the evidence taken on commission to have complied with and to be admissible under s. 33 of the Indian Evidence Act. We are both clear, however, that part of it was inadmissible as irrelevant, and must be excluded as prejudicial under that Act and s. 507 of the Code of Criminal Procedure.

As this Court holds part to be inadmissible, it becomes necessary to decide whether this Court in dealing with the remaining evidence on the record should adhere to the practice based on former decisions such as Reg. v. Fattechand (1), Reg. v. Ramswami (2), Reg. v. Naorojee (3), Reg. v. Amrita (4), Imperatrix v. Pitamber (5), Imperatrix v. Pandharinath (6) as to the power of the Court where there has been misdirection or where inadmissible evidence has been allowed to go to the jury; or whether, as has been strongly pressed by Mr. Kirkpatrick, this Court should follow Beverley and Banerjee, JJ , in Wafadar Khan v. Queen-Empress (7) as to the application of some passages in the judgment of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council in Makin v. Attorney General of New South Wales (8). The Indian cases above cited being based on special Indian enactments, such as Act II of 1855 and the corresponding s. 167 of the present Evidence Act (I of 1872) and ss. 537 and 423, cl. (d) of the Criminal Procedure Code (Act X of 1882), propound a [762] different view of the law to what is settled in England by the Queen v. Gibson(9). We would remark also that in the recent case from New South Wales before the Privy Council no such special enactment as s. 167 of the Indian Evidence Act was referred to, either in the arguments or the decision.

The words "in any case" used in this section are wide, and long ago were interpreted to include criminal trials by jury. It is also obvious in interpreting a statute applying to the Mofussil of India, where trial by jury is the creation of statute—Reg v. Khanderao (10), Queen v. Hari Prasad (11), Queen-Empress v. Dada Ana (12), Queen v. Elahi Bax (13) (where Sir Barnes Peacock says that in the Mofussil, trial by jury is in its infancy), analogies from a system where the statutes deal with that institution as part of the common law must be warily used. In the recent Calcutta case (7) no authority is cited for the interpretation of the word "erroneous" in s. 423, cl. (d), at p. 976 of the report: and the procedure under s. 307 shows that the Legislature in certain circumstances throws on the Judges of the High Court the duty either of determining the facts which have been already before a jury, or of ordering a new trial. Sometimes it appears after error found that the case depends on conflicting testimony which ought to be weighed by a Court before whom the witnesses appear; and this may be a reason for ordering a new trial. It is difficult to lay down with precision rules to meet all cases—Queen v. Gagalu(14), but not so difficult in practice. In Imperatrix v. Rupya (1) the Court (Birdwood and Jardine, JJ.) followed Reg v. Ramswami(2), Reg v. Amrita (3) and the case of Elahi Bax(4), and a new trial by jury was directed. In Imperatrix v. Kushya (5), where the facts were hard to determine, a new trial by the Judge and assessors was directed by Jardine and Ranade, JJ. In Imperatrix v. Nanu (6), the same Judges ordered a new trial by jury as judges of the facts, Reg v. Fattechand (7) being [763] cited. In Government of Bombay v. Dhanji (8), where the jury had been misdirected that confessions must be corroborated, the same Judges ordered a new trial. It cannot be supposed that the Indian Legislature in its successive recastings of the Procedure Code was ignorant of the tenor of the decisions for the reasons given for them in such full judgments as that of Sir B. Peacock in Elahi Bax's case.

The present decided inclination of our opinion, as may be gathered from the above, is that the language used by the Judicial Committee in the case from New South Wales does not apply to the Codes of India. In Reg v. Ramswami (2) this Court ordered a new trial, as the evidence was of such a character as to render it difficult to pronounce upon its value without hearing the witnesses. It has been conceded for the prisoner that the present case differs: the evidence is one-sided and practically undisputed: the result depends on the inference from that evidence, whether only negligence or fraud is proved beyond reasonable doubt. As remarked already, such issues are constantly determined by the Judges here; and this one has been fully argued. We see no reason, then, for ordering a fresh trial.

We have then to apply the test adopted from Elahi Bax's case (4) by Warden and Sargent, JJ., in Reg v. Fattechand (7)—whether if the case had been tried by a Judge and assessors, the Court would set aside the verdict. We cannot say on the evidence that the verdict is wrong. In two of the cases the receipt of the money by the prisoner is admitted. In the third it may be inferred. The ledger entries show the real sums received; they differ from and were made later by the prisoner from the false entries he made in the day-book. It may beyond reasonable doubt be found as a fact that the prisoner had a hand in the fraudulent misappropriation of each of the three sums. With regard to the conviction passed under s. 218 by the Judge with the aid of assessors we see no sufficient reason to differ from his conclusions. For the above reasons the Court confirms the convictions and sentences, and dismisses this appeal.

Appeal dismissed.

Before the Honourable Mr. Farran, Chief Justice, and Mr. Justice Starling.

CALLIANJI HARJIVAN (Original Plaintiff), Appellant v. NARSI TRICUM (Original Defendant), *Respondent. [29th July, 1895.]

Specific performance—Injunction—Negative agreement—Discretion of Court—Agreement not to work for a rival tradesman—Specific Relief Act (I of 1877), ss. 22, 56 and 57—Damages.

The plaintiff was a milliner carrying on business in Bombay, and the defendant was in his employment up to the year 1890. In that year he left the plaintiff's service and the plaintiff alleged that at the time he left it he was indebted to the plaintiff for moneys not accounted for and also in respect of loans made to him. The plaintiff instituted criminal proceedings in the Police Court against the defendant for criminal breach of trust, and procured a warrant for his arrest. The defendant surrendered, and at the time of the agreement hereafter mentioned, the proceedings in this matter were going on. The defendant was out on bail, and was then in the service of a rival milliner named Bhimji Jivan. On the 1st February, 1893, an agreement in writing was made between the plaintiff and the defendant whereby the defendant agreed as follows:—(1) to pay the plaintiff Rs. 1,950 in full settlement of the plaintiff's claim; (2) to enter the plaintiff's service as cutter and to serve him for ten years from the date of agreement; (3) to serve plaintiff honestly; (4) in case plaintiff was obliged to dismiss him for some "fault," then until the expiration of the said period of ten years the defendant should not carry on the business of a cutter or tailor, either directly or indirectly, on his own account or as partner or servant of another, and in case he should do so, the plaintiff should be at liberty to stop him.

On the 15th February, 1893, the charge of criminal breach of trust against the defendant was dismissed, the plaintiff offering no evidence in support of it. The plaintiff subsequently called on the defendant to enter his employment in accordance with the agreement, but the defendant refused, and remained in the service of Bhimji Jivan. The plaintiff, therefore, filed this suit praying for an injunction restraining the defendant from carrying on business as a cutter or tailor for ten years from the date of the agreement. The lower Court dismissed the suit.

Held, on appeal, that the lower Court was right in refusing either to grant specific performance of the agreement or an injunction against the defendant, but that inasmuch as it had refused an injunction on the ground that pecuniary compensation was the plaintiff's proper remedy, it ought not to have dismissed the suit, but ought either itself to have awarded damages or to have ordered an inquiry as to damages. The plaintiff being held to be entitled to a remedy, the appropriate remedy should be awarded.

The appellate Court accordingly passed a decree against the defendant and awarded the plaintiff Rs. 10 as damages, with costs of the appeal.

[765] SUIT for an injunction (1).

The plaintiff carried on business in Bombay as a milliner under the name of Callian Moti & Co. The defendant had been formerly a cutter in the plaintiff's service, but left the plaintiff's employment in 1890. The plaint stated that the defendant was then largely indebted to the plaintiff in respect of moneys not accounted for, and also in respect of loans made by the plaintiff to him.

The plaint further stated that after the defendant had left the plaintiff's employment the plaintiff instituted criminal proceedings against him in the Police Court on a charge of criminal breach of trust, and that in February, 1893, the defendant, who had in the meantime entered the service of one Bhimji Jivan, a milliner in Bombay, came to the plaintiff and requested him to come to a settlement in regard to the claims made against him, and also begged that the plaintiff would take him again into his employment. The plaintiff ultimately agreed to this, and an agreement, dated 1st February, 1893, was made between them which was reduced to writing. It contained the following terms :—

(1) The defendant was to pay the plaintiff Rs. 1,950 within eight days in full settlement of all the claims which the plaintiff had against him.

(2) The defendant was to enter into the plaintiff's service as a cutter and tailor, and to serve as such for ten years from the date of the agreement, receiving Rs. 37 per month as remuneration.

(3) The defendant was to serve the plaintiff honestly and to be obedient to the plaintiff's order.

(4) Except for some "fault" of the defendant the plaintiff was not to dismiss him within the said period of ten years, and if "by reason of a fault or ungratefulness" the plaintiff should be obliged to dismiss the defendant, "then until the aforesaid fixed period shall expire, the defendant is not to do or carry on in Bombay the work or business of a cutter or a tailor or the sewing business, either directly or indirectly, either on his own account or as a partner or servant of somebody else, and in case [766] he shall carry on the same, then the party of the second part, (i.e. the plaintiff) shall be at liberty to stop him."

(5) The defendant bound himself to get a similar agreement executed by his brother, Hari Tricum, and the plaintiff was to make a similar agreement and to pay him Rs. 31 per mensem.

On the 15th February, 1893, the charge of criminal breach of trust, which, as stated above, had been brought by the plaintiff against the defendant, was dismissed by the Magistrate, the plaintiff offering no evidence in support of it.

The plaint further stated that after the execution of the above agreement the plaintiff at the defendant's request consented to the latter remaining for a limited time in the service of Bhimji Jivan for the convenience of all the parties, but that subsequently the plaintiff had called upon the defendant to enter into his employment in accordance with the said agreement, but the defendant refused to do so and remained in the service of the said Bhimji Jivan. The said Bhimji Jivan was a rival in the business of the plaintiff.

The last paragraph of the plaint was as follows :—

"9. The plaintiff says that the said agreement comprises a negative agreement by the defendant not to work as a cutter or tailor on his own account or to serve any other milliner in either of these capacities; and the plaintiff brings this suit for an injunction ordering the defendant to perform the said negative agreement, the plaintiff having in no respect failed to perform the said agreement on his part."

The plaintiff prayed that the defendant should be restrained by injunction from carrying on business as a cutter or tailor on his own account, or as a servant or partner of any person other than the plaintiff, for a period of ten years from the date of the above agreement.

In his written statement the defendant (inter alia) stated that he had been obliged to leave the plaintiff's service in consequence of the false prosecution which the plaintiff instituted against him in order to bring pressure upon him and thus prevent his entering into the service of a rival establishment, and that the plaintiff having issued a warrant against him compelled him by undue influence to enter into the above agreement. He pleaded that the agreement was not, therefore, binding upon him, and that the plaintiff was not entitled to the injunction prayed for.

[767] At the hearing the following issues were raised :—

(1) Whether the agreement was to any and what extent void?

(2) Whether the plaintiff was entitled to the injunction prayed for?

Candy, J., held (1) that the parties to the agreement were not on equal terms, and in the exercise of the discretion given to him by s. 22 of the Specific Relief Act (I of 1872) he refused the injunction and dismissed the suit.

The plaintiff appealed.

Macpherson (Acting Advocate General) and Inverarity, for the appellant.

The respondent did not appear.

Macpherson.—The Court below found the facts in our favour, but did not give us an injunction or even damages. There was an implied agreement that the defendant should not enter other employment. He has joined a rival trader, and that is damaging to the plaintiff. Counsel referred to s. 57 of the Specific Relief Act (I of 1877); Madras Railway Company v. Thomas Rust (2).

JUDGMENT.

FARRAN, C. J.—In this case the plaintiff sued for an injunction to restrain the defendant from carrying on the business of a tailor or cutter for the period of ten years from the 1st February, 1893, on which day an agreement was made between them which the plaintiff in this suit sought to enforce. By that agreement the defendant had contracted to enter into the plaintiff's employment and to serve him for ten years at a remuneration of Rs. 37 per month.

The Judge of the lower Court rightly held that although that contract could not be directly enforced against the defendant so as to compel him to work for the plaintiff, yet that the Court had power under s. 54 of the Specific Relief Act (I of 1877) indirectly to enforce it, by restraining the defendant from working for any other person than the plaintiff during the period mentioned in the agreement. Illustration (c) to s. 57 leaves no doubt as to the power of the Court to do this. The Judge, [768] however, in his discretion has decided not to grant this injunction, and we have now to enquire whether that discretion was properly exercised.

In considering this question we must keep in mind that to grant an injunction in a case like the present amounts in substance, although not in form, to a decree for specific performance. It is obvious that to a man in the defendant's position there would be no alternative—in the event of his being prevented by order of the Court from taking other employment—than to enter the plaintiff's service, and to remain in it as long as the injunction remained in force. It would be practically impossible for him now to learn another trade or to find other employment. It is clear, therefore, that the same considerations which would prevent us from giving the plaintiff a decree for specific performance of the contract ought to prevent us from granting such an injunction.

ORIGINAL CIVIL.

19 B. 764.

The circumstances which we are required to take into consideration in granting specific performance are indicated in s. 22 of the Specific Relief Act, and it, therefore, becomes necessary to state the facts of this case in order to see whether they bring it within that section.

The defendant was formerly in the plaintiff's service. He had left it, and it was alleged that when he left it the plaintiff had large claims against him in respect of moneys for which he had not accounted. The plaintiff instituted criminal proceedings in the Police Court against him, and those proceedings were pending in January, 1893. The defendant, however, was out on bail and had obtained employment in another milliner's shop in Bombay carried on by one Bhimji Jivan, in which service he has remained ever since.

This was the position of the parties when the negotiations between them began in January, 1893. It appears that in the course of these negotiations the defendant was told that the Police Court proceedings against him would be abandoned. It is said, however, that the abandonment of these proceedings was quite independent of the agreement with the defendant, who indeed himself says that Mr. Bhaishankar, the plaintiff's solicitor, told [769] him that in any case the criminal case was to be withdrawn. The case was postponed for a fortnight and ultimately, viz., on the 15th February 1893, it was dismissed.

The defendant, as I have stated, was then in the service of Bhimji Jivan. Subsequently the plaintiff called upon him to leave it and to enter his employment, as he had undertaken to do by the agreement of the 1st February, 1893, and the defendant refused.

Now we think it is impossible to believe that in entering into this agreement with the plaintiff the defendant was not influenced by the idea that by doing so he was getting rid of the criminal charge against him. It is surely much more likely that this was his object than that he should have been led to do so by a desire to re-enter the plaintiff's service. The case was pending against him and might be proceeded with, and it was no doubt a matter of great importance to him that it should be withdrawn. If that was so, it is clear that the parties at the time of making the agreement cannot be said to have been on equal terms. The defendant was at a disadvantage. He was to some extent in the power of the plaintiff, and he was apparently without any legal advice. Thus situated, and without taking any time for consideration, he signed the agreement. If we look at the terms of the agreement, we find it to be one which we think it is unlikely that a man would sign unless under some pressure of circumstances, for by it the defendant bound himself to serve the plaintiff for a long period of time, and during all that time his remuneration was to remain the same.

Having regard to these circumstances, we think that the parties to the agreement of the 1st February were not on equal terms, and that the Judge of the lower Court was right in refusing either to grant specific performance of the agreement or an injunction against the defendant.

The lower Court was also of opinion that pecuniary compensation was sufficient to satisfy the plaintiff's claim against the defendant. Speaking for myself, I question whether compensation can be regarded as an equivalent for the defendant's agreement to work for him for ten years. There is always a [770] difficulty in proving damages with any accuracy in such a case. It is, indeed, almost impossible, and I confess that this

JULY 29.

ORIGINAL CIVIL.

19 B. 764.

fact has caused me to feel much doubt as to whether an injunction is not the proper remedy for the plaintiff, but on the whole I think that the considerations which I have mentioned should prevail.

The lower Court, however, while holding in its discretion that pecuniary compensation was the plaintiff's remedy, has dismissed his suit with costs. We think it ought either itself to have awarded damages to the plaintiff, or to have ordered an inquiry as to damages. The reason why an injunction was not given was because the Court considered damages to be the proper remedy. That being so, damages ought to have been awarded. In England, no doubt, a bill in equity would have been dismissed, but then the plaintiff would have his suit at law for damages. Here, however, a new suit would not lie, and consequently when the plaintiff is held entitled to a remedy, the appropriate remedy should be awarded.

An inquiry as to damages would be costly, and in any case a decree for damages against the defendant would not be of much value. We think a decree for Rs. 10 as nominal damages will be the proper decree in this case and without costs.

As to the costs of the appeal, we must award them to the plaintiff. It is a hard case, but he was no doubt entitled to appeal, and he has obtained a decree.

Order accordingly.

Attorneys for appellant.—Messrs. Bhaishankar and Kanga.

Will—Construction—Absolute gift—Gift over to widow or issue of donee—Life-interest—Costs.

Anna Maria Bocarro, a Portuguese inhabitant of Bombay, died in April, 1884, leaving three sons, Michael, Silveiro and Joaquim (defendant No. 3) and two daughters, Rose and Caroline. By her will she directed that her daughter Rose should enjoy [771] the rents and profits of certain immoveable property for her life, and that after her death the said property should be sold, and the sale proceeds (after payment of two legacies thereout) be divided equally between her two sons Silveiro and Joaquim (defendant No. 3). The seventh clause of the will was as follows:—

7. "I further direct that the amount which may fall to the share of my son Joaquim Amador Bocarro under (c) of paragraph 6 above should be held in trust by my executors hereinafter named and converted by them into Government securities; the interest accruing therefrom should be paid for the maintenance of my said son Joaquim Amador Bocarro. Should my said son Joaquim Amador Bocarro reform himself, and take off all his evil tendencies, and lead a steady, quiet and orderly life, or should he on account of illness or other reasonable cause be in urgent need of pecuniary assistance, I leave it to the discretion of my executors either to make

Held, on appeal, confirming the decree of the lower Court, that under the above clause of the will there was a clear gift to the wife or issue of Joaquim, but that Joaquim was to have the power of designating how they were to take. To that extent the absolute gift to Joaquim was qualified. Should the gift over fail, the absolute gift to Joaquim would remain unimpaired.

APPEAL from Candy, J.(1)

One Anna Maria Bocarro, a Portuguese inhabitant of Bombay, died on the 19th April, 1884, leaving three sons (Michael, Silveiro Joseph, and the third defendant Joaquim) and two daughters Rose Maria and Caroline.

Anna Maria Bocarro at the time of her death possessed both moveable and immoveable property. She left a will, dated 12th March, 1884, and a codicil of the same date, and the first and the second defendants were the executors. With reference to certain immoveable property belonging to the testatrix the will contained the following directions :—

"4. If my daughter Rose Maria Bocarro should survive me, I direct that so long as she lives, my large house No. 57 and such of my smaller buildings Nos. 55, 56 and 71 as may not be sold should be rented, and the rents which may be received therefrom should, after deducting such sums as may be necessary for the payment of all kinds of tax on property and for whitewashing and repairing the said houses, be applied for the maintenance of my aforesaid daughter Rose Maria Bocarro."

[772] "5. But should my said daughter Rose Maria Bocarro predecease me, or should she die after me, then I direct that my executors herein named should sell within a reasonable time, either privately or by public auction, my large house No. 57 and such of my smaller houses Nos. 55, 56 and 71 which may not be sold, preference being given to any of my sons and heirs hereafter named who may desire to purchase any or all of the said houses."

"6. After the houses, referred to in the preceding paragraph 5, are sold, I direct that out of the proceeds of the sale (a) a sum of Rs. 500 (five-hundred) should be made over by my executors to my daughter-in-law Anna Joaquina Bocarro, wife of my eldest son Michael Bocarro, to be assigned by her in such proportion and in such manner as she may deem proper for the benefit of her four daughters, namely, Anna L. Bocarro, Cecillia Bocarro, Rosaline Bocarro and Catherine Bocarro; (b) that a sum of Rs. 1,000 (one-thousand) should be given to my daughter Caroline Britto, wife of Julius Lucas Britto, for her own and absolute use; (c) and that the remainder should be divided among my two sons, Joaquim Amador Bocarro and Silveiro Joseph Bocarro, in equal proportions."

"7. I further direct that the amount which may fall to the share of my son Joaquim Amador Bocarro under (c) of paragraph 6 above, should be held in trust by my executors hereinafter named and converted by them into Government securities; the interest accruing therefrom should be paid for the maintenance of my said son Joaquim Amador Bocarro. Should my said son Joaquim Amador Bocarro die leaving a widow or issue, his share shall be given to such widow or issue according as he may devise and bequeath. Should my said son Joaquim Amador Boccaro reform himself, and shake off all his evil tendencies, and lead a steady, quiet and orderly life, or should he on account of illness or other reasonable cause be in urgent need of pecuniary assistance, I leave it to the discretion of my executors either to make over to my said son Joaquim Amador Bocarro for his absolute use the whole of the amount which he may be entitled to under (c) of paragraph sixth above, or such part or parts thereof as to my executors may appear proper."

The further facts of the case are fully stated in the report of the trial in the lower Court (supra p. 223). The points argued in appeal were as to the construction of the above will. Counsel for the appellants contended that Joaquim was absolutely entitled to a moiety of the sale-proceeds of the houses mentioned in the will. Counsel for the executors submitted that under the seventh clause of the will, Joaquim's wife (if she survived him) and his children (if any) took an interest in his share.

JUDGMENT.

FARRAN, C.J.—The main difficulty which I have felt in dealing with the will which we have to construe upon this appeal is to determine whether the intermediate clause in paragraph 7 creates a power in Joaquim to appoint his half-share to his widow or issue or whether the widow and issue are the direct and independent objects of the bounty of the testatrix. There can, I think, be no doubt but that the directions given in the concluding words of paragraph 6 to divide the residue of the sale-proceeds of the house between Joaquim and Silveiro would amount to an absolute gift of the half-share of the residue to Joaquim, unless there is contained in the seventh paragraph a clear gift over, upon his death, of his half-share to his widow or issue. The rest of the seventh paragraph which prescribes the mode in which he is to enjoy his half-share, seems to me to be quite insufficient to qualify the preceding absolute estate. See, as to restrictions on enjoyment, Wharton v. Maserman (11).

The words to which I have alluded are these: "Should my said son Joaquim Amador Bocarro die, leaving a widow or issue, his share shall be given to such widow or issue according as he may devise or bequeath." The general rule of construction is that where you find a gift in clear and express terms, you are not to permit subsequent and less distinct words to throw a doubt upon the former clear expressions. This is the law as laid down by Vice-Chancellor Wood in Martin v. Martin (7) and in the passage cited from Jarman on Wills, p. 443. That rule of construction and [774] the position of the clause with which I am dealing in the middle of the paragraph which is conversant with the mode in which the fund is to be enjoyed, caused me to doubt whether the construction put upon it by the Advocate General was not the correct one. Neither of these considerations ought, however, to have weight if the clause properly construed amounts to a clear executory gift over on the death of Joaquim. In that case, the later clause will control the earlier one. Upon consideration I have come to the conclusion that the clause amounts to a clear gift in favour of the wife or issue of Joaquim, but that he is to have the power of designating how they are to take.

Mr. Lewin in his work on Trusts thus states the law: "If a fund be limited upon trust for the children of A as B shall appoint, the construction is that the children of A take a vested interest by the gift subject to be divested by the exercise of the power. Therefore, on failure of the power the children who were the objects of the power become absolutely entitled just as if the discretion had not been annexed." Most of the cases upon the subject are referred to in Lambert v. Thwaites (1). If a mere power to appoint is conferred, no trust arises—Lewin p. 135; Brook v. Brook (2)—unless under particular circumstances—Butler v. Gray (3).

Here there is an express gift of the share of Joaquim to his widow or issue. It is unnecessary to determine now how they would take in default of appointment. Probably the gift to the issue would be held substitutionary. I consider, therefore, that there is a gift over to the widow or issue of Joaquim, and that to that extent the absolute gift to Joaquim is qualified. Should the gift over fail, the absolute gift to Joaquim would remain unimpaired—Succession Act (X of 1865), s. 126. I have not referred in my judgment to the several cases mentioned in the argument, though I have read them. Their result is embodied in that section. This was substantially the result at which the Judge of the Division Court arrived, and I am of opinion, therefore, that the appeal must be disallowed.

[775] As to costs the decree will be varied. The executors' costs taxed as between attorney and client to be paid out of estate as well as the costs of defendants Nos. 4 to 12. Plaintiffs and defendant No. 3 to bear their own costs respectively. Plaintiffs to be at liberty to add their costs to their mortgage security. In other respects the decree of the lower Court is affirmed with costs other than the costs of defendants Nos. 4 to 12, whose costs may be added to their costs in the Court below.

MUNCHERJI BOMANJI PANTHAKI (Original Defendant), Appellant v. DORABJI JEHANGIR RANDIVA (Original Plaintiff), *Respondent.

[16th August, 1895.]

Limitation—Limitation Act (XV of 1877), sch. II., art. 60—Deposit—Loan.

The plaintiff claimed to recover from the defendant, who was his grandfather, the sum of Rs. 4,917, which was the amount standing to his credit in an account in the defendant's books. In November, 1869, the plaintiff being then one year old, his mother (the defendant's daughter) paid over to the defendant the sum of Rs. 650, and at her request the money was credited in the books of the defendant's firm in the name of her son the plaintiff. A further sum was similarly paid over by her in December, 1871, and at her request was credited to the same account. The plaintiff alleged, and the Court found, that these sums were presents which had been made to him on his birthday and other auspicious occasions. The said sums were carried over from year to year in the firm's books, the interest being added each year, but no payment had ever been made to the plaintiff, or on his behalf, out of the sum so standing to his credit. Compound interest had been allowed in the account, and on the 9th November, 1893, the amount standing to the credit of the plaintiff was Rs. 4,917.

The plaintiff contended that the money had been paid to, and accepted by, the defendant as a deposit to be held in trust for him. The defendant alleged that the money in question had been lent to him by the plaintiff's mother, and contended that the plaintiff's claim was barred by limitation.

Held, that the defendant had held the money not as a loan but as a deposit; that art. 60 of the sch. II of the Limitation Act (XV of 1877) applied, and that the plaintiff's claim was not barred.

[776] APPEAL from Candy, J. (1).

The plaintiff was the grandson of the defendant. He alleged that at his birth, and subsequently on ceremonial occasions, presents of money had been made to him which were recovered by his mother Virbaiji (the defendant's daughter) and were deposited by her on his behalf with the defendant as a deposit and in trust for the plaintiff, opening an account in the plaintiff's name in the books of his firm. The said moneys were credited to the said account and were credited every year and its balance carried forward. The plaintiff now sued to recover the amount standing to the credit of this account.

The defendant contended that the moneys in question were given to him by the plaintiff's mother Virbaiji as a loan and not as a deposit, and he pleaded limitation.

The other facts of the case will be found stated supra, p. 352.

Candy, J., held that the moneys received by the defendant was received and held by him as a deposit; that art. 60 of sch. II of the Limitation Act (XV of 1877) applied; and that the suit was not barred, as time ran only from the date of demand.

He accordingly passed a decree for the plaintiff.

The defendant appealed.

JUDGMENT.

FARRAN, C. J.—This case raises the question as to the distinction between a loan and a deposit which has frequently come before this Court, and which is generally difficult to decide. Ordinarily money paid into a banking account is regarded as a loan upon the authority of Foley v. Hill(1). That is a well-known rule. But there are circumstances here which distinguish the payments which were made to the defendant from payments made of money into a bank. It is pretty clear that the sum of Rs. 650, which was the foundation of the account between the defendant and Virbaiji, was really paid to him by her as belonging to her son. The child [777] was only a year old, and it is difficult to believe that the defendant did not know that this money paid over to him in the child's name was the child's property and paid over to him (the defendant) as a deposit. When a mother pays her son's money into his grandfather's firm, as was done in this case, the intention must be that it is to be kept as a deposit for her son and to be ultimately given to him when he demands it. unless indeed in the meantime it has already been applied in some way or other for his use and profit.

Then we find that the amount thus paid in was regularly carried forward in the firm's books from year to year with compound interest. That I think is also a significant fact. The son when he attained full age made no demand for payment, nor did his grandfather offer to repay it, but the account still continued to run, and the interest was added from year to year. No statement of account was rendered either to Virbaiji or to her son. All these circumstances, I think, show that this money was not treated as a loan by Virbaiji to the defendant, but as a deposit for and on account of her son. Both the sums of money stand in the same position, and the same rule applies to both. We must hold that both were deposits made with the defendant; and that the case consequently comes within art. 60 of the Limitation Act. The appeal must be dismissed.

TYABJI, J.—I am of the same opinion. There are several circumstances which show that this was not the case of an ordinary loan, but was a transaction of a fiduciary character.

The first point is that the money belonged to the son and was paid to the defendant by Virbaiji in the son's name. That shows, I think, it was for his benefit. If it was intended as a loan, she would have paid it to the defendant in her own name.

Next, it is significant that the interest runs at 5 per cent. and not at 9 per cent. which is the usual mercantile rate. The probability is that, if this transaction was intended as a loan, the usual rate would have been charged.

Then, lastly, we have the fact that the defendant was not a banker at all. He was a shopkeeper and was not in the habit of borrowing. It is well known that in this country it is a common [778] thing for the younger members of a family to deposit money belonging to them with the older members. That, I think, was really what took place in the present case. The money remained with the defendant as a deposit, and no part of it has since been withdrawn from him. On all these grounds, I am of opinion that we should hold this money to be a 'deposit.' If the circumstances here do not make it a deposit within the meaning of the word as used in the Limitation Act, it is difficult to understand what a deposit can be.

INSOLVENT JURISDICTION.

Before Mr. Justice Parsons and Mr. Justice Starling.

IN THE MATTER OF HORMARJI ARDESHIR HORMARJI, AN INSOLVENT. [30th August, 1895.]

Insolvency—Indian Insolvent Act (Stat. 11 and 12 Vic , c. 21), s. 86—Entering up judgment against insolvent—Final discharge—Discretion.

In August, 1892, the insolvent was found guilty of various offences under ss. 50 and 51 of the Indian Insolvent Act (11 and 12 Vic., c. 21) and was sentenced to imprisonment for three months, his discharge being also postponed for a further period of twelve months. In December, 1894, on his application for final discharge under s. 60 of the Act, the Official Assignee applied that before the order of discharge was made, judgment should be entered up against him under s. 86 for the amount of his debts. The Commissioner of the Insolvent Court in the exercise of the discretion given to him by the Act ordered judgment to be entered up accordingly. On appeal by the insolvent.

Held, reversing the order, that under the circumstances of the case the discretion of the Commissioner had been improperly exercised, and that the order to enter up judgment against the insolvent should be discharged.

[R., 28 M. 168.]

APPEAL from an order made by Farran, J. (1).

The insolvent had filed his petition on the 1st May, 1891. In August, 1892, at the hearing of his application for discharge under s. 47 of the Insolvent Act (Stat. 11 and 12 Vic., c. 21) [779] he was found guilty of reckless speculation and other offences and was sentenced to a term of imprisonment under ss. 50 and 51 of the Act. The case is reported at I.L.R., 17 Bom. 313.

In December, 1894, the insolvent applied for his discharge under s. 60 of the Indian Insolvent Act (Stat. 11 and 12 Vic., c. 21). On that occasion the Official Assignee intervened, and applied under s. 86 of the Act to enter up judgment against the insolvent for the amount of his debts, which were over 30 lakhs. The Court made the order, and directed that judgment should be sustained up. From that order the insolvent now appealed, on the ground that the discretion given to the Court by s. 86 had not been properly exercised, and that the insolvent had been already sufficiently punished by imprisonment.

The debts and liabilities proved against the insolvent amounted to Rs. 46,66,205, and his total assets realised Rs. 11,92,666, out of which dividends amounting to 23 per cent. had been declared.

JUDGMENT.

STARLING, J.—The appellant in this case having applied for his personal discharge was opposed by the respondents, and the Commissioner after hearing all the evidence in the case found that he had concealed a sum of Rs. 17,000 and also had been guilty of reckless trading. For the first offence, the Commissioner sentenced the appellant to three months' imprisonment on the criminal side of the jail, and for the second, ordered that he should [780] not get his personal discharge until he had been in jail on the civil side for the term of six months at the suit of each of the two opposing creditors. The appellant served his period of three months, and was in jail for eight months at the suit of his creditors, when he was released on medical certificate.

On the 6th December, 1893, he obtained a rule nisi for his discharge in the nature of a certificate which was returnable in twelve months. That rule came on for hearing on the 5th December, 1894, when Mr. Macpherson on behalf of the opposing creditors argued that the proper notices to creditors in England had not been given, but the Commissioner overruled that contention and the appellant obtained his discharge in the nature of a certificate. At the same time, on the motion of Mr. Macpherson, the Court made an order that judgment should be entered up against the insolvent under s. 86 of the Insolvent Act, for the full amount of the schedule debts due.

The point argued in appeal was whether the Commissioner had properly exercised his discretion in passing the above order. The Acting Advocate-General contended that judgment ought to be entered up almost as a matter of course, and relied upon the course of procedure under the old Insolvent Acts in England. Under Stat. 7 Geo. IV, c. 57, a person must have been in prison in execution of some process for the payment of money. He could then petition the Court for the Relief of Insolvents, executing at the same time an assignment to the provisional assignee of all the property he was then possessed of. Then came the hearing, after which the petitioner had to execute a warrant of attorney authorizing judgment to be entered up against him, and on that he could be adjudicated an insolvent and be released from jail, freed from all liability in his person for his debts, but his property was never discharged from liability. It is true that s. 57 of the Act just referred to is almost identical with s. 86 of the Indian Insolvency Act, but it must be borne in mind that in England while a trader could get a final discharge from his debts, a non-trader who had become involved in debt could never get one, and the Indian Insolvent Act provides that both traders and non-traders may get a discharge in the nature of a certificate. therefore, that the provisions of, and the practice under, the English Insolvency Act which only culminated in a discharge from prison, are no certain guide to the Court in this matter. In the English Bankruptcy Acts there was no provision for entering up judgment until that of 1883 was passed, in which it appeared as s. 28, sub-s. 6.

In making the order in the present case, the learned Commissioner did so on the ground that the insolvency was brought about by reckless trading. That question had been gone into on the previous hearing, and the insolvent's personal discharge had been deferred for twelve months on account of it. On his application for his final discharge the opposing creditors could have again opposed him on the same ground, and the Court could have suspended his getting the advantage of a further indulgence if it had thought that he was not entitled to get a full discharge at once. Entering up judgment is, however, quite a different matter. Its effect is to send a man into the world with a certificate that he is entirely free from all the liabilities he had incurred up to the date of the petition, whether actually included in the schedule or not, provided they could have been proved, but at the same time there is a judgment entered up against him which is probably unknown to the world, by which all that he makes from time to time over and above what is necessary for the maintenance of himself and family and the carrying on of his business is liable to be swept away, possibly to his utter ruin. Suppose a man who, after starting afresh, has been very successful, and has put by some 20,000 rupees. The Court possibly might order that to be handed over to the Official Assignee on his application for execution of the judgment already entered up. A year or two afterwards bad times come, prices go down, and the man is in straits. If he had the Rs. 20,000 by him he might weather the storm, but not having it, he has to succumb.

The question as to the circumstances under which judgment should be entered up against a bankrupt or insolvent have been discussed in England under the Act of 1883, and a general rule of practice has been established there which should, we think, [782] be followed by the Court here. In the case of Re Bullen (1) Lindlay, L. J., at p. 247 says: "There is no evidence at all that the man will ever have any after-acquired property, and under those circumstances I think prima facie one ought not to tie up a man by such adjustment as that under s. 28, sub-s. 6. It would give rise to great difficulties and possibly litigation." This case was cited to the Court in Re Shackleton (2) and Cave, J., in delivering judgment, said: "Unless it finds a man in possession of income, derived by his earnings or otherwise, which is more than sufficient to keep his family in the enjoyment of the ordinary necessaries of life according to their station, or unless he is likely to succeed to considerable property, it is not a wise thing to grant the order subject to conditions as to after-acquired property. The Court must see that they do not by prescribing conditions of that kind, do away with a great motive in men to exert themselves in their business. If you impose a burden that prevents a man from looking forward to better his position, he will not make an effort to do so." Again in Re Goud (3) Cave, J., says, after referring to the case of Re Bullen: "Now I have in cases before me acted upon that principle, and I expressed in a recent case of Re Jones (4) which went up to the Court of Appeal and was there affirmed, and I think we must sitting here take it as now being established that, "prima facie" you ought not to make an order of this kind upon a debtor unless you show that he has got some expectation of coming into property in the future which, but for an order of this kind, he would be able to enjoy without paying his debt."

In the present case there was no suggestion that the appellant was likely to come into any property in the future. On the contrary the Official Assignee in his affidavit of the 18th December, 1883, said that there is no probability of anything more being realized, and the whole argument in the Insolvent Court proceeded upon his infraction of insolvency law before he had filed his petition: consequently we are of opinion that the order [783] to enter up judgment ought not to have been made, and must now be discharged except as to costs, but as the case was argued in the Insolvent Court on different grounds from what it has been here, each party will bear their own costs.

Order discharged.

APPEAL from Farran, J.

The plaintiff (respondent) was the husband of one Dumu, who died in October, 1891, leaving him by her will all her moveable and immoveable property. He alleged that she was entitled to a house which she inherited from her maternal grandfather (Dhurma) and to two-thirds of a house and certain moveable property left by her father (Dama Budia), who died in December, 1890.

The defendant Dagree was the widow of Dama Budia and the stepmother of Dumu. She had taken possession of all the property in question, and claimed, by the custom of the community, to have a life-interest in it.

The plaintiff contended that the property had devolved upon his wife Dumu under the rules of inheritance laid down in the Indian Succession

Act (X of 1865), by which the community was governed, and he, therefore, brought this suit to recover it.

[784] The parties were Christians and belonged to the Koli caste of fishermen in Bombay, who were all originally Hindus, but some of whom had become Christians (1). The defendant alleged that the community to which she and the plaintiff belonged had retained the Hindu usage of inheritance, and that this usage had always been observed by its members.

At the hearing the following issue (inter alia) was raised by the defendant, viz., whether the succession to the estate of Dhurma and Dama Budia respectively is not governed by the Hindu law, and not Act X of 1865, having regard to the custom of the caste to which they both belonged, or otherwise?"

Thereupon counsel for the plaintiff raised the further issue "whether the alleged custom is one which can be proved, having regard to Act X of 1865." He contended that no evidence of the alleged custom could be admitted, and cited Ponnusami Nadan v. Dorasami Ayyan (2) and Tellis v. Saldanha (3).

The two sections of the Succession Act (X of 1865) upon which the plaintiff relied, were s. 2 and s. 331 (4). It was contended that under these sections the Act and the rules of inheritance prescribed by it were universally applicable in India except to such persons as were exempt by s. 331; that the word "Hindu" in that section meant a person professing the Hindu religion; that as the parties did not belong to that class, but were Christians, they were not exempt under that section, and that, therefore, the property in question had devolved according to the rules laid down by the Act.

FARRAN, J., on the above authorities held that the Succession Act (X of 1865) applied to the parties, and that evidence in [785] proof of a custom of inheritance inconsistent with the provisions of that Act was inadmissible. He, therefore, passed a decree for the plaintiff.

The defendant appealed on the grounds (inter alia), (1) that the Court ought to have allowed her to call evidence to prove the customs of the Christian Koli community of Bombay (to which both the parties belonged) with regard to succession, and (2) that the Court was wrong in holding that the said community was governed, with regard to intestacy and succession, by the Indian Succession Act (X of 1865), s. 331.

Macpherson (Acting Advocate-General) and Kirkpatrick, for the appellant.—The defendant's community although it has become Christian has retained the Hindu usage of inheritance. We submit that the defendant ought to be allowed to give evidence of this, and that the community is not necessarily bound by the rules of inheritance prescribed by the Succession Act X of 1865. We admit that the only decisions upon the point raised in this case are against us. But they are all cases decided by the Madras High Court and are not binding here. We contend that they are wrong.

(2) 2 M. 209. (3) 10 M. 69.

(4) Section 2 of the Succession Act.—Except as provided by this Act or by any other law for the time being in force, the rules herein contained shall constitute the law of British India applicable to all cases of intestate or testamentary succession.

Section 331 of the Succession Act.—The provisions of this Act shall not apply to intestate or testamentary succession to the property of any Hindu, Mahomedan or Buddhist; nor shall they apply to any will made, or any intestacy occurring, before the 1st day of January 1866.

The effect of them is to make the Indian Succession Act a penal law. This could not have been intended by the Legislature. To substitute the English law of inheritance, as prescribed by that Act, for the Hindu law, would result in breaking up the social system of the Hindus. To enforce such a change by legislation as a consequence of adopting a particular form of religious faith, is to inflict a penalty upon a mere opinion, and amounts to religious persecution. The Legislature in 1865 could not have intended this. The Madras Courts have misconstrued s. 331. They have held that the words "Mahomedan" and "Buddhist" are used in a theological sense in the section, and argue that, therefore, the word "Hindu" must be similarly construed. But these words are not used in that section in a theological sense. They are used merely to indicate the communities known by those names, and not with reference to the religious opinions professed by them. These communities happen to have adopted the names of their founders, and there was, therefore, no other possible way of describing them. Mahomedans are exempted by this section, [786] not because they profess certain religious opinions, but because they have a law of succession of their own. It is for this same reason that Hindus are exempt. They, too, have their own law. It is not possible that the Legislature could have intended to deprive them of it and compel them to adopt a foreign law wholly repugnant to their ideas if they should change their opinions and become Christians. In all free countries, men may change their religion and yet remain in their communities, conforming to their usages and governed by their laws. That is what the parties to this case have done. To hold that merely because they have changed their religious views they have ceased to be Hindus, and are no longer entitled to the advantages of belonging to the Hindu community, is persecution of opinion never intended by the Legislature. The Indian Legislature has never desired to interfere with religious opinion in this country, or to make civil rights dependent on religion. See Act XXI of 1850. Why should the adoption of Christianity involve a change in the law of succession? The adoption of Mahomedanism necessarily involves such a change, because Mahomet taught not merely a system of religion, but also a system of law, and to become a Mahomedan implies the acceptance of both. But the Founder of Christianity taught no law, and the Christian faith may be accepted and professed under any system of law and without any change of law. Unless, therefore, we are to attribute to the Legislature the intention of enacting a penal law against Christianity in India it is impossible to accept the construction of the section adopted by the Madras Courts. The law as administered in the Bombay High Court allows Hindus to retain their own usages although they become Jains (1), Khoja Mahomedans (2), Memon Mahomedans (3), Borah Mahomedans (4). We contend that it allows them the same liberty if they become Christians.

[787] Further we say that all native Hindu communities, whether they become Christian or not, are included in the term "Gentu" in Stat. 37 Geo. III, c. 142, s. 13. The word is clearly used there with reference to race or community and not religion: see Lopes v. Lopes (5). That Act preserved their usage of inheritance to all Gentus, and the

JUDGMENT.

PARSONS, J.—The question for our determination is whether the Indian Succession Act, 1865, governs the succession in the family of the parties, who are Christians. The answer depends upon the meaning of the term "Hindus" in s. 331 of the Act. It is admitted that the ancestors of the parties were long ago converted to the Christian religion, and that the parties are Christians, but it is argued that they have not on that account ceased to be Hindus, that they are not, therefore, subject to the provisions of the Succession Act, and that the term "Hindus" in s. 331 is denominative of a race, and not of a religion. I think there is no ground for such an argument. There is no race of [788] Hindus. It is not the inhabitants of Hindustan who are Hindus, but those only of them who profess a religion which is called the Hindu religion. Just so there is no race of Mahomedans, or of Buddhists, or of Christians. An argument that a Christian, who has adopted the Mahomedan religion, is nevertheless still a Christian, is on the face of it an absurdity; but it is as good an argument as one that a Hindu, who has been converted to the Christian religion, is still a Hindu.

The cases cited to show that Hindus, who have become Memons or Borahs, may set up customs of inheritance, show that these customs must be evidenced by an observance after change of religion, and can only be proved as being different from the law of the new religion when there is no legislative enactment declaring the latter. They do not show that a Hindu, who has changed his religion, is still a Hindu, and as such is governed by Hindu law. They in fact show distinctly the contrary, ex. gr. I. L. R., 6 Bom. 460. Cutchi Memons are held to be Mahomedans.

I am, therefore, of opinion that the term "Hindus" in s. 331 does not include persons who or whose ancestors were at one time Hindus, but who became, or are, at the time of inquiry, Christians. I fully agree on this point with the decisions of the Madras High Court (7 Mad. H. C. Rep., 121; I.L.R., 2 Mad., 209, 9 ib., 466, 10 ib., 69), which decisions the learned Judge below has unhesitatingly followed. We confirm the decree with costs.

STARLING, J.—The sole point for determination in this appeal is whether the provisions of the Indian Succession Act, 1865, apply to those members of the Koli caste who profess the Christian religion, or whether it is open to them to prove that they have governed themselves, in matters of succession, by the Hindu law or some modification thereof. The Succession Act (X of 1865), s. 2, provides that "except as provided by this Act or by any other law in force, the rules therein contained shall constitute the law of British India applicable to all cases of intestate or testamentary succession." It is thus of universal application, unless the person claiming to be excepted can show that by this or some other Act he specifically is excepted from the operation of its provisions.

[789]The appellant claims that the class to which she and the respondent belong, are thus specifically excepted by s. 331, which provides that "the provisions of this Act shall not apply to intestate or testamentary succession to the property of any Hindu, Mahomedan, or Buddhist," and the appellant claims that the class to which she belongs must be designated as Hindus. Now in the class of Kolis, some profess the Hindu religion, some the Mahomedan, and some the Christian, and probably all were originally Hindu by religion, but some have been converted to Christianity, and some to Mahomedanism. Mr. Stokes, in his notes on this section in his Anglo-Indian Codes, Vol. I, 483, is of opinion that, from the connection of Hindu with Mahomedan and Buddhist, that term is used as a theological term as denoting any person professing any form of the Brahminical religion or religion of the Puranas; and with this opinion I agree. It is evident with regard to Mahomedans that the Courts look at what they profess at the present time, and not at the stock whence they were derived, nor at the fact that they may, in matters of succession and inheritance, be governed by Hindu law in whole or in part: see In re Haji Ismail Haji Abdulla (1). I think that the same principle must be applied to the parties in the present case. We must look at them as they are, and it is then clear that they, by embracing and following the Christian religion, have ceased to be Hindus, although they may be of Hindu descent, and may have retained some Hindu customs. Consequently they are not Hindus within the meaning of s. 331 of the Indian Succession Act. This appears to have been the opinion of the Government of India shortly after the Succession Act was passed; for under the powers conferred by s. 332, the Native Christians of Coorg were, on the 25th July, 1868, exempted retrospectively from the 16th March, 1865, from the operation of that Act.

The same point has come up for consideration before the High Court of Madras on several occasions in the cases cited by counsel during the argument of this case, and that Court has always held that native Christians could not claim to be Hindus within the meaning of the Succession Act.

[790] On the authority of these decisions, the learned Judge in the Division Court passed a decree against the appellant, and I am of opinion for the reasons already given that his decision was according to law, and that the present appeal must be dismissed with costs.

APPLICATION under the extraordinary jurisdiction (s. 622 of the Civil Procedure Code, Act XIV of 1882) to reverse the order of R. S Tipnis, Assistant Judge, F. P., of Broach.

Applicant Bai Devkore applied under Act VII of 1889 to the Subordinate Judge for a certificate of succession to her husband, Manekchand Jivandas, who died on the 16th December, 1892.

The opponents were brothers of the deceased Manekchand. They objected to her obtaining the certificate unless substantial security were required from her, as they alleged she had been wasting the property in which they had a reversionary interest.

The Subordinate Judge ordered that a certificate should issue [791] on the applicant furnishing security under s. 9 of the Act (VII of 1889).

The applicant appealed to the District Court on the ground that no security should be required from her. The Judge rejected the appeal, holding that the order was not appealable, not being one contemplated by s. 19, sub-section 1 of the Act.

The applicant then applied to the High Court under its extraordinary jurisdiction, and obtained a rule nisi calling upon the opponents to show cause why the order of the District Judge regarding the appeal should not be set aside.

Goverdhanram M. Tripathi appeared for the applicant in support of the rule.—The Judge was wrong in holding that the order of the Subordinate Judge was not appealable. The order of the Subordinte Judge giving us a certificate was a final order and is, therefore, appealable. The Judge should have heard the appeal and disposed of the case on its merits.

We further contend that the applicant is not liable to give security. She has succeeded to her deceased husband's estate by right of inheritance and has full right over his moveables. A rightful owner cannot be asked to give security for property to which he is fully entitled. The order is irregular, and should be reversed.

Chimanlal H. Setalvad appeared for the opponents to show cause.—The order is not appealable—Bhagwani v. Manni Lal (1). The Subordinate Judge has exercised his discretion in requiring security, and such an order should not be set aside under the extraordinary jurisdiction.

Goverdhanram, in reply.

JUDGMENT.

BAYLEY, Acting C. J.—This was an application for a certificate of succession under Act VII of 1889 made by Bai Davkore, widow of Manekchand Jivandas, the petitioner, alleging that her husband died on the 16th December, 1892, at Anklesvar, and that she was his heiress.

The application was opposed by the brothers of her deceased husband, and they alleged that the petitioner had wasted some [792] property of the deceased, and that no certificate should be issued to her without taking substantial security from her.

The Subordinate Judge of Anklesvar ordered a certificate to issue on the petitioner furnishing security under s. 9 of Act VII of 1889. That section enacts that the Court 'may require as a condition precedent to the granting of a certificate, that the person to whom it proposes to make the grant shall give to the Judge of the Court, to enure for the benefit of the Judge for the time being, a bond with one or more surety or sureties, or other sufficient security, for rendering an account of debts and securities received by him and for indemnity of persons who may be entitled to the whole or any part of those debts and securities.' The petitioner appealed to the District Court of Broach on two grounds:—1, that the order requiring security was erroneous, as she was the absolute owner of the moveables of her husband; 2, that the Legislature did not intend that security should be required from absolute owners by right of heirship.

The pleader for the respondents in the District Court took the preliminary objection that no appeal lay from the order of the Subordinate Judge. On referring to the rojnama I find it there stated that the pleader for the appellant said that she was not going to give security until the decision in the appeal was given.

When the appeal came on for hearing before the Assistant Judge of Broach, F. P., he held that the order of the Subordinate Judge was neither one for granting a certificate, nor for refusing it, and that on the authority of Bhagwani v. Manni Lal (1) no appeal lay against an order made under that Act requiring that security should be given. That case was decided in 1891 by Edge, C. J., and Straight, J., who agreeing with Mahmood, J., held that where on an application for a certificate of succession under Act VII of 1889 an order was made granting the certificate conditionally on the applicant's furnishing security, such order was not an order "granting, refusing or revoking a certificate" within the meaning of s. 19 of the Act, and that, therefore, no appeal would lie therefrom.

Bai Devkore then petitioned the High Court, praying for the exercise of its revisional powers under s. 622 of the Civil [793] Procedure Code, apparently on the ground that the lower appellate Court had failed to exercise a jurisdiction vested in it by law. The petition was rejected by Mr. Justice Ranade, but upon an appeal being made under the Letters Patent of the High Court, my learned colleague and I, thinking that the points raised were worthy of argument, restored the application to the file, and directed notice to issue to the opponents.

Mr. Goverdhanram, who appeared for Bai Devkore on the hearing before us, endeavoured to distinguish the case of Bhagwani v. Manni Lal (1) from the present one. There are, no doubt, some points of difference between the two cases, but I think they are immaterial, and that in principle the cases are the same. There, as here, the order was conditional, and was not, in my opinion, one granting or refusing the certificate. That decision appears to me to be a correct one, and one which this Court may well follow. The Assistant Judge was, therefore, I think, fully justified in holding that no appeal lay, and in rejecting it with costs.

It will be noticed that the appeal to the District Court of Broach was on the ground that the order requiring security was erroneous, and that such security ought not to have been required from Bai Devkore. In the petition to the High Court, this Court is asked to reverse the decisions of both the lower Courts, and also to hold either that the security ought not to have been ordered, or that the appeal did lie. With regard to the latter prayer, I have already expressed my opinion that there is no ground for the interference of this Court.

Ought then this Court, in pursuance of the powers conferred on it by s. 622 of the Civil Procedure Code, to hold that security ought not to have been ordered by the Subordinate Judge? The question of security was one purely for the discretion of the Subordinate Judge Whether the exercise of such discretion could be reviewed or interfered with, came up for decision in the High Court in a case I referred to during the argument —Mhalsabai v. Vithoba Gulve (2) decided by Sir M. Sausse, C. J., Hebbert and Forbes, JJ., in 1862. That was an appeal from an order of [794] the District Judge of Thana granting a certificate under Act XXVII of 1860 to Vithoba K. Gulve enabling him to get in the debts and outstandings due to the deceased. Section 5 of that Act, which enabled the Court 'to take such security as it shall think necessary from any person to whom it shall grant a certificate,' was very similar in its terms to s. 9 of the Succession Certificate Act, 1889 (Act VII of 1889). When granting the certificate the Judge did not require any security from the respondent under s. 5 of the Act (XXVII of 1860). Mr. Westropp in arguing the appeal for the appellant contended that if the Judge below had exercised an unwise discretion in refusing to require security, the High Court as a Court of extraordinary and superintending jurisdiction would review it. In the judgment of the Court, after time taken to consider, the Judges say: 'This Act gives the Court a discretion in taking security from the person to whom the certificate is granted, and so did Act XIX of 1841; and the whole course of legislation on this subject proceeds on the assumption that the Court below is to exercise its discretion, and we do not think we should be justified in interfering with that discretion,' p. 30. In Kirani Ahmedula v. Subabhat (3) West and Nanabhai Haridas, JJ., asserted the appellate Court's power to interfere with the discretion of the District Judge of Kanara who had refused to restore an appeal to the file of the District Court, and they set aside the order of that Judge who had rejected the application on the ground that the appellant had not satisfactorily accounted for the absence of his pleader without leave of the Court.

(1) 13 A. 214. (2) 7 B.H.C.R. Appx, 26. (3) 8 B. 28.

That decision, however, seems to me to stand on a different footing from Mhalsabai v. Vithoba Gulve (1), and there have been several cases in recent years in England where the right of a Court of Appeal to interfere with a judicial discretion has been distinctly recognized. I will refer to the one in which the facts most nearly approach those of the present case, as it was a question whether security ought or ought not to be given, viz., Ex parte Marshall (2) decided by the Court of Appeal in 1877. Sir George Jessel, M. R., in his judgment said that the Registrar in the first [795] instance and the Chief Judge in Bankruptcy in the second instance 'in the exercise of the judicial discretion reposed in them have decided that security should be given by the alleged debtor for the debt and costs at a condition of his being at liberty to defend an action. No doubt the Court of Appeal can, if it thinks fit, reverse the decision so come to, but before interfering with the exercise of a judicial discretion, the Court must be satisfied not merely that it would itself have arrived at a different conclusion in the first instance, but that the discretion has been clearly improperly exercised.' Lord Coleridge, C.J., was of the same opinion. Beggaliay, L.J., said: 'It would require a strong case to induce a Judge of Appeal to reverse a decision upon a matter of discretion.'

In Golding v. Wharton Salt Works Company (3) decided by the Court of Appeal in 1876 Lord Justice James said: 'The Court of Appeal in Chancery has laid down over and over again that, on a question which depends on the discretion of the Judge, the Court of Appeal does not in general interfere with that discretion. Not that the Court of Appeal has not complete jurisdiction over such cases, or that the decision of the Court below would not be overruled where serious injustice would result from that decision, but as a general rule the Court of Appeal declines to interfere'.

In the present case I do not collect from the judgment of the Assistant Judge that the allegation of the opponents that the applicant had wasted some property of the deceased was denied by her, or that she produced any evidence to controvert such allegation, and her ground of complaint to District Court was that the order requiring her to give security ought not to have been made, as she was the absolute owner of the moveables of her husband. So doubtless she was, but such moveables would be liable for any debts that her husband left. The proceedings now before the Court do not show whether or not he left any debts. He may have done so, or he may not. The Subordinate Judge in the exercise of his discretion thought it necessary to require, as a condition precedent to the granting of a certificate, that Bai Devkore, to whom he proposed to make the grant, should give security. [796] We have no right to assume, and we have no materials before us to enable us to hold, that he acted improperly in inserting such condition in the order he made. The question was one entirely within the jurisdiction and powers of the Subordinate Judge.

It must be borne in mind that this matter comes before the Court under s. 622 of the Civil Procedure Code (XIV of 1882) and the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council have said in Rajah Amir Hassan Khan v. Sheo Baksh Singh (4): 'The question is, did the Judges of the lower Courts in this case in the exercise of their jurisdiction act illegally or with material irregularity. It appears they had perfect jurisdiction to decide the question which was before them, and they did decide it. Whether they decided it rightly or wrongly, they had jurisdiction to decide the case; and even if they decided wrongly, they did not exercise their jurisdiction illegally or with material irregularity.

I am, therefore, of opinion, that the applicant has failed in showing that this Court ought to interfere in her behalf in the exercise of its extraordinary jurisdiction, and that the rule nisi obtained by her in June last must be discharged with costs.

FULTON, J.—Though when this application was argued I was doubtful whether the order of the Subordinate Judge was not one granting or refusing the certificate prayed for and, therefore, open to appeal to the District Court, I now feel satisfied that the Assistant Judge, F. P., was right in following Bhagwani v. Manni Lal (1) and holding that no appeal lay against the order of the Subordinate Judge requiring the petitioner to furnish security under s. 9 of Act VII of 1889 as a condition precedent to granting her a certificate.

I also concur with the learned Chief Justice in thinking that this Court cannot under s. 622, Civil Procedure Code, interfere with the discretion of the Subordinate Judge in making the order for security of which the applicant complains.

It may be that when the Subordinate Judge makes a final order granting or refusing the certificate, such order, if unfavourable to the applicant, and the grounds on which it is based, will be [797] appealable under s. 26, and the question as to the propriety of the order requiring security may then arise for the consideration of the District Court, but at present there is no reason for our interference.

I, therefore, concur in discharging the rule with costs.

Rule discharged.

Easement—Right of way—Purchase of land adjoining purchaser's land—Way of access—Way of necessity—Sale-deed—Construction—Circumstances existing at the time of the sale.

A person purchasing a plot adjoining his own land, and having access to the plot through his land, cannot acquire a way of necessity over his vendor's land of which the plot formed a part. The fact that if the plot had been sold to a third person, he would have acquired a way of necessity, does not affect the question.

Where a portion of an estate is sold, a right of way leading to such portion may be created by the use of general words, provided that the circumstances existing at the time of the sale were such as to justify the belief that such was the intention of the parties.

Where the words used in a Marathi deed of sale were "sarva hakk wa sambandh" (i.e., all rights and accompaniments), along with the portion of the land sold; but if there was an old path leading across the vendor's adjoining ground to the plot sold, and the purposes for which the plot was sold, and the conduct of the parties were such as to justify an inference that by the use of these words it was the intention of the parties to convey the right to use the path, it would be open to the Judge to find as a fact that such was the intention.

[N.F., 28 M. 495 : R., 16 C.P.L.R. 156.]

SECOND APPEAL from the decision of W. H. Crowe, District Judge of Poona, affirming the decree of Rao Bahadur Chunilal M., First Class Subordinate Judge.

A plot of open land at Poona, known as Anjir Bagh, belonged originally to one Khasgiwala. Part of it, which adjoined the defendant's dwelling-house, was sold by him to the defendant for [798] building purposes in 1872. The remaining part was sold by him to one Paranjpe, who sold it to the Municipality of Poona.

On the eastern boundary of the land so purchased, the Municipality afterwards put up a railing which blocked up a right of way across the land which the defendant claimed as a way of access to the land purchased by him. In the month of January, 1890, the defendant removed a part of the railing. The Municipality thereupon brought this suit against him to recover Rs. 5 as the price of the railing removed, and for an injunction restraining him from removing the new railing which it proposed to erect.

The Subordinate Judge found that there was a right of way through the ground in dispute as alleged by the defendant, and dismissed the suit.

On appeal by the plaintiffs the Judge confirmed the decree. The following is an extract from the Judge's judgment:—

"The defendant's deed (Ex. 102) states that the land, including all its belongings and appurtenances except treasure-trove, were sold to defendant. The words are: 'tya sambandhi bhumistha dravya kherij sarva hakk wa sambandha suddha tumhas aj mitis rupaye 99 yas kharedi deun rupaye ghetle ahet', (that is, in connection with it [land] all the rights including appurtenances, excepting treasure-trove, have been sold to you this day for rupees ninety-nine and the rupees have been taken).

"I think the previous statement made by Khasgiwala and the terms of the deed of sale executed between himself and defendant when they were on good terms has a most important bearing on the case. I come now to consider the direct testimony of some of the witnesses cited in defendant's behalf. Narsopant (Ex. 53) states that he was secretary to the Municipality from 1875 to 1887 and is now a municipal commissioner. He says he has seen defendant using the road in dispute since 1875, that defendant's door has been in existence since then and that defendant used to get water from the well situated in the garden (Anjir Bagh) and there was a belka or piece of forked timber at the mouth of the passage across the path which was used by the people in the garden as a passage. In his opinion the Anjir Bagh was purchased subject to defendant's right of way, and his right of way has never been obstructed. The present municipal secretary, Mahadeo Keshav Kumtekar, also deposes (Ex. No. 44) that he was appointed secretary in 1887, and defendant has since then been using the land in dispute as a passage. Now, looking to this evidence, it appears to me highly probable that the right of way, though not mentioned in express terms in defendant's deed, was intended to be conveyed in the comprehensive expressions used with regard to the land in that document. The right of ingress to and egress from a piece of land separated from a larger piece passes by implication of law to the purchaser as an easement of necessity in the [799] absence of any stipulation to the contrary. It is a mere accident that the piece purchased by the defendant was contiguous to his dwelling-house. If he had disposed of it to a stranger, the stranger must have claimed a right of way to and from the land, and there is no reason why defendant should be put in a worse position than an outsider would have been. Looking at all the evidence in the case, I have no difficulty in agreeing with the view taken by the learned Subordinate Judge."

Inverarity (with Mahadeo B. Chavbal) for the appellants (plaintiffs) :—The defendant had no right of way at the place from which he removed the railing. The present suit was filed in the year 1890, and according to the Limitation Act (XV of 1877) the defendant ought to have adduced evidence of user for twenty years before suit, i.e., since 1870. He has not done so. The evidence at the most shows that the defendant's user commenced in the year 1872. The right of way claimed by the defendant is not an easement of necessity. See s. 5 of the Easements Act (V of 1882). A right of way is not an apparent or continuous easement. Even if the right of way existed, the defendant had no right to remove the railing.

Lang (Advocate General), with Mahadeo C. Apte, for the respondent (defendant).—Both the Courts have found that the passage to our house lies over the land in dispute. It is a way of necessity. A way of necessity passes by implication. Further, there is a wall between the land which we have purchased and our house. As the wall was already in existence when we purchased the land, we are not bound to make a door in the wall or to pull it down in order to have access to the land from our house. Further, we say that the right of way passed to us under the words of the conveyance—Gale on Easements, pp. 66, 108 ; Wheeldon v. Burrows(1). A vendor cannot derogate from his own grant. The Municipality having purchased the land from our vendor stands in his shoes. The point as to whether we were justified in removing the railing, was taken for the first time at the hearing of the second appeal. It was not urged before.

Inverarity in reply.—The lower Courts have not found that there is no other access to the defendant's house. There is a door in the defendant's wall which leads to the land. The mere circumstance that the defendant's land adjoins our land cannot [800] give him the right of way over our land—Goddard on Easements, pp. 134, 324 and 328 ; s. 13 of the Easements (Act V of 1882). Wheeldon v. Burrows (1) was relied on but it is not applicable. It does not relate to a right of way.

JUDGMENT.

FULTON J.—The facts which have led to this suit are summarised by the District Judge as follows :—The ground in dispute, which is now the property of the Municipality, and the site belonging to the defendant, on which a house has been erected by him, belonged originally to one Khasgiwalla, who sold a small site to the defendant by deed of sale dated 3rd April, 1872. The remainder, known as the Anjir Bagh, was subsequently disposed of to one Paranjape, through whom it came into the possession of the Municipality.

The defendant now claims a right of way over the land purchased by the Municipality, but has not very clearly stated the grounds on which he claims. In his written statement he merely alleged that there had been a right of way through the ground in suit since the time when the plaintiff acquired it. The learned Advocate General, who appeared for him, based his claim on two grounds: (1) that he had acquired a way of necessity on the purchase of the site which he bought from Khasgiwalla, and (2) that he had obtained a right of way under the terms of the deed of sale.

In regard to the supposed acquisition of a way of necessity, we do not think that any question arises. The plot of ground bought by the defendant was contiguous to his own property through which access to it could be gained. The District Judge pointed out that, if the site had been sold to a third party, the purchaser would have acquired a way of necessity, but this does not seem to affect the question. If a stranger had bought, he would have got what is called a landlocked tenement, to which he could only obtain access over the land of his vendor or by trespassing on other people's property. But the defendant having bought could approach his new acquisition through his own premises, and it cannot, therefore, be said that in order to enjoy it, it was necessary for him to pass over his vendor's land. The Advocate General contended that it was separated from his house [801] by a wall, and that he was not bound to pull that down or to make a door in it. No authority, however, was quoted to support this argument. As a fact, however, a door actually then existed, or was made shortly afterwards, so that if ever there was any necessity for passing over Khasgiwalla's land in order to reach the site bought by the defendant, it ceased as soon as the door was opened. Mr. Goddard in summing up the English authorities on ways of necessity states that a man cannot acquire a way of necessity if he has any other means of access to his land, however inconvenient it may be, than by passing over his neighbour's soil, p. 329. The case of Holmes v. Goring (1) shows that a way of necessity does not last longer than the necessity. Whether in this country a Court might recognize a way of necessity in case of extreme inconvenience of approach by another possible way, need not be considered, for neither Court has found that the passage through the door to the land purchased was inconvenient.

Turing next to the argument that a right of way was conveyed by the terms of the grant, we find it difficult, having regard to the facts found by the District Judge, to hold that by themselves they justify such a construction. Various English decisions may be referred to—such as Barkshire v. Grubb (2), Kay v. Oxley (3) and Brown v. Alabaster (4), in which certain general words have been held to convey certain rights of way, but so far as they turn on the use of particular words they are of little assistance towards the construction of a Marathi document in which other words are employed. They show, however, that when a portion of an estate is sold, a right of way leading to such portion may be created by the use of general words, provided that the circumstances existing at the time of the sale were such as to justify the belief that such was the intention of the parties. This principle will, we think, hold good in this country as well as in England. In each case the real test appears to be the intentions of the parties so far as they can be gathered from the language used with reference to the existing circumstances. The law on the subject seems summarised by Blackburn, J., in his judgment in [802] Kay v. Oxley (3), where in the last sentence he says: "I think in considering the words we should see what they really mean, and apply them to the state of circumstances existing at the time of the conveyance." In the present case the general words used were " sarva hakk wa sambandha " which, in themselves, apart from the circumstances at the time of the sale, do not specify a right of way over the vendor's property as conveyed along with the portion of land sold. But if it were found that there was an old path leading across C to B (the plot sold), and that the purposes for which the plot was sold and the conduct of the parties were such as to justify the inference that by the use of the words " hakk wa sambandha," "rights and accompaniments," it was the intention to convey the right to use the path, it would, we think, be open to the District Judge to find as a fact that such was the intention. At present, however, we are unable to accept as sufficient his opinion that the right of way was intended to be conveyed, because he has not found what were the circumstances existing at the time of the sale, and his opinion appears to have been formed partly in the belief that the fact that the plot purchased by the defendant was contiguous to his dwelling-house did not affect the question. Before, therefore, deciding this appeal, we must request the District Judge to find on the following issue:—

" Whether, having regard to the circumstances existing at the time of the sale, the purpose for which the ground was sold, and the conduct of the parties, a right of way across the vendor's remaining property was conveyed by the deed of sale, and, if so, whether it passed through the place where the defendant pulled down the railings? "

The Subordinate Judge in his judgment expressed an opinion that, irrespective of the land purchased, the defendant had a right of way to his old house, but this was not the case put forward by him, and as pointed out by Mr. Inverarity, seems unsupported by evidence, as there is nothing to show that previous to 1872 he was in the habit of crossing the Anjir Bagh when going to and from his house. Moreover, no argument was addressed to us in support of this view, which need not further be considered.

[803] It was argued that, even if the defendant had a right of way, he was not justified in pulling down 20 feet of railings. The point was not taken in the memorandum of second appeal, nor apparently argued in the District Court, and at most would only raise a question of damages. As, however, the plaintiff only claimed nominal damages of Rs. 5, we must conclude that it was not thought worth while to raise the question in the District Court, and we cannot, therefore, entertain it in second appeal. The real question at issue is as to the defendant's right of way. If it is decided in his favour, the decrees of the Courts below are substantially correct.

The District Judge should now with reference to the above remarks record his finding on the issue referred, and return his proceedings within two months. The Court may admit further evidence if it thinks proper.

KALU VALAD VISHNA (Original Defendant), Appellant v. BARSU VALAD ZENDU (Original Plaintiff), *Respondent.

[13th September, 1894.]

Hindu law—Joint family—Joint family property—Gift—Gift of undivided share by adults of family—Minor co-sharer not a party to gift—Ejectment—Defendant trespasser—Onus of proof—Plaintiff to prove his superior title.

According to Hindu law, under ordinary circumstances a gift by a co-parcener of his undivided share in the immoveable property is invalid, and a minor's share cannot be given away by a manager except in case of necessity or for certain specified purposes.

Certain land which was joint family property was given by the adult members of the family to the plaintiff as a worshipper of a deity. A minor co-parcener did not join in the gift. The plaintiff sued the occupier for possession.

Held that the plaintiff could not recover. The gift not being made from necessity, or for the performance of any pious duties obligatory on the minor or the family, was invalid, and could not be given effect to even with respect to the shares of the donors.

In an ejectment suit, the defendant, though a trespasser, is entitled to require the plaintiff who seeks to eject him to prove that he has a superior title.

THIS was a second appeal from the decision of Rao Bahadur N. N. Nanavati, First Class Subordinate Judge of Dhulia with [804] appellate powers, confirming the decree of Rao Saheb D. G. Medhekar, Second Class Subordinate Judge of Yaval.

Suit in ejectment. The plaintiff sued for possession of a certain field which formerly had been the property of three brothers, viz., Lakshman, Mansaram and Barsu.

In 1891 Dagdu (son of Lakshman), Nathu (son of Barsu) and Anandi (widow of Mansaram) made a gift of the field to the plaintiff as the worshipper of the god Shri Sadguru, and executed a deed of gift dated 9th January, 1891, which was duly registered. Nathu's brother, Ragho, who was then a minor, was not a party to the gift.

The field was at that time in the possession of the defendant, who had held it since 1881. In 1891 the plaintiff brought this suit to eject the defendant and to obtain possession.

The defendant alleged that he had purchased the field from the owners eighteen or nineteen years before suit, and he contended that, inasmuch as one of the co-parceners (Ragho) was not a party to the gift, it was invalid, and the plaintiff had no title to the property.

The Subordinate Judge passed a decree for the plaintiff.

On appeal by the defendant the decree was confirmed.

The following is an extract from the judgment in appeal :—

"For these reasons I hold that the gift in this case, though not followed by delivery of possession, is valid. There is one further objection to the validity of the gift advanced by the defendant. It appears that Nathu, one of the plaintiff's three donors, has a minor brother, Ragho, aged ten or eleven years, who lives with him. This Ragho is not a party to the gift, and he has an undivided interest in the land in suit. It has, therefore, been urged that the gift is invalid, because a member of an undivided family on this side of India cannot, without the consent of his co-parceners, make a gift of his share in the undivided property or dispose of it by will. As the defendant is a trespasser, whose possession has not strengthened into an indefeasible title by lapse of time, I do not think that he has a right to urge this plea. The question is one which can properly arise between the plaintiff and Ragho when Ragho becomes of age. The gift is not made to the plaintiff personally, but to him as the worshipper of the god Shri Sadguru. The gift is thus not like an ordinary gift, but it is gift to this god for a religious purpose. Where a gift is made for a religious purpose, the tendency of the Hindu law is to look upon it with greater favour than upon an ordinary gift. The share of Ragho in the land in suit is not, I think, more than $\frac{1}{6}$th, while $\frac{5}{6}$ths of the land goes to the plaintiff. I think, therefore, that the gift, though made without [805] Ragho being a party to it, is still valid so far as the $\frac{5}{6}$ths of the land is concerned. This suit does not debar Ragho from claiming his share when he attains majority. It seems proper, therefore, that the gift must be upheld."

The defendant preferred a second appeal.

Ghanasham N. Nadkarni for the appellant (defendant).—The gift to the plaintiff is void ab initio. A member of an undivided Hindu family cannot, without the consent of his co-sharers, make a gift even of his own share in the family property. A manager has no right to give away family property in which a minor member has a share. The gift being void must be set aside—Gangubai v. Ramanna (1); Vasudeo Bhat v. Venkatesh (2); Vrandavandas v. Yamunabai (3); Baba v. Timma (4); Ponnusami v. Thatha (5); Ramanna v. Venkata (6); Virayya v. Hanumanta (7); Rambhat v. Lakshman (8); Lakshman Dada Naik v. Ramchandra Dada Naik (9): Mitakshara, Chap. I, s. 1, paras. 28 and 29. Even if the gift to the plaintiff be good, it would be so only to the extent of the shares of the donors. As to the share of the minor, it cannot stand. The lower Courts have upheld the gift of the entire property.

Daji Abaji Khare, for the respondent (plaintiff).—The gift was made for the purpose of worshipping an idol. The worship of an idol is a pious purpose, and gifts made for pious purposes are not invalid, even if the gift be of an undivided share—Gangubai v. Ramanna(1); Vasudeo Bhat v. Venkatesh (2); Udaram v. Ranu(10); West and Buhler, pp. 206 and 664, Mayne's Hindu Law, para. 393; Stoke's Hindu Law, pp. 519 and 520. The defendant himself has no right to the property, as he is a trespasser. He cannot, therefore, question the validity of the gift; and even supposing that he can do so, the gift would be invalid only with respect to the minor's share and not with respect to the shares of those who executed the deed of gift and who were not minors. We should, therefore, be allowed to turn this suit into one for partition, and the shares of the adult members should be given to us.

[806] Ghanasham, in reply.—The present being an ejectment suit, the plaintiff must succeed on the strength of his own title. We are in possession, and, therefore, we have a right to question his title.

JUDGMENT.

FULTON, J.—It was not disputed that under ordinary circumstances the gift by one co-parcener of his undivided share is invalid, or that a minor's share cannot be given away by the manager except in case of necessity or for certain specified purposes. It was contended, however, that as this gift was made to the plaintiff as worshipper of the god Shri Sadguru, its purpose rendered it binding on the minor.

The law on the subject is stated in paragraphs 28 and 29 of s. I of Chap. I of the Mitakshara as follows:—

"28. Even a single individual may conclude a donation, mortgage or sale of immoveable property during a season of distress for the sake of the family and especially for pious purposes.

"29. The meaning of the text is this:—while the sons and grandsons are minors and incapable of giving their consent to a gift and the like; or while brothers are so and continue unseparated; even one person who is capable may conclude a gift, hypothecation, or sale, of immoveable property if a calamity affecting the whole family require it or the support of the family render it necessary, or indispensable duties, such as the obsequies of the father or the like, make it unavoidable."

Now, in the present case, it has not been found, nor in argument has it been urged, that any necessity for this gift has been established, or that it was made in performance of any pious duties obligatory on the minor or the family. The learned Subordinate Judge appears himself to have felt doubtful whether the minor was bound by the gift, for he said that the result of this suit would not debar the minor from claiming his share when he attained majority. But unless not only the shares of the adult co-parceners but also the share of the minor have been duly conveyed to the plaintiff, it is impossible to see on what principle his suit to recover the property can be admitted. Mr. Khare urged that as the defendant was a trespasser it was not open to him to question the validity of the gift, but we think that a defendant in possession is entitled to require the plaintiff seeking [807] to eject him to prove that he has a superior title. This the plaintiff has failed to establish, and his suit must, therefore, be dismissed.

Mr. Khare also contended that the gift was good so far as the shares of the adult co-parceners were concerned, and that the plaintiff should be allowed to add the minor as a party and convert the suit into one for partition of the whole family property. Whether at this stage such a change in the nature of the suit could be allowed, is a question which we need not discuss, for we think the authorities establish beyond doubt that the gift of an undivided share is not allowed by Hindu law, and cannot be given effect to.

We, therefore, reverse the decrees of the Courts below and reject the claim, with costs on the plaintiff throughout.

Decree reversed and claim rejected.

NARNA AND PARAMESHVAR, SONS OF NARASINH BHATTA (Original Applicants), Applicants v. ANANT AND ANOTHER BY THEIR GUARDIAN ad litem (Original Opponents), *Opponents.

[24th September, 1894.]

Practice—Procedure—Decree—Death of party between hearing and judgment—Judgment, date of operation of—Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), s. 234.

An appeal having been argued on the 11th November, 1892, the case was adjourned for judgment which was delivered on the 30th November, 1892, and was in favour of the plaintiffs. In the meanwhile the defendant had died. On application for execution it was contended that the decree was null and void, as the respondent was dead when it was passed.

Held, that the judgment should be regarded as operating as if it had been delivered on the day when the arguments were closed.

[R., 33 M. 167 = 3 Ind. Cas. 739 = 6 M.L.T. 271 ; 14 C.W N. 759 = 6 Ind. Cas. 170.]

APPLICATION under the extraordinary jurisdiction of the High Court (s. 622 of the Civil Procedure Code, Act XIV of 1882) against the order of E. H. Moscardi, Acting Judge of Kanara.

The applicants Narna and Parameshvar brought a suit (No. 76 of 1891) against one Paramabhatta in the Court of the Subordinate [808] Judge of Kumta. Their suit was dismissed, and they appealed to the District Court. The appeal was heard on the 11th November, 1892. The Judge then intimated that the decree of the lower Court should be reversed, but his judgment awarding the plaintiff's claim was not formally delivered until the 30th November. In the meanwhile (19th November) the defendant Paramabhatta died.

The applicants subsequently applied for execution. The opponents (Anant and Rambhat), sons and heirs of the deceased defendant Paramabhatta, resisted the application and contended that the decree in appeal was null and void, as the defendant was dead when it was passed.

The applicants then applied for a review of judgment, and asked that the names of the opponents should be substituted on the record for that of the deceased, and that the appeal should be reheard. The opponents contended that this application was too late, as it was made more than six months after the date of the defendant's death. The Judge rejected the application.

The following is an extract from his judgment :—

"The applicants were present in Court at the hearing, and they, therefore, knew that judgment had not been delivered on the 11th November. They also must have known that Paramabhatta's death occurred a few days after the hearing, for they are caste-fellows of Paramabhatta and lived in the same village—indeed one of the affidavits filed by the opponents goes so far as to say that one of the applicants assisted in carrying Paramabhatta's corpse to the burning ground. Thus the applicants knew that the judgment in appeal and the death of Paramabhatta must have occurred within a few days of one another, and it was, therefore, their duty to enquire which of the two occurred first."

The applicants then applied under the extraordinary jurisdiction of the High Court, contending that the judgment of the appellate Court ought to have been dated the 11th November, on which day the defendant was alive. A rule nisi having been granted, calling on the opponents to show cause why the Judge's order rejecting the application should not be set aside.

Shamrao Vithal appeared for the applicants in support of the rule.—The Judge expressed his opinion on the case on the 11th November, 1892, and all the proceedings and arguments were closed on that day. The written judgment, though subsequently [809] delivered, ought to have been dated the 11th November—Ramkrishna v. Ramabai(1).

Ghanasham N. Nadkarni appeared for the opponents to show cause.—The present application is not one to be entertained under the extraordinary jurisdiction of the High Court. The Judge has not exercised his jurisdiction wrongly or with material irregularity—Amir Hasan Khan v. Sheo Baksh Singh(2).

JUDGMENT.

BAYLEY, C. J. (Acting):—Having regard to the long established practice of the Courts in England—see Miles v. Bough(3)—and to the decision in Ramkrishna v. Ramabai (1), we think that the Judge's judgment of 30th November, 1892, should be treated as operating as if it had been delivered on the 11th November, 1892, when the arguments were closed and the Judge took time to consider his judgment. Under these circumstances nothing further remains to be done than for the original plaintiffs to apply for execution under s. 234 of the Civil Procedure Code. There is no necessity to place the names of the opponents on the record for the purpose of re-hearing the appeal, and we, therefore, discharge the rule. The parties to bear their own costs of the rule.

SECOND appeal from the decision of R. S. Tipnis, Acting Assistant Judge of Thana, confirming the decree of Rao Saheb K. S. Bodas, Second Class Subordinate Judge of Mahad.

Pandurang Raghunath and Malhar Balaji were two separated cousins. Pandurang died, leaving a son Narayan, who died childless, leaving his widow Ramabai his heir.

Malhar left him surviving two sons, Raghunath and Krishnaji.

In the year 1868, Narayan's widow, Ramabai. who was in possession of her husband's property (consisting of certain lands and a moiety of a house and a yard) alienated it to Raghunath and Krishnaji.

Twenty years afterwards, viz., on the 13th May, 1888, Ramabai adopted the plaintiff Moro, one of the sons of Krishnaji. He sued (No. 200 of 1889) Krishnaji and the sons of Raghunath for redemption, alleging that the lands had only been mortgaged to them by Ramabai in the year 1868. The defendants denied the mortgage and claimed the lands as their own. The mortgage-deed being unregistered was held not proved, and the suit was dismissed.

The plaintiff thereupon in the year 1890 brought the present suit against the defendants, the sons of Raghunath, to recover joint possession of a moiety of the house and yard and separate possession of half the lands, together with mesne profits of two years. The plaint alleged that the other half of the lands, which was in Krishnaji's possession, had been restored by him to the [811] plaintiff. He contended that Ramabai had no right to alienate the property, which yielded sufficient income to provide for her maintenance.

The defendants answered (inter alia) that since their father's death, which took place about fifteen years before the institution of the suit, they had been in possession of the property as owners ; that they were the sole owners of a part of the house and the court-yard ; that the other part was in the joint ownership of themselves and Krishnaji, and that assuming that Ramabai had transferred the property to Krishnaji and Raghunath, the plaintiff was not entitled to succeed, they being the reversionary heirs of Ramabai's deceased husband, Narayan Pandurang.

The Subordinate Judge found (inter alia) that Ramabai had alienated the property in dispute, except the house and the yard, to defendants' father and Krishnaji Malhar in 1868 ; that it was not proved that the alienation was made for any of the purposes which would justify a Hindu widow in alienating her husband's property ; that Ramabai was the owner of the house and the yard in dispute ; that the claim to these was barred by the defendants' adverse possession ; that the suit to recover possession of the rest of the property was not time-barred, and that the plaintiff was not entitled to recover possession, as the property had been already alienated to reversioners before his adoption. He, therefore, rejected the claim.

The plaintiff appealed, and the defendants presented cross objections. The Judge held that the defendants' possession of the lands as well as of the house and the court-yard was adverse to Ramabai, and, therefore, the plaintiff's claim, to both sets of properties was time-barred. He, therefore, confirmed the decree.

The plaintiff preferred a second appeal.

Lang (Advocate-General) with Vishnu K. Bhatavdekar appeared for the appellant (plaintiff).—The defendants obtained possession by virtue of an alienation by a widow and not as trespassers as found by the Judge. The original mortgage is not registered, and is, therefore, inadmissible, but there is another mortgage in the case (Ex. 51) which contains a recital that the defendants had obtained the lands from Ramabai [812] under an alienation by her. The alienation was, according to the findings of both the lower Courts, not for necessary purposes, and, therefore, invalid, and the plaintiff as the adopted son is entitled to question it. Our right to question it arose on the date of our adoption in 1888 and not on the date of the alienation or the death of our adoptive mother—Srinath v. Prosunno (1) ; Kokilmoni Dassia v. Manick Chandra (2). The present suit is governed by either art. 141 or 144 of sch. II of the Limitation Act, and under neither of the articles is the suit barred. As to art. 143, Ramabai, who aliened the property, is still alive, and, therefore, there is no adverse possession. As to art. 144, time would begin to run when the defendants' possession became adverse to us. Their possession became adverse to us when our adoption took place. The fact that the alienation was made to the reversioners cannot affect our right—Ramphal Rai v. Tula Kuari (3) ; Giriowa v. Bhimaji (4) ; Lakshman v. Radhabai (5) ; Krishnaji Janardhan v. Morbhat (6).

Inverarity with Mahadeo C. Apte appeared for the respondents (defendants).—The recital in another mortgage-deed is not an admission that the lands were held in mortgage. Our possession is not that of an alienee of the widow.. Supposing we held possession under the mortgage-deed, that deed being unregistered, we acquired no title under it. Our possession from the date of the mortgage has been under a void deed, and has been consequently adverse to the widow. Adverse possession is possession without title—Churcher v. Martin (7) ; Madhava v. Narayan (8). Adverse possession against a Hindu widow bars the remedy of a subsequently adopted son—Krishnaji Janardhan v. Morbhat (6), and also that of a reversioner —Babu v. Bhikaji (9).

The suit is governed by art. 144 of sch. II of the Limitation Act. The adopted son is not a reversioner and cannot claim under art. 141 of the schedule—Starling on Limitation, [813] p. 239 (2nd Ed.) ; Azam Bhuyan v. Faizuddin (10) ; Hashmat Begum v. Mazhar Husain (11).

Supposing we came in as alienees of the widow, the plaintiff cannot question our title. A widow is competent to alienate with the consent of her next reversioners. She can also alienate to them—Rajkristo v. Kishoree (12) ; Mohunt Kishen Geer v. Busgeet Roy (13) ; Raj Bullubh Sen v. Oomesh Chunder Rooz (14); Shama Soonduree v. Shurut Chunder Dal (15).

JUDGMENT.

FARRAN, J.—The facts which give rise to this appeal are accurately stated in the judgment of my learned colleague. The Assistant Judge has found that the defendant's possession of the lands, as well as of the house and yard, has been adverse to the widow, and that the suit of the adopted son to recover possession is barred as to both classes of property. Though it may be open to question whether his decision as to the defendants' possession of the lands being adverse to the inheritance is correct in law, I deal with the case upon the footing that there is no distinction to be taken between the two classes of property.

As the cause of action of the widow to recover possession of the property accrued in 1868, only three years before the coming into force of Act IX of 1871, the case must be considered with reference to the provisions of that Act and of the Act (XV of 1877) at present in force. The rulings under Act XIV of 1859 cannot now be relied on. This is pointed out in Hurrinath v. Mohunt Mothoor (2), and indeed there is a marked difference between the wording of the old and of the new enactments. The case of Krishnaji v. Morbhat (3), in which the dates show that the cause of action had accrued more than twelve years before the coming into operation of Act IX of 1871, and which at first sight appears to be a ruling on the question of limitation raised in this case, is not for that reason an authority to guide us. The [814] possession of the defendant there had ripened into ownership before the Act of 1871 came into force, and the passing of that Act did not affect his title or revive the plaintiff's right to sue—s. 2, and see Appasami v. Subramanya (4). This consideration must, I think, have been present to the minds of the Judges who decided Krishnaji v. Morbat, as they do not advert to the altered wording of the new Acts.

We have first to consider what article in the schedule is to be applied. Article 141 of the Act of 1877 is not applicable, as the plaintiff became entitled to possession of the property on his adoption, and not on the death of Ramabai, who is still living. That, I think, is perfectly clear. As to art. 140, the plaintiff may perhaps in one sense be called a reversioner, the particular estate of the widow, on the failure of which he succeeds, being carved out of the fee-simple by operation of law and not by the grant of Narayan Pandurang. If he ought so to be regarded, he would fall within art. 140; but as that article is certainly applicable to reversioners of a different class, which (rather than the case of an adopted son) may be presumed to have been within the contemplation of the Legislature, it would be an unnecessary extension of the ordinary legal meaning of the term reversioner to apply it to an adopted son. Moreover, the full heir succeeding after the widow's death is treated in the Act not as a reversioner but as falling into a separate category.

The case of an adopted son superseding the widow's estate on his adoption is, I am inclined to think, a casus omissus in arts. 140 and 141, and must, therefore, fall under the provisions of art. 144. It is not, however, necessary actually to decide this, for it does not, I think, make any practical difference whether art. 144 or art. 140 is applied to the case. Under art. 144 limitation does not run, as under the old law, from the time when the cause of action arose, but from the date when the possession of the defendant becomes adverse to the plaintiff or (s. 3) to those from or through whom the plaintiff claims. Now an adopted son claims from and through his adoptive father. His adoption, however, does not relate back to the death of his adoptive father—Bamundoss v. Mussamut [815] Tarinee (1). He comes in bound by such acts of the widow as would bind the natural heirs of the husband after her, and entitled to set aside (in the absence at all events of stipulations to the contrary) such unauthorised alienations of the widow as they succeeding upon her death would be entitled to set aside: Mayne's Hindu Law, para. 181 (5th Ed.). The only difference between him and other full heirs of the husband for the purpose I am considering seems to be that his rights spring into existence the moment of his adoption and displace the rights of the widow, while the rights of other reversioners await the determination of the widow's estate by her death. This view of the position of the adopted son and the exact wording of art. 144 already referred to, appear to me to show that the considerations applicable to possession adverse to a Hindu widow barring or not barring under art. 141 the person entitled to possession on her death, are also applicable to an adopted son superseding a Hindu widow. The reasoning, I mean in the cases decided under art. 141, is applicable to the case of an adopted son. It would be a strange anomaly if the right of a defendant to retain the property of a Hindu husband wrongfully wrested from his widow should depend upon whether the husband is eventually succeeded after the widow by an adopted son or by a collateral heir.

(1) 10 C. 1102. (2) 20 I.A. 183. (2) 13 B. 276. (4) 15 I.A. 167 (169).

Now the Full Bench at Calcutta has decided that under the present law possession adverse to a Hindu widow for twelve years, where she has obtained possession and lost it, is not a bar to a suit for possession on the part of the heir succeeding upon her death—Srinath v. Prosunno (2). Kokilmoni v. Manick Chandra (3) is to the same effect. The High Court at Allahabad has, however, ruled that where (at all events) the possession of the adverse holder is founded upon a title destructive alike of the estate of the widow and of the person entitled to succeed upon her death, the possession which is adverse to the widow, if continued for the requisite period, bars the heir who succeeds her: Ghandarap v. Lachman Singh (4); Adi Deo v. Dukharan (5). In the Madras cases [816] cited by Mr. Starling in his work on Limitation (p. 244) the change in the law is not discussed. I think that we should follow the Calcutta decisions to the extent above indicated, which is sufficient for the determination of the present case. It is unnecessary now to consider what would be the result if the widow had not been in possession. These decisions are, I think, tacitly approved by the Privy Council in Hurrinath v. Mohunt Mothoor (supra). They are in accordance with the literal wording of the article under which they are decided, which can only be escaped from by a rather strained process of judicial reasoning such as that adopted in Saroda v. Doyamoyee (6). Moreover, this interpretation removes the anomaly in the previous law that a defendant in possession of land by the unauthorised grant of a Hindu widow could be displaced by the next full heir on the death of a widow though he had held possession as owner for more than twelve years, while he could not be so displaced if he had gained possession by force or fraud from the widow, or if, as in this case, (if the Assistant Judge is right) he entered under a grant from the widow and omitted to register it. The suit, therefore, is not barred if the case falls within art. 140 of the Act. If, as I think it does, it falls within art. 144, it is also not barred, as the possession of the defendant did not become adverse to the plaintiff until the plaintiff became entitled to possession of the property upon his adoption.

In coming to this conclusion I have fully considered the judgment in the Full Bench case of Radhabai v. Anantrav (1), but I do not think that this judgment in any way conflicts with it or with the decision in that case.

The alternative defence of the defendants as to the lands also fails, as they do not in fact allege, and cannot prove, an alienation in favour of the reversionary heirs. They have succeeded by their defence in the former suit in having made res judicata against them the only alienation which could have been presumed in their favour. I think, therefore, that it is not necessary for me to consider the effect of an alienation by a Hindu widow in favour of reversionary heirs as against the rights of a [817] subsequently adopted son. I would reverse the decrees of the Courts below and award the plaintiff possession of the lands and premises claimed in the plaint, with costs. The mesne profits, if insisted on, can be ascertained in execution, being calculated during the three years before suit and until possession is given to the plaintiff.

CANDY, J.—The facts of this case are these.

Ramabai, the childless widow of a separated Hindu, was in possession, in 1868, of certain property which had belonged to her deceased husband, viz : (a) share in a house and a yard ; (b) certain divided lands.

In 1868 that property passed into possession of her husband's divided cousins, Raghunath and Krishnaji.

In May, 1888, Ramabai adopted the plaintiff, the son of Krishnaji. Raghunath in the meanwhile had died.

In 1889 plaintiff in virtue of his adoption sued Krishnaji and the sons of Raghunath to recover the lands, alleging a mortgage of them by Ramabai to Raghunath and Krishnaji in 1868, and offering to redeem the same.

The sons of Raghunath pleaded (inter alia) that they had been in possession as owners for many years. One of the issues framed by the Subordinate Judge was—

Whether the lands in suit are proved to have been given in mortgage to Raghunath and Krishnaji by Ramabai ? On this he found in the negative.

A copy of an unregistered mortgage deed in Raghunath's handwriting was sought to be put in ; but this was rejected, it being admitted that registration of the original deed was compulsory. There being no such evidence unconnected with the alleged mortgage deed as could afford basis for the conclusion that defendants held as mortgagees, the claim was rejected with costs (31st January, 1890).

Plaintiff then filed the present suit (No. 294 of 1890) against the sons of Raghunath for possession of the share of the house and yard and of half the lands, alleging that Krishnaji had given up the half of the lands which had been in his possession [818] and that as Ramabai had no right to alienate the property, he as adopted son was entitled to recover possession.

The Subordinate Judge found (inter alia) that the lands had been alienated in 1868 by Ramabai, but not for any purposes which would justify alienation by a Hindu widow, that the claim thereto was not barred by limitation, but must be dismissed, the alienees at the time being the next reversioners, and that the claim to the house and yard was barred by limitation.

Plaintiff appealed to the District Court. The Assistant Judge found that the claim to both items of property was barred by defendants' adverse possession, there being in his opinion no alienation by the widow.

Plaintiff has now made a second appeal to this Court; and the only points argued before us were the question of limitation, and the question whether defendants being in 1868 the reversionary heirs could on the ground resist the plaintiff's claim.

On the question of limitation I understood the learned Advocate General for plaintiff to rely on two points :—

(a) The statement of the Assistant Judge that "defendants entered into possession (of the lands) by virtue of an alleged mortgage-deed."

(b) Article 141 of the Limitation Act is applicable.

Neither point is, in my opinion, in favour of plaintiff.

The Assistant Judge could not mean that defendants are mortgagees of the lands. As he pointed out, it is res judicata that they are not mortgagees. Article 141 of Act XV of 1877 is certainly not in express terms applicable; for it refers to a particular class of suit brought by a person entitled to possession of property on the death of a female. Here plaintiff sues as the adopted son of Narayan, Ramabai's husband. He is entitled to possession, if at all, now, not at the death of any female.

I agree with Mr. Apte, who appeared for defendants, that the article of the Limitation Act to be applied is art. 144, and according to that article the claim is not barred. For in the case of suits under that article the period of limitation begins to run from the time when the possession of the defendants becomes adverse to [819] the plaintiff. Here the possession of defendants could not have been adverse to plaintiff till his status as adopted son of Narayan commenced in May, 1888. Assuming that the possession, held by the sons of Raghunath, both of the lands as well as of the house and yard, was adverse to Ramabai, that fact does not affect plaintiff. He does not derive his right to sue from or through Ramabai (s. 3, Act XV of 1877). She was merely the performer of a certain ceremonial which gave validity to his adoption. No doubt the position may be anomalous (the Calcutta High Court pointed out as startling an anomaly in the case of a widow and reversioners, see Hurrinath v. Mohunt Mothoor(1)); and there is a reported case which at first sight seems directly opposed to the view now proposed of art. 144. It is Krishnaji v. Morbhat (2). But in that case, though art. 144 of Act XV of 1877 was applied, no authorities were quoted, and it was expressly taken for granted that if the defendant had held adversely to the widow for twelve years, the suit would not be maintainable. Whether this would be true, supposing the property had never reached the widow's hands, and she thus had never been dispossessed, need not now be considered. But in the present case, and in the case just quoted, possession had passed from the widow to the defendant; and it is clear that if the possession adverse to the widow is not necessarily a bar to the subsequently adopted son, then there is no objection to the claim of the latter on the score of limitation. It is unnecessary to consider the numerous cognate cases which have arisen in reference to arts. 140, 141 of the Limitation Act. As said before, the present suit cannot be brought within the terms of those articles. An adopted son, as such, suing for present possession of his father's estate, is not a remainder man, or reversioner, or devisee, nor is he one who is entitled to possession of that estate on the death of a female.

No doubt the widow may be regarded as having committed suicide, (so to speak) by adopting a son to her husband, and thus destroying her widow's estate; and in this view the adopted son holds an analogous position to that of a claimant who is entitled to possession on the death of a female (art. 141). By [820] that analogy he would not be barred in the present case, notwithstanding that Ramabai's right of action may be barred by twelve years' adverse possession. That was the question referred to the Full Bench in Srinath v. Prosunno (1), and decided in favour of the claimant. But as already remarked, I think that we are not entitled to apply art. 141. We must, therefore, fall back on art. 144. In such a claim made by an adopted son to recover his father's estate, if that estate has come into the hands of his father's widow, and has subsequently gone out of her possession, and if there has been no final judgment against her in a suit brought by her to recover the property, then prima facie the only plea which the defendant in possession can raise, (supposing the son is suing within twelve years of his adoption) is that the widow parted with the property for necessary purposes. That plea cannot be raised in the present case by the sons of Raghunath. They deny any alienation by the widow at all.

But it is contended on the authority of Rajkristo v. Kishoree (2), that as Raghunath and Krishnaji were in 1868 the next reversioners, any act or omission of the widow in 1868 by which the prorerty passed to Raghunath and Krishnaji cannot be questioned by the subsequently adopted son. Reference was also made to the case of Nobokishore v. Harinath (3). But in the former case what was decided was that a sale by a widow with the consent of all legal heirs at the time existing, ratified by solemn decrees of legal tribunals, delivered in cases wholly contested up to the highest Court of appeal, was binding upon the son adopted by the widow after thirty years. That is not the case here. In the latter case it was held that the relinquishment by a Hindu widow of her estate to the next male heir of her husband is valid, and that she can alienate it merely with his consent without any legal necessity. But here defendants, the sons of Raghunath, do not plead relinquishment or sale by the widow.

From the remarks of the Subordinate Judge in his judgment in the suit of 1889 between the same parties it would seem that if defendants had pleaded a conveyance by the widow, nominally [821] a mortgage, but really intended to convey the whole estate to the next heirs, there would have been some ground for holding that this is what was intended in 1868. But that is just what the defendants cannot now plead. They assert that they are trespassers. As such they must give way to the superior claims of the adopted son. Under this view the decision of the lower Courts must be reversed, and the plaintiff's claim to possession decreed, the claim as to profits being determined in execution.

Decree reversed.

APPELLATE CIVIL.

Before Mr. Justice Ranade and Mr. Justice Fulton.

MANCHHARAM (Original Opponent), Appellant v. KALIDAS AND ANOTHER (Original Applicants), *Respondents. [25th September, 1894.]

19 B. 821.

Res judicata—Estoppel—Fraud—Judgment obtained by fraud—Not conclusive inter partes—Succession Certificate Act (VII of 1889*)*, s. 18, cls. (b) and (c)—Revocation of certificate.

One Punja died in 1889, leaving behind him his daughter Mahali. Punja, it was alleged, had made a will appointing Kalidas and Kasandas as his executors. The executors applied for a certificate under the Succession Certificate Act VII of 1889 to recover a debt due to the deceased's estate from one Motiram. Mahali opposed this application, and claimed the certificate for herself by a separate application. The District Judge rejected Mahali's application, and issued a certificate to the executors on 14th September, 1892.

In the meantime, one Manchharam obtained a decree against Mahali as legal representative of Punja, and in execution bought Punja's right, title and interest in the debt due from Motiram. On 12th September, 1892, Manchharam applied for a certificate under Act VII of 1889 to recover this debt. The District Judge rejected this application. Manchharam appealed to the High Court. To this appeal the executors were made parties at their own request. The High Court reversed the District Judge's order and remanded the case for disposal on the merits. Upon the remand the executors did not appear before the District Judge to contest Manchharam's application, and the District Judge granted him a certificate. Thereupon he applied for revocation of the certificate previously granted to the executors; and the executors in their turn applied for a revocation of the certificate granted to him. The District Judge revoked Manchharam's certificate on the ground that he had fraudulently concealed from the Court the previous grant of a certificate to the executors.

[822] Against this order Manchharam appealed to the High Court, contending (inter alia) that the executors not having resisted his application for a certificate after the case had been remanded by the High Court, were estopped, on the principle of res judicata, from applying for a revocation of the certificate granted to him.

Held, that the executors were not estopped. The executors having applied to be made parties to the appeal proceedings, were bound to appear in the Court below, and their failure to do so disabled them from pleading objections, such as the collusive character of the decree and Mahali's want of title, but it did not operate as res judicata, especially when there was reason to suspect fraud on the part of Manchharam. The order obtained by him could not have the effect of res judicata, unless the executors being called on to dispute it, had failed to do so.

A party to a proceeding is never disabled from showing that a judgment or order has been obtained by the adverse party by fraud.

Held, also, that the District Judge had a right, under s. 18, cls. (b) or (e), of Act VII of 1889, to revoke the certificate he had granted under mistake of fact to Manchharam.

APPEAL from the orders of J. B. Alcock, District Judge of Surat, in miscellaneous applications Nos. 24 and 27 of 1893 under Act VII of 1889.

The facts of the case are fully stated in the judgment of Ranade, J., and also in the head-note.

Goverdhan M. Tripathi, for appellant Manchharam. The executors of Punja's will are estopped from applying to revoke Manchharam's certificate under Act VII of 1889. They were parties to the proceedings which he had instituted to obtain a certificate. When the High Court remanded the case to the District Judge for disposal on the merits, it was their duty to appear, and resist the grant to him on every ground that was open to them. Not having done that, it is not open to them to take any objections now. The matter is res judicata—Kishan Sahai v. Aladad Khan (1); Ahmedbhoy Hubibbhoy v. Vulleebhoy Casumbhoy (2); Ramlal v. Chhab Nath (3); Ram Kirpal v. Rup Kuari (4).

Motilal M. Munshi, for respondent.—The principle of res judicata does not apply to this case. And even if it did, it is always open to a party to a judicial proceeding to show that a judgment or order passed against him was obtained by fraud—Ahmedbhoy [823] Hubibbhoy v. Vulleebhoy; Sheik Budan v. Ramchandra (5). In the present case we contend that the appellant fraudulently concealed the fact of a previous grant of a certificate under Act VII of 1889 to the executors from the Court. If this fact had been brought to the notice of the Court, no certificate would have been issued to him.

JUDGMENT.

RANADE, J.—The certificate proceedings, in respect of which these appeals were preferred, have already come four times before this Court, and there have been three remands to the lower Court for final decision on the merits. The facts of the case are simple, though they have been somewhat complicated by reason of the various stages through which this litigation has passed since its first commencement in 1890.

One Punja Jagjiwan died on 15th November, 1889, leaving behind him his daughter, Mahali, as his heir. He, it is alleged, made a will on 4th November, 1889, appointing Kalidas and Kasandas as his executors. These executors applied for a certificate under Act VII of 1889 to recover a debt of more than 1,000 Rs. due from one Motiram to Punja's estate. Mahali opposed this application, and claimed the certificate for herself in a separate application. The District Judge refused both applications. Thereupon the executors and Mahali both appealed to the High Court, which Court reversed the order of the District Judge, and remanded the case back for inquiry on the merits—Bai Mahali v. Kalidas Fakirchand (6).

The District Judge, in this remand inquiry again, rejected the executors' application, on the ground that they were bound to take out probate of the will. Bai Mahali thereupon withdrew her separate application. The executors again appealed, and the High Court reversed the order of the District Judge in January, 1892, and held that the executors were not bound to take out probate—Kalidas Fakirchand v. Bai Mahali (7). The case was accordingly again remanded to the District Court.

In the third inquiry, the District Judge granted the executors' application for a certificate on 14th September, 1892, and at the [824] same time rejected Bai Mahali's application, which apparently had been renewed after the second remand. Bai Mahali appealed to the High Court, but her appeal was dismissed.

On 12th September, 1892, Manchharam, claiming to be auction-purchaser of the right, title, and interest of Punja in the debt due from Motiram, applied in his own name for a certificate under Act VII of 1889.

Manchharam had bought Punja's right, title, and interest on 23rd August 1892, in execution of a Small Cause Court decree obtained on 1st March, 1892, in suit No. 163 of 1892 against Punja's estate represented by Bai Mahali. The executors were not parties to these proceedings, and their application to have the judgment-creditor's attachment raised was disallowed. Manchharam's application to be made a party to the certificate proceedings, commenced by the executors in 1890, was also rejected by the District Judge, and Manchharam did not appeal from that order of rejection.

The District Judge also refused Manchharam's separate application of 12th September, 1892. Manchharam thereupon appealed, and this Court reversed the District Judge's order, and remanded the case back a third time for disposal on the merits on 11th April, 1893—Manchharam v. Bai Mahali (1). In these appeal proceedings the executors were made parties at their own request.

When the case went back to the lower Court, Manchharam's application was granted by the District Judge, and a certificate was ordered to be issued to Manchharam for the recovery of the self-same debt for which the executors had obtained their own certificate on 14th September 1892. The executors did not appear, and were not made parties in this Manchharam's application in the District Court.

Finally, the executors applied to the District Judge for a revocation of Manchharam's certificate and Manchharam made a separate application for a revocation of the executors' certificate. Both these applications were disposed of together by the District Judge who revoked Manchharam's certificate, on the ground [825] that Manchharam had concealed from the Court the fact of the previous grant of the certificate to the executors.

The present appeals have been preferred by Manchharam from the order granting the executors' application for the revocation of his certificate, and the order rejecting his application for the revocation of the executors' certificate.

Mr. Motilal, for the executors, urged a preliminary objection that no appeal lay from an order refusing to revoke a certificate. He contended that s. 19 only contemplated appeals from orders granting, or refusing, or revoking a certificate. We do not think there is much force in this objection. Manchharam had clearly a right to appeal against the order revoking his certificate, and the order refusing to revoke the executors' certificate was in fact the same order with a different application. Moreover, the section clearly reserves the revisional powers of this Court as supplementing its appellate jurisdiction.

Mr. Goverdhanram, pleader for Manchharam, urged that as the executors had not, after asking to be made parties in the appeal proceedings in the High Court, taken care to appear as parties in the District Court after the third remand, they had no right to apply for a revocation of his certificate. He also contended that the principle of res judicata applied in such a case. He relied upon the ruling in Kishan Sahai v. Aladad Khan (2) in support of his first contention, and in respect of the extension of the principle of res judicata, he cited Ahmedbhoy Hubibbhoy v. Vulleebhoy Casumbhoy (3), Ram Lal v. Chhab Nath (4), Ram Kirpal v. Rup Kuari (5). There can be no doubt that the executors, having applied of their own accord to be made parties in the appeal proceedings, were bound to appear in the Court below, and that their failure to do so certainly shuts them out from pleading objections such as the collusive character of the decree. and Mahali's want of title to represent the estate, which might have been urged by them in the previous proceedings. While it is absolutely certain that if the executors had appeared in the District Court, that Court would not have granted the certificate [826] to Manchharam, their failure to do so did not operate as a res judicata, especially where, as in this case, there was reason to suspect fraud on the part of Manchharam. Section 13 is no doubt not exhaustive of the effects of the principle of res judicata, but under s. 44 of the Evidence Act, as stated by Latham, J., a party to a proceeding is never disabled from showing that a judgment or order has been obtained by the adverse party by fraud—Ahmedbhoy Hubibbhoy v. Vulleebhoy Casumbhoy (1). To the same effect is the qualification noticed by West, J., in Sheik Budan v. Ramchandra (2). The order obtained by Manchharam could not possibly have the effect of res judicata, unless the executors, being called on to dispute its validity, had failed to do so. The two Allahabad decisions are clearly distinguished from the present case in that there was no allegation of fraud or intentional concealment. The Certificate Act in s. 18 expressly empowers the District Court to revoke a certificate obtained fraudulently, or by the concealment of some material fact, or where, as in this case, an order had been previously made by a competent Court with respect to the same debts. The District Judge, therefore, had a right under these cls. (b) or (c) to revoke the certificate he had granted under a mistake of fact to Manchharam. Such revocations of the Court's own motion have to be made in certain cases where a minor obtains a certificate on a representation that he is of full age, or an executor obtains probate of the will of a living person. As a general rule, however, the Court must be moved by the parties interested in the revocation to exercise its authority.

Quite apart from the complications introduced by the previous proceedings, there can be no doubt that when both Manchharam and the executors sought to revoke each other's certificate, the lower Court exercised a wise discretion in revoking Manchharam's certificate. It was granted long after the executors' certificate was granted. In fact, it was applied for only two days before the order granting the executors' certificate had been passed, and after Mahali had disputed their right for two years. Manchharam knew the fact, for he applied to be made a party to [827] those proceedings. His application was rejected on 12th September, 1892, and he did not appeal from that order. Manchharam claims only under an auction sale held in execution of an ex parte decree against Mahali, whose contention in respect of the validity of her father's will had been negatived in both Courts. The judgment-creditor should, under the circumstances, have made the executors parties, as they, and not Mahali, represented the estate of the testator—Shaik Musa v. Shaik Essa (3); Subbanna v. Venkatakrishnan (4); Baswantapa v. Ranu (5). The record of the case shows that the executors, though they have not proved the will, have entered upon the charge of the estate, and have paid the funeral expenses of Punjabhai. Under all these circumstances, there can be no comparison between the title of the executors under the will, and of the auction-purchaser at a sale held under a decree against Mahali, who had failed to impeach the title of the executors. We accordingly confirm the orders of the District Judge; and reject both appeals. The appellant must bear his own costs and pay the costs of the executors.

FULTON, J.—I fully concur with my learned colleague in thinking that these appeals must be dismissed. No sufficient reason was shown for the revocation of the certificate granted to the executors, as in the application made by Manchbaram it was not alleged that the will on which the executors based their title was invalid. As regards the revocation of Manchbaram's certificate, I think it was justified, because the certificate had been granted by the Court in ignorance of the fact that a previous one had been issued to the executors in respect of the same debt.

[828] APPELLATE CIVIL.

Before Mr. Justice Jardine and Mr. Justice Ranade.

TULJARAM (Original Plaintiff), Appellant v. BAMANJI KHARSEDJI (Original Defendant), *Respondent. [26th September, 1894.]

Indian Succession Act (X of 1865), 1903—Letters of administration to the estate of a deceased Parsi—Right of suit—Mamlatdar's order—Suit to set aside the order—Bom. Act III of 1876, s. 18.

No suit will lie to set aside an order validly passed by a Mamlatdar under Bombay Act III of 1876, though such an order may be superseded by a decree of a Civil Court.

The land in dispute belonged originally to a Parsi named Dadabhai, who died intestate. After his death, one of his brothers without taking out letters of administration sold the land to the plaintiff. The defendant claimed a right of way over this land, alleging that it was public land. He obtained an injunction from the Mamlatdar's Court, restraining the plaintiff from obstructing his alleged right of way. Thereupon the plaintiff filed a suit to set aside the Mamlatdar's order, and for a declaration that he was owner of the land, and that defendant had no right of way over it. Both the lower Courts rejected the plaintiff's claim on the ground that under s. 190 of the Succession Act (X of 1865) plaintiff could not establish his right to the land in the absence of letters of administration to the estate of Dadabhai, the original owner.

Held, reversing the decrees, that s. 190 of Act X of 1865 did not apply. Neither the plaintiff nor the defendant relied as the basis of his right on the previous title of Dadabhai. There was no question of administration.

Held, also, that a person sued as a trespasser cannot, without proof of his own right, oust an apparent owner by pointing out some defect in the title of the latter.

SECOND appeal from the decision of J. B. Alcock, District Judge of Surat, in appeal No. 60 of 1892.

A Parsi named Dadabhai Pestonji died intestate, leaving a brother named Dosabhai and other near relations.

No letters of administration were taken out to the deceased's estate by any of his heirs.

Certain land which had belonged to the deceased was subsequently sold by Dosabhai to the plaintiff.

The defendant asserted a right of way over it and obtained an injunction in the Mamlatdar's Court, restraining the plaintiff from obstructing him in the enjoyment of his alleged right.

APPELLATE CIVIL.
19 B. 828.

[829] Thereupon the plaintiff filed the present suit to have the Mamlatdar's order set aside, and for a declaration that the land belonged to him and that the defendant had no right of way over it.

The defendant denied the ownership of the plaintiff and of his vendor. He alleged that the land was public land; and that he had acquired a right of way over it by more than forty years' user.

The Subordinate Judge dismissed the suit on the preliminary point that the plaintiff could not establish his right to the land in the absence of letters of administration to the estate of the deceased Dadabhai Pestonji, to whom the land originally belonged.

The decision was upheld, on appeal, by the District Judge, whose judgment was as follows.

Section 190 of the Indian Succession Act (X of 1865) provides that no right to any part of the property of a deceased intestate can be established in any Court of justice unless letters of administration have been granted by a Court of competent jurisdiction. The fact that plaintiff does not claim any right over the land as the deceased owner's heir, but only by purchase from a person who claims to be the heir, makes no difference. If Dosabhai cannot establish his claim, no more can the person to whom Dosabhai sells it."

Against this decision the plaintiff preferred a second appeal to the High Court.

Goverdhan M. Tripathi, for appellant (plaintiff) :—Section 190 of the Indian Succession Act does not apply. The plaintiff derives his title not from the deceased Dadabhai, but from his brother Dosabhai, who sold the land. The plaintiff was in possession until ousted by the defendant, who is a mere trespasser. Section 190 was intended to give protection to heirs and debtors of a deceased person.

Ganpat Sadashiv Rao, for respondent.—Section 190 of Act X of 1865 is wide enough to cover a case like this. If the plaintiff's vendor Dosabhai could not sue to establish his title to the land in suit without taking out letters of administration to Dadabhai's estate, much less can the plaintiff sue. Refers to Haji Mahomed [830] Mitha v. Musaji Esaji (1); Framji Dorabji Ghaswalla v. Adarji (2); Sukh Nandan v. Rennick (3).

JUDGMENT.

JARDINE, J.—In a suit brought by the defendant in the Court of the Mamlatdar he obtained against the plaintiff an order affirming his right to the user of the land which the plaintiff now claims as his own.

Among other reliefs in this suit the plaintiff prayed that the order of the Mamlatdar be set aside. We are of opinion that this prayer was rightly refused. A suit for that purpose is not contemplated by s. 18 of Bombay Act III of 1876. The order of the Mamlatdar, properly made, is good and valid, and is not to be set aside, though it may be superseded by a decree of a Civil Court.

The Courts below have found that the land in suit once belonged to one Dadabhai, whose brother Dosabhai, after Dadabhai died intestate, sold it in 1889 to the plaintiff. The District Court has recorded no finding as to Dosabhai's title. The Subordinate Judge remarks: "While Dosabhai's brothers are alive, they might yet come forward and dispute Dosabhai's title and right to sell the land. His story of the oral devise or gift to him (it is not clear which it was) might be true: but in proof of it there is the evidence only of the plaintiff's vendor." This is not a definite finding of fact; and the Subordinate Judge has, like the District Judge, based his rejection of the whole claim on the legal ground that as the vendor Dosabhai could not establish his right without taking out letters of administration to Dadabhai (s. 190 of Act X of 1865 being cited as an authority) his vendee cannot establish his right as against the defendant.

This inference cannot, however, be drawn in the absence of a finding of fact as to whether the property had vested in Dosabhai under a gift before the death of Dadabhai. It is only after a finding in the negative that s. 190 can have any application to this case.

[831] The more important question is, whether a person sued as a trespasser can without proof of his own right oust an apparent owner by pointing out some defect in the title of the latter, viz., that the property once belonged to a person who died intestate and was sold to the apparent owner by a relation who administered the estate without getting letters of administration. No case interpreting s. 190 in this fashion has been cited. Some reliance was placed on Haji Mahomed v. Musaji (1). But the question there was, whether the plaintiff had failed to show the defendant a good title, and the judgment only deals with s. 187, which along with s. 179 is treated by Sir C. Sargent in Shaik Moosa v. Shaik Essa (2) as merely stating the rules of English law. In the absence of any authority we see no reason for upholding the very extended view of s. 190 taken by the Courts below. It appears to be the negative complement of what rights are declared positively in s. 242. The words of s. 190 do not apply to the present pleadings. Neither party relies as the basis of his own right on a previous title in a person who was owner when he died intestate. There is no question about administration; nor can the result of this suit prejudice the rights of any heirs who may possibly exist.

The Court, therefore, confirms so much of the decree as refuses the prayer to set aside the order of the Court of the Mamlatdar; and in other respects reverses the decrees of both the lower Courts and remands the cause to the District Court for a re-hearing of the appeal; costs of both appeals on the present respondent; costs of the suit to be allotted on passing new decree.

Decree reversed and case remanded.

APPEAL from the decision of Gilmour McCorkell, District Judge of Ahmedabad, in miscellaneous application No. 124 of 1893, under Act VIII of 1890.

The applicant prayed for a certificate of guardianship under Act VIII of 1890, alleging that he had been appointed a guardian of the person as well as of the property of the minors under the will of their deceased step-mother.

The District Judge rejected this application, holding that as there had been a special appointment of a guardian under a will, the applicant was bound to take out probate of the will, without which the certificate of guardianship could not be granted.

The applicant thereupon appealed to the High Court, contending that it was not incumbent on him to apply for probate.

Goverdhan M. Tripathi, for appellant.

Ganpat Sadashiv Rao, for respondent.

The following authorities were cited in argument:—Lakshman v. Jamalbibi (1), Lakshman v. Abdul (2), Parvatibai v. Hariboa (3), Bhagvansang v. Bechardas (4) and Shaik Moosa v. Shaik Essa (5).

JUDGMENT.

JARDINE, J.—The District Judge refused to give the appellant a certificate of guardianship, under Act VIII of 1890, holding that as he pleaded an appointment as guardian under the will of the deceased step-mother of the minors, and as he had not taken out probate, the relief should be refused.

No words of Act VIII of 1890 lay down such a rule: and we do not think the Legislature intended to alter the earlier law in this matter. See Act XX of 1864, as interpreted in Lakshman v. Jamalbibi (1), Lakshman v. Abdul (2), Parvatibai v. Hariboa (3). See also Bhagvansang v. Bechardas (4) and Shaik Moosa v. Shaik Essa (5). We are, therefore, of opinion that it was not a condition precedent of relief that the appellant should take out probate.

On this point no contention has been raised by Mr. Ganpatrav, who appears for the respondents and supports the decree on another ground, appertaining to the merits, which have not been inquired into.

The Court reverses the order of the District Judge and remands the cause for inquiry and decision according to law. Costs on the respondents.

Landlord and tenant—Ejectment—Tenure—Plea by defendant that he held the land by Fazendari tenure for building purposes—Permission to build—Counterparts of leases produced by landlord—Execution of counterpart denied by defendant—Ancient documents—Claim of tenant to compensation for buildings erected by him.

In a suit for ejectment brought in 1894 the defendant contended that he held the land on permanent Fazendari tenure, and produced a document, dated 1848, by which his predecessor was given permission to build upon the land. The plaintiff (landlord), however, produced the counterparts of a subsequent lease to the same tenant (defendant's predecessor), dated 1851, which created a monthly tenancy, and of a latter one to the defendant himself, dated 1859, creating a yearly tenancy determinable on a month's notice, under which provision this suit was brought. The defendant denied that he had executed this document, and contended that it was not proved. The lower Court held that these documents were admissible as ancient documents, and relying upon them passed a decree for the plaintiff. On appeal, Held, confirming the decree, that having regard to the circumstances, the documents must be held proved, and the plaintiff was entitled to recover possession of the land.

A tenant of land demised to him cannot on the termination of his tenancy claim compensation for buildings erected by him.

APPEAL by the defendant against a decree passed in favour of the plaintiff by Parsons, J., dated 15th January, 1894.

Suit in ejectment. The plaintiffs were the executors of the will of one Parmanandas Jivandas.

The plaint set forth that by various assignments the said Parmanandas Jivandas became the assignee of a certain lease, dated [2] the 1st October, 1794, whereby the East India Company leased to one W. H. Blackford, his heirs, executors, administrators and assigns, a certain portion of the land known by the name of Bhandarwara Hill for a term of ninety-nine years, with a covenant of renewal; that the defendant was a yearly tenant of a part of the said demised land under a lease dated 1st January, 1859, made to him by one Canji Chatur, the predecessor in title of the said Parmanandas, at a rent of Rs. 20 per annum, which said lease contained a covenant by the defendant to quit and deliver up possession at any time on one month's notice in writing; that the plaintiffs on the 22nd September, 1891, gave the defendant notice to quit, but the defendant had not replied to the notice and had refused to give up possession.

* Suit No. 13 of 1894.

JULY 26.
ORIGINAL CIVIL.
20 B. 1.

At the hearing the plaintiff produced a counterpart (Ex. G) of a lease dated 13th October, 1851, granted by Canji Chatur to one Abdulla Shaik Ismail (defendant's uncle and predecessor). This lease created a monthly tenancy as long as the rent was paid, determinable, however, by the landlord on a month's notice. It was not assignable. The only difference between that lease and the one sued on was that the latter created a yearly, and not a monthly, tenancy.

In his written statement the defendant denied that he held as yearly tenant, and alleged that the land in question had originally been let for building purposes to his predecessor on Fazendari tenure at a small quit-rent, and he submitted that he was entitled to hold the land subject only to the payment of such rent.

The defendant in his evidence said that his uncle Abdulla got possession of the land in 1848 under the following document (No. 1) which, he contended, showed that Abdulla was a perpetual Fazendari tenant of the land :—

" 22nd May 1848.

" This is to certify that Abdulla Shaik Ismail has our permission to build his house upon our ground, part of Bhandarwara Hill, in Mazagon No. 19, of ground rent from which he pay to us.

D. AND M. PESTONJI."

The lower Court (Parsons, J.) passed a decree for the plaintiffs, relying on the leases Exs. G and H.

[3] The defendant appealed, and in appeal alleged that he had erected buildings on the land at his own expense and with the written permission of the plaintiffs' predecessor in title, and he contended (inter alia) that in any case the plaintiffs were only entitled to possession of the land and not of such buildings. He further contended that he ought to be allowed reasonable compensation for the said buildings, or be allowed to remove them before delivering possession of the land.

Rudra and Settlur, for the appellant (defendant).—The alleged lease is not proved—Uggrakant Chowdhry v. Hurro Chunder Shickdar (1) ; Hari Chintaman Dikshit v. Moro Lakshman (2). The defendant got permission to build on the land—Ramsden v. Dyson (3) ; Kunhammed v. Narayanan Mussad (4); Dattatraya Rayaji v. Shridhar Narayan (5); Yeshwadabai and Gopikabai v. Ramchandra Tukaram (6) ; Plimmer v. The Mayor, &c., of Wellington (7) ; Narayan bin Raghoji v. Bholagir Guru Mangir (8).

JUDGMENT.

FARRAN, C. J.—The defendant was allowed in this case to appeal as a pauper principally to have the question of his claim to compensation upon eviction determined. The arguments have not, however, been confined to that point. The question as to whether the execution of Ex. G and Ex. H has been satisfactorily proved, has also been raised before us.

It arises thus. Canji Chatur, the ancestor and predecessor in title of the plaintiff, purchased the Bhandarwara Hill in 1851. The hill is held on a ninety-nine years' renewable lease from Government. It was conveyed to Canji Chatur on the 23rd July, 1851. At that time one Abdulla Shaik Ismail was in occupation of a plot of land upon it. The nature of his occupation is not shown, but the defendant, who claims to be his nephew and heir, produces a document, dated the 22nd May, 1848, in the following terms:—"This is to certify that Abdulla Shaik Ismail has our permission to build his house upon our ground, part of Bhandarwara [4] hill, in Mazagon, No. 19, of ground rent from which he pay to us.—(Signed) D. and M. Pestonji." It is contended by the appellant that this document shows that Abdulla was at that time a perpetual Fazendari tenant of the land which he occupied. We do not think so. Exhibit No. 1 itself is a mere permission or license to build, and does not indicate what the occupant's tenure really was. Had there been no other document in existence, and had the occupants showed an uninterrupted payment of rent ever since, the inference might fairly be drawn, as it was drawn in Yeshwadabai v. Ramchandra (1) that the land had then been let for building purposes on permanent Fazendari tenure; but if we find the tenant a few years after its date accepting a lease of a less permanent character, no such inference can fairly be drawn. The equally probable inference is that the permission was given in view of a lease upon the terms subsequently accepted, or in the form common on the estate. The existence of this document does not, therefore, throw doubt upon the genuineness of that to which we shall now refer.

There are numerous documents amongst those in plaintiff's possession which purport to be counterpart leases signed by the tenants of Canji Chattur soon after his purchase. From this it would appear that he was then engaged in taking from his tenants acknowledgments of the terms upon which they severally held. The plaintiff produces one of such counterparts which purports to be executed by Abdulla. It is written in English and bears date the 13th day of October, 1851. It purports to be attested by two witnesses, and has all the appearance of being an ancient and genuine document. The rent recoverable by it corresponds to the rent which, as appears from the books of Canji Chattur, Abdulla paid (2 annas per square yard for 125 yards, which amount to Rs. 14-6 per annum). The only doubt which suggests itself as to its authenticity arises from its terms. It creates, in effect, a monthly tenancy to continue so long as the rent is paid, but determinable by the landlord on giving a month's notice. The lease is, in terms, not assignable. It certainly does appear strange that Abdulla Shaik should have built upon the land expecting to get, or having (for there is no evidence as to whether [5] the building upon the land was erected before or after the date of this lease) such an insecure tenure; but we cannot reject as unproved an ancient document simply because it is not a prudent act for a lessee to lay out money upon the tenure which it discloses. We are fully aware of the danger of treating old documents as established, merely because they are thirty years old and come from the proper custody (see Uggrakant v. Hurro Chunder (2) and Hari Chintaman v. Moro Lakshman (3)). But here circumstances point to the likelihood of Abdulla having executed some counterpart; and this is produced with all marks of genuineness upon it and according with the tenure in the books of the estate. We consider that the Division Court was fully justified in treating it as proved and acting upon it.

ORIGINAL CIVIL.
20 B. 1.

It appears from the books of the estate that in Samvat 1893 (1856-1857 A.D.) Abdulla is debited with Rs. 20, being the rent of 160 square yards. From this it appears that the holding was then increased. The plaintiff produces another counterpart lease (Ex. H), dated the 1st of February, 1859, which purports to be executed by the defendant himself. This is a counterpart lease for 160 square yards. It is on a printed form and duly attested. The signature upon it is not dissimilar to that to the defendant's written statement. The increase in the holding affords a reason for a new counterpart being taken from the tenant who as heir succeeded Abdulla. The rent reserved by this lease (Rs. 20) has been paid regularly by the defendant for many years, and altogether the transaction has a genuine appearance. Having regard to the existence of the counterpart lease (Ex. G) previously executed by Abdulla, there is nothing improbable in the defendant's having executed a new counterpart in similar terms. Those of the new lease only differ from the terms of the former one in creating a yearly, instead of a monthly, tenancy, but similarly terminable by a month's notice. The denial of the defendant, in cross-examination of having executed Ex. H, is half-hearted, and we think that the Judge was right in disbelieving it. We consider Ex. H to be proved. The decree is, therefore, correct in awarding possession of the land comprised in [6] Ex. H to the plaintiff, the notice to quit having been duly served on the defendant.

It remains to consider the defendant's claim for compensation. It was not put forward in the Court below, but it was urged in the memorandum of appeal, and counsel for the respondent offers no objection to our dealing with it on the merits. In an unreported case of Parmanandas v. Ardeshir Framji, it was held by Farran, J., in a case exactly similar to the present, arising out of a lease upon the same estate, that the evicted tenant was not entitled to compensation for the buildings upon the land, and the same ruling was made by Starling, J., in the case of Goverdhan v. Rahim Rahimtulla, also unreported. We think that these rulings were correct.

There is, as we have stated, no evidence to show whether the buildings upon the land, which are not denied to be of a substantial character, were erected before or after the date of Ex. G. We know of no authority for holding that a tenant who erects buildings on a demised land is entitled to compensation on being evicted on the termination of his tenancy. His right to remove such buildings, which appears to be established by the cases of Narayan bin Raghoji v. Bholagir Guru Mangir (1) and Premji Jivan v. Haji Cassum (2) and is enacted by the Legislature in the Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), s. 108, seems to us to negative his claim to compensation. The law laid down in the judgment of the Court in the last cited case is this: "It is well established law in England that if a stranger builds on the land of another although believing it to be his own, the owner is entitled to recover the land with the building on it, unless there are special circumstances amounting or standing by, so as to induce the belief that the owner intends to forego his right or to an acquiescence in his building on the land —Ramsden v. Dyson (3), Plimmer v. Mayor, &c. of Wellington (4) and see Dattatraya v. Shridhar (5). This is also the law in India, with the exception that the party building on the land of another is allowed to remove the building." The same law, we think, is as applicable to a tenant building on his landlord's [7] land during his tenancy as to a stranger building on the land of another. There are no special circumstances in the present case. The tenant must be taken to have known the terms of his lease as well as his landlord. And there is nothing to show that the landlord "created or encouraged any hope or expectation" in the mind of the tenant by his words or conduct. The granting of the lease in the terms of the Ex. G and Ex. H are, we think, quite inconsistent with such an idea. Such special circumstances were found in the cases of Kunhammed v. Narayanan (1); Dattatraya v. Shridhar and Yeshwadabai v. Ramchandra (2) and the Courts gave effect to them. The authorities are very fully considered in the last mentioned case.

The defendant cannot call in aid the provisions of Act XI of 1855, s. 4, as holding under the lease he did, he could not, nor could his predecessor in title, have bona fide believed that he held the land in permanent tenure.

The appellant's claim for compensation, therefore, fails. He has not asked to be allowed to remove his buildings. The appellant's counsel applied for leave to put in the municipal bills, which tend to show the nature and value of the structure erected on the land and one of two rent bills of 1855 and the following year wherein the rent paid in by the defendant Abdulla is called Fazendari rent. We have not thought it necessary to require those documents to be produced under s. 508, cl. (b), of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882) as the fact of there being a permanent structure on the land is not disputed, and the effect of the rent notes could only be considered if the whole series were put in evidence. The whole series was put in evidence in the cause of Parmanandas v. Ardeshir Framji to which we have referred and as a whole did not support the defendant's case.

The appeal will be dismissed. The appellant must pay the fees payable on his appeal to Government, as he has been allowed to appeal as a pauper.

The plaintiffs were husband and wife, and they were married on the 14th March, 1888. On the day of their marriage the defendant, who was the father of the first plaintiff, gave him a note addressed to his (the defendant's) firm as follows :—

four, per one centum per one annum, within a period of 3, namely, three, years from this day."

The plaintiff took this note to the defendant's firm, and in return received the following document addressed to himself :—

"You sent one 'chithi' (note) for Rs. 7,000, namely, seven thousand, on me. The sum which your father Set Mancherji Bomanji Panthaki caused to be paid to you in respect of the ornaments appertaining to your marriage has been credited to your account, bearing interest at 4, namely, four, per cent. For the same this 'receipt' has been given in writing."

No money was actually paid by the defendant to the plaintiffs, and none was lodged with the defendant's firm by the plaintiffs, but subsequently to the above transaction an account was kept in the defendant's books, in which the first plaintiff was duly credited with interest every year. In March, 1894, the plaintiff demanded from the defendant the amount standing to his credit on this account. The defendant pleaded limitation.

Held that the purpose for which the money was to be paid, viz., the purchase of ornaments for the wife, indicated that it was the intention of the parties that payment should not be made until the plaintiffs were prepared to purchase ornaments, and that until then the money should remain with defendant's firm. The intention was that the money should not be paid until the plaintiffs required it for the purpose for which it was destined, and demanded it. The contract was not broken until the plaintiffs demanded the money, which they did in March, 1894. Article 115 of sch. II of the Limitation Act (XV of 1877) applied to the case, and the suit was not barred.

APPEAL from Candy, J.

Suit for Rs. 7,000 and interest at 4 per cent. from the 14th March, 1888.

[9] The first and second plaintiffs were husband and wife and the defendant was the father of the first plaintiff. The plaint alleged as follows :—

"The first plaintiff was married in the year 1888 to the second plaintiff, and on the occasion of his marriage the defendant, in accordance with Parsi custom, agreed to present to the plaintiff and his wife ornaments of the value of Rs. 7,000; but as the defendant did not wish to expend the money in ornaments at that time, it was agreed between the first plaintiff and the defendant that the sum of Rs. 7,000 should remain as a deposit with the defendants' firm of Bomanji Maneckji, and should be paid to the plaintiffs, with interest at 4 per cent. per annum, when the moneys were demanded for the purpose of getting the ornaments made. The defendant in the meanwhile was to keep the said moneys as a depository and trustee for the plaintiffs and to credit the same in the first plaintiff's name in the books of the firm."

The plaintiff deposed that in pursuance of the above stated arrangement the defendant on the 14th March, 1888, gave him a note, or order, addressed to his (the defendant's) firm, which ran as follows :—

"(To) Andhiaru Maneckji Panthaki. To wit. My son Bhai Nusserwanji Mancherji Panthaki marries to-day. Do you be pleased to pay Rs. 7,000, namely, seven thousand, for ornaments in respect thereof, together with interest thereon at the rate of Rs. 4, namely, four per one centum per one annum, within a period of 3, namely, three years from this day. Bombay, the English date the 14th of March, in the year 1888 written by A (Ahdhiaru) Mancherji Bomanji Panthaki."

The plaintiff deposed that he took this note to the defendant's firm, and in return received the following document addressed to himself :—

"(To) The respected Bhai Nusserwanji Mancherji Panthaki. To wit. You sent one 'chithi' (note) for Rs. 7,000, namely, seven thousand, on me. The sum which your father Set Mancherji Bomanji Panthaki caused to be paid to you in respect of the ornaments appertaining to your marriage has been credited to your account, bearing interest at 4, namely, four per cent. For the same this 'receipt' has been given in writing. Bombay, the English date the 14th of March, in the year 1888, written by Bomanji Maneckji Panthaki. The handwriting of Dinshaji."

It was admitted that no money was actually paid by the defendant to the plaintiffs, and none was paid to or lodged with the defendant's firm by the plaintiffs.

The plaint stated that the defendant had since kept the said money and credited the first plaintiff with interest and struck the balance every year. The plaintiff demanded these moneys from the defendant by letter on the 9th and 22nd March, 1894, [10] but the defendant had not sent any reply to these letters of demand. This suit was filed on the 12th April, 1894.

The defendant denied the agreement stated in the plaint and pleaded limitation. As to this last plea, the plaintiff contended that the case fell within art. 60 of the schedule to the Limitation Act (XV of 1877), and that time ran only from the date of demand.

The case was heard as a short cause by Candy, J., who held that art. 60 applied, and passed a decree for the plaintiff.

The defendant appealed.

Macpherson (Acting Advocate General) and Kirkpatrik, for the appellant.—There was no consideration for the alleged agreement. The plaintiffs had been betrothed for years, and it does not appear that the subsequent marriage took place because of the alleged promise to give Rs. 7,000. It was a voluntary promise of a gift—Breton v. Woollven (1). In any case, the suit is barred. The documents show this was not a case of deposit. If there was an agreement at all on the 14th March, 1888, it was merely an agreement to pay Rs. 7,000 within three years. On the expiration of the three years, viz., on the 14th March, 1891, the plaintiff's right of action (if any) accrued, and he had three years from that date in which to sue. This suit was not filed till 12th April, 1894, and was then barred. They referred to Ichha Dhanji v. Natha (2); Ishur Chunder Bhaduri v. Jibun Kumari Bibi (3); Dorabji Jehangir Randiva v. Muncherji Bomanji Panthaki (4).

Inverarity and Russell, for the respondent.—This was an agreement or gift in consideration of the plaintiffs' marriage. The circumstances show that this money has really been held as a deposit by the defendant, for the plaintiffs. The money was put aside as a fund to be applied in purchasing ornaments in accordance with Parsi custom whenever the plaintiffs desired to purchase them. They demanded their money for the purpose of buying these ornaments in March, 1894, and this suit was filed in this year. They referred to Story on Bailments, paras. 4 and 41; Tidd v. Overell (5); Atkinson v. Bradford Equitable Society (6).

JUDGMENT.

[11] FARRAN, C.J.—Upon the first point which has been urged upon us in this appeal, that there was no consideration for the agreement deposed to by the plaintiff in his examination, and further evinced by the exhibits, we do not entertain doubt, but as it is desirable to have a clear view of the facts before us when considering the second and more important question, we state them as they present themselves to our minds.

The plaintiff Nusserwanji, who is the son of the defendant, was in the year 1888 about to marry the second plaintiff, Meherbai. It is customary amongst Parsis for the father of the bridegroom, on the occasion of the marriage of his sons, to give ornaments, or money for the purchase of ornaments, to the bride. Such ornaments are considered to be the joint property of the husband and wife. Previous to the marriage, the defendant promised to give Rs. 7,000 to his son Nusserwanji to purchase such ornaments, and Nusserwanji agreed to that amount. The marriage subsequently took place. Upon the occasion of the marriage the defendant, not finding it convenient to pay the Rs. 7,000 in cash, handed Nusserwanji, or his wife, an order addressed to his place of business, which was carried on in the name of Bomanji Mancherji Panthaki, and which, for brevity (though inaccurately) we shall refer to as " the defendant's firm." The order is dated the 14th March, 1888, and is to the following effect :— "My son Nusserwanji marries to-day. Do you be pleased to pay Rs. 7,000 for ornaments, together with interest thereon at the rate of 4 per cent. per annum within a period of three years from this day." Our interpreter informs us that the exact literal translation of the direction for payment is " Do you be pleased to pay Rs. 7,000 in three years from this day's time." The meaning is the same. It is, we think, a direction to pay the Rs. 7,000 with interest, but giving three years within which the firm could not be called on to pay.

This document the plaintiff Nusserwanji took or sent to the defendant's firm, and was given a receipt signed in the name of the firm. It runs thus—" To Bhai Nusserwanji Mancherji [12] Panthaki. You sent one 'chithi ' for Rs. 7,000 on me. This sum, which your father Mancherji Bomanji Panthaki caused to be paid to you in respect of the ornaments appertaining to your marriage, has been carried to your account, bearing interest at 4 per cent. For the same this receipt is given."

An account was thereupon opened in the books of the defendant's firm, which has ever since been carried on, but no interest nor any part of the principal sum has ever been paid to the plaintiff.

The above two documents must, we think, be read together. The receipt, when read in connection with the order, is, we think, a receipt by the defendant's firm for Rs. 7,000, payable with interest at 4 per cent., but not to be demanded as of right within three years. Being given in the plaintiff Nusserwanji's name, it is a receipt in his favour. The result of the transaction appears thus to be that the plaintiff Nusserwanji, in lieu of the Rs. 7,000 which his father had promised to give on his marriage, accepted the undertaking of the letter in the name of his firm, and the father in the name of his firm undertook to pay the plaintiff Rs, 7,000 with interest, but not before the expiration of three years.

Now, on the question of consideration, we should feel no difficulty in holding that the marriage took place at the father's request, and upon the understanding that the father should make the customary presents for ornaments, which by agreement between father and son were fixed at Rs. 7,000. It is a much stronger case than that of Shadwell v. Shadwell (1), where such a request was implied by the majority of the Court. But even without implying a request, it is, we think, clear that the marriage took place upon the faith of the father's promise, and so the case falls within the principle of Hammersley v. De Biel (1), and within the meaning of s. 8 of the Contract Act (IX of 1872). The plaintiff by contracting the marriage, fulfilled the condition upon which the promise was made.

Turning now to the question of limitation, it has been considered by the Divisional Court that a case of trust has been made [13] out in respect of the sum of Rs. 7,000 referred to in the exhibits, and that the defendant in some way held that sum in trust for the plaintiffs. This view was not strenuously upheld in the argument before us, and indeed in a later judgment in the case of Dorabji Jehangir Randiva v. Muncherji Bomanji Panthaki (2) the learned Judge has himself receded from it. The documents, in our opinion, do not evidence a trust, nor can we imply a trust from the surrounding circumstances so as to bring the case within the meaning of s. 10 of the Limitation Act (XV of 1877); and, unless we can do that, it is useless to speak of a trust in this connection. The Division Court has also held that, if the Rs. 7,000 were not held by the defendant in trust for the plaintiff, the case falls within art. 60 of the second schedule to the Act, so that the claim is not barred. The wording of the documents, however, shows that the Rs. 7,000 were not deposited under an agreement that they should be payable on demand, inasmuch as they were not necessarily payable for a period of three years, nor indeed can it, in fact, be said that there ever was a deposit, though a liability to pay the amount was for consideration undertaken by the defendant's firm. The case must, therefore, fall under some other provision of the law.

The provision governing it is, in our opinion, art. 115. There is no other article suggested, or that we can discover, specifically applicable to the case. Limitation under that art. (115) begins to run from the time when the contract is broken. What that time is, must depend upon the terms, express or implied, of the contract itself, whether it is an absolute contract to pay Rs. 7,000 with interest on the expiration of three years from the date of the contract, or whether it is a contract to pay that sum on demand, subject to the three years' grace allowed to the defendant. The documents, evidencing the contract, are loosely and inartificially drawn, and do not clearly specify the exact obligations which they impose on the defendant's firm, or, in other words, upon the defendant. Ordinarily it is the duty of the debtor to pay his debt when due to the creditor—Story's Contracts, 967. If he does not do so, he breaks his contract, [14] and time begins to run against the creditor. We think, however, in the present case that the documents, read in the light of the surrounding circumstances, show that such was not the nature of the obligation which the defendant undertook. The contract, though in substance a promise to pay by the defendant, is in form a direction to a third party to pay. No definite time for such payment is specified; it is left to depend upon the convenience of the parties. The purpose for which the payment was to be made, the purchase of ornaments for the wife, is set forth on the face of the document. This is an indication, we think, that it was the intention of the parties that the payment should not be made until Nusserwanji and his wife were prepared to purchase ornaments, and that until then the money should remain at interest with the defendant's firm.

These circumstances, coupled with the near relationship between the parties, lead, we think, to the conclusion that the parties intended that the money should not be paid until the plaintiffs required it for the purpose for which it was destined and until Nusserwanji demanded it. The contract was not, therefore, we think, broken until the plaintiffs demanded the money, which they did for the first time within the period of limitation. The appeal will be dismissed with costs.
